“…That does sound super expensive. It doesn’t seem like I would be able to get one just from selling mountains of relics. Now that I remember it, those relic Hunters were cyborgs too, right? They even took their chance stealing those relics even if it meant having to fight the City Management, I wonder if they wanted that much money in order to buy such kind of cyborg body.”

Akira remembered about Nelia and Yajima. Up until now, no matter how much money was at stake, Akira never thought that any amount of money was worth fighting against the City Management. But that might not be true for the people who got turned into a cyborg because of some kind of accident or after getting attacked by monsters and had to live their life in a body that could not even process food. For them, getting a high-quality cyborg body that could process food as if it was a normal biological body, and then using it to enjoy expensive meals in a high-class restaurant would be like a dream come true. Since Akira had already tasted the pleasure of such a delicious meal, he somehow understood why people with cyborg bodies would even do something like that.

During the night of the same day, Akira saw a dream. He was fighting against Nelia in his dream.

Akira was desperately trying to evade Nelia's attacks as she was swinging the blades in both of her hands at him. Although it was a difficult place to move around freely with all the rubbles around them, both Akira and Nelia were not bothered by those rubbles at all.

There was no opening where Akira could slip any counter-attack. Because there was a big gap between their skills, he was only able to barely survive Nelia's onslaught. Akira was unarmed in his dream. Nelia was not someone that Akira could defeat without any weapons, his kicks and punches could not damage her cyborg body at all. Not to mention that Nelia might even cut his limbs if he tried to attack her.

Akira turned to Alpha and asked in a panic.

"My rifles?! Where's my CWH anti-material rifle?! There's no way I can win this fight without it!!"

"You lost your CWH anti-material rifle, remember? You need to buy a new one from Shizuka later."

"Ah, that's right!!"

Although there were a lot of strange things happening, Akira did not realize that he was in a dream.

"Now that I remember it, I did go to Shizuka's shop not too long ago, right?! So why didn't I buy one back then?!"

"There's no way you can use that rifle without an augmented suit, you know? You did lose your augmented suit too, remember?"

"Ah, you're right!… Hm, wait?"

Akira checked his equipment while making a puzzled face. He was not wearing his augmented suit, not even an armour, but the same durable clothes that he received from Kibayashi.

His movements immediately dulled the moment he realized that. After all, without his augmented suit, Alpha could not give her support and his physical capability would return back to normal.

When his movement dulled, Nelia did not let that chance slip as she quickly lunged at Akira. He could see Nelia's blades chasing for his neck in slow motion.

[Ah, I'm dead.]

As that thought ran through Akira's mind, Nelia's blade separated his head from his body.

[I really wish I can at least taste those foods again…]

That was his last thought as he looked down on his headless body that fell down to the floor in front of him, then his consciousness was swallowed by the darkness.

Akira suddenly woke up from his dream. He looked around and realized that he was on his bed inside his room. It was dark since it was still very early in the morning. Trembling, he moved his hands to his neck. Once he confirmed that his neck was still attached to his body, he realized that it was only a dream.

"…Just a dream, huh."

Alpha looked worried and asked Akira.

"Are you okay?"

"Yeah, I just had a weird dream. But I'm okay now."

Even after replying, Akira did not shift his gaze from Alpha.

In reality, Akira did survive his fight against Nelia. But in his dream, he was killed by Nelia when he lost Alpha's support.

The current Akira and the Akira in his dream were not that different. If for some reason, he lost Alpha's support, he might simply drop dead just like inside his dream.

[The me from that dream is the current me, with my real strength.]

Because of his luck, he was able to meet Alpha and was receiving her support since then. That was the only thing that allowed Akira to survive until now. But not even he knew just how long his luck would remain.

As Akira kept staring at Alpha without saying anything, she just smiled mischievously and said.

“What’s wrong? Are you falling for my beautiful face again?”

Akira retained his serious face.

“…Alpha, for how long are you planning to keep giving me your support?”

Alpha sounded puzzled as she answered back.

“Of course I’m planning to keep giving you my support until you are finished with my request. Why did you ask that question so suddenly?”

“I just thought that rather than asking me, wouldn’t it be better if you ask one of those veteran Hunters out there? The reason why you got in that contract with me is because I can connect to the old-world domain, right? So like, I’m sure I’m not the only Hunter in this world who can connect to the old-world domain. I bet you can find another better Hunter if you look for one, right? Ah, but rather than looking for another person who can connect to the old-world domain, I can just post a request in your name to accomplish your request, right?”

Hearing Akira’s answer, Alpha stared into his eyes. Akira too stared back at hers, awaiting her reply. There was a moment of silence before she answered his question with a serious expression.

“I have no plans to neither interrogate you nor to make you confess what made you think that I might stop giving you my support. But I’ll at least make this one thing clear to you. My support is just the front payment for doing my request. So I’ll keep following you until you finish my request even if you don’t want me to.”

Since Akira received Alpha’s support, he had the debt and duty to accomplish her request. Even if he thought that it would be better for her to replace him, even if that was the truth, Alpha would not let him get away from her, that was what she meant between the lines.

Akira was relieved after hearing Alpha’s answer. To be honest, he even felt a bit guilty for receiving such superb support from Alpha since he sometimes felt that he did not deserve it. But on the other hand, somewhere inside him, Akira knew that Alpha intentionally said that to him since she knew that it would give him a sense of reassurance.

Akira smiled and said.

“I see, I’ll go back to sleep then.”

Alpha smiled and replied back.

“Good night, I hope you’ll get a nice dream this time.”

“I think it’ll be okay.”

Akira laid down on his bed again. Since his worry was already cleared, he quickly drifted back to sleep.

For some reason, Akira was sure that even if he got the same dream again, it would not end the same way as his previous one.

Akira was doing time compression training again with Alpha the next day.

Just like before, Alpha was dancing in front of Akira with blades in both of her hands. She danced gracefully and elegantly, it felt as if her movements were so natural even when she sliced Akira's neck.

Akira did not move even when Alpha attacked him. Forget evading her attack, he did not even react at all. He just stood there watching her.

"…Akira?"

"It's alright, just continue."

Akira's expression was dead-serious. It was enough to make Alpha understand that he was not fooling around.

Alpha was actually curious why he did that, but she did not ask him anything as she stepped back and straightened her stance. A piece of her dress detached itself and vanished before she started dancing again.

Even after that, Akira did not react at all, he just stood there watching Alpha with a dead-serious expression as she kept slicing at him.

Every time one of her blades went through Akira's body, a piece of her dress would fall off and vanish. In the beginning, she was only losing decorations on her dress, but then slowly she started to lose pieces of clothes that hid her skin. As more and more parts of her body were exposed, she started to look like Nelia when Akira was fighting against her in Kuzusuhara ruin.

[…Remember that sensation!! That feeling in that dream!! That tension during that fight!! I was able to do it back then!! I was able to do it in my dream too! So I should be able to do it now!! Alpha also did say that I should be able to do it!!]

That level of focus when he stood in a life and death situation. That sensation when he walked on that thin line that separated life and death. Akira was trying his best to recreate those feelings as he stood in his place without moving. He focused on Alpha who was dancing in front of him, or to be more precise, he focused on the blades in her hands that had already sliced through his body numerous times.

And then, in the middle of her dance, Alpha suddenly swung the blade in her right hand at Akira's neck. By pure coincidence, her movements were exactly the same as Nelia's movements that Akira saw in his dream.

As Akira watched that extremely sharp looking blade cut through the air aiming for his neck, he instinctively reacted and quickly shifted his body backwards to evade that blade. But his maneuver caused him to lose balance and fall splendidly on his back.

As he fell, Akira's head violently bumped the floor. He rolled around with both of his hands on the back of his head as he writhed in pain.

Alpha quickly floated to Akira and worriedly asked him.

"Akira, are you alright?"

“I-it hurts like hell, where is my medicine??”

Akira wobbled around as he stood up and extended his hand to reach for the medicine box on a shelf near him. It was the 1,000,000 Aurum per box medicine. He took out a capsule from that box, opened it, and spread the paste-like medicine content on the back of his head where he was hurt.

The pain immediately vanished when he applied the medicine. But it was not because the injury was healed, it was simply because the pain killer numbed his pain and it was enough to make Akira feel thankful. As for the injury itself, it would heal given enough time. The medicine paste was slowly absorbed through his skin, thus there was no need to wipe the leftover.

Since the pain on his head was gone, Akira stopped gritting his teeth.

“It’s really nice to have this kind of medicine which you can just directly apply on an injury at a time like this.”

“But you might not have the time to apply it to your wound directly in the middle of a fight, so for the time being, it might be better to get a medicine that you can just swallow. Not to mention, it can help in healing your inner injuries and recovering your fatigue if you take it orally. That aside, you did it, didn’t you Akira?”

Alpha smiled when she said that, Akira smiled back and replied.

“Yeah, I did it. But thanks to that, I couldn’t move my body well and ended up falling splendidly on my back though.”

“That’s to be expected. Just because your time perception became 10 times faster, that doesn’t make your body move 10 times faster as well. So there’s a time lag between when you tell your limbs to move and when they actually move. Because of that, compared to when you usually move your body out of reflex, you’ll have to be more aware of your movement from now on. Watch your slowed opponent’s move carefully and based on it, decide how you are going to move. But again, I guess you can only learn such a thing from training, huh."

"You're right. I can only learn to do that through training."

Akira unconsciously moved his hands to the back of his head. Although he did not feel pain any longer, he still felt some kind of awkwardness.

"Well, you basically whacked your head hard on the floor back there. So how about we take a rest for today?"

"Nah, let's continue. I want to try and do that again while I can still remember that sensation."

"Sure, but don't push yourself too hard, okay?"

"Yeah."

His training continued, Alpha started dancing in front of him again. Most of her dress had already vanished, thus depending on how she moved, her dance seemed to be very erotic from time to time. But in order to properly follow Alpha's movements, Akira did not avert his eyes at all.

Akira then finished his training for the day. Usually, by the end of the time compression training, Alpha would be more or less naked. But this time she still had some more pieces of clothes on her body than usual.

But that was not because Akira was able to evade Alpha's attacks, it was more because he was too tired to continue until she became naked.

Akira was lying on the hard floor with his limbs spread out as he was breathing roughly. During the training, he was able to compress his time perception many times. But every time he did that, his brain was hit by enormous stress and tiredness because of the sheer focus he needed to do that.

The longer he maintained the time compression, the longer he had to keep his focus. Moreover, moving his body in that state felt like he was mustering his whole body to keep moving without rest. It was no wonder that it quickly made his body tired.

As his brain and body were extremely strained, Akira could not even stand up on his own.

He was still lying on the floor when Alpha, who was still wearing her erotic dress, said to him.

“Let’s end our training for today. Do your best to at least stand up from there.”

“…I can’t do it, just a little bit more, just let me lie here a bit more.”

“Just a little bit, okay? If you stay there like that, you’ll end up falling asleep on the floor, you know. At least drag yourself to the bed first, else you’ll definitely regret it in the morning if you wake up on the floor.”

Akira, who had lived in the slum alley for years, had slept on the hard cold ground numerous times. So he understood very well what Alpha meant by that. Now that he had experienced the comfort of sleeping on a fluffy bed, he no longer had the ability to recover his fatigue from sleeping on a hard surface. If he really ended up falling asleep on the floor, there was no mistaking it that he would definitely regret it tomorrow.

Akira was still breathing roughly on the floor, but he eventually calmed down. He then wrung any strength that he still had left to pull himself up and drag his feet to the bedroom before crashing to the bed.

Alpha was floating next to him. Since Akira had not told her to change her dress yet, she was still wearing what was left of her dress after the training. Her high-class looking undies peeked through the gaps between her clothes. But Akira did not even have the strength to tell her to change her dress.

Akira was somehow still able to fight the heaviness of his eyelids, but it was only a matter of time before he was lulled by the fluffy bed and his heavy body.

“…I’ll sleep for a bit. Wake me up when it’s time to study.”

“Just take a good rest for today. It’s not like you can learn anything if you’re still tired during the study session.”

“…Alright.”

After saying that, Akira let the tiredness take over his body.

As he fell asleep in front of her, Alpha looked at him thoughtfully.

To be honest, she predicted that it would take about at least 6 months until Akira could compress time. So basically, now her prediction was totally off.

Alpha was not sure if it was a good thing or it was a bad thing since it indicated that Akira could surpass her prediction.

Whichever the case, there was a need for Alpha to readjust her plan. As she thought of what she should do to readjust her plan, she was not smiling, not even once.

There were all kinds of people living in the Kugamayama lower district slum city, from youngsters to old people, male and female. All of them had to somehow earn money to pay for their expenses in the slum city. Some of them collected wreckages from the wasteland bordering the slum city and sold them. Some of them worked for people who, for some reason, lived in the slum city although they had relatively a lot of money. Some people chose to gather any sellable things that they could find and sold them to scrappers.

And of course, some of them were living by stealing others’ money. A girl named Alna, who was living in the slum city, was one of these people.

Luckily enough, Alna was a genius when it came to picking pockets, and unfortunately, she had no other choice but to rely on her talent to survive in the slum city. The harsh living condition gave her enough justification for her action, and her talent let her continue picking pockets without getting caught until now.

Her living condition forced her to pickpocket, and the more she stole, the better she became. At this point, it would not be an exaggeration to say that she was already a first-rate pickpocket.

Her biggest mistake was that she shared the money that she stole with her friends. After all, it was not like all of her friends could keep secrets. The more famous she became as a first-rate pickpocket, the more her friends demanded their share.

Her friends asked for more and more money, hoping that eventually, Alna would help them escape the days when they had to starve. But Alna ended up running away from such expectations, and now she was basically working alone. Of course, she still had some friends that she was close with, but she decided not to join any gang anymore.

But living alone in the slum city was an extremely difficult thing for a little girl. There were only a few reliable methods available to earn money, and even after she earned some money, she had even fewer means to protect her money from other people. In order to get her enough food, a place to sleep, and a means to protect herself, she was left with no other choice but to rely on her rare talent.

Just like any other day, Alna was prowling for prey. It was not like she would just randomly pick people’s pockets as she was walking around the slum city. Instead, she intentionally aimed for people who seemed to be carrying a lot of money and were an easy target.

Most of the people in the slum city did not carry much money. While some of them, who carried a lot of money, were mostly people who she should never try to mess with. As such, it was rare for people in the slum city to turn into a pickpocket, that was also the reason why people of the slum city were not that cautious against pickpockets.

As such, pickpockets in the slum city tended to aim for people who came from outside the slum city. Like the customers who visited the shops that could only be found in the slum city, or people who return from wasteland while brimming with confidence as they passed through the slum city, or people who ended up in the slum city for any unknown reasons, or people who came to the slum city hoping that they might be able to help the residents of the slum city, or people who are absconding and trying to hide in the slum city, or people who tried to look for anything that could be scrapped in the slum city. These people carried more money than the residents of the slum city most of the time.

Alna was looking for Hunters to pickpocket. But even so, there were many types of Hunters, some of them were veteran Hunters who she should never mess with, while on the other hand, there were also those Hunters who spent most of their money in taverns rather than renewing their bad-looking equipment. Whichever it was, these Hunters frequently visited the wasteland. Unlike pickpockets, thugs rarely robbed Hunters, of course, these thugs could get some money from selling the equipment that they robbed, but the danger of getting killed was too high.

In contrast to that, pickpockets often aimed for Hunters. If they tried to aim for the equipment, of course, these Hunters could easily detect them. After all, equipment was the Hunters' lifeline, without their equipment, those Hunters would not be able to fight monsters. So thanks to that, Hunters tended to be less careful when it came to other stuff, for example, their wallets.

Alna had found her target, that Hunter looked like an easy target in her eyes. Although that Hunter was wearing armour normally used by Hunters, it was so clean which indicated that the Hunter had never gone to the wasteland yet. The rifles dangling on that Hunter's body also looked brand new, there was not even any gunpowder trace, showing that they were never used before. It was a young Hunter and that Hunter's expression did not give the intimidating or dangerous aura like those veteran Hunters. So Alna thought that he must be a beginner Hunter who just gathered enough equipment to be able to register in the Hunter Office and start from Rank 10.

[Let's aim for that Hunter. If that Hunter is here for browsing the stands right after registering in the Hunter Office, he should be carrying quite a lot of money. Let’s get his wallet before that Hunter can spend it on anything.]

Just like usual, Alna approached that Hunter naturally. Then using her genius-level talent and polished skill, she extended her arm and took the wallet from that Hunter. That Hunter did not notice it at all.

Unfortunately, Alna’s luck ended that day.

That day, Akira was walking through the slum city as he was heading to Sheryl’s base. There was no particular reason other than just showing his face in the gang and to take a breather.

The equipment that he ordered in Shizuka’s shop had not arrived yet. As such, Akira was still using his old equipment which included his new Hunter armour and AAH and A2D rifles that he had never used ever since he bought them. Thus it would not be a surprise if someone mistook him as a new Hunter.

And then, a disaster that often befell most of the green Hunters, who wandered through the slum city, also befell Akira.

“Akira, someone took your wallet.”

“Wha-!?”

Akira half-shouted, he quickly checked his pocket, and as Alpha said, he could not find the wallet that was inside the pocket.

“Be more careful next time. I might be able to protect you from pickpockets when you’re using an augmented suit that I can control, but as long as you’re not using an augmented suit, you should handle this kind of thing yourself, okay?”

Alpha just gave him a light warning as if it was not that big of a disaster to her. The wallet that Akira lost contained 100,000 Aurum. Although it was a big amount of money, compared to the money that he earned lately, it was not big enough to cause any inconvenience. So Alpha just brushed it off as the fee for a small lesson for teaching Akira to be more careful.

But there was a big difference between Akira and Alpha as to how they took this incident.

Akira took a few seconds to register, process, and understand what had just happened. After a few seconds of silence where Akira did not move from where he was standing, he finished assessing his situation and immediately said.

"…Who took my wallet?"

In his calm emotionless voice, there was a fit of dark foreboding anger seething under it. Behind his calm expression, Akira was leaking out an aura showing the sharpness and readiness to fight.

"Alpha, do you know who took my wallet?"

In order to not cause any suspicions, Akira asked that through telepathy. It showed that he had regained his calm and composure, enough for him to remember to talk with Alpha through telepathy.

Alpha was surprised by how angry Akira was. At the same time, she took this chance to gather more information about him and readjusted her image of Akira inside her mind. With this, she was able to understand his character at an even deeper level.

Alpha quickly answered back.

"It's that girl."

At the same time as Alpha pointed her finger, Akira's vision enhanced, allowing him to see through obstacles. His attention quickly zeroed onto a young girl who was already in the back alley. He immediately started running the moment he found his target.

Alna was looking through the insides of Akira's wallet.

“…Oh!! 100,000 Aurum! Lucky!! This should be enough for a few days.”

Alna was beaming since she got more money than she thought she would get this time. But that smile immediately vanished.

“…This should be enough for a few days, but after that…”

Alna cut her sentence there. She did not want to say its continuation nor to think about it. It was exactly because she understood the meaning behind it.

It was an extremely difficult endeavor to become successful in the slum city. Of course, being successful here did not mean being rich, but getting a stable income enough for one’s living through honest work would be enough. Even so, getting to that point was an extremely difficult struggle.

In order to get an honest job, one would need to have enough knowledge and education. But in order to get enough education, one would need enough money and connection. Most of the residents of the slum city did not have the knowledge to get that money nor enough money to gain such knowledge.

Alna knew somewhere inside her heart that her future was bleak. She would definitely ruin her own life one day. There was no way she could keep on living as a pickpocket. After all, if she kept doing that, she would be found one day, captured, and made to pay the price for everything that she had done.

She had no idea what kind of price she would have to pay. It might be just getting beaten up and then dumped in the back alley, or she might get raped and then left battered on the roadside, or maybe she would be simply killed. In the worst-case scenario, she might be put in a living hell where death would have been better.

But with that being said, Alna had no other skill that she could rely on to survive other than picking pockets. And since she was able to survive until now, that particular skill of hers was very well polished.

Alna shook her head to help her forget her thoughts.

“…Let’s stop here. There’s nothing I can do about it even if I start thinking about that here. Now that I have some money with me, let’s just go and grab some food, an empty stomach will only make me more depressed.”

Alna started walking toward the shop that she often visited.

She suddenly heard a loud sound coming from behind. She quickly turned back to check the source of that loud sound. On the other end of the narrow alley, she could see Akira running in her direction. That loud sound came from when Akira kicked the obstacles out of his way as he ran through the back alley.

Akira’s eyes met Alna’s. Both of them froze for a few seconds before Alna regained her composure and started running as fast as she could toward the opposite direction from where Akira was.

Alna quickly understood that Akira found out that she took his wallet and he was there chasing for her.

[How did he find out? It didn’t seem like he noticed anything when I took his wallet!! And even if he did, there’s no way he would know that it was me?! And that too!! It doesn’t seem like he was randomly looking for me and found me by pure coincidence!! He ran here fully knowing my location!!]

Alna did not know what kind of person Akira was. But that was not the only reason why she was running as fast as she could, it was because she saw Akira’s expression.

“He’s going to kill me!! He’s definitely going to kill me if I get caught!!”

Alna, who could feel the intense killing intent from Akira, ran as fast as she could for her life.

The moment Alna started running, Akira snapped back to his senses, he quickly fixed his stance and took an aim with his AAH rifle. But before he could pull the trigger, Alpha warned Akira who had lost his calm.

“If you pull the trigger, you might hit innocent people. Are you sure you want to do that?”

Alna and Akira were not the only people in that small alley. Although it was not like it was filled with people, there were quite a lot of people there. Some of them were merchants who could not open their shop in public, some of them were customers and guards of those shops. There were also people, who had lost their place, sleeping in the corners of that alley.

Although Akira’s shooting skill was way better than before, at the moment, he had no augmented suit that would allow Alpha to assist his aim and he was using a brand new gun that had never been used before. Thus he had no confidence that he could shoot accurately.

When he was hesitating, the people around him noticed that Akira had his rifle out and ready to shoot, they started to panic as they moved away from Akira. But at the same time, they also blocked his line of sight at his target.

Akira himself had no wish to get other innocent people involved. So he decided to pull back his rifle and started chasing Alna again.

The distance between Akira and Alna was not getting closer.

It was mainly because Alna could use her smaller stature to easily pass through the narrow alley.

On the other hand, Alna could not completely break away from Akira’s chase since Alpha was always informing Akira of her exact location.

Even after taking so many forked turns hoping that Akira would lose her, he was still able to precisely know which way she went. Thus Alna started to panic.

“How!? How does he know exactly where I am?! … Don’t tell me-“

Alna thought that Akira’s wallet might be equipped with a tracker. If that was the case, it was no wonder why he could accurately pinpoint her location. So she threw Akira’s wallet toward his direction.

When he saw his wallet fly above his head, Akira stopped, turned, and picked up his wallet.

Akira more or less regained his calm after he got his wallet back. The expression on his face also loosened.

Now, if the money in the wallet was still there, then Akira would get back everything that he had lost, and he would be able to clean his history of getting his wallet stolen. If it was the past Akira from when he was still living in the back alley, he would have never allowed such a blunder.

He then would be able to learn from this incident and be more careful next time, thus closing the incident there.

When Akira checked the inside of the wallet, it was empty, all the money in it was already taken out.

Akira's face immediately turned stern.

"…Alpha."

"Over there. I won't be able to pinpoint her location if she's too far from me. So if you want to chase her, you need to hurry up."

"…Roger that."

Akira answered back swiftly with a voice that would send a chill down to one's spine. He then started running again.

So in short, that incident did not end there. Akira blazed through the alley once again, chasing after Alna.

Alna, who was running through the back alley of the lower district, stopped as she was running out of breath. She then took a long breath and tried to calm herself. Her gaze was fixed at the alley that she just ran through, but she did not see Akira there. Even after she somehow calmed herself and adjusted her breathing, she still did not see Akira.

“D-did I lose him…? So that wallet was really equipped with a tracker, huh? Well, I guess it doesn’t matter now.”

Alna felt relieved and smiled. But that smile immediately vanished, it was because she saw Akira running towards her through the alley.

“…You gotta be kidding me?!!”

Alna was so surprised that she reacted late. When she started running again, the distance between her and Akira was already not that far.

Alna was focused on running. Her face was distorted due to fear, she was even half-crying. As she desperately ran away, she did not confirm what was in front of her before jumping out from the alley to the big road in the middle of the lower district. Because of that, she crashed right onto someone who was just passing through that road.

“Whoah!! Careful there!!”

Alna looked terrified as she turned toward the person that she just crashed onto. It was a young Hunter. Looking at his equipment, he seemed to be a pretty skilled Hunter.

His expression was showing that he was angry, but the moment he saw Alna’s frightened expression, his rage vanished. He then worriedly asked Alna.

“Are you alright?”

He smiled as if to calm Alna who seemed horrified. The moment Alna saw his handsome smiling face, she forgot her situation and was captivated by his smile, fear disappeared from her expression, her cheeks turned red as she let out a small gasp.

But the moment Alna could feel Akira’s presence coming from behind the alley, she quickly snapped back to her senses. Her eyes shifted back and forth between the terror coming from deep beyond the alley and the dazzling smile that gave her hope.

Alna decided to take the bet as she hugged that boy and screamed.

“Please help me!! I’m being chased!!”

Katsuya was walking through the main road in the middle of the lower district together with Yumina, Airi, Reina, Shiori, and Kanae. They were showing the lower district of the Kugamayama city to Kanae, who just joined their team.

Since all the girls, who were together with Katsuya, were wearing dresses that were better than most of the dresses in the lower district and also with some of them wearing a maid uniform, Katsuya's group gathered a lot of attention.

Kanae was wearing a maid uniform. It was not rare for female Hunters to walk around in the lower district with their Hunter armors, but it was rare to find them wearing a maid uniform. Because of that, most of the people around them were sending curious gazes to Kanae and the other girls who were together with Katsuya.

Reina sighed exasperatedly and turned to Kanae.

"Kanae, are you seriously planning to accompany me in that uniform from now on?"

Kanae instantly replied back.

Kanae knew that her maid uniform was gathering a lot of attention, but she did not care at all. After all, she was that kind of girl.

But in contrast to her, Reina was a bit bothered by that.

“You’re attracting a lot of attention, you know. Can’t you at least take that off?”

“Nope, just because I have an augmented suit underneath it, I don’t want to take it off. After all, I have no hobby of walking through a public space in a tight suit. Even if you have a hobby to make others do that, it’s outside of my real duty. So I’ll have to refuse.”

Kanae was subtly poking fun at Reina, so Reina shouted back at her.

“I don’t have that kind of hobby either!! I’m telling you to change into something else!!! You can just use another Hunter armour that you have, right?!!”

“Even if you tell me so, this is the best one that I have. Just because I’m attracting some attention, I have no plans to change into another cheaper armour that might prove fatal for my survival. After all, no one would care when we’re out in the wasteland anyways. So it’s fine, isn’t it? Ahh, but I’ll rethink it if Milady would give me better armour. Although, to be honest, if Milady has money to buy me a present, I think it’s better if Milady spends it for better equipment instead.”

Reina could not refute that logic. Of course, she could not tell Kanae to change her armour into something cheaper just because she did not like her current appearance.

Reina turned to Shiori, requesting for help. But Shiori just shook her head.

For Shiori, Kanae was Reina’s shield. As Reina’s bodyguard, it was Kanae’s duty to protect Reina even if it meant that she had to sacrifice her own life in the worst-case scenario. Thus Shiori had no plans to weaken that shield.

Kanae smiled like it was none of her business and said.

“Well, at least until Milady becomes strong enough to the point that Milady only needs one bodyguard, Milady will have to deal with it.”

Basically, Kanae was indirectly telling Reina that it was all her fault for being weak, and if she had anything she wanted to complain about, then she should become stronger. So Reina stopped thinking of making any counter-argument then and there.

In the first place, if it was not because her family thought that Shiori alone was not enough as her bodyguard, then Kanae too would not have been assigned as her bodyguard. The real reason why that happened was all because of her own fault.

Reina looked dispirited as she sighed and hung her head low. It was because she understood very well herself that it was all because she was too weak.

Katsuya, who saw Reina depressed, tried to cheer her up.

“We’ll help you too, so let’s work hard and become stronger together. I’m sure you can do it.”

“…Ah, right, thank you… Hm?”

Thanks to him, Reina was somehow able to cheer up. But she then realized that Katsuya said something that bothered her.

To be more precise, what bothered her was the implied meaning behind Katsuya’s words which he himself made clear with his next words.

“That’s why, won’t you cancel your decision to break away from my team?”

Reina and Shiori were originally a part of a Drankam affiliated team with Katsuya as its head. Around the time when Reina had not recognized Katsuya’s strength, she somehow forced her way into his team.

And even after she recognized Katsuya’s strength, she continued to work as a part of his team. She even somehow forced her way to join difficult requests compared to her level in order to get stronger and to collect achievements so that she could catch up with Katsuya.

Then after they finished the Kuzusuhara underground city request, Reina decided to break off from Katsuya’s team. Katsuya thought that it was just temporary until her extra bodyguard, Kanae, arrived and Shiori fully recovered.

But in contrast to his expectation, Reina decided to formally separate from Katsuya’s team. And it was all because of Reina’s own wish.

The requests that Drankam assigned to each of the Hunter teams affiliated to it were based on the average Hunter Ranks of the members of each team. Of course, the higher the average rank of a team, the higher the reward and the difficulty of the request that Drankam assigned to that team.

If Reina broke off from Katsuya’s team, there was no mistaking that her team would only get lower-level requests with lower rewards. It would be almost impossible for her new team to get a high-risk high-reward request such as the underground city exploration request from the other day. So in the end, it would be harder for Reina to increase her Hunter Rank.

Reina understood that Katsuya was trying to stop her out of good-will. Most of the people would think that Katsuya was trying to stop her out of ulterior motives, something like because Shiori and Reina were real beauties, or because he wanted to get skilled fighters like Shiori and Kanae on his team. But since Reina knew Katsuya’s personality well, she knew that was not the case.

Even though she knew all of that, she still shook her head.

“I’m sorry. I have no plans to withdraw that decision. After all, this all happened since I forced my way to join your team and accepted that underground city exploration request. Because I took a request that was way out of my capability, I ended up causing Shiori a lot of trouble. That's why I'm planning to start again by doing small requests that I can manage on my own from now on."

Katsuya at least understood that something must have happened when Reina and Shiori separated from his team in the underground city. But even until now, he still did not know the details of what exactly happened.

He did try to ask for the details, but both Reina and Shiori refused to say anything. Katsuya only knew about the aftermath, Reina was so tired to the point that she could not fight while Shiori was sent to the hospital. That was all that he knew.

Katsuya regretted the fact that he could not stay near them and protect them. He thought that he might have been able to do something to avoid such an outcome if he was together with them.

He looked a bit bashful as he smiled at Reina and said.

"If you stay with my team, you should be able to get better requests. Not to mention, if anything bad happens, well, I can protect you. So, won't you at least reconsider?"

Airi and Yumina, who listened to the conversation between Katsuya and Reina, showed 2 different reactions. Yumina just sighed exasperatedly while Airi looked slightly annoyed as she squinted her eyes.

Although Katsuya sounded as if he was trying to hit on Reina, he did not realize it himself. It was a common thing that he did numerous times in the past, but he always kept his word, he even had sacrificed himself to keep his promise.

Most of the time, it caused the girls, who he protected, to fall for him and this was the main reason why he kept amassing more and more girls around him.

Since Yumina had been together with Katsuya for years, she had given up on fixing that bad habit of his. As for Airi, since she was saved by Katsuya in the past, she could not tell him to stop doing that.

Because no one was trying to fix his bad habit, Katsuya's team had a very unbalanced male to female ratio.

Both Yumina and Airi thought that Reina would change her mind with this, but her answer was rather unexpected.

Instead, Reina cornered Katsuya with questions.

"…Katsuya, I'm happy that you said that to me, I really am. But, am I really that bad? Am I so bad that even after I've got Shiori with me, and Kanae assigned to me, that I would still need to be protected by you too? Am I really that bad as a Hunter in your eyes too?"

There was no trace of ill-will in Reina's expression. But her expression was serious and looked slightly desperate.

Katsuya was cornered by Reina's questions, he could only flusteredly answer back.

"T-that's not true. I just thought that we should help each other and we'll have a better chance of survival if we stay as a team. It's exactly because I recognize your skill that I want to have you in my team."

Reina stared at Katsuya as if she was questioning if that was really what he felt, she then shook her head.

"…Sorry, I don't think I'm that strong myself, that's why I can't take your offer."

"I-I see. It's really unfortunate, but it can't be helped then. You can tell me anytime if you change your mind, I'll wait for you."

After Katsuya said that, everyone went silent.

Reina did not say anything back to Katsuya. Shiori understood Reina's feelings, but since trying to carelessly cheer her up might be counter-effective, she decided not to say anything too. Meanwhile, Kanae thought that Reina would be angry at her if she said anything insensitive there, so she also did not say anything. Yumina did not know what exactly Reina was feeling, so she could not come up with anything to say to her. Airi was rather jealous that Katsuya tried to stop Reina, so she decided to just keep shut since she felt like she might say something unnecessary in that situation.

The awkwardness in that situation was palpable, and because of that, Katsuya's attention was diverted to the point that he could not step aside when a young girl suddenly came out from the alley and crashed on him.

"Whoah! Watch where you're going!"

Katsuya ended up scolding that girl out of annoyance. That girl, in turn, looked at him with a desperate and utterly scared expression.

Katsuya thought that his scolding was the reason why that girl looked so scared. So he decided to put his feelings aside and tried to calm her down as he smiled gently at her.

"Are you okay?"

It looked like it was effective since that girl's expression relaxed. With that one sentence, Yumina looked exasperated while Airi's face turned stern. Both of them mumbled.

"Again, huh?"

Katsuya quickly noticed that someone else was coming from the back alley where that girl just suddenly popped out. That girl's expression quickly returned back to looking very scared.

She then hugged Katsuya and screamed.

"Please help me!! I'm being chased!!"

She was the one who stole Akira's wallet, Alna.

While the other person that popped out from the back alley was the person who was chasing Alna, Akira.

Akira was surprised, but he quickly grasped the situation.

Alna, who stole his wallet, was clinging to Katsuya. Yumina and Airi looked at Akira with disdain and hatred, they quickly put their guard up against him. Katsuya covered Alna with his left hand while his right hand was ready to pick up his rifle anytime. He was already looking at Akira with a hostile gaze.

Reina and Shiori also quickly grasped the situation although they were surprised at first. As for Kanae, she was just smiling as if she was enjoying what was going on.

Both Akira and Katsuya had finished registering all the information in front of them.

Alpha then warned Akira, who was overly cautious of Katsuya's team.

"Akira, calm down and don't do anything reckless."

"You don't even need to remind me."

Alpha and Akira were talking through telepathy. Akira was calm enough to remember to reply back through telepathy. The moment he was facing Katsuya's team, the moment he knew he was facing skilled Hunters that he should be careful with, Akira quickly regained his composure.

"Alpha, what do you think? That pickpocket, is she that guy's… Katsuya, was it again? Is she his acquaintance? If she is, does that mean that girl is a Hunter who works as a pickpocket as a side job? Is she affiliated with Drankam too?"

"It depends on how much of this is a coincidence. If it's all pure coincidence, then I bet it's just that she bumped into a kind-looking Hunter and made some random excuse to ask for help. But if it's not a coincidence, then she must have run through the alley, which she knew well, into an area where there are many Hunters who patronized pickpockets. Those Hunters might have promised to protect her if she gets caught."

"…I guess this must be a coincidence then. I don't see any Hunters here who look so poor that they would go as far as to work with pickpockets."

"Well, you can't really judge a book by its cover. And even the small income from pickpocketing can become a huge sum once they pickpocket enough. But if you ask my honest opinion, I agree with you. This is just a coincidence. So, what are you going to do now?"

"…Good question."

If they just stood there glaring at each other, it would not solve anything. In order to achieve the reason why he was there, Akira opened his mouth first.

"I have some business with that girl, so can you give her to me?"

Alna shivered when she heard that. Katsuya could feel her shiver since Alna was clinging at him. And his wish to protect her grew stronger, it was also further fuelled by his hostile disposition toward Akira.

Katsuya's impression of the situation was fully cemented. He thought that Akira was chasing the beautiful girl Alna because of some kind of no-good reason.

And so, he was obviously showing his hostility with his glare.

"Do you really think that I'll just give her to you because you tell me to?"

Akira more or less knew that Katsuya would give him that reply, his expression turned stern thus showing his intent.

Yumina and Airi readjusted their position so that they could jump to Katsuya's help anytime. Shiori slowly moved in front of Reina, who was still confused by the sudden turn of events, as she watched carefully how the situation developed.

In the middle of that situation where everyone's tension was rising, Kanae was the only one who was still so relaxed. It was not like she was enjoying the situation, it was because she was a battle maniac who loved fighting.

Kanae then interjected with a cheery voice that did not suit the situation.

"So then, why are you chasing her?"

"She stole my wallet."

Everyone turned to Alna. It was obvious that she was starting to panic. Kanae then asked Alna with the same cheery voice as before.

"That's what he says, so, did you?"

Alna desperately clung on Katsuya.

"It's not me!! That boy just suddenly started chasing me with a scary face!!! That's why I was running as fast as I could!! I'm telling you the truth!!"

Katsuya could not discern whether Alna panicked because she was accused of something that she really did not do, or because she was trying to hide something. But at least he understood very well that she was desperate.

Because of his bad predisposition towards Akira, Katsuya somehow sounded mocking as he asked Akira.

"Do you even have any proof that she took your wallet?"

"Proof, huh…"

Akira went silent as he was thinking of what to say, but Katsuya immediately interpreted that silence as a no.

"You went silent there, so you don't have any proof, huh? I bet you just dropped it somewhere."

Akira and Katsuya glared at each other, raising the tension.

Airi then approached Alna.

“I’ll search her, if she had really stolen your wallet, I should be able to find it if I search her body.”

“O-Okay, you can go ahead.”

Alna stepped away from Katsuya and raised both her hands in front of Airi. But before Airi started searching her body, Akira interjected.

“You won’t find my wallet on her. She took out all of my money from my wallet and threw it away to cover up her crime.”

After hearing that explanation, Airi stopped. She thought for a bit and then asked Akira a question.

“How much did she take?”

“About 100,000 Aurum.”

Airi took another look at Alna, who was wearing a complete set of clothes. But the clothes that she was wearing were those worn-out clothes normal for the slum city residents, at least, she did not look like she even had 100 Aurum with her.

Even if she found that Alna was carrying 100,000 Aurum with her after searching her body. There was still no proof that she stole that, she might be carrying that money by pure coincidence.

Airi turned to Akira. Even if she told him to back off since he had no evidence, it did not seem like Akira would withdraw at all.

This time, Yumina interjected.

“Is there any chance that it was just a pure misunderstanding or some kind of other mistakes? Are you really really sure that she’s the one who stole your wallet?”

“Do you have any proof why you can say that with confidence? Do you have any proof that you’re not mistaking anything? Did she somehow run away from you after you caught her once before? Was the situation akin to you being with only her in a certain location when you realized you lost your wallet?”

“Well, about that…”

As Yumina asked him those questions in a calm manner without blaming him, Akira was rather troubled by how to answer those questions.

The one who noticed that he had lost his wallet was Alpha, not Akira himself. At least until Alna threw away his wallet, he was chasing Alna purely because he trusted Alpha when she said Alna was the one who took his wallet. He had no other proof why he thought that Alna was the pickpocket other than because Alpha told him so. But of course, he could not say that to Yumina.

Seeing how Akira could not answer her questions, Yumina pressed further.

“Is it because of the information you analyzed from your information-gathering device? I heard that some Hunters always keep their information-gathering device on and focus it to scan the area around them just to be safe.”

“No, that’s not the case either. Or more like, I got my information-gathering device destroyed in a fight.”

“So, is it because someone who was together with you, told you so? If it is, can we go to meet that person and ask for proof?”

“Well… Uhh…”

Yumina’s guess was correct, but no one other than Akira could see Alpha. Thus he could not really say anything back.

“Is there any security camera around the area where you got your wallet stolen? There are multiple security cameras installed on the main road of the lower district, we might be able to find something if we check the recording."

"…It happened when I was in the slum city, so I think there aren't any security cameras around…"

As Yumina continued questioning him, Akira's voice became smaller and smaller.

Compared to when they started, Akira sounded as if he had calmed down considerably. Yumina then continued with her still calm voice.

"I won't say that you're lying and I won't say that you're mistaken either. I do think that you have absolute proof that makes you say for sure that she's the one who stole your wallet. But it seems that you have your reason as to why you can't tell us the details about that. But again, as long as you won't tell us anything or give us any proof, we can't just trust your words and give this girl to you. You at least understand my point, right?"

Yumina stated that she understood what Akira was trying to say as well as asking him to understand her point. Akira also understood well why Yumina was taking that stance. So basically, she was not saying that he was mistaken or anything, while on the other hand, she asked him to not fully blame her either. Because of that, Akira was considerably calmed down, and the aura that was leaking out from him had also vanished.

After talking with Yumina, Akira had more or less regained his calm. It was not like Akira himself wanted to rope someone unrelated to his problem too.

The tension in the air had already lessened. It felt like at this rate, that incident would be solved without any fighting. Seeing how the situation had developed, Kanae looked slightly displeased.

"Akira, let's withdraw here. It's true that we can't expect them to trust us without telling them anything."

Alpha also encouraged Akira to pull back. He also agreed with Alpha's opinion.

There were many criteria that could be used to decide the winner and the loser, and they were often used to make a clear distinction between the loser and the winner in every case.

Akira, who had gotten his wallet stolen and his money taken by Alna, might be the loser here if he withdrew from this place without getting his money back. Then at the same time, it might mean that it was Alna's victory for getting protected by Katsuya although she did steal Akira's wallet, as well as it was Katsuya's victory for being able to successfully protect Alna, who came asking for his protection.

But again, it was nothing more but a biased evaluation.

Katsuya looked confident since he thought that he had won there. Akira, who was leaking out intense pressure, had calmed down after Yumina talked to him. Basically, he had more or less successfully protected Alna from Akira who was chasing her. It boosted his ego, moreover, since the tension in the air had also died down, it gave Katsuya the leeway to think of something else.

Because of all those reasons, Katsuya suddenly mockingly said to Akira.

"Humph, even if it's true that you got your wallet stolen, it's your fault for being careless although you're a Hunter."

"Katsuya!!"

Yumina yelled at Katsuya. She then immediately turned to Akira to apologize in Katsuya's place.

But the moment she saw Akira, Yumina froze.

The aura around Akira had completely changed. The peaceful aura around him from a moment ago had completely vanished, replaced by an ominous aura. It was somehow obvious that Akira would suddenly open fire anytime. Although he was looking down towards the ground, there was a foreboding ominous pressure exuding from him.

Akira then raised his face and looked at Katsuya, and suddenly started laughing.

Akira continued laughing as if he had turned insane.

“It’s my fault for being so careless. It’s my fault for being negligent. It’s my fault for being barely able to react when my wallet was stolen. It’s my fault for being unable to protect my own wallet.”

Akira’s laughter was getting louder as he spoke.

Akira laughed loudly while admonishing himself. His laughter suddenly died down, only self-hatred and self-reproach were left on his expression.

“But I’ll erase this pathetic mistake from my history. I’ll get my money back and make the person who stole it, regret it. That’s one thing that I can promise you. And now I can finally erase it, or at least, I can deal with it to some point.”

The Akira in the past could not earn that sum of money, and even if he did, he could not get it back if someone robbed his money from him, since he simply had no right to carry any money. But the current him had worked so hard to the point that he could escape from such a situation.

But right now, Akira could not take back the money that was stolen from him. It was as if he had returned to his former self.

Akira wanted to show to the other people, and especially to himself, that he really had escaped from that position, that situation, that world. And that it was all not just his imagination.

Anger and hatred vanished from his expression, the only thing that reflected on his near-expressionless eyes were his target, and the obstacle that was standing between him and his target.

Alna was shaking behind Katsuya's back. The reason why she did not try to escape from that place was because she unconsciously knew that it was the safest place in her current situation.

Then Akira said in a cold tone.

"Give her to me."

"…I refuse!!"

Katsuya stood by his decision against the immense pressure from Akira and refused to handover Alna.

The reason why he refused to back down was completely unrelated to his dislike towards Akira. He had already resolved himself to protect Alna, who came for his help, even if it meant that it would put him in danger. He had such a kind of disposition and it would not allow him to hand over Alna to Akira.

Athena13: My old man always told me that having a good intention doesn't make you a good person, a person is judged by his or her actions and not their thinking.

Silavin: Your old man is a good man.

But seriously, drama aside, Katsuya’s lack of self-esteem really showed off here.

While it was not always true that the enemies of your enemies were your friends, but almost always, the friends of your enemies were definitely your enemies. According to what Katsuya said, he basically put himself in a position where he allied himself with Akira's enemy. Thus, from Akira's point of view, Katsuya and his friends had already shifted from being innocent people, who got roped into this situation, to his enemies.

It would be nothing strange if Akira suddenly opened fire. Because of that, Alpha warned him with a stern expression.

"Akira, you can't. I won't allow you to do this. It's 7 vs 1, 6 of them are used to fighting, while the remaining one can fight you equally even when you have your augmented suit. You can't take this fight."

"7 against 1, huh…"

Those words were mumbled more to himself than to Alpha. Since he always communicated through telepathy with her, he thought that Katsuya and the others will not be able to hear what he said.

But his stance was already showing that he was ready to fight. Currently, his focus was divided into two, observing the enemies in front of him and planning on how to dispose of all of them. As such, he forgot his usual routine. Thanks to that, his obviously hostile statement that he just mumbled were heard by Katsuya and the others.

Yumina did not think that Akira would not recognize the difference in their strength, so when she heard him mumbled that statement, she was hoping that he would withdraw from that place.

But Shiori suddenly said something unexpected.

“It’s not 7 against 1. I, Reina, and Kanae would not get involved in this fight. We won’t aid Katsuya-sama nor Akira-sama.”

After she said that, Shiori pulled Reina behind her and Kanae.

“S-Shiori-san!?”

Yumina was taken-aback when Shiori said that. There was no trace of blame in her voice, she was just purely surprised by that statement.

Katsuya and Airi were also surprised. Without dropping their guard against Akira, they looked at Shiori as if they were asking her what she was thinking.

Akira’s expression did not change at all, he was still observing Katsuya and the others closely as he sent a glance to Shiori. He tried to guess what Shiori’s group was going to do next since they made an unexpected but suspicious decision.

As Akira and Katsuya’s group focused their attention on Shiori, she showed a wilful expression and said to both of them.

“Katsuya-sama, if you are going to risk a fight in order to protect someone, who you just met for the first time, I do think it’s a commendable act and I can respect that. But it is a completely different thing if it gets Milady involved too. So please handle this situation without involving us.”

Shiori said that with a serious face while exuding an intimidating aura.

“Akira-sama, as long as you do not pose any danger to Milady, including misfire, I can promise you that we won’t attack you. So please make the right decision to avoid any needless battle.”

Shiori basically said that her group would not help either side if they decide to fight it out. While at the same time, she was also questioning Katsuya’s decision to risk his and his friends’ life for Alna’s sake. She was also telling Akira to rethink whether this fight was really that important or not.

Both Akira and Katsuya could make a decision to not fight there. But if none of them backs-off, then anything that would happen after that was their responsibility.

Shiori then pushed Reina, who still could not recover from the confusion, backward as if she was urging her to move. They were slowly distancing themselves from Katsuya and Akira.

Reina tried to resist a bit as Shiori pulled her away from that place, but she did not try to seriously break off from Shiori to fight beside Katsuya against Akira. To be more precise, she did not even want to be chosen as the third party observer there.

Shiori frowned as she said to Reina.

“My apologies. Milady, I’ll have to pull you away even if it’s against your will… Or is that you’re planning to repeat the same mistake again?”

Shiori did not clearly state what kind of mistake she was talking about. It was so that Reina would figure it out by herself about the worst mistake that she made in the past.

Reina immediately remembered everything that Shiori might be referring to.

That time when Yajima and Akira were arguing in the underground city, both of them were making statements without any proof or evidence. So there was no telling which one was lying and which one was not, but actually Akira was telling the truth at that time. But again, there was no guarantee that it was also the case this time.

She also remembered that she was taken hostage when she carelessly approached Yajima. So, she feared that the same thing would happen again if she tried to approach Akira to calm him down or if she tried to approach Alna to protect her. After all, if Alna took her hostage, Shiori might be forced to fight Akira again. And if Akira took her hostage, then Shiori might be forced to fight Katsuya.

She would just end up as a deadweight again and be forced to watch people killing one another in front of her eyes.

The regret that she was holding inside her heart since that day pushed her to make her decision.

"…Katsuya, I'm sorry. I can't help you this time. I don't think it's wise to risk my life for protecting that girl."

It was a tough decision for Reina, but her love for Katsuya was not big enough for her to rope Shiori into that problem for his selfless action.

Yumina became saddened as she looked at Reina, while on the other hand, Airi's gaze was saying that she was condemning Reina's decision. It seemed that both of them loved Katsuya so much that they would be happy to sacrifice their lives for him. Enough that they would choose to fight Akira rather than pulling Alna off from Katsuya and handing her over to Akira–an act which would make Katsuya hate them.

Kanae suddenly said something with a cheerful voice as if she could not read the mood at all.

"Ah, I don't mind taking Katsuya's side though."

Shiori immediately directed a silent but immense pressure toward Kanae, making her retract her words.

“Ah, I’m sorry! I take that back! This is also my job as a bodyguard! So I can’t do that! Well then, we’ll excuse ourselves here! Milady, let’s go back home!”

Kanae placed both of her hands on Reina’s shoulder and started pushing her away to the point that they were jogging. Shiori lightly bowed and followed Kanae and Reina.

After Reina, Shiori, and Kanae put enough distance from where Akira was, he mumbled.

“Now, it’s 4 on 1…”

Katsuya and his friends were staring at Shiori, who left that place, forgetting about Akira. But the moment Akira mumbled those words, their attention returned back to him, their stances indicating that they were ready to fight anytime.

Although they had not pointed their guns at Akira, their hands were already extended to right beside their own respective rifles. The moment one of them touched their rifles, Akira might quickly react by grabbing his own rifle and start shooting. That was why Katsuya, Airi, and Yumina did not dare to make any sudden or suspicious moves.

Akira’s words reconfirmed their current situation, it was not 3 against 1, but 4 against 1. So in short, Akira included Alna as his target to kill, so Katsuya would have to fight Akira while protecting Alna which would put him at a disadvantage.

Katsuya’s expression turned stern. Since the tension between them was extremely high, it shaved their spirits the longer they stood there staring at each other. And that unbearable tension was tempting Katsuya and his friends to make the first move before Akira.

Akira’s expression did not change as he glared at Katsuya. His eyes were saying that he had no wish to lessen his hostility towards them. He simply had no wish to back-off in such a situation. The only reason why he did not make any move was simply because of the difference between their fighting power.

Akira himself had no plans to go as far as to sacrifice his own life just to kill Alna. After all, if that was not the case, he would have made his move when Katsuya and his friends took their eyes off from him.

After losing Shiori, Reina, and Kanae, the gap between their fighting power greatly reduced. But it still did not change the fact that Akira only had a slim chance of winning; even if he were to put down his life.

Akira’s sense of reason stopped him from pushing forward, but his hatred and anger prevented him from backing off. Because of that, he could not make any moves.

The trigger that changed the situation was Alpha. She scolded Akira with a stern expression.

“Akira, step back! Now! If you just wait for a bit longer, you’ll get better equipment. There’s no reason for you to recklessly charge into a disadvantageous fight, without even waiting for your new equipment, just to kill that girl. From my point of view, what you are going to do now is just adding more salt to your injury. If you fight now, there’s no mistaking that you’ll die. Akira, are you going to disobey me now? Do you not trust me now?”

Even after hearing Alpha’s words, Akira’s expression showed no change. The hostility that he directed to Katsuya did not reduce at all as he was still glaring at them.

But then, Akira, who did not lower his guard and was keeping his eyes fixed on Katsuya and his friends, took a step back without turning around. He then slowly stepped back to the alley where he came from. Akira’s expression did not change and he still glared at Katsuya and his friends until he finally vanished deep into the alley.

Even after Akira’s figure disappeared into the alley and his presence completely vanished, it took a few minutes before Katsuya, Airi, and Yumina lowered their guards. All of them let out a big sigh as they were liberated from the high tension which accumulated during that confrontation.

Even though they did not fight at all, they felt exhausted. That confrontation was psychically more taxing than a fierce battle. It might be because they had no experience fighting against another person. Since they were lucky to be proper Hunters and with a big gang like Drankam behind them, Katsuya rarely had any occasion where he had to fight other Hunters.

Although they had gone through a lot of fights during their job as Hunters, this was the first time someone bore such a level of killing intent and hostility at them.

Yumina strongly scolded Katsuya, which was very rare considering her nature.

“Katsuya!! Don’t expect me to help you if something like that happens again, okay?!”

Katsuya did not think it through as he reflexively replied back.

“Are you seriously telling me that I should have just given this girl away to him?”

“That’s not it!!”

Katsuya’s reply caused Yumina to raise her voice and shut him up. Her fiery reply caused Katsuya to wince back.

“If you hadn’t said what you said back then, we could’ve resolved this peacefully?!! So why in the world did you say that?!”

“I-I didn’t think that he would get enraged, you see.”

“What I’m asking you is the reason why you said that?! Did you really think that he would just laugh it off and forget about it when you say such things?!!”

“I-It just slipped off from my mouth… I-I’m sorry.”

Katsuya sounded like his apology was sincere, it seemed that he at least knew it was his mistake.

After letting out her pent up emotion, Yumina finally calmed down. Her intense glare had returned back to normal. After she took another long breath, she then scolded Katsuya again.

“The next time you do anything like this, I’ll replace that mouth of your’s with a cyborg part and I’ll set it so that you can’t say anything without my permission, okay? Do you get that?”

“O-Okay.”

After hearing his answer, Yumina finally let go of her rage. Now that she had regained enough composure to think about Alna, she approached Alna, who was still dumbfounded by what had happened, and said to her.

“I’m sorry, it seems that things always get complicated because of Katsuya.”

Then Alna flusteredly thanked Katsuya and his friends.

“P-please don’t be! It’s me who should be apologizing for roping everyone into my problem! Thank you very much for saving me!”

Alna was now sending passionate gazes at Katsuya. It was normal for a girl to send such a gaze to a member of the opposite sex who saved her when she was in trouble, and of course, Alna was not an exception.

Airi watched that confrontation between Akira and Katsuya from a location little far from Yumina.

Unlike Katsuya and Yumina, who became Hunters starting from a blessed environment, Airi started from a rather poor environment. According to her past experiences, she bet that Akira was telling the truth.

Airi was at a loss whether to tell Katsuya and Yumina or not, but in the end, she decided not to say anything. After all, if she did, then she would have to explain her reasoning. But the main reason why she did not tell Katsuya and Yumina was because she did not want to ruin Katsuya's mood. As Airi thought that it had ended anyway, she decided to not tell Katsuya and Yumina.

Akira was walking through the back alley, he was heading to his original destination, Sheryl's base. His expression had not changed much since his confrontation with Katsuya.

Alpha thought that it would be bad to let Akira meet anyone while he was in this mood. Since with his current mood, even the slightest misunderstanding could trigger an unnecessary fight. So she gently made a suggestion to Akira to calm himself down.

"Akira, how about you take some deep breaths?"

Akira stopped. He did not say anything as he turned to Alpha, while she returned his stare with a smile.

"Hm? What's wrong? You don't know how to do it? Do you need me to explain it? Or do you need an example?"

Although Akira was staring at her with an abnormal expression, Alpha's smile did not diminish. The intonation of her voice also remained the same.

Akira did not say anything as he took a deep breath. He then repeated the process again and again and again.

For his last deep breath, Akira let out a big sigh. His expression loosened and returned back to his depressed face, which said that he hated himself.

Akira then spoke to Alpha through telepathy.

"…I'm sorry."

It might be because he spoke through telepathy, all his guilty feelings and the other emotions inside him were sent to Alpha together with his apology. There was guilt, frustration, self-reproach, and gratitude.

“Don’t worry about that.”

Alpha received all of those emotions sent to her and told Akira that it was not that big of a deal.

Akira started walking again, and Alpha walked beside him.

“I know it’s too late to say this, but I really am relying on you for everything, huh?”

“You can keep on relying more on me, you know? You can just ask me anything.”

“Even if you tell me so, I think I’m already relying more than enough on you. So like, rather than that, do you have anything that you want me to do for you?”

“Let’s see… I want you to not die until you can finish my request.”

Akira sincerely apologized and Alpha smiled in satisfaction.

Akira arrived in front of Sheryl’s base, but he decided to head back home without entering the base. Although he had regained his calm, his mood was not fully recovered to his usual self yet. He might inadvertently vent his emotion on Sheryl, thus he thought that it would be better for him to visit the base another day.

Akira retraced his footsteps back to his house.

After Akira left, 2 girls arrived near Sheryl’s base. One of them was a girl by the name of Nasha, she looked just like a normal girl commonly found in the slum city. While the other girl was Alna.

Alna worriedly asked Nasha.

“Nasha, are you sure that it’ll be fine?”

“Don’t worry, I carefully picked this gang after gathering all the information that I could get. Even if we get rejected from this gang, they won’t kill us or take all of our possessions… Maybe.”

Both Alna and Nasha were hoping to join Sheryl’s gang.

Although Sheryl’s gang was a relatively small gang, it gathered a lot of attention from the young boys and girls in the slum city.

Starting from its boss, Sheryl, all the members of the gang were young boys and girls and there were even small children too. But even so, the gang was properly managed like a real organization and it had enough influence to provide some level of protection to its members. Moreover, news had spread through the slum city that Sheryl’s gang had successfully secured food and guns too. Thus, the reputation of the gang started to spread. People who heard about Sheryl’s gang normally had good impressions of it. So, many of them wished to join Sheryl’s gang in order to gain benefits.

Nasha smiled to clear up Alna’s worries.

“You were the one who kept rushing it in the first place, remember? So why are you hesitating now?”

“W-well, that’s true, but still…”

“I don’t know the real reason why, but it seems that the boss of this gang prohibits all of its members from thieving or murdering other people. That’s why I’m sure they won’t tell you to pickpocket even after you get accepted. I’ll join first to see if that’s true or not and then you can join in later after I confirm it, that’s our plan, remember?”

Alna sounded apologetic as she said.

“Nasha, I’m sorry. It feels like I’m making you go alone to check the gang just for my sake. Please be careful.”

“It’s fine. I’ve always been thinking of joining this gang anyway, so this is a good chance to do that.”

Nasha then extended her right hand to Alna and opened her palm. Alna took out a few pieces of papers from her chest and handed it over to Nasha while making her grip on it.

Both Nasha and Alna did not think that they would be able to join Sheryl’s gang without any connection or money. And at the same time, they thought that they would have a better chance to get accepted if they had some souvenirs that they could give to the boss of the gang or the people working under her. So their plan was to use their hard-earned money to get a better chance.

As Nasha counted the bills that she received from Alna, she frowned and her face turned stern.

“90,000 Aurum!? Alna, you really overdid it this time!! Are you trying to kill yourself?!”

Nasha knew well how Alna got her money. This 90,000 Aurum was a huge sum that would drive any slum city resident into a frenzy if they were pickpocketed. It was huge enough to make someone kill for retrieving it.

Alna’s face distorted with fear as she replied.

“I know!! I did tell you too, remember?! I was really about to get killed!! Although I got lucky and was able to get out alive, it was really a close call!! I know what I’m doing is really dangerous, that’s why I’m rushing you so that I can live without the need to pickpocket!! So that I don’t have to face that kind of thing ever again!”

Alna shivered as she remembered Akira’s image when he was chasing her and when he was confronting Katsuya’s team.

When Nasha saw Alna shivering, she hugged Alna to help her calm down. Alna's shivers slowly died down thanks to that.

Alna then hugged Nasha back.

"I'm sorry, Nasha, please be careful there."

"Rather than worrying about me, you should worry more about yourself. Make sure to remain hidden, okay?"

Alna and Nasha expressed their worries to each other before going their separate ways. Alna went to their hideout in the slum city while Nasha headed to Sheryl's gang.

Akira spent his days training inside his house without even stepping outside. It was because he decided to stay in his house as much as possible until he got his augmented suit and regained Alpha's support.

He thought that it must be one of his unlucky periods, that was also the reason why he got his wallet stolen. Thus he stayed inside his house as much as possible.

Akira had spent all of his luck when he met Alpha, so normally, he had no luck left with him. He always somehow managed to get through it with his hard work and Alpha's support. But at that time, his carelessness wasted all his hard work, and since he did not have his augmented suit, he could not have Alpha's support. Akira thought these were the reasons why he got his wallet stolen.

Although there was no proof for this, if only Akira did not get careless, or if he had his augmented suit with Alpha's support, he might have not lost his wallet back then. At least the logic checked out and that was enough as a proof for Akira.

As for Alpha, she wanted to keep Akira inside since there was a good chance that the current Akira would react unexpectedly when faced with a problem. She had no plans to allow him to go out until he got his new equipment, or at least until he got his new augmented suit.

Since both Akira and Alpha agreed with each other on this, he decided to spend his time training inside his house.

Akira's time compression training was doing well. Although it was not like it exponentially increased his fighting skill, his time compression success rate was increasing. He no longer stopped the training because he was too tired to move. But to be more precise, it was because Alpha adjusted the gap between her attacks depending on Akira's level of tiredness.

Because of that, every time Akira finished his training, Alpha would have lost most of her dress to the point that she seemed more or less naked just like before.

Every time he failed to evade Alpha's attack, a piece of her dress would flutter away and vanish as usual. Today too, as the last piece of her dress fluttered away, it vanished without making any sound.

As Alpha was floating there with a dress that was barely hiding any part of her body, she told Akira, who was breathing roughly out of tiredness, that the training had ended.

"Let's end the training here. You did well in today's training."

Akira glanced at Alpha while trying to regulate his breathing.

"What's wrong, Akira??"

"Well, about that dress."

"Hm? Since it seems that you like erotic clothes, doesn't this interest you?"

Akira sounded a bit annoyed as he said.

"That's not it. I'm just thinking that although I'm starting to get a grasp on this time compression thingy, your dress has not changed much compared to the first time we started this training. So in short, I still can't evade your attacks, and that really bothers me."

Akira was displeased by the result of his training since he felt that he was not getting better at all.

Alpha smiled to reassure him.

"That's normal. Even if you can slow down your time perception to 10 times, it's not like your physical ability increases 10 times. It's not easy to get yourself used to the lag that arises when you try to move your limbs and when they actually move. Moreover, you'll have to get yourself to the point where you can move your body freely in that state. So there's no way you can do it right off the bat. Don't worry, you're slowly getting there, I can guarantee that."

"…Is that so? I don't feel it though. But if you say so, then I guess that's true."

"Yep. So don't worry."

"Okay."

Akira picked himself up and started to walk to his room for taking a rest. But when he grabbed the handle of the garage door, he suddenly stopped and turned back to Alpha.

"Turn back to your usual dress."

"Sure."

Since Akira told her so, Alpha replaced her tattered dress.

Akira was not bothered by her dress during the training since he placed his focus on dodging her attacks, or at least, he tried to do so. So when he returned back to his usual psychical state as he was about to exit the garage, that was no longer the case.

Just like usual, after his training, Akira took rest in his room while eating his meal. It was his usual heated frozen meal.

There was a separate kitchen in his house and it contained a stove for cooking. It was among the leftover stuff from the previous resident. But of course, it was currently not used for cooking anything. Akira had no idea how to cook and it was not like the previous resident also left behind his cooking skill there. Not to mention, the frozen food was not that bad either, so he had no plans to learn cooking any time soon. So, for now, it was just used to heat the frozen meal.

Akira's living standard had definitely risen. But at least until he found pleasure in cooking, it was highly unlikely that he would ever use those cooking utensils.

As Akira was enjoying his meal during the short break before his study, he asked Alpha.

"What am I going to study today? Are we going to continue our talk about the corporations from yesterday? What was it again? Resource trading and distribution among the cities under the eastern Corporate Government?"

When someone said eastern city, Akira did not know that there were cities other than Kugamayama city until now. But thanks to Alpha's education, he started to gather common knowledge and increased his intelligence. Although he was more knowledgeable than before, his knowledge was still considered as minuscule compared to the people living within the inner wall.

The reason why Alpha taught all of those things to him was more for her own sake rather than for Akira's sake.

Alpha was actually probing Akira as she was teaching him. In order to complete her request, she needed him to be more knowledgeable so that he could easily resist any type of beliefs that might become an obstacle in completing her request.

So, studying was important to both Akira and Alpha.

Although their original plan was to study that day, Alpha decided to cancel it.

“We won’t be studying today, after all, it seems that a message just arrived from Shizuka saying that your new equipment has arrived. So let’s go get them.”

“Oh!! I can finally start my Hunter work again, let’s go!!”

In order for Akira to complete Alpha’s request, she needed him to be stronger. So, she prioritized getting better equipment over his study.

Alpha smiled at Akira who looked elated.

Athena13: Big oof Alna, big big oof.

Silavin: Haha. Poor Alna. I don’t hate her. But, she was a little too greedy lol.

p4553r: I’m looking forward to seeing what would happen when Alna and Akira meet in Sheryl’s base. Will she die with grievances or will she become Akira’s aide?

Akira headed to Shizuka's shop to receive his new equipments.

When he entered the shop, Shizuka waved at him.

"Welcome, Akira. Over here."

Shizuka smiled at him and then guided him to the backroom of the shop. The backroom was used as a warehouse for the stuff that she sold, thus it was filled with guns and ammo.

Akira noticed something and asked Shizuka.

"By the way, is it okay to leave the counter unguarded?"

"It's fine. It's not like there are that many people who want to buy guns anyway, so it will not be much of an issue even if I leave the counter. Even when the city was attacked by a swarm of monsters not too long ago, there were more people coming in than usual but it was not that many to even form a line in front of the counter."

"I meant it more like someone might steal something…"

“The rifles in the display are inside anti-thieving showcases, I have also installed security cameras, and have insurance with a private security company. So it’ll be fine.”

Even if someone was able to break the secured counter, take Shizuka’s money from it, and escape from the security, she’ll be paid with the same amount of money that she lost. Thus it was highly unlikely that Shizuka would suffer much damage that Akira thought she would.

Not to mention, the private security company that was working together with the insurance company, which Shizuka was contracted with, would catch that person dead or alive. If that person was caught alive, he would be fined with all kinds of charges and would be forced to exchange his life, his body, basically just everything that he had to pay the fine. Depending on the severity of the fine, he might get his property seized, or forced into a labour work, or used as a guinea pig for developing new medicines or technologies.

Seeing how Akira still seemed to be worried, Shizuka smiled at him and said.

“If you’re still worried that I’m leaving the counter for your sake, just think of it as me giving some efforts to get a regular customer. It should bother you less that way, right?”

Although Akira had spent 80,000,000 Aurum in Shizuka’s shop, it did not seem that she had thought of him as a regular customer.

Either because it showed on his face or just simply because her intuition was very sharp, she noticed what Akira was thinking and so she continued.

“I’m really thankful that you’re contributing to the revenue of this shop. But to be honest, I hope that you would buy goods that I sell in my shop. I don’t get much profit from that augmented suit that I ordered from another shop, you see.”

Although Shizuka was only joking, Akira flusteredly replied.

“Ahh, well, I’ll do that from next time…”

“Fufufu, I’ll be waiting then.”

Shizuka smiled invincibly, after which, she pointed at the entrance shutter of the warehouse.

“Now then, your new equipment set is over there.”

When Akira peeked in, he was a bit surprised as he happily said.

“Although I know the contents of my new equipment set from reading the document Shizuka-san gave me, is it really okay to get this included too?”

Shizuka smiled in triumph as she said.

“Of course, it’s still under the budget limit, you know.”

In front of Akira was a large-sized vehicle which was also included in his list of new equipment.

Akira and Shizuka walked to that vehicle. Akira looked closely at it, wide-eyed. Although it looked not much different from the truck that he once rented from a rental shop and was just a common vehicle, it was still way better than a rental vehicle.

“Well then, let’s check if you have got everything that you ordered.”

Shizuka then pulled out a documented list of the items and handed a copy to Akira. They then checked the items with that document.

“So you get 1 4WD vehicle specially designed for traversing the wasteland, it’s Teros 97 made by Tatsumori Heavy Industry. Although it’s rather old, it’s fully equipped for exploring the wasteland. I’ve also exchanged the control unit with a new one.”

Akira scanned the vehicle, it was an open type vehicle without a roof designed so that Hunters could shoot their portable heavy weapons from the seat. Since it was a vehicle designed to be used in the wasteland, it could be said that it was made to fight against monsters. Thus, its body was even equipped with force field plating.

The force field plating was a type of armour plating that would activate a force field when hit by an impact to disperse the force of that impact. But after it activated a force field, the plating tile would peel and fall off. That was the reason why the wasteland was filled with used plating tiles.

“Then, 1 CWH anti-material rifle. 1 DVTS mini-gun. Both of them are installed into the vehicle so you can use them even without an augmented suit. Although you can demount them and use them just like a normal gun, you need to be careful since the DVTS mini-gun consumes a lot of ammo. I’ve also added some modification parts so it’s compatible with piercing ammo. Although it’s loaded with that type of ammo right now, you can also use normal ammo for it, so there’s no need to worry about that part.”

Akira then looked at the rear part of the vehicle. Behind the back seat, there was a removable tray equipped with a gun station. Akira’s CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS mini-gun was installed there. Although they lacked firepower compared to the preinstalled big guns in tanks, for the current Akira, they were already pretty powerful. If he was going to meet another swarm of monsters next time, he could at least put up a fight.

“Then there are also 2 information terminals for Hunters. Since they are strongly built, they should not break easily even if you use them rather crudely. Anything can happen in the wasteland, it’s better to have a sturdy information terminal just to be safe so that you can use it for sending SOS request during an emergency.”

Akira peeked at the driver seat, there were 2 durable-looking information terminals.

“Then 2 electric knives. Well, if you find yourself having to fight monsters using those knives, it means that you’re already in a pretty bad situation, but it’s at least better than nothing. Each knife can only be used for causing a single shock, if you’re lucky, it can shut down a mechanical monster with its shock.”

There were 2 knives beside the information terminal on the driver seat, they might be some kind of bonus items from buying the information terminal. Of course, for most Hunters, it would be suicide to challenge monsters in a close-range battle. Moreover, since most of the people knew that mechanical monsters were weak against electric shock, Akira thought that monsters must have at least adapted to that by now, and that must have been the reason why Shizuka added ‘if you’re lucky’ when she said.

“Then lastly, the ERPS information-gathering device integrated augmented suit. Its name is PWD Silence. It’s inside that case over there together with all of its equipment set. The equipment set includes an aiming device that can be connected with the augmented suit, so be sure to install it later.”

Akira grabbed the handle of the case which was placed on the seat and pulled it out from the vehicle. But it was way heavier than he anticipated, it took everything he had to drag it out from the vehicle even after he used both of his hands.

Seeing this, Shizuka extended her hand from behind Akira and easily picked up the case that he was struggling to drag out. Akira, who saw that, gasped in amazement.

Shizuka smiled and said.

Shizuka was using a simple augmented suit under her clothes. Akira remembered the time when she had mentioned it to him.

Although Akira’s reaction was not that big, it seemed to have offended Shizuka.

“Eh, ah, yes, I know.”

Akira tried to gloss it over as he flusteredly replied back.

Shizuka took out the augmented suit from that case and helped Akira put it on.

Unlike his previous augmented suit, Akira's new augmented suit did not have the skeletal-like frame. But instead, it had thin hard rubber linings on top of its artificial fibres that looked like capillary vessels. There were some holes that looked like a connection port on that hard rubber lining.

Akira looked curiously at those holes, Shizuka then explained to him.

"You can use those ports to connect the augmented suit with small-sized information-gathering devices. I did explain that it's an information-gathering device integrated augmented suit, remember? So, it has a small-sized information-gathering device installed in it. After all, it was designed to be used in tandem with information-gathering devices."

"I guess this kind of thing is really expensive, right?"

"Of course a better augmented suit cost more money. But, this PWD Silence is rather special, I got it at a pretty cheap price. Compared to the other augmented suits that you can buy with the same amount of money, this augmented suit is basically one level better."

"Rather special, huh?"

Akira knew that Shizuka would not recommend any defective products to him, but it still bothered him when she said that it was rather special.

"Well, it'll be fine. It's not like it's a used product with a shady background. It's a new product and not one of those products that got called back in the past for some kind of defect in its design. It's just that it's very unpopular for some reason. On its day of release, a particular Hunter made a very bad remark about this product, and since that person was rather famous, the bad review quickly spread in the market. In the end, it became a failure product that didn't sell at all. Later it was known that there was no defect in its design or functionality when another model with the exact same specs and design but with the different name was released and was selling well."

After hearing Shizuka's explanation, Akira somehow felt a sense of affinity. Both him and that augmented suit had bad luck. Thus, it might be the perfect augmented suit for those who tried to fight back and rise up from that situation.

When Akira turned the augmented suit on, it tightened up and fit perfectly with his body shape, he did not feel any discomfort at all. Even after moving his body around, he still did not feel anything uncomfortable. If he could move this fluidly even before the fine-tuning, there should be no problem with the augmented suit just like Shizuka told him.

Akira then closed the augmented suit's case and put it back in his vehicle. Thanks to his enhanced physical strength due to the augmented suit, he was able to do that easily.

Shizuka smiled at Akira as she said.

"And with this, we've confirmed that you received all your new equipment set. Are you happy with them?"

"Yes, thank you very much."

"I'm glad to hear that, I hope that you'll keep coming to my shop."

Shizuka took a step closer to Akira and gave him a hug.

"…I know that you'll return back to doing your Hunter job, so please be careful out there, okay?"

"Yes."

After Shizuka let him go, Akira got into his vehicle. Shizuka lightly waved at him as she saw him off, Akira lightly bowed back to her and turned the vehicle, he then drove back home.

When Shizuka could no longer see Akira, she sighed and smiled bitterly.

"…This is bad; I am getting too attached. And here I thought I was more disciplined than this. I'm getting too emotionally invested in Akira that I'm now willing to go beyond my self-set boundaries. If it were not because Akira was also making a good contribution to my shop, this would have been really really bad.”

Shizuka thought that at this rate, she would even become willing to face some monetary loss just to get Akira better equipment. She reminded herself to be more rational and to calm down before she returned back to the counter.

It had been 3 days since Akira got his new equipment set, and today, he was driving his new vehicle through the wasteland.

The control unit installed inside his vehicle was already under Alpha’s control. Thanks to that, she was able to drive the vehicle. But this time, she allowed Akira to take full control to get him used to drive his vehicle.

He had already gotten himself familiar with his new equipment, he had tried using his augmented suit to move around and took some test shots with his new guns. This was the first day he was going to do a real job after getting his new equipment.

He was heading to an area in the Kuzusuhara ruin that he only visited for a short time once before he took that request to the underground city. It was the area where the pointer was pointing to the underground when he was looking for old-world facilities using the information that he had gotten from the Lion Steel Corporation’s information terminal.

Although there were a lot of rubbles above the ground, there was no building standing out in that area. But just like the underground city of Kuzusuhara ruin, there might be a facility buried underground.

If he could find a load of old-world relics in an unexplored ruin, it would bring him a lot of money. This was the same exact reason that pushed a lot of Hunters to go out to the wasteland and continue exploring. Some of them got lucky and became rich overnight before retiring as a Hunter. This kind of success stories pushed more Hunters to go out to the wasteland hoping to find the same luck, but unfortunately, most of them got swallowed and vanished in the wasteland instead.

Akira was driving his truck following a guide shown on his vehicle's control unit's monitor. The monitor even showed the estimated time of arrival.

He then asked Alpha who was sitting next to the driver seat.

"But still, I never thought that I would get a vehicle this quickly, you know. With this, even if I find an unexplored ruin, the other Hunters should not be able to find out about it, right? If I remember it right, had it been a rental vehicle, other Hunters would be able to backtrace the log and find the unexplored ruin too, correct?"

"Yep, it's also the same case for subjugation requests. By the way, since you're not in a subjugation request this time, be careful with your ammo expense. After all, you won't be able to get back the money that you spend on your ammo this time, that is, as long as you don't bring back the dead bodies of the monsters that you defeated and sell them."

"So it's better if I bring them back to the city, huh? The Exchange Center in the Hunter Office should accept monster corpses too, right?"

"Let's not do that now. It's something that you only do after getting enough information about where to sell them, how much they'll sell, and which parts of those monsters are profitable. Then you'll have to think about the transportation and the escort too to make sure that you'll still end up with profits. You'll also need to learn how to kill those monsters without damaging the value of their organs. I'm sure you already know this, do you think someone would buy the carcass of a monster that you turned into minced meat with the DVTS mini-gun?"

"Nope."

"See? Moreover, it's better to keep your load to a minimum since it'll affect the speed of your vehicle. So it'll only be a useless extra weight if you bring them back just out of a whim."

“Roger that.”

When Akira was still living in the slum alley, he did think that it would at least get him some money if he brought back monster corpses to sell in the city. But it seemed that in reality, it would not bring him money if he just randomly killed monsters.

“But that aside…”

Akira glanced at Alpha who was sitting next to him.

Alpha was wearing a snow-white dress. The multiple layers of that snow-white dress looked luxurious and glossy, it gave off a holy and clean aura. Her hands were enveloped in white gloves that extended up to her wrist, thus hiding her long beautiful slim fingers from plain view. Her trouser also extended all the way to the floor, hiding her legs. It was as if her dress was designed to hide everything under her neck.

Normally, such a dress would get stuck here and there inside the vehicle and it would have been really hard to stay sitting on a running vehicle while dressed like that. But since Alpha was nothing more than an image, she was able to sit comfortably next to Akira.

“Can you do something about that dress?”

“Oh my, you don’t like it? I guess you don’t like this kind of dress, huh?”

“That’s not the problem here. It just doesn’t fit this place, so it’s like, it feels really weird. It’s not something that normal people would wear when they go to the wasteland, right?”

“I did tell you that I’m doing this intentionally, remember? This is so that I can easily find out if there are other people who can see me. That’s why I’m wearing this kind of dress to incite their reaction.”

“Ahhh, you’re right, you did explain that to me before.”

“Even if you tell me so… Ah, in that case, can you change to that maid uniform? I think it’s at least better than what you’re wearing now.”

“Maid uniform, huh… I might be overthinking this, but I don’t think it’s rare to find people dressed in maid uniforms in the middle of the wasteland. That’s why I’m not wearing that anymore.”

“You still remember that you met a person wearing a maid uniform in the lower district, right? She might be a Hunter, and even if she’s not, she must be some kind of soldier.”

When he remembered what happened back then, he was mildly annoyed. But he decided to just push that aside for the time being in order to keep his calm. It sure was embarrassing to withdraw from a fight when he was the one who challenged them in the first place, so he could not help but feel annoyed. But again, he knew well getting his calm disrupted because of that would not bring him anything good here.

Akira knew Alpha was talking about Kanae, who was wearing a maid uniform when he met her. During that extremely dangerous situation, even though she knew what was going on, she was smiling as if she was enjoying it. Akira even noticed that she hoped for the situation to end up in a fight. There was no mistaking it, Kanae loved fighting, she was someone who had confidence in her fighting capability. According to their conversations, there was a good chance that she was in the same occupation as Shiori. So, he assumed that she must be at least as strong as Shiori.

“So what I’m saying here is that it might not be that strange for people, who have the same occupation as Shiori and that person, to use a maid uniform. Thus, people might only ignore it thinking that it’s not strange to see Hunters with maid uniform when they see me in such a dress.”

Alpha was basically saying that it was nothing strange to find Hunters in maid uniforms. Akira frowned when he heard that statement that was out of common sense.

“W-well, I don’t exactly think that’s true though.”

“I’m just saying that there’s a good chance that would be the case. For example, let’s say that a Hunter found a warehouse ruin that was owned by an old-world fashion designer. Then, that Hunter discovered a huge amount of maid uniform inside that warehouse and sold them in the city. Even if they were not designed for fighting, some of the clothes made using old-world technologies are even stronger than the armours made using the current technology, you see. Since the supply is high because of selling all of those uniforms in one go, they’ll be sold at a cheap price. In this case, those Hunters, who are not bothered by the design, might buy them as protective suits regardless of their gender. If something like that were to happen, it won’t be strange to find Hunters wearing maid uniforms in the wasteland, you know?”

“Regardless of gender? Even the guys too?”

“Even the guys too would want to stay alive after all. But well, I guess guys would change their clothes once they are in the wasteland rather than using the maid uniform when they are in the city.”

Akira imagined such a scene.

A brawny guy, who was working as a Hunter, searching for relics in the old-world ruin wearing an expensive maid uniform. That man then met another guy, who was also in a maid uniform. They looked at each other, understood what was going on, and walked away without saying anything as they decided to forget what they just saw. With the same thing happening again and again, eventually, those guys in maid uniform formed a group and searched for relics together while ignoring each other’s appearance, then in the end…

Akira cut his imagination there.

“…Don’t destroy my common sense, will you?”

“Common sense is something that changes with time.”

As Akira was driving through the wasteland, they continued talking about strange subjects.

Since he was avoiding monsters, Akira was only able to arrive at his destination later than he originally estimated. He parked his vehicle under the shadow of a building in that area and put on a camouflage sheet over it. Although Akira could spot it easily, it would be hard for people, who did not know the exact place, to spot it even if they were actively looking for it.

“This should be okay, right?”

Akira mumbled as he looked at his vehicle. Since he got that vehicle purely out of luck, he wanted to avoid getting it destroyed by the monsters or stolen by someone else.

“I think so. It would be counter-effective if you get yourself too worried about it. So just shake that feeling off of you.”

Stealing another Hunter’s vehicle in the wasteland was actually far more difficult than Akira imagined. It was because all Hunters would make sure to keep their vehicles safe.

Vehicles with an automatic combat module installed in its control unit could automatically shoot anyone who tried to steal it. Thus, normally, stealing other Hunter’s vehicles was not worth the risk. But even so, there were cases where parked vehicles got stolen. So in the end, it was all a matter of luck.

Unfortunately enough, Akira was a boy with bad luck. He had no other choice but to hope that all of his precautions could counterbalance his bad luck.

Akira scanned the area around him. He moved around forming a circle with his vehicle in the centre and gradually moved further and further away from that centre. Akira was searching for an entrance to the underground buried among all the rubbles and wreckages in the area. Of course, he could not search it using his naked eyes. Thus he was relying solely on his information-gathering device.

“By the way, how good is my new information-gathering device? Is it way better than my previous one?”

“Generally speaking, it’s more or less as good as your previous information-gathering device.”

“Is that so? Shizuka-san did say that it’s one level better than other information-gathering devices in the same price range though?”

“I believe she meant it when it’s used in tandem with the augmented suit. Moreover, there’s also the fact that the information-gathering device you got from Elena-san was actually a good information-gathering device. Elena-san sold it at a low price since it was only collecting dust in her place, but normally, with your earnings at that time, it was not something that you could buy, you know.”

“Ahhh, I see…”

Akira became more grateful for Elena and promised himself to return that favour one day.

It had been an hour since Akira started searching. Since he was checking carefully under the rubbles while avoiding the monsters, his search progressed slowly. But even so, he wanted to avoid having to recheck the area just because he missed something during his search. Thus, he continued to carefully check the area.

His search was doing well as he did not encounter any monsters. He was able to see a pointer in his enhanced view based on the information that he got from the old-world corporation, Lion Steel. That pointer was pointing at the secret facility that he was looking for. But it was pointing near the centre of the area that he had already searched and the radius of his search area, which was already pretty big, was growing even bigger and bigger.

“I just can’t find anything. Could the entrance be located somewhere else?”

“That might be the case. However, normally huge underground facilities have multiple entrances. But then again, although I don’t want to think about it, there’s also a chance that the info we downloaded from that information terminal was actually inaccurate. So, what do you want to do? Want to try looking in other places?”

“Nah, I’ll keep looking here. I haven’t met any monsters and the search itself is not that tiring, so I’ll continue searching around this area.”

“Okay.”

Akira continued his search in that area.

“If we assume that there’s a huge scale underground ruin in this place just like that underground city and that it has a lot of entrances, then what might be the reason as to why you can’t pinpoint the location of those entrances?”

“Let’s see, I guess it’s because the ruin of what was once a tall building is now buried deep under the ground. Then after a long time, dirt and sands kept piling up on top of it and ended up burying that building deeper and deeper under the ground.”

“In that case, will it still be impossible to find the entrance using heavy machinery?”

“The entrance is usually located on the first floor or the basement. If it still somehow retains its original shape even after being buried for so long, it would be possible to enter the building from there.”

“So it’s not like it’s impossible, huh.”

Akira continued his search while chatting with Alpha. But even so, he was still cautiously checking every nook and cranny. He had even started searching around the area away from where he parked his vehicle.

As he was starting to think about parking his vehicle closer since he was getting further and further away from it, Alpha suddenly said to him.

“Wait, stop there.”

“Is it monsters?”

Akira hid behind a wreckage and readied his gun. He quickly put up his guard, ready to fight.

“No, it seems that I finally found some hints.”

Alpha then pointed her finger at certain wreckage not too far from Akira. At the same time, she used the data gathered from Akira’s information-gathering device and processed it before showing it in his enhanced vision. Thanks to that, he was able to see a staircase under the wreckage that Alpha was pointing at.

“Finally found it!! …Or so I want to say, but it’s rather far away from where the pointer originally is. Well, it’s fine if it’s because the facility is really that big, but there’s also a chance that it’s from an entirely different building.”

Akira realized that he had got too excited, that was why he intentionally said that to remind not to get ahead of himself.

“There’s no other way but to go down there and check it yourself. Let’s remove the wreckages blocking the way in, it should be an easy job using your new augmented suit.”

“Alright then, let’s do this!”

Akira excitedly started removing the wreckages and the rubbles.

He followed Alpha’s instruction as he sequentially removed the wreckages. Thanks to his augmented suit, Akira was able to easily remove the huge wreckages, which would otherwise have been impossible to even make them budge if he only relied on his raw strength alone.

Alpha even indicated where to put the wreckages that Akira had removed. She carefully calculated the placing so that other people would not be able to easily find that staircase through the rubbles surrounding it. Also, if Akira parked his vehicle near that staircase it would also create a blind spot.

Akira’s new augmented suit showed its full usefulness. It only took him about 30 minutes to remove all the wreckage blocking the way to the stairs.

Akira then returned to his vehicle and parked it under the shadow of a wreckage near the stair. He then removed the CWH anti-material rifle from the gun station and brought it with him. At first, he was unsure whether to bring the DVTS mini-gun too or not, but in the end, he decided to just leave it on his vehicle since he thought that it would only slow him down if he brought more guns than needed. Also, using the DVTS mini-gun would quickly burn through his reserve ammo.

Although his new augmented suit increased his max load, it did not mean that he could just bring more reserve ammo with him to use DVTS mini-gun. It was important to keep his load to a minimum during his ruin exploration.

Akira stood in front of the stair that was leading deep into the underground and took a peek inside. Since the sunlight could not reach the area past few steps, it seemed that there was only endless darkness expanding in front of him.

The thought of getting a pile of old-world relics from an unexplored ruin and turning them into a huge amount of money had already completely gone from Akira’s mind. What laid in front of him was the mouth of a dangerous monster that had swallowed many Hunters who went in chasing their desire and dreams. The only Hunters who were able to get a huge amount of money were those who were able to return back alive from that place.

As Akira became more and more nervous, Alpha suddenly said something with a serious face that delivered the final blow.

“Akira, I’ll tell you this before going down, so make sure to remember it. When you’re underground, try to keep me within your view. When you can’t see me or hear me, basically when you can no longer recognize me, turn back as soon as possible, okay? When you can’t recognize me, it means that you’ll lose all of my support too, so be careful when that happens.”

Akira panicked as he quickly glanced at Alpha's direction.

"All? Not just a portion of it?"

"Yes, of course. It's not like we know for sure if it's going to happen. It's just that there's a chance for something like that to happen when you go inside some ruins and that chance shoots up when you go to the underground ruins. When that happens, you just need to retrace your steps back to the point where you can see me again."

"But, it was alright when we were in the Kuzusuhara underground city, right?"

"Well, Kuzusuhara ruin is basically like my garden. So the effect was not that bad. But even so, it still affected my detection ability, remember?"

Akira clearly felt his legs freeze. He was only able to survive until now thanks to Alpha's support. Thus, he understood that he himself was scared of losing that support. It was fully understandable why he was hesitating to move forward.

"If you're scared, there's no need to push yourself too hard, you know? It's something that might endanger your life, after all, we can just forget about the underground exploration and continue our search above the ground."

"…Well, since you're not stopping me, it means that it's not that dangerous. So it's basically something that I should be able to handle myself, right?"

"That's true, but…"

"I'll go then, resolve is my responsibility, after all."

Akira pulled himself together and somehow squeezed a fake valiant smile. He kept that smile on his face, hoping to make it real. Things that he could overcome with his own power should be overcome with his own effort. That one point did not change even after he met Alpha.

He knew that he had done something like this many times before in the slum city. This time, he just needed to do the same thing in a more blessed environment. Akira pulled himself together and made his resolve.

Alpha smiled back at Akira.

“Very well, let’s go.”

Akira made his decision and started walking down the stairs. But he quickly returned back.

Alpha found that weird and asked him.

“What’s wrong?”

“On the second thought, I’ll bring that too. I’ll quickly go back if I run out of ammo.”

Akira went back to his vehicle and took off his DVTS mini-gun to bring it together with him. Seeing how he went down the stairs with confidence just to quickly return back, Alpha giggled.

Akira looked annoyed as he mumbled.

“…What?”

Alpha was still smiling when she said that.

Silavin: OMG. Akira and Suit-kun resonating bad luck Ahahaha. I wonder if that would mean his bad luck got stacked even more?

Dress on muscular men. Not bad. I can imagine it.

Finally, Akira is going to have to be more independent now! Can’t wait to see how he deals with his own bad luck.

Akira followed the stairs underground. It did not take that many steps before he was enveloped with total darkness where he could not see anything at all.

He then turned on the flashlight on his rifle and continued going deeper. The light from the flashlight could not even reach the base of the stair which extended deeper into the darkness.

At that time, Alpha suddenly said to Akira.

“Akira, turn off the flashlight.”

Akira hesitated, but he eventually turned off the flashlight just like he was told. Darkness immediately enveloped him the moment he lost the only source of light. In that situation where he could not even see his own body, he was able to see Alpha’s image clearly.

In the midst of the total darkness, Alpha, who was giving off a silvery glow, suddenly raised her right hand. The moment she did that, everything around Akira suddenly became clear as colours returned to his vision. Akira could even see the cracks and the stains on the wall around him.

Although there was no light at all, Akira was able to see everything as clear as day. He was amazed, it was true that he did not need any light source in this situation.

“Whoah…”

“It’s thanks to the level of accuracy of the data analyser in your new information-gathering device. But because of that, you can’t see too far through the darkness. If you’re bothered by it, you can turn on your flashlight. The light from your flashlight will be able to help me gather information through the rifle’s aiming device, then I can show the result from analyzing that data into your view to let you see what is in front of you more clearly.”

Akira then turned his flashlight back on and peeked forward. He could now see a floor by the end of the stair.

“So your support even goes as far as shooting in the dark too, huh. That’s really amazing.”

“But of course, it’s my support after all.”

Alpha smiled proudly. Her support was really reassuring, but Akira kept on moving forward into a place where he might lose that support.

Akira thought of that possibility, he then made his resolve and swung his legs forward.

Akira felt like he had gone down for about 4 floors before he reached a long hallway. There were lamps installed on the ceiling of the hallway, but of course, they were not on. If it was not because of Alpha’s support, he wouldn’t have been able to see them at all. Akira readied his gun as he continued walking deeper into the long hallway.

The hallway itself was pretty clean. Although the floor was covered in dust and dirt, there were no crumbled parts nor wreckage scattered through the hallway, there was also no white bones leftover from dead people or corpses of either mechanical or biological monsters.

If the floor was not covered in dirt and dust, it would indicate that the old-world cleaning drones in that place were still active. But the dust-covered floor refuted such a possibility. And since Akira did not see any footprints, it might be really an unexplored ruin.

Now, if the facility itself had already been deactivated, then the security drone would also be inactive and Akira would be able to safely search the building. And since there were no footprints on the floor, it also showed that no monster had gone through that hallway. All the signs were indicating that it was a safe building.

“It’s going really well. Now then, if I can find a lot of old-world relics left in this place, then this will be perfect.”

“It seems that this place is just a normal hallway. It will really be a huge jackpot if it leads to a warehouse or a shop. But there’s also a chance this is just a common hallway, if that’s the case, I hope you can at least find some lockers.”

As Akira continued walking through the hallway, he noticed something that looked like a shop next to him.

The shop itself was embedded into the wall of that hallway. Akira realized that it was a shop since the wall was made of glass that allowed him to see what was inside. It seemed like the entire section of the wall was built as the display window of that shop. He came closer to the display window and peeked inside. The interior of that shop looked pretty extravagant with luxurious and expensive looking relics lined up inside that shop. To Akira, all of them looked like they would sell for a lot of money.

Akira could not hide his amazement as he turned to Alpha.

“W-we did it!! Alpha!! Those are relics!! This place has so many old-world relics!! Let’s take them back, let’s take all of them back home!!”

“Akira, calm down.”

“Entrance, where’s the entrance? I don’t see any though.”

Akira excitedly looked for an entrance, but he could not find anything that resembled it. The glass of the display window looked not that durable, he thought that he might be able to break it using his augmented suit.

Looking at Akira, who seemed like he was going to break the glass to get inside, Alpha hesitated as she said to him.

“Calm down. Unfortunately, you can’t take any of those relics at the moment.”

“…Eh?”

Akira seemed utterly shocked as he looked at Alpha.

“I’ll explain it to you, so just calm down for now.”

Alpha then modified Akira’s vision, the moment she did that, all the expensive looking relics that were in front of his eyes immediately vanished. Akira dropped his jaw.

“…Huh?”

“I prioritized the topological data to remove any holographic images from your vision.”

Akira noticed an object that was projecting the image of the relics that he just saw a moment ago. He then dug through his knowledge and worded out the name of the object that came up in his mind.

“Holographic poster?”

“It was made using the technology of the old-world, I’m sure it’s some kind of advertisement from when this place was still active.”

Akira finally understood what was going on, the shop in front of his eyes was non-existent. It was only a super-advanced poster that produced a highly realistic image.

Akira was somehow able to prevent himself from just dropping on his knees.

“Can I at least bring this poster back?”

“…I guess I got ahead of myself, huh.”

Akira let out a big sigh. He then continued going deeper while calming himself down.

In contrast with his expression, his steps still felt heavy when he left that poster. As time passed by, he eventually got back to his usual self. At that point, he had already reached the end of that long hallway and entered a big open-hall. That big open-hall was connected with another hallway, there were also several automatic ticket gates and shops present.

When Akira looked at those shops, he turned to Alpha as if he wanted to ask her something.

“Nice!!”

Akira smiled and walked to one of those shops. Without any power source, the automatic door in front of the shop could not move, so he used the power of his augmented suit to pry it open before entering that shop.

The interior of the shop was not that big, but inside it, there were all kinds of goods and some leftover broken goods lined up. Some of them were so old that they even turned into a bundle of dust, some of them looked so unnaturally brand new. The latter were known as the old-world relics, they were expensive goods manufactured through an advanced technology that could not be replicated using current technology.

Akira pulled out a rucksack, different from the one that he was using to carry his equipment. He then started stuffing any objects that still retained its original shape into his empty rucksack.

Among them, there were weird looking small electronic devices, knife-like sharp objects, some stationeries, notes that strangely enough still retained its original colour, some pieces of clothing that looked like underclothes, strange discoloured boxes filled with still consumable medicines, liquid containers filled with some kind of cleaner, handkerchiefs, cooking utensils, something that looked like calculators, fashionable clothing, small accessories, and even toys. Akira did not discriminate as he stuffed everything inside his rucksack.

As he was looking at the pile of mismatch relics in his rucksack, he asked Alpha.

"…Say Alpha, what kind of shop was this exactly?"

"Maybe just a general shop."

"They sold cooking utensils and clothing in a general shop? And even this strange electronic device too? I don't really understand the old-world culture. Was this kind of shop normal in the old-world?"

"Different technological era have different cultures. So you shouldn't use your common sense."

"I guess that's true, huh. Well, as long as these relics sell for a lot of money, I don't really care much about it."

Even in the current era, the lifestyle and the culture inside the wall and outside the wall were greatly different. So Akira decided not to let himself get bothered by the mismatched collection of relics that he found inside that shop.

It did not take long for him to fill his rucksack to full capacity. Akira smiled, he should be able to make quite a lot of money with this.

"Now that I already got the relics, I'm thinking of ending the exploration here for today. What do you think, Alpha? Should I continue exploring this area for a bit more instead?"

“If you think so, it’s okay to go back home now. It’s important to be able to decide where to stop before anything bad happens.”

“Alright then, let’s head back home. I didn’t get to meet any monsters too, so I guess I really hit the jackpot today.”

“You can’t relax yet, you know? You should not drop your guard as long as you haven’t returned back alive. And it’s too soon to decide if you have hit the jackpot or not before you have exchanged all the collected relics into money.”

“I know, let’s go back home.”

Akira went back through the hallway that he just passed through in a good spirit. As Alpha was watching him walking back in such a good mood, she thought that things were going too smoothly.

That day, Akira was able to find an unexplored ruin, get himself a lot of relics without encountering any monsters, and now he was going back to Kugamayama city to sell the relics that he gathered.

Akira had bad luck to the point that it was almost guaranteed that he would at least get roped into something troublesome no matter what he did. But now that everything was going well, Alpha was rather worried about the backlash. Although it was not like she had any evidence to support her claim, she still could not help but think so.

Unlike what Alpha expected, Akira was able to return back to Kugamayama city safely with all of his relics. Although he did meet some Hunters driving in the opposite direction on his way back, nothing bad happened. Akira put some distance between them just to be safe and continued driving in the opposite direction, those Hunters eventually disappeared behind Akira without anything major happening.

Once he got back to the city, Akira kept on driving his vehicle all the way back to his home. It was because it was already late, too late for him to look for Katsuragi to sell his relics. So he decided to just take a good rest for the remainder of the day and sell his relics the next day.

Akira took a warm bath to recover his fatigue from all the hard work he did that day. Since he got quite a lot of relics, he was in a rather good mood.

“I wonder how much I’ll get from those relics. Some of them are still in very good shape, so they should be able to get me quite a lot of money. Right, Alpha?”

Akira was asking for a confirmation from Alpha who was taking a bath together with him.

The image of Alpha’s superbly beautiful body swayed together with the steam and the vibration on the water surface. It was a totally unnecessary visual effect produced using her advanced computational ability. But for those people who got more excited when it was barely visible, this might even be the correct way to use her advanced computational ability.

But her charming and beautiful body was barely given any attention by Akira, who was in such a good mood after returning back with a lot of relics. He kept on wasting his chance of seeing such a rare beauty that day too.

Alpha knew that Akira was expecting to get a lot of money from selling those relics. Thus she refuted his thinking in order to calm him down.

“You should not expect too much. This is not the same compared to when you were gathering relics in Kuzusuhara ruin with my instructions. But I won’t say that they won’t sell either.”

“…Is that so?”

“The value of those relics will depend on Katsuragi’s preference and the types of relics that are in demand at the moment. If you get your hopes too high, you might only get disappointed in the end, you know?”

“Hmmm. Well, I guess we’ll find out tomorrow.”

His expectation of the amount of money that he might get from selling those relics stopped swelling after hearing Alpha’s explanation, it also helped him calm down.

On the next day, Akira went to Katsuragi to sell his relics. After checking all the relics, Katsuragi then told Akira how much he would buy Akira's relics for.

"2,200,000 Aurum."

Akira looked conflicted. It was not a small amount of money for sure, but it was not the amount he had expected.

Katsuragi made a businessman's smile as he said to Akira.

"That face, you were expecting to get more money, weren't you? But unlike last time, you're not saying that you're going to take them to the Hunter Office, so it's not like you fully reject it either, right?"

"…Well, yeah."

If Alpha had not warned him yesterday, Akira would have expected to get way more money than this. If she had said something after hearing the amount of money that Katsuragi was offering, Akira might have reacted differently too, but she did not make any comments at all. After hearing the amount, though Akira did not think that it was completely unexpected, he also was not fully convinced by that amount.

Katsuragi was able to see through Akira's displeasure and noticed that it might be his chance to get his hands on more money.

"I've been planning to get along with you for a long time, so it would be bad if you brought your relics to another place and was left with a bad impression about me. So, hear me out, I have a good idea. It seems that you don't have much knowledge about selling relics. In that case, I don't mind teaching you. After all, I bet that you mostly spend your time doing monster-hunting requests rather than hunting for relics, right? If you had known anything about selling relics, you wouldn't have brought a portion of these relics here."

“About what kind of requests I take, I’ll leave it to your imagination.”

“Well, even if I’m mistaken, you have nothing to lose from listening to my advice.”

Katsuragi started explaining the basics of selling relics to Akira while carefully adjusting the level of self-interest that he could mix in his explanation.

It was not like all old-world relics would sell for a high price and the selling price would also change depending on to whom Akira sold them.

The buying price of relics at the Hunter Office was greatly affected by the type of relics the Corporate Government was looking for. The type of relics that the Corporate Government wanted the most was those with high scientific or technological values even among the old-world relics. After all, these relics could serve as an entry point to learn about old-world technologies.

The Corporate Government of the eastern district was gathering old-world relics from all over its territory to learn more about the old-world technologies. These relics would be then sent to the laboratories under its governance to be broken down, dissected, and analyzed by all the scientists and engineers working in those laboratories. The results from those laboratories are then used to boost Corporate Government’s technology, thus allowing them to produce cheaper and better goods.

The relics that were brought to the Hunter Office’s Exchange Centre, which were under the Corporate Government’s management, would be categorized depending on how much of old-world technologies could be extracted from them. The better the value that those relics had, the higher the chance for them to be sent to the 5 corporations that headed the Corporate Government. Because of this, the technological gap between big companies and the small or medium companies would not shrink anytime soon.

In order to get those valuable relics, the small and the medium-sized companies would have to use other methods. So basically, these companies were the main patrons for Katsuragi and the other relics merchants.

Katsuragi then took the weird-looking electronic devices from the pile of relics that Akira brought to him. He then showed it in front of Akira and said.

“Bringing this type of relics to my place is the right course of action. Any company would happily buy this type of relic. And it’s doubly true for those companies that don’t get much chance to get such a relic. Since these types of relics will sell at a high price, I’m also willing to buy them from you for a high price. Well, of course, I only sell these relics to those companies after gathering quite a lot of them. And when I don’t have enough to sell to the companies, I’ll gather some more from my other fellow merchants.”

It was not like the companies would only use these relics to study the old-world technologies, some of them were used as they were.

Of course, some of them could be reproduced with the same level of quality using the current technology, but most of the time, the manufacturing cost would be too high for them to be profitable. Some of them were used for a different purpose than originally intended when they were manufactured. Some of them could sell at a higher price just because they were old-world relics. These kinds of relics would naturally be transferred to the respective type of company where they would be properly checked, cleaned, sometimes even manufactured into another type of product, before eventually getting sold again.

Katsuragi then took one of the cooking utensils that Akira brought to him and said.

“While this type of relics, well, it’s not wrong to bring them to me. For relics that I know where to sell, I can buy them from you at a good price. Even if I don’t know where to sell them, I can buy them at a better price since I can still sell them to my fellow merchants. But of course, you can get more money if you look for a specialized merchant who deals with this type of relic. If it’s too much of a trouble for you, you can just sell them to me, but again, you’ll get less money if you do that.”

Every day, Hunters would bring back all kinds of relics to the city to exchange them for money. But some of those relics that were deemed useless had nowhere to go. It was because some Hunters would bring anything that they could find thinking that they would sell well as long as they were old-world relics. So sometimes, they would bring some stuff that could be substituted with common goods that were readily available in the shops around them. Thus, there was no need to gather such kinds of goods from the old-world ruins.

But even so, some of those relics were sometimes sold at a good price. It was because there were demands from people who gathered relics as antique collectibles. Katsuragi then took an accessory and a still-sealed trump card.

“As for these kinds of relics, it’s wrong to sell them to me. They might sell for a good price if you bring them to an exclusive shop, but in my eyes, they don’t have much value at all. It’s the same for cosmetics. I can’t really say how much their actual values are. Because of that, I’ll only buy them for a small price. To be honest, if you keep bringing only this kind of relics to me, I’ll eventually refuse buying them from you.”

“Then what will you do with this kind of relic?”

“Let’s see, I just stuff them inside my warehouse most of the time, then show them to relics connoisseur or people with eccentric taste when I find the chance. Although it’s rare, these people would pay a good price for those relics occasionally. Other than that, when I end up with quite a lot of them, I would just dump them in the wasteland and forget about them.”

“…Uhhh, are you really okay with doing something like that?”

“Of course I’m always careful as to where I dump them, at least, I didn’t get any complaints until now. If I dump them near the slum city, they’ll disappear before even a month. I bet the people of the slum city are taking them. No matter where I dump them in the wasteland, they always eventually disappear. There are a lot of speculations out there, some say that it’s because the still active cleaning droids of the old-world would secretly clean them up when no one’s watching, while some say that the monsters eat them. Personally speaking, I believe the latter. After all, there are monsters out there that would even eat tanks. So there's nothing strange about it if they eat those relics too."

Akira listened closely to Katsuragi's explanation, he seemed to be honestly interested in the topic. After hearing the explanation, it seemed that Akira was more or less able to accept the amount of money Katsuragi offered. It was obvious to Katsuragi that Akira was properly listening to his explanation.

"And that will end my explanation. So then, I have a suggestion here, how about I buy some of your relics for 2,000,000 Aurum? Then for the other relics that I didn't buy, basically, the relics that I don't know what to do, you can do anything you want with them. You can try selling them to the Hunter Office. Or you can sell them to another merchant. I think this is a good offer for both of us, isn't it?"

Akira was not sure for a while, but he eventually decided to take that offer.

"Alright, I'll take the offer."

"Good to hear that, we have a deal."

Katsuragi was smiling happily as he transferred 2,000,000 Aurum into Akira's account. Although he was still not sure whether his plan would bring him more profits or not, he was at least able to finish laying the groundwork.

Akira then brought the leftover relics back to his home and lined them on the floor.

He ended up bringing back all the relics that Katsuragi rejected. There were also some small accessories and trinkets amidst them. Among all those relics, Akira was rather surprised that Katsuragi did not accept the apparels, like the handkerchiefs and the underclothes.

To him, those goods were completely fine. The apparels even looked completely new, although that was unnaturally so. Therefore, he thought that it must be because Katsuragi just had no viable outlet as to where to sell these kinds of relics.

“So in short, Katsuragi doesn’t buy apparels, huh.”

“We ended up bringing back more relics than expected, so what’s your plan?”

“What should I do with them… I guess I’ll just throw them in the warehouse for now. We might find a use for them later.”

Akira decided to just postpone the problem for now. Of course, if this continued, then his house would eventually get filled with relics that had nowhere to go, but with that being said, it should be alright for the time being.

He then moved all the unsold relics to an empty room in his house. Even after he was done with it, that room still had a lot of open space and it gave Akira enough buffer time to arrive at a solution.

When Akira was about to leave his house, he suddenly remembered something. He then filled his rucksacks with the apparel and accessory relics.

Alpha tilted her head when Akira did that.

“Oh, what are you doing? Are you going to look for someplace to sell them?”

“Nah, not that. I just thought that they should be perfect as gifts.”

Akira then finished his preparation and left his house with his filled rucksack.

In an empty room in her gang’s base, Sheryl was teaching the small children in her gang on how to read and write. Since Akira himself made that request to her, she was putting more effort than usual as she was thoroughly teaching the children. Because of that, the members of the gang took that activity really well.

Unlike the adults, who ended up in the slum city from another place, most of the small children who were born and brought up in the slum city could not read or write. But they understood that reading and writing were crucial knowledge in their lives, however, they had no chance to acquire that knowledge. Adding the fact that the boss of their gang, Sheryl, told them to do so, everyone in the gang was giving their best in studying how to read and write.

One of Sheryl's gang members suddenly entered the room to inform Sheryl of Akira's arrival at the base.

"Boss, Akira-san is here."

"Okay. Alicia, I'll leave this place to you."

"Sure."

Sheryl left the teaching to Alicia before leaving the study room. Some of the boys in that room looked disappointed when Sheryl left the room.

Because of both her position in the gang and her beauty, Sheryl was popular in the gang. Thanks to that, some boys put more effort into studying hoping that she would notice them.

Nasha was among the children who were studying in that room. The reason why they were also teaching Nasha how to write and read although she just joined the gang was because of the gift that she brought with her when she joined Sheryl's gang. Although she only gave a portion of 90,000 Aurum that she received from Alna, it was enough to get her on the good side of the gang.

Although it was not that long since Nasha had joined Sheryl's gang, she already had a very good impression of the gang after experiencing the life inside the gang for a few days.

She got enough food to keep her from starving and she was able to get a small gun enough for defending herself. Not to mention, no one from the neighboring gangs would even try to mess with Sheryl's gang and their gang was able to make money from its connection with a certain weapon merchant. No one in the gang seemed to be supporting thieves, thus none was thinking of stealing or robbing warehouses or shops.

Nasha was thinking of checking the situation for a bit more before getting Alna into the gang too. So, for that sake, she thought that she had to do a more thorough check of the gang.

When Nasha saw Sheryl exit the room in a good mood, she asked the kid next to her.

"Say, it seems that Boss is in such a good mood though, do you know why exactly is that?"

"Well, it's obviously because Akira is here, you know? Ahhh, you're a new member, huh?"

Since Nasha asked a question that everyone in the gang already knew the answer for, that boy quickly noticed that she must be a new member of the gang.

"Yep, I'm Nasha, nice to meet you. So, what do you mean by that?"

"Akira-san is the boss' boyfriend and it seems that the boss really likes him. He's the main support of the gang and also a skilled Hunter, or so I heard."

"Ahhh, it's hard to ask this, but, is he sponging off the gang?"

Not only the ex-Hunters, but there were also other kinds of people, those who knew how to fight, working as a bodyguard or a back-support for the gangs in the slum city.

Some of them became the boss of a small gang and did whatever they wanted with those gangs. While on the other hand, when they got involved with a big-sized gang, some of them were paid with a huge amount of money to protect that gang or to work as mercenaries in time of war. No matter which one was the case, the amount of money paid to those people caused a strain for those gangs.

Nasha asked that question thinking that Akira might be one of those people, but that boy shook his head.

“It’s the opposite, it feels more like we’re the one piggy-backing him. It’s also because he’s behind this gang that no one is trying to attack us. He’s also the reason why we get a weapon merchant working with us. Other than that… Ah, right, this building too, it’s a good building for a base, isn’t it?”

“Yeah, it has a lot of rooms and it even has a bath too.”

“That’s exactly why other gangs also have their eyes on this building, you know. There was also an occasion where someone from a big gang came here demanding to hand over this building… It was from Shijima’s gang, was it again? Do you know that gang?”

Nasha knew about Shijima’s gang from the time when she was investigating gangs that she and Alna might be able to join. It was a pretty big gang with far better personnel and equipment compared to Sheryl’s gang. According to Nasha’s knowledge, Sheryl would have no other choice but to give up on the building if that gang asked her for it.

“Of course. It’s impressive that you got out alive from that situation, so, was it alright?”

That boy’s expression turned stern.

“Well, I can’t really say for sure. When that happened, Akira-san shot the person who threatened him and dragged his corpse all the way to Shijima’s place and had a talk with Shijima.”

Nasha’s jaw dropped. The boy nodded at her, saying that he understood her reaction.

“In the end, we somehow have a good relationship with that gang right now. They send people from time to time to check if Akira-san has died or not. Akira-san is a Hunter after all, so it’s nothing strange if he suddenly dies out of the blue. If Akira-san really dies, I bet those people would come here to take over this base.”

Since Alicia was sending a stern gaze at him, that boy quickly stopped making idle chatter.

Nasha realized that and flusteredly fixed her posture.

[It seems that this gang has a pretty amazing Hunter supporting it, huh. I guess even this gang also has some kind of problems too. I’m actually interested in the continuation of that story. And for the sake of Alna, I still need to get more information about this gang. It’s not like Alna can keep hiding forever…]

Then in order not to make Alicia angrier than she was, Nasha returned back to studying.

After Akira was guided to Sheryl's private room, he stopped Sheryl who was about to cling on him. Sheryl looked disappointed, but she then took a seat in front of Akira and smiled.

"So, how can I help you today? You can ask me anything."

"Well, that's not why I'm here today. I just got my new equipment set so I was able to start exploring ruins again. So I'm just here to pay a regular visit to the base, I've also brought some souvenirs that I got from exploring ruins. Just think of it as my thanks for letting me park my bike here and also letting me sleep here the other day."

Akira took out the old-world relics from his rucksack and lined them in front of her. Sheryl looked at the relics in front of her wide-eyed. Among all the relics that Akira lined up in front of her, there were dresses and underclothes for girls, handkerchiefs, and female accessories. To Sheryl, all of them looked like expensive high-quality goods.

"I-Is it really okay if I take some of these?"

“You can take one each from the handkerchiefs and the accessories, then you can pick your choice from the rest.”

From what Akira said, Sheryl knew that all the goods in front of her were old-world relics. In short, they were high-quality goods for the people of the slum city. Although she did not know their exact value, she knew well that it was impossible for her to buy them normally.

While on the other hand, Akira thought of them as useless goods since Katsuragi would not buy them. Since both of them had the opposite impression for the relics in front of them, they were a little bit surprised to see how the other person reacted to those relics.

Sheryl made a very serious look as she was browsing through the accessories and the handkerchiefs. Seeing that, Akira thought that he should have given her everything since it made her think that much just to pick her choice. Shortly after, she finally decided on her picks.

“I’ll take these.”

“Alright. Since these are old-world relics, you can at least use them to trick other people by showing it to them. So, make sure to use them well.”

Akira then stuffed back the remaining handkerchiefs and the accessories into his rucksack.

Sheryl looked delighted as she looked at the presents that she just received from Akira. Among all of them, there were some underclothes for adults, basically, undies with erotic designs.

She thought that Akira might have given her those undies since he wanted to see her in it as she glanced at Akira. But after checking his reaction, she completely erased that thought from her mind.

After he finished stuffing the leftover relics back to his rucksack, Akira stood up.

“That’s all for today, I’ll head back home now.”

“You’re going back home now? You can stay here a little bit longer, you know…”

Sheryl, who was so surprised when Akira suddenly stood up, tried to stop him. It was not that often he visited her, but even so, he was going to leave before she could cling on him. If it was possible, Sheryl hoped that he would stay a bit longer or even spend another night here.

She tried to think of an excuse to make him stay longer, but before she could come up with anything, Akira suddenly said.

“I’m sorry but I have a plan to visit another place. I’ll come again soon, just give me a call if anything comes up.”

“I see. It’s really regrettable, but I understand. Thank you very much for your presents. I’m really happy to receive them.”

Sheryl smiled and expressed her gratitude. Although it was a dazzling smile that worked really well on the boys in her gang, as expected, it was completely useless against Akira. But it was not because of her smile, it was because Akira was an apathetic boy who did not trust other people.

“…Well, if you’re really that happy, I guess I can bring you more next time.”

Akira’s expression did not change at all when he said that.

Sheryl then accompanied him until just outside her base and saw him off. After that, she returned back to her private room, laid down on her bed, and reviewed her conversation with Akira just now.

She hung the pendant that she received from Akira on her finger and stared at it. Although she was happy with everything that she received from him, for some reason, she also felt an uneasiness inside her heart. She then tried to think of the reason why.

Was it because it was a pendant that she picked rather than something that Akira himself picked? Was it because Akira gave her that just to prove her relation with him for negotiation? Or was it because he used the word ‘to trick’ back then?

Sheryl thought that it was not a good idea to keep thinking about it, thus she cut her thought there. She was still lying on her bed as she looked at the other souvenirs that she received from Akira. Among them, there were old-world dresses and underclothes.

[…I wonder if I can change the mood between us if I try on another dress]

Sheryl pulled herself up from her bed and started undressing. She remembered that Akira also gave her underclothes, so she decided to take off her undies too. She then extended her hand to pick up one of the old-world undies that she received and opened its seal. When she touched its fabric, it felt so smooth and comfortable, the difference between that undie and all the undies that she had used until now was just like heaven and earth.

[I guess that’s to be expected of old-world relics. I wonder how much this will cost if I were to buy it normally?]

As Sheryl was about to put on that undie, someone suddenly knocked on the door of her room. The person on the other side of the door suddenly opened that door without waiting for Sheryl’s reply.

“Sheryl, Akira…”

Erio’s words were cut short as he entered the room and met Sheryl’s eyes. He panicked and slammed the door behind him as he immediately exited the room.

Erio understood well that he did something really bad, the expression on her face truly projected his inner feelings, it was pure terror.

He could hear Sheryl from the other side of the door.

“Erio.”

“That was an accident!! I just thought that it might be a good idea to get the new members to meet Akira, that’s why I’m here!! And that was just a pure accident!!”

Sheryl put a pause there. Erio was sweating profusely as he looked at the door to Sheryl’s room.

“There won’t be any mercy next time.”

Although Sheryl said that in her usual tone, it only made her sound more terrifying. Erio swore to himself that he would never ever open that door without a confirmation ever again.

Inside the Cartridge Freak, Shizuka was talking with Elena and Sara. She was asking them how they were doing lately.

“I see, so your underground city exploration request has finally ended, huh?”

Sara happily replied back.

Sara was obviously looking happy there, and from the way she worded it out, it sounded as if she got herself free from something.

Shizuka who saw that found it rather weird.

“Was it really that bad? From what I heard from both of your stories, it seems that you girls did not find any difficulties and got paid well from that request though.”

Elena smiled bitterly as she answered Shizuka’s question.

“That’s not the reason. Sara is so displeased because all of the relics that we found during that request were all taken ownership by the City Management according to our contract. No matter how many relics we found down there, we had no other choice but to bite our lips and hold ourselves back from carrying them back home, you see. I lost count how many times I had to pull Sara by her hair just to drag her away from the relics in front of her.”

Elena smiled after she said that. Shizuka imagined that situation and smiled.

While on the other hand, Sara was pouting as she jabbed back.

“Didn’t you also complain a lot about that too?”

“Of course, I did. It was because I had to hold myself back as much as you did back then. I never said that I felt happy about surrendering those relics, did I?”

As Elena answered back so lightly, Sara turned her cheek the other way and made ‘humph’ sound.

In the middle of their silly talks, Akira suddenly entered the shop. They quickly noticed Akira, he also immediately noticed them near the counter the moment he stepped in. He then walked to the counter.

Elena smiled at Akira.

“Long time no see, Akira. I heard that you did some crazy reckless stuff lately, but I’m really glad to see that you’re doing fine.”

Akira smiled back and said.

“Elena-san, Sara-san, long time no see.”

Sara scanned Akira’s body for any visible injuries as she said to Akira.

“I was worried when I heard that you were removed from the underground city exploration request, but it seems that you’re not injured at all. Well, I won’t ask you the details, you can’t tell us anything after all, right?”

“I’m sorry and thank you.”

Sara and Elena were being considerate of Akira’s position, and he was really happy about that.

Shizuka found the conversation between them amusing as she joined in.

“So then, what brings you here today? Don’t tell me that you got too excited about your new equipment and so you’re here to get refill ammo.”

“Nope, it’s just that I was able to bring back quite a lot of relics from the ruins, so I just thought of giving some of them away as souvenirs. It’s also a form of my gratitude for always taking care of me, so please accept them.”

Akira took out the handkerchiefs and accessories from inside his rucksack and lined them on the table.

Shizuka, Sara, and Elena looked closely at those relics. All three of them were already used to seeing old-world relics, thus they had better eyes than Akira when it came to appraising old-world relics.

Elena scanned through all the relics that Akira brought before speaking to him.

“You’ve got a good collection of relics here, are you sure we may take some of them?”

“Of course. They’re basically just leftover relics after I sold all the expensive relics that I brought back. So please don’t worry about it.”

“Is that so? If that’s the case, then I won’t hold back.”

Sara quickly extended her hands and yoinked the handkerchief and accessory that she had her eyes locked on to. Both Elena and Shizuka giggled when they saw that.

“Shizuka-san, can I see the modification parts that you have?”

“Sure. Elena, make sure that Sara would leave some for me too, okay?”

“Roger that.”

“…Geez, I’m not that greedy.”

Elena smiled teasingly, which Sara returned with a bitter smile. Shizuka smiled and headed to the back room to get the modification parts that Akira asked.

Akira was talking to Elena and Sara while he was browsing through the modification parts. Since he brought more handkerchiefs and accessories than the number of people here, he just told them to share the relics between the 3 of them. So Elena, Sara, and Shizuka were also discussing how to divide the relics among them.

Akira picked a modification part that allowed him to get more ammo in a magazine, he then paid for that part and put it inside his rucksack.

After they finished deciding which relics they wanted, Sara looked at the relics that she received. She seemed delighted as she spoke to Akira.

“Since you gave me some good relics, I need to give something back to you. Akira, is there anything you want to know? I might even give you some secret tips about how to work as a Hunter.”

Seeing how Sara happily said that, Elena interjected and gave her a warning.

“Whoa there, Sara, don’t tell him anything unnecessary, okay?”

“I get it, don’t worry, I know where to stop. So, is there anything you want to know?”

Judging from how Sara was behaving, it seemed that she would not withdraw from that place unless Akira asked her something. So he thought of anything that he might ask.

“In that case, can you tell me how to sell relics?”

When Akira said that, Elena and Sara were obviously a little bit surprised. Sara then asked Akira to make sure what he meant by that question.

“Uhhh, that’s a rather specific question. You mean how to sell relics so that you can get more money rather than selling all your relics to the Hunter Office, right? To be honest, I always leave that part to Elena, so I’m not really that informed about that…”

Sara glanced at Elena to see how she reacted.

The way to exchange the relics into a huge amount of money, that was an indispensable knowledge for the Hunters who specialized in exploring ruins. After all, it was not like the people who buy relics from those Hunters had an unlimited asset to pay those Hunters. Moreover, the price of the relics was greatly affected by the supply, the demand, and the current trends. It was a knowledge that they had acquired from hard work and piling experiences, it would allow them to get a better edge to compete with the other Hunters. Thus it was not a thing that Hunters would normally share with the other Hunters.

From that point of view, Akira’s question was actually rather rude. It would not be strange if Elena was offended by that question, that was what Sara was worrying when she glanced at Elena.

But Elena quickly caught the meaning behind that question, she then asked Akira to confirm her guess.

“Akira, you mean the common knowledge that most Hunters would normally know, right?”

“Yes. I actually went to sell all the relics that I brought back from the ruin, but in the end, the person that I sold the relics to was reluctant to buy a portion of the relics that I brought, you see.”

So in short, Akira was less than even a beginner when it came to selling relics. If Elena and Sara were like players who knew the rules, the principle of those rules, and were skilled in the game, then Akira would be a new player who did not even know the rules at all. If that was the case, then there was no reason for Elena to get offended by his question.

Elena smiled.

“If that’s the case, then sure. First of all, can you tell me what kind of relics you brought back?”

Akira tried to remember the relics that he brought back and conveyed it to Elena. Of course, he would be able to completely retrace everything if he asked Alpha, but it would be suspicious if he was able to accurately recall everything. So he decided to try his best on his own.

When Akira mentioned that he found some old-world underclothes, Sara quickly reacted.

“Underclothes for girls?! How many did you find? Do you still have them?”

“I-I’m sorry, it wasn’t that many and I don’t have them now.”

Akira was slightly overwhelmed by Sara’s reaction while Sara looked very disappointed by Akira’s answer.

“That’s unfortunate. I know this sounds really shameless, but to be honest, I would prefer to get those.”

Akira looked troubled when he heard her.

“…Me giving underclothes as a present to Sara-san, huh? That’s a big hurdle for me, so like… That’s a little bit… You know…”

Akira had no courage to do that.

Sara smiled invincibly as if she was challenging Akira when she teased him.

“If you give me some, I might allow you to see me in those undies, you know?”

She was half-joking there, so to be more precise, she was also half-serious.

Elena sighed exasperatedly and interjected.

“Sara, you’re troubling Akira, you know? You should work hard and find that kind of relic yourself. I’m sorry, Akira. There’s a particular reason why Sara is hungry for more undies right now.”

“Hungry? Elena, don’t use weird expression there.”

Sara sounded annoyed when she said that to Elena. She then noticed Akira, who tilted his head, and tried to explain in panic.

“Akira, it’s not like what you think, okay? Ah, well, it’s true that I’m in a little bit of trouble right now, but it’s not because of anything strange, okay?”

Although Akira did not ask her, Sara then flusteredly explained the reason as if she was making excuses.

Sara was an enhanced human with nanomachines body enhancement. Because of that, her body shape changed depending on the amount of nanomachine reserve remaining inside her body or how many nanomachines that she was using. Especially for her chest where she stored her nanomachines reserve, its size varied with time.

Because of that, if she used the usual stretchable bra, it would sometimes become so stuffed that it suffocated her, but some other time, it left a big empty space enough for it to slip. Moreover, depending on its compatibility with the type of the nanomachine that she was using or the suit with nanomachine reserve that she equipped, even a slight manoeuvre might cause her to tear her undies in no time.

And so, Sara was in dire need of undies that could stretch so much that it would fit comfortably on her body that changed frequently from time to time, also it needed to be strong enough to endure her power and her manoeuvring as an enhanced human. Getting such undies would, of course, cost her a lot of money. Not to mention, if she wanted to get comfortable undies with a good design, then the price would increase even further. And such undies were rare and most sought after in the market.

But the old-world undies that were made using the advanced old-world technology easily satisfied all of those requirements. It was as if they were intentionally made to annoy people like Sara. This was also the reason why Sara was looking for old-world undies. Although it was not like all the old-world undies were that good, most of them were able to at least satisfy her needs.

Of course, she could find other undies with the same level of functionality as the old-world relics, but such undies would have been made using high-quality materials and advanced technologies. Thus they would be super-duper expensive.

On the other hand, she could also buy the undies that the other Hunters brought to the Exchange Centre. But with the old-world brand plastered on them on top of their high quality, and not to mention that she would be competing with the rich people to get them, it would still cost her a lot of money too.

Because of that, Sara would not sell any old-world undies that she found when she searched the ruins so that she would be able to use them instead. She was able to get quite a lot of reserve undies by doing so. But then because of that underground exploration request, she did not have any chances to hunt for relics. Moreover, since they had to explore the underground city on foot, it also increased the frequency where she had to fight monsters.

Thanks to that, Sara burned through her spare undies really fast to the point that her reserve was in an emergency state at the moment. At this rate, she would have to go full commando.

Sara sounded a little exaggerating as she desperately explained her situation to Akira. Akira at least understood that she was not joking there.

“In that case, I’ll bring them to you next time I find more.”

Sara looked delighted when Akira said that.

“That would be really helpful, thank you. There’s no need to worry even if it has some super erotic design, I’ll properly put it on and show it to you.”

After Sara said that teasingly to Akira, this time it was Shizuka who looked exasperated and interjected.

“Stop spouting stupid things and properly buy them from him. Akira, if you find any old-world clothes, it doesn’t matter if it’s underclothes, you can bring them here and I’ll buy them from you for a good price. Maintaining the guns is a dirty job after all, so there’s a demand in this business for clothes that don’t get ripped or stained easily. Don’t worry, Sara then can buy them from me at an even higher price.”

Sara was shocked by that.

“O-of course you’ll give me a friendly discount, right?”

“Don’t worry, you’re a prospective regular customer to my shop after all. So I’ll properly give you a special price for trying to snatch relics right in front of me.”

Shizuka smiled at Sara when she said but it only served to make her look scarier. Sara obviously winced back there. Akira and Elena laughed when they watched their exchange.

Sara then turned to Akira and asked him.

“Well, basically, I just need to find them myself. So, is it okay to ask you where you found them?”

“Well, it’s rather complicated to explain it but… Hmmm… What should I say here…?”

Akira wanted to explain the location of the ruin that he just visited the other day, but since he could not come up with any good way to describe the place, he looked rather troubled.

“Alpha, how do you think I should explain it to them?”

“If you really want to give them the location, you can just tell them the coordinates rather than the road that you took.”

“Ohhh, I see.”

“…Are you seriously going to tell them?”

“Eh? Is it a bad idea?”

Looking at the troubled Akira, Elena thought that he was hesitating because of something else.

“I’m not going to tell you to remember all the ruins around this area, but it’s a good idea to at least remember the name of the ruin where you get your relics. After all, merchants might buy your relics for a higher price if you can explain to them where you get your relics from.”

The Kuzusuhara ruin was the only ruin that could be reached by foot from Kugamayama city. But that was not the case with a vehicle. There were multiple ruins around the Kugamayama city that Akira could go to if he had a vehicle, thus it was not a strange thing if he could not remember the name of all those ruins. As Elena thought so, she also taught Akira one of the basics of selling relics.

But Akira shook his head and replied.

“I do remember the name of the ruin near it, but the location itself is…”

“Akira, stop!”

When Akira was about to give the precise location of the site, Elena suddenly stopped him with a serious expression.

Akira was a bit surprised. Elena then scanned the shop for any other Hunters. Coincidentally, there was no one else inside the shop. She then sighed in relief and turned to Shizuka.

“Shizuka, I’m sorry but is it okay to change the place?”

“Of course, be sure to teach Akira the basics of selling relics too, okay?”

Shizuka understood well why Elena did that. The only person who did not understand what was going on was Akira.

Elena looked a bit troubled and said to Akira.

“Akira, is it ok if we continue this in another place… Well, it seems like it is going to be a long talk, so how about our house? Are you okay with that?”

“Eh, ah, yes, sure.”

“Let’s go then. Shizuka, see you again next time.”

Elena and Sara then left the shop. Shizuka still looked a bit troubled as she waved at Akira when he left her shop.

Akira just obediently followed Elena and Sara back to their house. He was sitting on a chair inside a room while waiting for Elena and Sara, who went to change their clothes. He was obediently waiting for them since they told him that they would explain the details later.

He looked around the house, judging from the furniture and the other stuff inside, he quickly understood that it was better than his house.

Since Alpha warned him, Akira went back to sitting obediently while waiting for Sara and Elena. It did not take long before they returned.

Elena brought with her 3 cups of coffee. She then placed the cups on the table and took a seat on a sofa. She glanced at Sara and exasperatedly said to her.

“Sara, we have a guest here. So, can you at least pick better clothing than that?”

“It’s fine, isn’t it? Since we’re in our home, at least let me wear something that I can relax in. I also don’t mind Akira seeing me in this.”

Sara was wearing a loose white long-sleeve T-shirt that extended all the way to under her hip. Since it was made for comfort, it was showing a lot of skin under it. And to top it off, she was not wearing any skirt or pants.

“Even if it doesn’t bother you, it might still bother Akira, you know.”

“Is that so?”

Elena and Sara who had the exact opposite opinion turned to Akira for confirmation. Both of their faces were telling him to agree with them. Akira was a bit overwhelmed by their expectation.

“Well, I do want to relax in my own house, and since this is Sara-san’s house, so if Sara-san doesn’t mind, then I’m okay with it too.”

Sara smiled smugly while Elena exasperatedly withdrew. Looking at Elena, Sara just smiled and said.

“Don’t worry, I properly put on something down there.”

It could also be inferred from her words that she did not have her bra on right now. Moreover, the shorts that she was wearing was rather provocative. The reason why she was wearing those shorts was to save her undies reserve that was running dangerously low.

With just a little bit of effort, Alpha could accurately determine the direction of Akira’s gaze. So in short, she knew better than Akira himself what he was looking at.

Since Sara was wearing a shirt that was out of her proportion, the valley of her chest sometimes peeked out from her shirt, and whenever she made a big move, her shorts would peek from under the shirt. Alpha knew that Akira was trying to look away from those two things. She also knew well that his efforts sometimes betrayed him.

So, knowing those facts, Alpha then said to Akira.

“As I thought, Akira, you like erotic clothes more, huh? Are you someone who gets all cold when you see a naked girl instead?”

“Zip it!”

Akira jabbed back hard at Alpha while trying to hide his embarrassment.

Elena then changed the mood and said.

“Now then, let’s continue our talk from before, the ruin that you just visited might be an unexplored ruin, right?”

When someone found an unexplored ruin that the other Hunter frequently visited, eventually, that ruin site would become popular and get a name. Sometimes the Hunters who found it first would just put on a random name on that site which later would spread among the other Hunters, and sometimes they would just pick a name from any particular landmark that they found when they searched for that ruin.

Since Akira said that he remembered the name of the ruin near the location where he found that site, this meant that either it was a nameless ruin that was just discovered recently or it was a completely unexplored ruin.

If it was a newly discovered old-world ruin, no matter how much they tried to hide it, it usually would still leak out unless they did a lot of information control to make sure that it would not leak out. Otherwise, the location of that ruin would quickly spread among the Hunters. Because of that, since Elena and Sara did not hear anything about a newly discovered ruin recently, thus they quickly guessed that the ruin that Akira found was a completely unexplored ruin. Elena was sure of her guess when she asked Akira that question.

“It might be an unexplored ruin. Although, it might also be just a different entrance into a ruin that was already explored.”

Since Akira just said that out so easily as if it was nothing, Elena warned him in a way that sounded as if she was scolding Akira.

“Listen here, Akira. It’s dangerous to give that information to other people, you know? The location of an unexplored ruin, I’m sure you know how valuable that information is, right?”

But Akira’s tone and expression did not change at all as he answered back.

“Of course, I won’t just give this information easily to other people. I just thought that it should be okay to share it with both of you since you’ve helped me so much. Not to mention that I already went into that ruin once before.”

It meant that Akira shared that information to Sara and Elena although he knew well just how valuable that information was. Elena and Sara were delighted when they heard that, but Elena tried to suppress her feelings as she said to Akira.

“I’m happy that you feel like that, but there’s one more thing. It’s dangerous to even say that you have such information in a public space. This is also true even when you’re inside Shizuka’s shop. It won’t be strange to find other Hunters eavesdropping in the middle of a public space like that.”

“I see, I understand, I’ll be careful next time.”

Even after hearing Akira’s reply, Elena felt that his reaction was somehow still too naive. So she then continued while making a serious face.

“If you think that it would only cause you trouble with other Hunters if they find out that you have such information, you’ll have to fix your thinking. Depending on the type of facility that you discover, in the worst-case scenario, it might even cause you some trouble with big companies, you know. Some of them are not only aiming for the relics, they have many other agendas like seizing and monopolizing that ruin in order to restart it.

As a result, they would even use anything, including violence, to get their hands on such information. So make sure to be very careful about it."

"I understand."

Akira nodded with a serious face. Just like Elena said, he only thought that it might cause a problem with other Hunters. Of course, he had no plans to get into trouble with big companies, thus he swore to be more careful.

Elena could get from Akira's expression that he completely took in what she said to him. Thus, the serious expression on her face vanished and turned back into a smile.

Silavin: Ah. Akira is just too pure!

After Elena finished giving Akira her warnings, she then changed to her serious negotiation face and said to him.

“I’m honestly delighted to hear that you would share with us such valuable information about the location of that unexplored ruin. But we’re still Hunters too, and it doesn’t feel right to just accept that information for free. Not to mention that Shizuka would definitely scold us later if we do so. That’s why I have a suggestion here.”

“A suggestion?”

“Yep. How about we accompany you in exploring that ruin? We’ll also help you gather relics, sell them, and then we can share the money after subtracting the ammo expense. If there’s any relics that we want, we can buy them from each other and add the price to that person’s share. So, what do you think?”

Akira thought about it for a bit before replying.

“I don’t mind, but won’t I just slow Elena-san and Sara-san down?”

Sara smiled.

“Don’t worry, we didn’t have any trouble when we were together during the Kuzusuhara city underground ruin exploration. So I don’t think there’s any need for you to worry about it.”

Elena also smiled and added.

“I’m sure you’ll help us out rather than slowing us down, and even if you do slow us down. I’m sure we would be able to handle it just fine. So don’t worry.”

Akira knew that Elena and Sara would say that by judging his performance during the Kuzusuhara city underground exploration. But in reality, he was only able to do that well thanks to Alpha’s support, while the ruin they were going to explore was a place where he might lose that support.

If that happened, of course, Akira’s fighting capability would drop significantly. So he was worried if that might cause a significant inconvenience to Sara and Elena.

“Alpha, do you think it’ll be okay?”

“From my point of view, it’s a good thing that you get someone who can help you out when you lose my support. So I won’t stop you, this can be a good training for you too.”

It seemed that Alpha had no plans to stop him. So basically the possibility of Akira holding Sara and Elena back was not enough of a reason for her to stop him. She also judged that it would serve as proper training for the worst-case scenario, which was losing her support during an exploration.

Akira bowed to Sara and Elena.

“I understand, I’ll be in your care then.”

Sara smiled happily and said.

“We have a deal then. It has been quite a while since our last ruin exploration, and not to mention that it’s an unexplored ruin too. I can’t wait to start.”

Elena also sounded happy as she asked Akira.

“We’ll follow your schedule as to when we can go. So, when would be a good time for you?”

“Is that so? In that case, let’s go tomorrow. After all, We need to prepare ourselves too. We’ll finish our preparation tonight. Other than that, let’s talk more about that ruin, not to mention that I still have to tell you about the basics of selling relics too.”

After that, Akira talked with Sara and Elena to share the information about that ruin as well as to reconfirm their plan for tomorrow, and Elena taught Akira about the common knowledge of selling relics.

When he got used to Sara’s provocative appearance, Akira’s focus shifted to Elena.

Sara was wearing a white T-shirt while Elena was wearing a black T-shirt. When they sat together next to each other on the sofa, it boosted the contrast between them.

Elena donned calm-but-sleek and clean clothing that made her look like a smart girl. It even made her look like some kind of high-class princess. Her skirt extended all the way to her ankles. Since she was sitting next to Sara, who was not even wearing a pant nor a skirt, Elena’s skirt looked unnecessarily long. And unlike Sara’s T-shirt that did not hide the valley of her chest, Elena’s T-shirt fit snugly up to her neck.

Akira inadvertently compared Sara’s appearance with Elena’s. They too noticed that. But for both of them, it was not something that bothered them since they were not wearing clothing that would embarrass them when seen by Akira.

But with that being said, both of them were still interested in what Akira had to say after comparing their clothing, while at the same time, it was a rather embarrassing thing to ask him directly about it. Both of them then glanced at each other before looking back at their own clothing.

If they used Elena's appearance as the bottom line, then Sara's clothing was rather provocative. Although it was not like Akira stared intently at her, it was also a fact that Akira's gaze was sometimes sucked into the valley between Sara's chest. Sara knew well that it was because of the clothing that she was wearing.

It was not that much of an issue if Akira was completely cool about it. But it was obvious that he was trying hard to avert his gaze from that particular part of Sara's body and that he was not doing a good job at it. Every time his gaze inadvertently shifted there, Sara started to get embarrassed too. But it would be even more awkward if she just came up with a random excuse to change her clothes, not to mention, Elena would definitely not let that slide later.

But if Sara's appearance was used as the bottom line, then Elena's clothing would be too straight-laced. It was true that Elena picked that clothing since they were having a guest. When they were not having a guest, she usually wore even worse clothing than Sara right now. There were many occasions where she was not wearing anything other than her bath towel while operating the information terminal perching on her shoulders. Elena herself was fully conscious about that fact, that was why she consciously picked a very reserved clothing to hide her usual unsightly appearance even though it might give a wrong impression about her.

But compared to Sara's appearance, it could be said that Elena was overly conscious about her own appearance there. It was true that Elena did not find it amusing at all that Akira kept sending his gaze to Sara. Although she understood that it was because Sara's voluptuous body was further pronounced by her clothing, Elena, as someone who had confidence in her own body, found that rather vexing.

But it was not like she could just come up with a random excuse to show her legs and lower her T-shirt. After all, there was no way Sara would let that slide later.

Both Elena and Sara decided to pick their clothing more carefully tomorrow. Although they were in a completely opposite situation, they reached the same conclusion. They then carefully chose their words to make sure that Akira would not notice their real feelings.

Unfortunately, Akira noticed that they were acting weirdly. But of course, he did not know the reason behind it.

On the next day, Akira took his vehicle to the meeting place he had agreed upon with Sara and Elena. Their meeting place was an area between Kugamayama city and the wasteland.

Although Akira did not mind meeting up in the city or near the ruin, he decided to follow Elena's decision. According to Elena, since there was a good chance that it was an unexplored ruin, she wanted to do the search carefully to make sure that this information would not leak to other Hunters.

Akira arrived earlier than their meeting time, so Elena and Sara were not there yet.

Alpha was sitting in the driver's assistant seat, and just like always, she was wearing a dress that did not fit the wasteland at all. She then said to Akira with a serious expression.

"Akira, I'll reconfirm about it again beforehand, you're really okay with it, right?"

"Yeah, it's about me going in supportless this time, right? I'm okay with it."

Lately, Akira realized that he was being fully reliant on Alpha's support. It made Alpha worry whether he would act calmly and rationally if he suddenly lost her support, thus she decided that it might be a good idea to train Akira so that he would still be able to stay calm even if he lost her support.

It would be a good thing if Akira could learn how to fight monsters while exploring that ruin with other Hunters who he trusted. And although he had visited that ruin once, since it was not fully explored yet, there was still a good chance that he would meet some monsters. Thus, it was a perfect chance for his training.

It was not like Akira himself was not worried at all. But he knew that resolve was his responsibility, so he replied back firmly to Alpha while hiding his nervousness.

“This is a good chance to figure out my current ability. Just let me do it.”

Alpha smiled gently at Akira. Then, at the next moment, her image disappeared from Akira’s view. At the same time, his augmented suit suddenly felt heavier and sluggish. It was because he had completely lost Alpha’s support.

Akira shifted the goggles on his forehead down and properly put it on his face. Those goggles were the same set that came together with his ERPS information-gathering devices integrated augmented suit, PWD Silence. Thus, those goggles were showing the data gathered by his information-gathering devices. It was also equipped with a simple far-sight function. If Akira focused his gaze on a certain point, he could use that function to enhance his vision and zoom into that particular point to get more accurate information.

Although it was an exceptional pair of goggles, it was nowhere near Alpha’s support. It did not take that long for him to appreciate Alpha’s support.

As Akira was adjusting his vision through a terminal, he suddenly found a signal coming his way. When he focused his information-gathering device to that angle, he was able to see that it was coming from a vehicle that was heading in his direction. It was Elena and Sara.

Akira waved at Elena and Sara. Sara, who was sitting on the assistant driver seat, waved back at him.

“They’re right on time. It would not be strange to get a little late if they had encountered some monsters on their way here, so it’s rather impressive that they’re right on time. I guess that’s because they’re skilled Hunters, huh. What do you think, Alpha?”

Alpha did not reply back at all, Akira quickly realized that he was in the middle of a training session.

Akira snapped back to hide the loneliness that he suddenly felt creeping.

After meeting up with Elena and Sara, Akira guided both of them to the ruin that he visited not too long ago.

But it was not like Akira was heading straight there. He took a big detour by heading to a completely different location on the wasteland and then turned towards the direction of Kugamayama city while heading to the ruin. It was so that other Hunters would not be able to easily trace his footprint. It could be said it was a big mistake when he directly returned to Kugamayama city from that ruin the other day.

Sara glanced at Elena who was sitting on the driver seat.

“Say, Elena.”

“If I’m not mistaken, you don’t like that armour, right?”

The armour that Elena was using was a body-tight armour that pronounced her body lines way more than her usual armour. Moreover, the part of her body that would draw the attention of the opposite gender was even more pronounced by a belt. Although hers was not as big as Sara’s, it was at least bigger than the average size.

Elena answered back calmly.

“…It’s not like I hate it. It’s just that because of its material flexibility, it’s hard to move in it. So it quickly tires me when moving in this armour. Since that problem is solved by using an augmented suit under it, I decided to start using it again. After all, this armour is much stronger and more durable than my usual armour. And since we’re going to explore an unexplored ruin, I just thought that it’s better to use this armour.”

“Is that so?”

There was a moment of silence between them.

This time, it was Elena’s turn to glance at Sara.

“Sara.”

“Yes?”

“That shirt under your armour, I thought you don’t use it since it has bad compatibility with the armour that you’re using right now?”

Sara was wearing a shirt under her armour. Although it was not an old-world relic, it was at least stronger than the usual shirt for Hunters, so it was more expensive than the usual shirt. But because it had bad compatibility with her armour, it would get ripped in no time. Because of that, she had stopped wearing that shirt lately, or at least when she did, she would loosen the fastener on her chest to reduce the strain on her shirt. But even so, this time, she completely closed the fastener. Elena bet that shirt would be ripped to pieces in no time.

“…I just thought that it would be such a waste to let them collect dust just because they have bad compatibility with this armour. Not to mention, we have started hunting for relics again, so I might be able to find some durable underclothing.”

“Is that so?”

Once again, both of them suddenly went silent after that.

Sara who was wearing more reserved clothing than yesterday, and Elena who was wearing more pronounced clothing than yesterday, both of them were just silently following Akira to their destination.

Akira, Sara, and Elena eventually arrived at their destination. They parked their vehicle under the shadow of the nearby wreckage. To make sure that no monsters would be able to find them, they also put a camouflaging sheet above their vehicles. Then they readied their equipment before venturing down the stairs.

Elena and Sara looked pretty excited as they kept moving deeper and deeper into the ruin. Sara herself looked hopeful to the point that she seemed way too excited, while on the other hand, Elena moved in carefully while keeping her surroundings in check.

Elena remembered Akira’s story from yesterday and thought.

[How exactly did Akira find this place? Was it really because of pure coincidence?]

Although it was true that the entrance was hidden in a rather concealed place, if it was only that much, the other Hunters would have been able to discover this place way sooner than Akira.

Moreover, if it was because monsters just opened the entrance and started coming out from this stair lately, then there should be more monsters loitering around near the entrance.

But according to Akira’s story, there were not that many monsters when he searched around the area. Elena was able to confirm that herself after she scanned the area. There were no monsters signals both from around the area and from inside the ruin.

Elena then gathered her assumptions together. The entrance to the ruin was originally hidden in a very concealed place where it would have been buried under the rubbles without anything that indicated its position. But even so, Akira was able to accurately acquire the exact location of that place and somehow locate it, and it was an information that even veteran Hunters and big companies did not have, this was clearly not normal. But Elena had a guess why Akira was able to do so.

[Akira is probably someone who can connect to the old-world domain. It might be an information that he got from the old-world domain.]

If that assumption was correct, then Akira might have a lot of valuable information with him at the moment. That was exactly the reason why big companies always try to get a hold of people who could connect to the old-world domain, some time to the point that they ignored the will of those people. The facts surrounding this ruin somehow confirmed Elena's guess even further.

Elena glanced at Akira as he was watching the tunnel beside Sara.

[What if, we…]

The inner voice inside Elena screamed at her to stop that line of thinking there. But the calm and logical part inside her encouraged her to continue.

Hypothetically speaking, if she could seduce Akira, then she would be able to get the power of someone who could connect to the old-world domain and all the benefits that came with it. Even the information of the exact locations of all the undiscovered ruins in the eastern district alone would earn her a huge amount of money if she sold it to big companies. That is excluding the old-world warehouses filled with relics, or even labs and old-world factories that could produce those very relics. If she was able to seize them and sell them, she would get enough money to easily buy one or two cities in the eastern district.

Fortunately, it seemed that Akira trusted her and Sara. Looking at how he reacted when he saw Sara's sexy clothing from yesterday, she thought that there were a lot of possible choices that she could pick from in order to seduce Akira. Akira was still so young and inexperienced as a Hunter, if she kept feeding him with information that fit her needs and added some charm with it, she should be able to easily manipulate him. And so her thoughts kept going deeper and deeper.

Elena herself was no saint, she was a normal girl with a normal level of avarice. And her greed pushed her to keep thinking about that possibility.

“Elena, what’s wrong?”

Elena quickly snapped back from her deep thoughts when Sara called her. Akira and Sara looked at her worriedly.

She pulled herself together and smiled.

“It’s nothing. I was just lost in my thought for a bit. It’s been a while since the last time we went hunting for relics, and not to mention, we’re in an unexplored ruin. I might be just a little bit too nervous, but I’m okay.”

[Akira not only saved my life, but he even shared valuable information with me. There’s no way I can betray his trust. Not to mention that if I look at Akira like that, Sara would beat the crap out of me.]

Elena reflected on what she was thinking and erased that foolish thought that she had just a moment ago.

Akira, Elena, and Sara reached the bottom of the stair and continued going deeper into the ruin. Sara took the front and Akira took the rear, while Elena in the middle made sure to keep their surroundings in check.

Elena and Sara used flashlights to illuminate the way in front of them. Although using a strong light inside a dark ruin like this would allow monsters to quickly discover their location, Elena and Sara still decided to use a powerful flashlight because the monsters which lived in such a dark place would have relied more on their sense other than their vision in the first place.

One of the reasons why Elena and Sara decided to use powerful flashlight was also to inform other Hunters about their position. Basically so that other Hunters would not mistake them as monsters lurking in the darkness. It was also to quickly identify any hostile Hunters in case they met any. If they spotted other Hunters with that light but the other Hunters did not do the same, then those Hunters might be planning to ambush them.

But in the end, it was a very subjective matter. Some Hunters just did not want to get discovered by other Hunters inside the lawless and dangerous wasteland. So basically it was a matter of guessing whether they did not turn on their flashlight because they did not want other Hunters to attack them or because they were thinking of ambushing other Hunters.

Akira, Elena, and Sara explored the ruin at a pretty high pace. It was because there were not that many places to check in the hallway and they did not encounter any monsters around.

Akira was walking not too far behind Elena.

Elena was equipped with multiple information-gathering devices. She was using a belt to strap those information-gathering devices around her body. Depending on where she strapped her information-gathering devices, and because of the material of her armour, they somehow boosted her already charming bodyline.

But of course, Akira had no time to spend admiring her charming figure from behind. Since he did not have Alpha’s support this time, he had to keep his eyes peeled for even the slightest change around him.

In the middle of the exploration, Akira checked the enemy-scan information displayed through his goggles multiple times. He turned and checked his back frequently, and also did not forget to check the information analyzed from the aiming device installed on his rifle.

Seeing how Akira was so high-strung, Elena smiled gently at him and said.

“Akira, you won’t be able to stay for long if you’re that nervous, you know? Calm down. I’m also keeping my eyes on our surroundings, so you don’t have to be that tense.”

“O-okay, I’m sorry.”

Akira took a deep breath to calm himself down before following Elena from behind.

Looking at how nervous Akira was behind her, Elena just thought.

[He’s way too nervous compared to when we were in the Kuzusuhara underground city ruin. Well, we’re exploring an unexplored ruin after all, but it’s also true that getting too nervous is also a bad thing…]

But even so, considering Akira’s fighting ability that she saw in the past, it was also true that he looked unnecessarily nervous.

[…Well, given his age and his experience as a Hunter, I guess it’s to be expected, huh. Back then, we also had Shikarabe with us, not to mention, we were sure that we could meet up with the other Hunters if we went back. So I guess it’s nothing strange if he’s more nervous compared to back then. But it should be fine, Sara and I just need to cover for him.]

As Elena thought so, she then stopped worrying about it and continued their exploration.

Akira, Elena, and Sara were able to reach the big open-hall where Akira stopped last time without encountering any trouble. When Sara peeked inside the shops in that big hall, her eyes sparkled.

“Ohhh, it seems that this shop is filled with stuff. It will be perfect if we can find a lot of relics here too.”

Akira hesitated for a bit.

“Ahhh, I already cleaned that place last time. So I think there won’t be any relics left there.”

But Sara did not change her expression as she said.

“Is that so? Well, it’s fine. Elena, I’ll leave the lookout to you. Akira, help me.”

Sara then went inside that shop. Elena just stood at the entrance of that shop while scanning the area around for any suspicious signals. Akira followed Sara and entered that shop.

Sara and Akira checked the stuff inside the shop. Since Akira had cleaned that place once before, there was nothing that looked valuable on the racks. At least, that was what Akira thought.

After he and Sara looked around the shop once, Akira then said.

“What are you talking about? We’re going to take back home anything that looks expensive, you know.”

Sara smiled when she said that while Akira tilted his head.

“What exactly are we going to take back home?”

“That thing there.”

Sara pointed her finger, Akira turned his head toward the pointed direction. Sara was pointing at a display shelf which contained food-like things that were already past their expiration date to the point that they more or less turned into a block of dirt. Akira seemed more confused than before.

The trio walked back while dragging a cart. On that portable cart, there was the display shelf where the foods that were already turned into dirt were on. Sara and Akira had taken out that shelf from the shop from before.

The rattling sound of the cart’s wheel echoed through the hallway.

Akira looked at the shelf on the cart while pushing it from behind.

“…Well, I guess it’s true that this shelf is an old-world relic too.”

Sara heard that mumble.

“Basically, everything that you find inside an old-world ruin is all old-world relic, you know? That includes the wreckages and the walls too. The only difference with the usual relics is whether they fetch you money if you bring them back with you.”

“So this shelf can get us a lot of money, huh?”

Sara smugly answered that question.

It was not like Akira did not believe Sara, but he was still not convinced and it was clearly visible on his face. Elena could guess what Akira was thinking when she saw his expression. So she added on to Sara’s explanation.

“Old-world shelves, especially the food shelves, sometimes have some kind of preservation functions. And when you find one that does have it, it can fetch us a lot of money.”

“Preservation function, huh. But the food inside it has basically turned into a bundle of dirt, so like, isn’t it broken already?”

“It’s simply just because it doesn’t have any energy source. The machine itself doesn’t seem to be damaged. And even if it is damaged, it could still be fixed with a simple TLC. And even if it’s completely broken, the researchers would still happily buy it.”

“Ohhh, I see.”

“The real problem is to spot the shelf that has such a function. In this case, we have no other choice but to rely on our intuition as Hunters. There were cases in the past where a Hunter found a plain-looking box that actually had a high-tech preserving function. So basically if you find relics inside a box, it might be a good idea to bring the box too with you.”

Akira was convinced by that explanation given by Elena. It was also reflected on his face. Elena who saw that smiled in satisfaction.

After that, the trio finished their exploration without any trouble. They went back and forth between where they parked their vehicle and the ruin to carry the relics out. They took out a portable cart from inside Elena and Sara's vehicle, it was a portable cart that could be attached behind their vehicle. After they piled all the relics that they carried out into that cart, they attached that cart behind Elena and Sara's vehicle and left the ruin to head back to the city.

And just like when they met up, in the middle of their way back to Kugamayama city, they separated and took different routes back.

Akira was talking with Elena and Sara through his information terminal on how to sell the relics. Elena tried to reconfirm again with him through the information terminal.

"Are you really sure that it's okay to leave selling the relics to us? It might even take a whole month, you know?"

"Yes. It's not like I'm hard-pressed for money right now anyway, and if it takes that long, then it means that it might sell for a really high price too."

"Fufufu, alright then. I need to keep my pride as the person who taught you how to sell relics. So you can look forward to it."

Akira could hear Elena's laughter from the other side of the information terminal. Sara then interjected.

"We got a good relic and we didn't encounter any monsters, it's a really good ruin site. If it's okay with you, do you want to go to that ruin together again next time?"

"Sure, when will be the next time then?"

"Let's see. Well, we have a lot of things to take care of too, it would be at least next week or maybe even later. I'll call you again when we come up with a date. Later then."

Sara and Elena then closed the call. Akira let out a sigh and turned to the assistant driver seat.

"Alpha."

"Yes?"

The moment Alpha replied, her image suddenly appeared sitting next to him. Akira's face twitched and stiffened the moment he saw her image. This was because although he knew that she would definitely appear, he tried to put more effort to make sure that his expression did not change.

It seemed that he was about to say something to Alpha but decided not to.

Alpha, who noticed that slight disturbance in Akira's feeling, smiled teasingly and asked.

"Were you lonely?"

"…Yeah, I was!!"

Since he did not want to lie to Alpha, Akira tried to hide his feelings by snapping back at her instead. Alpha just smiled in return.

Akira glanced at Alpha and saw that she was smiling as if enjoying his reaction. But it made him pout even more as he pushed the pedal deeper and paced his vehicle faster toward the city.

As Akira traversed through the wasteland on his way back to the city, there were some people who were watching him from afar.

"Is he gone?"

"Yep, it should be fine now."

"Alright then, let's trace back their footprint."

(p4553r: More like their tire prints. lol)

The guy who was watching Akira from afar picked up his telescope. It was a pretty huge telescope.

“Is there any need to keep our distance from them to the point that you have to use such a big telescope?”

“Are you stupid? He’s also a Hunter. If he finds out that we know he’s searching an unexplored ruin, there’s no mistaking it that he would try to kill us!! Being over-cautious is just perfect in this case.”

“Well, because of that, we’re having a tough time looking for his footprints for the last few days though. But before that, did he really find an unexplored ruin? It’s nothing more but your intuition, right?”

Seeing the other guy doubtfully asking him such a question, he became annoyed.

“I did tell you the reason, remember? When we passed each other on our way to the wasteland the other day, he was returning back to the city. But there’s no nearby ruin from the direction where he was coming, so there’s a good chance that he was on his way back from a newly discovered ruin.”

They were the Hunters who were driving in the opposite direction when Akira was on his way back to Kugamayama city the other day. Judging from where Akira was coming, how he was taking more distance from them than usual, and from how he was being careful, they guessed that Akira was on his way back from a newly discovered ruin.

Of course, they had no definite proof for their guess, so it was not an exaggeration to say that it was purely out of intuition. Luckily enough, that guy’s intuition was really sharp, while on the other hand, Akira was really unlucky that he was found out with such scarce proof.

“His route this time is completely different from his previous route, you know?”

“If he did that intentionally, it means that he doesn’t want other Hunters to know where he went, right?”

“Doesn’t that also mean that he simply went to a different ruin from before?”

“Good grief, just shut up!! Yeah yeah, I know it’s just from my intuition!! If you have more complaints!! You can just leave!!”

That guy suddenly snapped and shouted at the other guy.

“Geez, there’s no need to snap back like that. Isn’t it because I trust your intuition that I’m here right now? I’m sorry, okay?”

That guy tried to laugh it off as he followed the other guy who still seemed annoyed as he went silent and walked to the vehicle that they parked not too far from them.

“After all, if it’s really an unexplored ruin, we might strike it rich in one go. Not only we’ll be able to live the way we want to, we might even be able to buy a house inside the wall. I just want to make sure if I can really put my hopes up this time, you know. Cheer up, there’s no need to be that angry.”

After that, they joined with their other friends who were posted in a different location. Then, they used their information-gathering device to find the footprint that Akira had left and traced it back while keeping their eyes open for any locations that looked like an old-world ruin. They eventually arrived at the wreckages where the ruin that Akira found was located.

Elena was also being careful to make sure that no one would be able to trace back her footprint. The reason why those Hunters were able to reach that particular area was more because of their pure luck rather than for their skill. Statistically speaking, it would have been highly unlikely for them to be able to trace back all the way to that place.

Although, it was not clear yet at that point whether their luck was more of good luck or more of bad luck for finding that place.

Silavin: Damn. Akira is precious. Their team up is so precious. But like always, he will be facing issues again. I wish my boy would have his peace for a little longer D:

As for Elena, I trust that her thoughts won’t be reflected in her actions. From the way these two act, they already regard Akira internally as the opposite sex (Though they know that he is just a child). So, it is not unlikely for them to really fall for him.

Rebuild World – Chapter 76, Ruin Exploration with Sheryl and Her Gang

Sheryl was doing her job inside her private room when suddenly a call came in from her information terminal.

When she heard that particular ringtone, she quickly grabbed her information terminal and answered that call as fast as she could as if she was trying not to make the caller wait for her at all.

“Akira here, do you have some time now?”

“Of course. No matter whether it’s early in the morning or in the middle of the night, feel free to call me anytime.”

Sheryl answered back with a big smile and high spirit. Akira was obviously weirded out by that.

“I-I see.”

“Yes. There’s no need to hold back. So, how can I help you?”

If only Akira said that he just wanted to hear her voice, Sheryl would immediately ascend to heaven, but she knew well that was not possible. It was nothing more than a pipe dream, and as expected, Akira did not call her just because he wanted to hear her voice.

“Well, let’s say that if I’m offering to escort some of your gang members to Higaraka Residence Ruin. What would you do?”

Sheryl tried to process that sudden invitation from Akira. She tried to think if there was any other meaning or any hidden signals behind Akira’s words, and if there were any, then how she should react in that situation. If that was a demand or a command, then Sheryl would have to reply back with a yes. But that was an offer.

“If there’s no need to give a quick answer, is it okay if I ask you the details?”

“Well, even if you say so, it’s exactly like what you just heard… Ahhh, it’s really fine if you don’t want to go. If you have no wish to go at all, I have no wish to force you either. After all, even though I’ll be escorting you, we’re still going to the dangerous wasteland. So it’s not like I’m going to force you or anything…”

Sheryl then asked Akira a lot of questions and finally understood the situation. To summarize, it was just an offer from Akira to explore Higaraka Residence Ruin.

Akira was planning to take and escort some children from Sheryl’s gang to Higaraka Residence Ruin in order to collect relics there. There should still be a lot of valuable relics for Sheryl and her gang members in that ruin. If they could bring those relics back, it would earn them quite a lot of money.

Although it was somehow still suspicious, that was a very tempting offer for Sheryl. So she decided to take up that offer in the end.

“I understand. If that’s the case, then I’ll be taking that offer if it’s really okay with you, Akira.”

Akira sounded a bit surprised as he replied.

“Are you sure? Although I’ll be your escort, it’s still the wasteland. It’s dangerous, you know?”

“I think that the possible benefit of going outweighs the danger. Not to mention this kind of offer is a rare chance and we do need money too. So I can’t afford to pass such a rare chance to earn money.”

“…I see, you’re right. Alright then.”

Sheryl noticed that there was a slightly weird change in Akira’s voice. Her gang needed money, thus she decided to go to the wasteland even though she knew of the dangers. Although Akira felt like there was another reason why Sheryl decided to accept his offer, he chose not to ask any further.

After Sheryl confirmed when and where to meet, and the number of the people that she would bring, she thanked Akira.

“…Well then, we’ll be in your care. Thank you very much for giving us this precious chance.”

“I’m the one who came up with the offer, so there’s no need to be that grateful. Later then.”

“Later then.”

Akira then ended the call. The moment he did that, Sheryl’s happy face immediately turned serious. She then asked herself the question that she put aside back then, but even so, she still could not answer that question even now.

[So in the end, why exactly did Akira give me this offer? Is there any kind of profit that he could get from us accepting this offer? I don’t understand at all…]

No matter how much Sheryl tried to think about it, she always ended up with the same conclusion, this offer would only bring Akira a huge loss. Escorting Sheryl and her gang to that ruin without accepting any payment would incur him a huge loss in the first place. For Hunters like Akira who could pay 10,000,000 Aurum like it was nothing, even just staying at home for a whole day doing nothing would need them to spend more money than what Sheryl and her gang could afford. Thus, those Hunters would only accept a request to take a lot of slum children, who knew nothing about living in the wasteland, only if that request offered a huge amount of reward money.

A Hunter on the level similar to Akira would have explored Higaraka Residence Ruin before. And any relics left in that ruin would be those that were not worth the expense for him. Even if he carried as many relics as possible from that place with the help of her gang, and even if Akira could sell those relics at a good price, the money would not even be close to enough to pay a Hunter like him to escort those children.

[…Is it some kind of training? Or maybe a practice run? Is he planning to see how useful we are in the case when he needs our help in the wasteland? But if that's the case, he could just tell it to me straight, right…? I really have no idea what Akira is thinking.]

Even after that, Sheryl still spent some time trying to figure out the reason behind Akira's offer. But in the end, she could not come up with any good guesses. It was because she actually noticed, albeit vaguely, the real reason behind that offer in the middle of her conversation with Akira.

Although Akira didn't explicitly tell her not to ask him that question, it was enough to stop Sheryl from digging any deeper.

It was not like she could do anything about things that she did not understand. But it was true that it was a tempting offer for Sheryl. As such, she thought that she had to try her best to get the most out of this opportunity.

Sheryl then decided to push aside all her questions for now and moved on to decide who she would take with her to Higaraka ruin.

__*__*__*__

Eventually, the day when Akira escorted Sheryl and her gang to the Higaraka Residence Ruin to gather relics came. Sheryl brought her subordinates to their meeting place that was located on the border between the slum city and the wasteland; they were waiting for Akira there.

As the meeting time came closer, all the children that Sheryl brought with her to go to the wasteland started having mixed feelings.

Sheryl looked excited as she was thinking of her plans for the day with a big smile.

[What should we do about the relics that we'll gather? Should I look for someplace to sell them? Or should we open a stand to sell them ourselves? After all, I don't think we'll find any relics that Katsuragi-san would buy in that ruin, I need to find another way to exchange them into money. Even if we get lucky and end up finding some expensive relics, it's not like we can just keep the money without sharing them with Akira. I need to find a way to exchange those relics for a good price even if we only find cheap relics there…]

Sheryl mostly thought about what she should do after coming back from that ruin. She did not worry about going out to the dangerous wasteland or exploring the dangerous old-world ruin at all. It was because she was simply happy to be able to go out with Akira even if it was to the wasteland.

In contrast to that, Erio's expression was filled with fear and worry.

[It's not like Sheryl is sending me to gather relics because I saw her naked back then, right? My assumption is not wrong, right? It's not like she is just sending me to die, right? Please someone tell me that I'm right!!!]

As one of the armed children from Sheryl's gang, Erio had a gun with him. But it was just a cheap handgun bought from Katsuragi-san and he did not have much ammo in his reserve either. It was not a weapon that people would normally use to fight against monsters.

Erio was almost killed in the wasteland before. Thus, he actually did not want to go out to the wasteland again if it could be helped, while on the other hand, he could not go against the command of the boss of the gang. As well as for the sake of his girlfriend, Alicia, he could not afford to go against Sheryl's order and get kicked out of the gang.

Even if Akira did say that he would escort them, Erio had no idea how far Akira would go to protect the gang's members. But one thing was for sure, Akira would prioritize protecting Sheryl more than him. Thus, when the push came to shove, he would have to do something about his situation himself. But again, when it even came to that point, then he would be in a situation where he could do nothing about it anymore.

Erio could not clear his worries. For the sake of his girlfriend, Alicia, he resolved himself to go out and swore to return back alive. So he decided to ward off his fear of going to the wasteland by telling himself that it would be okay with Akira escorting him.

Nasha looked around her and checked how the other children were doing. The only person who was relaxed in that situation was Sheryl. Although each kid was showing a different level of anxiousness, it was obvious that all of them were worried. Leaving Sheryl aside, none of them had come to that place out of their own volition.

[Although I know that they would push the jobs that they don't want to do to me since I'm a new member, to think that they'll send me to the old-world ruin to gather relics right off the bat. But again, what's going on here? Even the boss and the other gang's high officers are here too. I just don't understand what's going on with this gang, I at least need to gather more information before I contact Alna…]

There were a lot of peculiar things about Sheryl's gang, but even so, it was a good enough gang for Nasha to put her hopes on. She thought that she had to get on Sheryl's good side so it would be easier for her to help Alna join this gang. That was why she resolved herself to come.

Akira arrived there in his vehicle a bit sooner than the meeting time. He then finished simple greetings with Sheryl's gang before heading to Higaraka Residence Ruin.

He attached a pull cart behind his vehicle and was sitting on the driver seat. Sheryl sat next to him, while the rest of the children were on that cart.

Although the back seats were empty, Akira did not allow anyone to sit there. It was because it would be a hindrance when he wanted to use the CWH anti-material rifle or the DVTS mini gun that were mounted on his vehicle. There was someone who was about to sit there but Akira sent him to the back cart.

Akira had bought that cart after seeing how useful it was during the ruin exploration with Elena and Sara. Since he was planning to carry a lot of relics in the future, he decided to buy a big cart. Because of that, there was still a lot of space even after all the children from Sheryl's gang got on that cart. But still, sitting in that cart was nowhere near comfortable.

A boy by the name of Sebla, who was sitting next to Nasha, voiced out his complaints.

"Seriously though, he doesn't let anyone else sit there other than Boss Sheryl, huh. Is he saying that the cart is enough for us? Dammit, that damn boy getting ahead of himself although he was just another slum kid like us not too long ago."

It was not like Akira explained anything when he sent the other kids to the cart, that was why Sebla interpreted his order as a disparaging treatment to show them their difference in position.

"Say, do you know that Akira guy?"

When Nasha asked him that, Sebla's annoyed expression loosened. It was because he realized that she was a new member who did not know much about Akira. So in short, she was someone who might join him in bad-mouthing Akira.

Sebla answered back as if he had found a good place to vent his displeasure.

“Well, it’s not like I know him on a personal level, but I have seen him during the days when he was still living in the slum city back alley. Since he was living near where I was, I sometimes saw him when he went to the food distribution place. So I somehow remember his face.”

“He went to the food distribution place although he was a Hunter?”

“He just started working as a Hunter recently. Up until that point, he was more or less the same as us. I bet he just found some expensive relics out of luck that allowed him to get good equipment and that he’s just doing well lately thanks to his luck.”

“Is that so? I heard that he’s a very strong Hunter though…”

“I’m sure it’s just a bluff. He just got lucky and got himself a powerful weapon. Anyone can be strong if they have a powerful weapon. Even for that incident with Shijima’s gang, I’m sure he just used his gun to threaten the underling that Shijima sent here. Seriously speaking, does he look that strong to you without his gun?”

Nasha took another look at Akira and tried to reconfirm it. It was indeed true that Akira looked strong when he was with his weapons, but when she imagined him without those guns, he did not look that strong at all.

“…Now that you mention it, that’s kind of true.”

“Right?”

Sebla smiled, but his face quickly returned back to being annoyed.

Sebla looked at Akira and all of his equipment. An augmented suit to enhance his physical power, a strong looking vehicle to explore the wasteland, the powerful-looking CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun, and finally the 2,000,000 Aurum per box medicine inside the rucksack on the back seat of his vehicle. They were all the equipment that supported Akira.

He looked at those weapons that made Akira appear strong, equipment that made others envious and jealous.

“…Dammit. How much money do I need to get those guns? If only I can get them too, I’ll be able to become a strong Hunter just like him. If I become one, then the boss would fawn over me too and I’ll be able to do anything I want with her body… Dammit, I bet he has done all kinds of stuff with the boss. He did take a bath with her the other day too after all. I still remember those guys that got kicked out of the gang just because they took a peek when Sheryl was in the bath. Why is he that special although he just got a little lucky…”

Sebla’s complaints somehow sounded as if he was chanting a curse which could be easily interpreted as picking a fight with Akira and Sheryl.

Nasha slowly moved away from Sebla when he was not watching. After all, she did not want to get roped into trouble.

Akira was driving slowly so as not to rock the cart too much. He also picked a level route to Higaraka Residence Ruin to reduce the rocking. But because of that, he took more time going to that ruin than usual which of course increased the possibility of encountering monsters on their way to the ruin.

While driving his vehicle, Akira was constantly checking the data on his goggles. Suddenly he turned on the auto-drive function of the vehicle’s control unit and pointed his rifle outside the vehicle.

“Akira?”

Akira swiftly replied to Sheryl who was sitting on the driver’s assistant seat.

Sheryl quickly turned to the direction where Akira was aiming, but she could not see any monsters there.

“Uhhmm, where exactly is this monster?”

“Just use that binocular. It’s integrated with my information-gathering device, so you should be able to easily spot the monster.”

Sheryl picked the binocular that was lying near her and tried to look for the monster. She followed the indicator shown in her enhanced vision to look at where the signal was coming. Thanks to the automatic readjustment function of that binocular, which worked in tandem with Akira’s information-gathering device, she was able to quickly find the monster that Akira mentioned.

She could see a big carnivorous beast running toward Akira’s vehicle with a speed that did not fit its size. As she saw the large legs that supported that monster’s huge body kicking the ground, she could somehow hear its stamping sound that she should not be able to hear from such distance.

Akira started shooting at that monster with his AAH assault rifle. But none of his shots hit its mark.

He kept on shooting at that monster although he could not hit any of his shots. That monster eventually got close to Akira’s vehicle.

The children in the cart noticed the monster when they heard the gunshots. They quickly peeked out their heads from the cart to look for the monster. Since that monster was raising a cloud of dust while running toward the vehicle, they could easily find it. Also, it was already close enough to be spotted with naked eyes.

The children in the cart started to make a ruckus.

“Oii!! It’s getting closer and closer!! Can he hit his shot?!!”

“I-Isn’t this getting bad!?”

That monster was running faster than the vehicle and it did not slow down even though Akira was shooting at it.

The children who started to panic moved to the other side of the cart except for Erio. Although he was pointing his gun at that monster, he was also making the same scared expression as the other children.

Akira let out a sigh and put down his AAH assault rifle. He then moved to the back seat of the vehicle and aimed the DVTS minigun at the monster. He calmed himself down and pulled the trigger.

The minigun showered that monster with bullets, so many that it didn't matter even though Akira missed some of his shots. Those bullets pierced through the monster's skin, tore its flesh, and crushed its bones. It splattered its meats and blood around before falling over and stopped moving.

Akira sighed and returned back to the driver seat. It took sometime before the children in the cart started making another ruckus.

"Whoah!! He just killed that huge monster like it was nothing!!!"

"As expected of a Hunter."

All the children then started raising their voices at the same time after they were released from the fear of that monster. All of them were smiling except for one person, it was Sebla.

"He couldn't hit that monster when he was using a normal rifle. The amazing one is that weapon. I can do that too if I had that gun…"

Sebla's complaint was drowned by the voice of the other children celebrating, so no one heard him.

Sheryl welcomed Akira with a smile.

"That was amazing, as I thought, you're really a powerful Hunter, Akira. It's really reassuring to have you escort us."

Sheryl directed her wonderful smile filled with amazement and praise to Akira, but just like usual, Akira's reaction was very bland. Or more like, it was worse than usual.

Akira’s expression showed no change as he said.

“…Well, I’ll at least do my escort work properly.”

For some reason, it seemed that Akira did not want to be thanked. Sheryl understood that from how he reacted.

“…A-alright, I’ll be relying on you.”

Although Sheryl was surprised by that, she decided not to ask any further to avoid making Akira’s mood worse.

Akira did not say anything as he kept driving the vehicle. There was an awkward silence between him and Sheryl who was sitting in the assistant driver seat, it was not a mood that could be fixed by simply throwing some random subject to talk about.

Moreover, it was not like Akira was in a situation where he could afford to engage in silly talks. He was focusing all of his attention to monitor his surroundings for any monsters and he had no plans to divide his attention for anything unnecessary.

In the middle of that awkward mood between Sheryl and Akira, Alpha was smiling as if it did not affect her at all.

“Akira, you’re too tense. If you don’t calm down, it’ll only unnecessarily shave your stamina, you know?”

Just like usual, Alpha was relaxed. But in contrast to her, Akira replied swiftly while pouting.

Since Sheryl took the assistant driver’s seat, Alpha was sitting on the door on the other side of Akira. She let her legs flap freely on the outside of the vehicle as she lightly turned her body around to Akira’s direction.

“It seems that you’re having a hard time there. Just tell me anytime you think that you can’t take it anymore, okay?”

Akira was escorting Sheryl and the other kids without Alpha's support. Although he might still be able to see and hear Alpha, she did not give any type of support to Akira at the moment. She did not enhance his views as she usually did nor did she help with his aiming. There was also no aiming correction support from his augmented suit. And Alpha did not give Akira any instructions at all.

But more than that, Akira had to search for enemies himself. If he let his guard down, he felt like he would be ambushed by monsters in no time. Thus, he could not relax much which slowly shaved his focus and stamina.

This time, Akira was going to gather relics in the ruin as well as to train. To be more precise, the training was his main aim.

The last time he went to explore ruins without Alpha's support, it was with Elena and Sara. At that time, he was able to finish the exploration without encountering any monsters. But if his performance was to be strictly evaluated, then the only word that Alpha could come up with was 'embarrassing'.

Alpha thought that it would be bad to let it stay like that, thus she sent Akira for another training. And that was today's relic hunting. His duty was to simply escort Sheryl and the other children to the ruin and return back alive.

Alpha thought that Akira needed to get used to the situation where he had no support from her. It should at least be to the point where he would not endanger himself from being way too nervous when he was in such a situation.

The reason why Alpha chose Sheryl's gang as the target for the escort was because Sheryl and the other children were complete beginners when it came to exploring the wasteland. Thus, unlike Sara or Elena, they would not be able to protect Akira. And also even if Akira failed and they ended up killed, it would not affect his conscience much.

If Alpha told Akira to invite Sara and Elena for such a purpose, he would be super angry. In the worst-case scenario, it might cause considerable damage to his trust in Alpha. She herself understood that very well.

Because of all those reasons, Alpha decided to use Sheryl's gang. And in order to convince Akira, she put an excuse that it would give Sheryl and her gang some profit too. She also told Akira to cancel the plan if Sheryl refused his offer. But Sheryl accepted it, after all, just like Alpha explained to Akira, it was a delicious offer for her.

Akira was always putting his life on the line as a Hunter and Sheryl's gang was reaping benefits from it. So it should be alright to put Sheryl's gang in danger from time to time as a compensation to that. After all, if Akira died, then Sheryl would lose her position anyway.

That was why Alpha thought that it was okay to put Sheryl and her gang in danger in order to train Akira. Alpha adjusted her explanation to Akira to make him agree with her thoughts, and as she planned, he unconsciously began to think like that too.

If Akira had shown even the slightest refusal when Alpha manipulated him, she would have categorized Sheryl's gang as a threat. Had Akira put that much care for Sheryl's gang, he might even place himself in danger in order to help them. So in the worst-case scenario, there might be even a need to exterminate Sheryl's gang.

The lesser Akira was emotionally attached to the people around him, the better it was. Alpha planned all of this to ensure that she will have the biggest influence in his action. In order for him to accomplish her request, in order for her to accomplish her goal, and in order not to repeat the mistakes that she made in the past, Alpha kept adjusting her plans behind her usual ever-present smile.

Sheryl's gang's profit, Akira's profit, and Alpha's profit. Alpha might be the only existence there who fully understood that these 3 interests were mixed in today's ruin exploration.

Akira glanced at Alpha and complained.

"In that case then, I'll do that right away. Can you change into something else that won't disrupt my focus?"

Alpha was wearing a bold swimsuit with a small amount of fabric. It was a swimsuit with a lot of laces wrapping around her body to secure the few pieces of fabric in their respective places. That extremely risqué swimsuit only served to boost Alpha's charming body.

On the other side of Alpha, there was Sheryl who was wearing prim and proper clothing, thus it made Alpha's swimsuit even more disturbing for Akira's focus.

Alpha smiled and said.

"Nope. Don't let yourself get bothered by something unnecessary. Just focus on the important information. This is also a part of your training, you know? If your focus is disturbed by my appearance, then it means that you're not focused enough."

"That might be true, but still…"

When Akira made that pause, Alpha quickly turned her body around like a gymnast. Thus her body wrapped in that risqué swimsuit was facing Akira right now. Her chest was right beside him.

Alpha got her face close to Akira and said.

"Don't just sit there, another one is coming."

Another monster was running towards him. Akira quickly confirmed its position from the data shown in his goggle.

Akira turned on the auto-drive function, stood up, readied his rifle, and aimed at that monster through the aiming device in his goggle. Although that monster was only a small dot when seen with naked eyes, he was able to properly aim at that monster.

Akira stabilized his grip with the help of his augmented suit, but since the ground was not smooth, the vehicle was swaying up and down and disrupting his aim. While on the other hand, that monster was running as fast as it could towards Akira. It would be nigh impossible to hit that monster’s weak points in such a situation. It was even hard enough to accurately shoot at that monster in the first place.

“Predict the moves of your target. Consider the lag between when you pull the trigger and when the bullet reaches your target. Feel the swaying of the vehicle and adjust your aim accordingly. There’s no need to rush yourself, just calm down and take your aim. Even if you might miss your shot because of your bad luck, don’t think that you can hit your shot because of your good luck. Don’t rely on luck and aim properly.”

Akira listened to Alpha’s instruction and pulled the trigger. The bullet flew past right beside that monster.

He frowned and asked.

“That’s a miss, what did I do wrong?”

“That was simply because you did not take a good enough aim. Now try again but do it more carefully.”

“Even if you tell me so, if I take too long to aim, that monster would move outside the view of the aiming scope, you know?”

“If you can slow down your time perception right before you pull the trigger, you should be able to take a far more accurate shot though.”

“I’m already trying to do that.”

Akira was still doing his time perception compression training until now. But he still could not use it freely. If he could do that, it would boost his shooting accuracy.

As that monster came closer and closer, Akira was able to hit its oversized body. But as long as he could not hit any of its weak points, the bullets which hit that monster were barely affecting it.

The children in the cart started making a ruckus again. That was it, Akira put his rifle down and moved to the backseat to aim his CWH anti-material rifle at that monster. He then readied his stance and pulled the trigger. The powerful piercing bullet that flew out from his CWH anti-material rifle pierced the torso of that monster and immediately killed it. As that monster fell to the ground and the vehicle moved further away leaving that monster's corpse behind, the children in the cart started to raise their voices once again.

Although Akira encountered some monsters again after that, he eventually was able to arrive at the Higaraka Residence Ruin safely.

Sheryl and the other children immediately started gathering relics when they arrived at the Higaraka Residence Ruin.

The Higaraka Residence ruin was one of the ruins near Kugamayama city that were once frequented by a lot of Hunters. But the current Higaraka Residence Ruin was already emptied from any expensive relics. It had little worth in searching for relics, so Hunters normally would not go there just to hunt for relics.

But with that being said, there were still some relatively cheap relics left in that ruin. And so, Sheryl and the other children were there to collect those kinds of relics.

Although those relics were not worth bringing back home for the Hunters, they were still precious relics for Sheryl's gang. The ruin was filled with relics that those children of the slum city could never find in the back alley of the slum city. If they had any cheap means to go there, those people of the slum city would happily travel to the ruin to collect relics.

So in short, that ruin was like a treasure box for Sheryl's gang. Of course, if they had to pay Akira for escorting them there, Sheryl would have still ended up with a deficit, but she did not have to worry about that problem this time.

They had already decided beforehand how they would gather the relics. First of all, they would stay in the cart until Akira parked the vehicle near the entrance to one of the buildings. Then Akira would go in first to scan the building for relics and to clean up any monsters inside it. After that, the children from Sheryl's gang would go into that building to carry any relics inside it to the cart while Akira would patrol the area for any monsters. Once they were done emptying the building, Sheryl would contact Akira through the information terminal to meet up before moving to the next building.

As Akira was patrolling the area, he suddenly stopped as he watched the relics that were carried into the cart. The cart was filled with all kinds of relics, there were curtains with holes, broken beds, cracked kitchen utensils, old furniture that had their shape distorted, and also small relics with mechanical parts inside them. Akira stood there staring at that pile of mismatched relics.

Alpha found that weird and asked Akira.

"Akira, what's wrong? There are no expensive relics in that pile, you know?"

"Nah, I just remembered that I was also gathering those kinds of relics not too long ago."

Akira felt slightly nostalgic, but Alpha quickly cut that short.

"Nothing has changed even now. Then you used to go to dangerous ruin to hunt for expensive relics, now you are going to a more dangerous ruin to hunt for more expensive relics. The only difference is the degree of risk involved."

"… Well, that's kinda true now that you mention it."

As Akira looked at the pile of relics in his cart, it reminded him of his past self. Although he felt like he had come a long way since then, after Alpha pointed it out, he realized that what he was doing right now was not that much different from his past self.

The only difference was that the back alley slum city had turned into a relatively safer place for him and stuff that he could find there was relatively not worth the time for him right now. So right now, in order to gain more profit, he chose to go to a more dangerous place and get more expensive relics. That was the only difference between the current him and the past him.

Akira still encountered some monsters inside Higaraka Residence ruin. But he was able to handle them just fine. Thus, Sheryl's gang was able to gather relics without facing any particular trouble. With more and more relics piled inside the cart, the sitting space for the children from Sheryl's gang shrunk.

After they finished collecting relics from one of the buildings there, Akira returned back to his vehicle and asked Sheryl.

"Sheryl, How long are you planning to stay here for today? I don't mind staying here until the sunset though, but it seems we're running out of free space in the cart. I have no complaint if you want to let them sit on the top of the relics, but I won't care if any of them trip and fall off the cart, okay? Also, I might have to pace the vehicle if we encounter a monster on our way back home. So don't blame me when that happens."

Sheryl went to check the cart, and as Akira said, the cart was more or less filled with the pile of relics that they gathered that day.

But since it was a very rare chance for her, Sheryl wanted to take back as many relics as she could. After all, she might not get any more chances to go to the Higaraka Residence Ruin again.

Sheryl did not know what she should do so that Akira would accept if she asked him to escort them again. Thus, as long as she did not know how to get Akira to accept her request, she thought that she would not get another chance like this.

Sheryl looked hesitant, she then said to Akira.

“Let’s go for another one before going home. I think it should still have enough free space for one more building.”

“Alright.”

Akira then went back to the driver seat, Sheryl sat next to him on the driver’s assistant seat. As he was about to turn on the vehicle, suddenly a water droplet fell in front of him.

Akira raised his head and looked up, the sky above him had already turned cloudy before he even realized it.

“Rain, huh. The weather forecast said that we’ll have a clear day though? As I thought, I can’t really trust a free weather forecast, huh?”

“Akira, we should move.”

“Hm? I can just go to that building over there to take shelter from the rain…”

Akira turned his head to glance at Alpha. The moment he confirmed Alpha’s expression, he quickly turned on his vehicle.

Sheryl who was sitting in the driver’s assistant seat could feel the G-force as Akira stepped on the pedal, the children in the cart lost their balance as they quickly grabbed on the cart railing. As the whole cart swayed, some of the relics from that pile toppled over.

The usual smile on Alpha’s face was not there, it only meant that Akira was in a situation that might endanger his life.

Akira drove the car following the instruction shown in the navigator of the vehicle’s control unit. His destination was a big mansion located deep inside that ruin. It was the same mansion where Alpha told him that he was someone who could connect to the old-world domain.

“Akira!? What’s going on?!”

Sheryl was surprised when Akira suddenly paced the vehicle. But Akira only signalled her with his hand that he had no leeway to answer her question. After all, it was not like he had the answer to that question anyway.

“Alpha, what’s going on?”

“I’m sorry to rush you like that. But don’t worry, it’s not like we were about to get attacked by a swarm of monsters again.”

“I see. So then, why did you rush me?”

“It’s to make you move out from the area with the same level of signal interference as the colourless mist as fast as possible. If we had stayed in that area, there’s a good chance that monsters might ambush you. You also need to find a place where you can take shelter from the rain as soon as possible.”

“If it’s because of the rain, can we not pick one of those buildings around here?”

“I’m sure you want to avoid a situation where you’re surrounded by monsters and forced to fight them in a small closed space, right? You need a big place where you can fight optimally. That big mansion would be perfect for that, and even if it’s filled with monsters, you can secure one of the empty rooms for Sheryl and the other children and it would be an easy job for you to clean those monsters from that building.”

As Akira was talking with Alpha, the rain was getting stronger and stronger. Akira noticed that the effective scanning range shown in his goggles was growing narrower because of that.

“Whoah there, this small rain has this much effect? If a small rain has this much impact, what would happen if it’s heavy rain?”

“In the worst-case scenario, your information-gathering device would be completely useless outdoor and there might be some effect even when you are indoors.”

“According to your prediction, how bad will this rain be?”

“To be honest, I don’t know for sure. That’s why I urged you to get out as soon as possible assuming the worst-case scenario.”

Akira frowned. Sheryl looked worried when she saw his expression, Akira then noticed that Sheryl was worried about him.

“I’ll save the details for later, but we’re basically heading to a safer place, so don’t worry.”

Sheryl replied back with a smile.

“I understand, we’ll be in your care.”

Just that short explanation from Akira was enough to make Sheryl regain her calm.

Originally, Akira and Alpha planned to continue their training until Akira escorted Sheryl’s gang back to Kugamayama city. But now with this sudden turn of events, although he planned to rely on Alpha’s support as little as possible, Akira himself had no plans to keep that up and unnecessarily put Sheryl’s gang under more risk.

The moment Alpha took control of the vehicle, it obviously moved much stable than before. Akira stood up from the driver seat and moved to the back seat.

Up until now, Akira operated the control panel and set the vehicle on auto-drive before he moved to the back seat. But he did not do it this time, Sheryl who noticed that panicked and asked Akira.

“Uhmmm, is it okay to leave the steering wheel?”

“It has a self-driving function, so it’s okay.”

“Don’t you need to set to auto-drive mode using the control unit terminal?”

Akira did not hesitate when he said so. Because of that, he was able to convince Sheryl. And since there was really no problem with the driving, Sheryl easily accepted his explanation.

Alpha smiled teasingly and said to Akira.

“Yep, that’s right. It’s an advanced control unit after all… So you should make your explanation more convincing than that, you know?”

Akira thought to himself in secret that he should be more careful next time.

He took out the camouflaging sheet that he usually used on his vehicle and threw it to the children in the back cart.

“Just use that for now!!”

Akira shouted as he set up the folded roof on his open-roof vehicle. The children from Sheryl’s gang expanded the camouflaging sheet to protect the relics and themselves. As for Akira, the vehicle that he was driving was equipped with a foldable roof. Although it still depended on how strong the rain was, they would at least be able to avoid getting completely drenched because of the rain.

They eventually arrived at the mansion that they were heading to. The mansion that Alpha picked was a big mansion complete with a parking lot. There were leftovers of dead monsters scattered around that mansion. There were also metallic wreckages scattered here and there, those might be what was left of the defensive equipment of that mansion. Of course, those already turned into broken scraps after enduring the harsh weather of the wasteland. Akira parked the vehicle near one of the entrances of that mansion.

Akira removed the DVTS minigun and CWH anti-material rifle from his vehicle and carried them with both of his hands. Both of them were heavy rifles, the only reason why he could carry them around with one in each hand was because of the quality of his new augmented suit.

Of course, it was completely a different problem whether he could use them with only one hand since he had to deal with the recoil of those rifles. But with the help of Alpha's support, it should be no problem at all.

When Akira saw some of the children from Sheryl's gang about to enter that mansion before him, he quickly stopped them.

"Don't go in there before me, step back."

But when Akira stopped them, they sounded super annoyed as they replied.

"What the heck, just let us in already."

The rain had gotten pretty heavy. So Akira understood their feeling of wanting to get in that mansion as soon as possible. But he could not let them do that since he was working as their escort at the moment.

"I don't mind if you want to meet the monsters that might have taken shelter from the rain inside that mansion before us."

When he said that, the children from Sheryl's gang flusteredly moved away from the entrance.

After Akira made sure that everything was safe around the area, he gathered all the children from Sheryl's gang in a big hall. The hall was so big that it still had a lot of free space even after everyone gathered there.

The hall was almost empty. It was because the Hunters had already taken out all of the relics from inside that place. Since the mansion looked luxurious, a lot of Hunters in the past must have thought that there must be some expensive relics inside and decided to take out everything from within that mansion.

Akira then gave them an order.

“We’ll stay here until the rain dies down. I’ll go ahead and check the safety of all the rooms. Since it’s dangerous, don’t go outside this room without my permission. Sheryl, give me a call if anything happens.”

“I understand.”

Sheryl bowed and saw Akira off as he left that room.

Akira started scouting all the rooms around the area starting from the closest rooms from where Sheryl’s gang was staying.

He had come to that mansion before in the past, but for some reason, the air inside the mansion felt different this time.

“Alpha, don’t you think there are too many dead monsters here?”

“It’s true that there are more dead monsters compared to the last time we came here. The vibe is also different.”

“The vibe?”

“The last time we came here, remember that there was a dead greedy crocodile corpse, right? I think some Hunters had killed that crocodile. Putting that aside, there seem to be more monsters in this area. They might have originally come here to feast on that dead crocodile, either that or they originally might have been staying away from this place when that greedy crocodile was still around.”

“I see, so there’s something like that too, huh. I thought that this was a safe area the last time we came here, but it seems that it’s not exactly the case now… Or was it actually this dangerous right from the beginning?”

“Don’t worry, looking at the dead monsters in this place, it seems that there are no dangerous monsters in this area. You should be able to deal with them with no problem. Not to mention that I also picked a particularly safe place for Sheryl and her gang. So there’s no need to worry.”

“I see.”

Akira slightly relaxed after hearing that.

But then Alpha changed her tone and warned him.

“Akira, if you’re too tense, it’ll only make you get tired quickly. I did tell you about this before, right? This offer will also profit Sheryl and her gang as well as give you a good chance for training. Although it’s dangerous, Sheryl would be able to bring home some relics with her, they’ll properly profit out from this too. So there’s no need for you to be overly conscientious about it.”

Akira understood that and was trying to not be too tense. Although there were some parts that both he and Sheryl felt awkward about, both of them agreed to do the ruin exploration. But even so, he still felt slightly guilty about it.

This time, when Akira came to the ruin for training, he brought some people who would definitely slow him down to explore an old-world ruin. His duty was to make sure that they would return back alive. It was a training to increase his fighting capability. So in short, Sheryl and her gang were there only to be used for his training.

Akira himself understood that Sheryl and her gang were going to get something out of this ruin exploration too. But at the same time, it felt like he just used sweet words in order to bait Sheryl and her gang out to the dangerous wasteland.

But to be more precise, this also showed the fact that Akira had little trust in his own ability. Simply put, Akira thought that he did not have enough ability to make sure that everyone from Sheryl’s gang would be safe under his protection. After all, if he was strong enough to the point that he was confident that he would be able to make sure of the safety of Sheryl’s gang in the wasteland, then he would not feel guilty as he is now.

Alpha smiled and said to Akira.

“If you can’t stop yourself from getting bothered by it, then you should work hard to become strong. If you become strong enough to the point that you think it will be a piece of cake to escort Sheryl and her gang, then this kind of training will be just you giving them free help. At that point, it would not be you baiting them to get out to the dangerous wasteland using sweet words, but instead, you'll be just simply spoiling them. I'm sure you won't feel guilty in that case, right? Don't worry, I'll properly give you my support until you can get that strong."

"…You're right. This will all get resolved if I become strong enough. Not to mention that I'll be able to finish that request from you too."

Akira lightly smiled when he said.

"I'll look forward to that."

Alpha also replied back with a smile.

After Akira made sure that the mansion was safe. He put down his rifle on the floor and took a short rest.

He peeked the outside of the mansion through a window. Far from slowing down, the rain was stronger than before. He then tried to check the situation outside using his information-gathering device, but the scan range was already so small that it was basically useless.

Akira then thought of something and asked Alpha.

"By the way, why does rain have the same effect as the colourless mist?"

"There are many theories out there. The most widely accepted theory says that it's because the thick colourless mist in the sky gets mixed with the water droplets and fall down to the ground during a rain."

"If that's true, then we won't be able to move out for some time even after the rain stops, right?"

"I can't really say for sure until the rain stops. There are also cases where the situation quickly comes back to normal once the rain stops, but there are also cases that it gets worse instead."

“…Are you sure that theory is correct?”

“Like I said, there are many theories out there. There are many things that humans don’t understand, you know.”

Akira was obviously not fully satisfied by that answer, but he decided to stop digging any deeper.

The children from Sheryl’s gang were doing all kinds of things to pass the time. Some of them were even playing trump card using the deck that they found among the relics.

Sheryl left everyone behind and went to Akira’s place.

“Uhmm, is it okay if I sit beside you?”

Akira looked up to Sheryl, she was smiling at him while trying to figure out his mood.

“I’m in the middle of my escort duty right now. So just don’t cling on me. It’ll slow me down if anything happens. And also, don’t sit too close.”

Although Sheryl took her gang to Higaraka Residence Ruin because of the offer from Akira, it was still recognized as a formal request in the Hunter Office. Thus the record of this request will also be shown in Akira’s battle record in the Hunter Office website.

The reward from that request was 10,000 Aurum. Including the brokerage fee for the Hunter Office, it would be 20,000 Aurum. Since the request wasn’t submitted as an individually designated request in the Hunter Office site, it was possible for a completely unknown Hunter to take that request too. But such a possibility was highly unlikely.

It was the lowest possible reward for a request that was submitted in the Hunter Office as an individual request which was not from a company or an organization. Not to mention, the transportation would be handled by the Hunters, the ammo expense would be paid fully by the Hunter, the escort targets were just small children who knew nothing about fighting, the request would take a whole day, and to top it off, the reward payment would be given only after the request was finished.

If Hunters flood to take this request, it would be very suspicious. Although it was to be expected, there was no other Hunter who took that request except Akira. And just to be safe, after Akira finished the administration work to take that request in the Hunter Office, the request was closed. Thus preventing other Hunters from taking that request.

The reason why Akira took the exploration as a formal request through the Hunter Office was to strengthen his resolve. Since it was a formal request, it put him under more pressure to fulfil his duty of protecting Sheryl and her gang. It was a form of his determination as well as a way to convince Sheryl that he would not abandon her just because he did not get paid for escorting her.

That was why Akira said that he was in the middle of a job and hence it would be stupid to let Sheryl cling on him while he was working.

“I understand.”

Sheryl then sat one person space away from Akira, she was relieved that it seemed Akira’s mood was at least better compared to when they were outside.

“The rain is not slowing at all, isn’t it?”

“Yeah, the weather forecast said that it would be a clear day though. Well, it was from a free weather forecast, so I guess it’s not really that accurate, huh? Ah, it might as well be because it’s a weather forecast for Kugamayama city and not Higaraka Residence ruin. Ahh, that makes sense then, it’s not like those people in the inner wall care about the weather in the wasteland after all.”

“It would be bad if it doesn’t rain at all, so it’s a good thing that it rains from time to time. With the humid atmosphere and the wet ground, the air feels much more gentle.”

“Well, it’s all good that it rains from time to time, but I hope that it will not rain when the weather forecast that I checked said that it won’t rain. I just hope that the tire won’t get stuck in the mud. I guess I’ll have to pick another route to go back home.”

Sheryl was only talking about her impression of the weather while Akira was talking about what he should do to adapt to the rain. Both of them were basically talking about the same thing but focused on two different subjects. Akira noticed Alpha was smiling as she watched that exchange.

“…What?”

“It’s nothing. Look there, Sheryl is wearing the clothes that you gave her the other day, you know?”

After Alpha said that, Akira took another look at Sheryl’s clothes. He did not really remember it, but it was actually one of the dresses that he gave to Sheryl.

Sheryl noticed Akira’s gaze, she then smiled and said.

“This is one of the dresses that I received from you, how does it look?”

There were a lot of parts on that dress that did not really fit Sheryl’s body. But because she was used to that kind of dress and because of some adjustment that she made, it did not look weird on her. It was the result of her skill on how to use a dress as well as the trial and errors that she did beforehand in front of a mirror.

As for the underclothing, the old-world underclothes was, for some reason, very flexible and stretchy. Thanks to that, even a petite girl like Sheryl could use them comfortably. Although they do have a sexy design, it was not like people would be able to get a peek as long as she did not do any crazy stunt, and since she planned to only let Akira see them, Sheryl did not have any problem with them.

Sheryl, herself, was actually hoping to get some light compliment, something like ‘they look good on you’. She thought that she should be able to at least get that since she received that dress from Akira, that was why she asked Akira for his opinion.

Akira stared at Sheryl, he then frowned and looked a bit troubled. After a small pause, he hesitated and said.

“…Well, I think it’s okay.”

“I-I see.”

Although Akira gave a vague response, Sheryl was somehow able to keep up her smile when she said that.

There was an awkward silence between them. After that, Akira suddenly spoke something that sounded like he was confessing his sin.

“Well, uhh, to be honest, those are clothes that I found in the ruin. It’s just that, I didn’t check them when I gave them to you, so some of them might have a weird design. Well, if you find them having strange designs, uhh, you don’t have to use them, you can just throw them away, you know?”

Akira did not have any sense of fashion at all. He had no problem using a piece of cloth as long as it had no tears or holes. Even now, he always wore his augmented suit outside, thus there was no occasion where Akira could train his fashion sense.

There was also a time when Akira was doing close combat training with Alpha. At that time, Alpha would change her dress into a battle outfit from the old-world and it was a suggestive dress that was much more seductive than being naked. When he saw that, it made him really doubt the fashion sense of the old-world people.

The dresses that Akira gave to Sheryl were old-world clothing. So he thought that some of them might have a weird design just like what he once saw from Alpha. Of course, since he more or less had already gotten used to the old-world design, he was not able to tell apart those clothing from others, and so he was worried if he had given some dresses with a weird design according to the current standard to Sheryl without knowing it.

Sheryl, who noticed that Akira suddenly looked worried, carefully picked her words to reply to him.

After listening to Akira’s story, Sheryl more or less understood the situation. She then smiled to reassure him and said.

“I’m using this dress since I really like it, so please don’t worry about that.”

“Is that so? It’s all good then. So… Well, yeah, it looks good on you.”

Akira thought that everything was good as long as the one using it was okay with it.

“Thank you very much.”

Sheryl smiled happily after she got the reaction that she wanted from Akira.

The rain continued, it was not getting worse, but it was not letting up either.

Akira regularly went outside the room and checked the surroundings. He was checking the situation around the mansion while keeping close distance to the main room so he could quickly return back to where Sheryl was in case he spotted anything. His information-gathering device was also working just fine as long as it was indoor. Up until now, he had not met any monsters looking for a shelter from the rain yet.

Akira then thought.

“I hope that this situation would continue.”

Alpha smiled bitterly.

“When you say it like that, it sounds as if you’re rising your death flag, you know.”

“Nothing will happen. This is easy, we just need to wait for the rain to stop before going back home.”

“That in itself also did not sound good.”

“Okay okay, I just need to shut up, right?”

In contrast to Alpha who was smiling teasingly there, Akira pouted.

After Akira went back and forth from the main room several times, he spotted Sheryl looking displeased.

It was rather obvious that Sheryl was in a bad mood, but the moment she noticed Akira, she immediately welcomed him with a smile. Maybe because she could not fully hide the displeasure inside her, her smile somehow looked slightly awkward.

As Akira was about to sit next to Sheryl, he asked Erio who was standing near him.

“Did something happen?”

Erio glanced at Sheryl. Sheryl looked back at Erio while smiling. But her eyes were telling Erio not to say anything unnecessary.

Erio did something that angered Sheryl a few days ago, so he couldn’t afford to make it worse. While on the other hand, he also could not afford to worsen Akira’s mood either.

Akira was a dangerous person who would kill without any hesitation. There was even an occasion when he dragged the corpse of the person that he killed to the base of the gang that person was affiliated with. But Akira was harmless as long as he was not hostile. Unless the children of Sheryl’s gang told themselves that, they would need extra courage to even talk with Akira. That was the Akira that Erio knew. Although it should be fine for now since Sheryl was basically having him under control, Akira was still a dangerous person.

Erio carefully answered Akira’s question as not to worsen both his and Sheryl’s mood.

“There was a little dispute, but it’s already over.”

“I see.”

Akira only said that before he sat next to Sheryl.

Erio was relieved that he was at least able to avoid worsening Akira’s mood. He then glanced at Sheryl, who was still smiling at him.

It was not like Sheryl was obviously glaring at him. So Erio thought that she was not angry and it should be fine, or at least, that was what Erio prayed.

Since Sheryl’s heart leaned on Akira and as he was now back beside her, she returned to her normal self. Akira, who saw that change, thought that it was not something bad. So he just decided to stop thinking about it.

As Akira was taking a rest there before the next patrol, Sebla approached him. Sheryl’s mood quickly turned sour again.

Sebla then said to Akira.

“I have something I want to talk with you…”

“No, you don’t, now get back to your place.”

Sheryl interjected and glared at Sebla.

“I’m the boss of the gang and I’m telling you to get back to your place.”

“You’re just a proxy in the end, aren’t you? No matter how you look at it, the real boss here is Akira.”

Sheryl and Sebla were glaring at each other.

There were some children in Sheryl’s gang who thought that Sheryl was just a proxy for Akira. Most of the members who joined recently had a strong impression about it. While the senior members of the gang were much more afraid of Akira than Sheryl that they chose to carefully observe the situation as it developed. Thus prolonging the misunderstanding about Sheryl's actual position in the gang.

So in short, they thought that if they could appeal to Akira, then they could ignore Sheryl's opinion. Although that was true, there was no mistaking it that it was a bad choice of action.

Akira was basically just helping Sheryl as an individual. He was not helping Sheryl's gang in particular. As such, if anyone from Sheryl's gang came directly to Akira to appeal to him, Akira would flatly reject them.

Akira sighed and said.

"So, what is it?"

Since it seemed that Akira was willing to hear what he had to say, Sebla snickered mockingly at Sheryl. Sheryl glared at Sebla even more as she stepped back, it was because Akira was saying that he was willing to listen to Sebla.

"Well, since the rain is not letting up at all, I just thought that it might be a good idea to search the mansion while waiting for the rain to stop."

Akira was just silently looking at Sebla, waiting for him to continue. While on the other hand, Sebla was waiting for Akira's reply. So they were just looking at each other silently. Sebla's smile vanished, and right when he started looking confused, Akira opened his mouth.

"…So then?"

"Like I said, it's a good idea to search for relics in this mansion."

Akira sounded exasperated as he said to Sebla.

"No. I'm in the middle of a job and that is to make sure of Sheryl's and the other children's safety. Don't tell me you haven't noticed it."

Sebla then annoyedly replied to Akira.

“So you’re basically our bodyguard, right?”

“That’s not right. When I say other children, it means the children who view Sheryl as the head of the gang. So it doesn’t include the children who won’t listen to her.”

Sebla’s face twitched, Akira was basically saying that he wouldn’t protect him. So Sebla quickly changed to provocation.

“What? Are you scared or something? Or like, you have no confidence at all?”

Akira just flatly took in Sebla’s provocation as if it was nothing. Sebla was taken aback. Sheryl, who was also listening at that exchange, was surprised. Akira then continued.

“The monsters are scary, that’s exactly why they’re called ‘monsters’. You don’t even know that? And also, I have priority on who I’m going to protect. First of all, I need to make sure of Sheryl’s safety before protecting the people who are with her. But even after I can be sure that Sheryl and her gang is safe, I have no plans to worry about the safety of the people who try to pick a fight against the monsters on their own volition.”

Not only was Akira mocking Sebla’s futile action, he was also saying that he put Sebla’s safety as his last priority. As Sebla obviously winced back, Sheryl was smiling happily since Akira said that he would prioritize her safety.

Akira looked annoyed as he continued.

“If you want to go search the mansion, you can just go ahead and do that. I won’t stop you. My job is to protect Sheryl and her gang. So stopping you from killing yourself is not included in my job description. So yeah, you can go ahead and do whatever you want.”

After he heard Akira's straight answer, Sebla gave up trying to have Akira protect him while he searched the mansion. But he still wanted to go search the mansion.

Since they arrived at the mansion, Sebla kept thinking that he might be able to find some expensive relics inside such a luxurious looking mansion. And if he did find some and sold them in secret, he would be able to buy some powerful weapon and live a better life working as a Hunter.

As there was someone who had realized all of Sebla's crazy dream right in front of him, he was caught in an even crazier dream.

Sebla went silent and thought. He then lowered his request and pointed at Akira's AAH assault rifle.

"…T-then, at least lend me that gun."

Sebla himself had no plan to search the mansion unarmed. So putting it in another way, he would search the mansion if he could get himself a rifle. As far as he could recognize, other than Akira's equipment, he did not think there was that much difference between him and Akira.

Akira looked obviously exasperated as he said to Sebla.

"What the heck are you saying now? There's no way I would lend you my rifle."

"But it's not like you're using it right now."

"Are you for real? Do you really think that is enough of a reason to lend you my rifle? Are you sure you're okay in the head?"

There was no reason for Akira to lend Sebla his rifle. In his mind, lending his rifle to Sebla was equal to losing his rifle for nothing. Not to mention, Sebla might point that rifle at him, which was basically worse than simply losing his rifle.

When Akira got his calm back, he started to doubt Sebla's sanity.

“Listen here, you’re basically still barely included as one of the people that I have to protect, that is if you don’t do anything crazy. If you keep bugging me like this, I’ll have no other choice but to think of you as an obstruction to my job and remove you from my escort target. If you understand, then get lost. You’re bothering me.”

After Akira gave him a strong rejection, he looked away from Sebla as if he had lost interest in him.

Sebla looked frustrated and stood staring at Akira for some time before he returned to the opposite side of the room. He then sat down leaning his back against the wall, bent his head down, and started mumbling.

Sheryl appeared happy. She was smiling in delight as she was so thankful that Akira took her side. She looked at Sebla, who was walking away, as she felt a sense of victory.

The rain was still pouring down.

As Akira was patrolling the area, Alpha suddenly moved in front of him and pointed her finger outside the window.

“Akira, over there.”

Akira peeked outside the mansion. Thanks to the vision enhancement from Alpha, his vision zoomed into the direction where Alpha was pointing her finger. She was pointing at a vehicle that was heading in his direction.

“The other Hunters, huh? I just hope they won’t cause any trouble but…”

Akira felt that his hope would get betrayed and his bad premonition would happen, that was why he stopped there. He then headed back to the room to inform Sheryl and her gang about the Hunters.

Not too long after Akira and Sheryl’s gang took shelter from the rain in that mansion, another vehicle was also heading to Higaraka Residence Ruin. It was a closed-roof car that was designed to explore the wasteland, a big symbol of the rental company that owned that vehicle was painted on the side of that vehicle.

There were 3 Hunters in that vehicle. Guyver and Colbert were sitting on the backseats while Dale was driving the vehicle.

Guyver said to Dale.

“Say, isn’t it better if we just head straight to Kugamayama city?”

“Didn’t I tell you before that we can’t do that in the middle of this rain?”

“It would be fine. We’ve put some distance between us and that ruin, I’m sure that dangerous-looking monster must have lost us by now.”

“We might still meet it again on our way back, you know. Not to mention that this car is a rental car, so its auto-drive function might get activated when it receives damage. When that happens, it’ll return back to the city on autopilot and I won’t be able to control it. What would you do about it if that happens? In the worst-case scenario, this vehicle might even bring that monster back to the city with it and I’m sure the city defense squad would blow that monster together with us the moment they spot it.”

When Guyver brushed Dale’s worry as him overthinking it and laughed at him, Dale quickly turned at him with an annoyed face.

Then Colbert joined their conversation as he asked Dale.

“So, why Higaraka Residence Ruin?”

“You remember that big mansion inside the ruin, right? I’m thinking of taking shelter there.”

“It’s not like we have to go to that particular mansion, right? If you just want to take shelter while waiting for the rain to stop, we can just pick a random building around this area.”

“We don’t know how long this rain will stay. So if it’s possible, I want to take a good rest in a big room rather than in a cramped space like inside this vehicle.”

“Good grief!”

When he heard that snide remark from Colbert, Dale held himself back while telling that this would be the last time he went out to the wasteland together with both of them.

[That damn mediator!! Picking these dumb guys for me!! I’ll definitely file a complaint later!!]

Deep inside his heart, Dale kept cursing the mediator who introduced Guyver and Colbert to him.

Dale, Guyver, and Colbert did not go on an expedition together normally. They were all just registered under the same mediator and so they were just temporarily on the same team.

In the eastern district, there were several companies that acted as mediators between Hunters. They would introduce Hunters with other Hunters depending on the requirements set by those Hunters. These requirements included a lot of things such as the level of danger of the ruin that they wanted to explore, the type of request that they were willing to take together, the way to divide the reward, their equipments, Hunter Rank, battle record, and even age, gender and personality.

Most of the Hunters in the eastern district were utilising such mediator’s service. It was because a good mediator company often only introduced reliable and trustworthy Hunters. After all, these mediators would not accept Hunters with bad records. For example, those Hunters who always lose their team members in the wasteland for some reason, or those Hunters who are known to increase the risk of the exploration for other Hunters in the team. These Hunters would get rejected when they tried to register their names in those mediator companies. It was the same for the Hunters who got a lot of complaints after they were introduced to the other Hunters. With such a process of elimination, the Hunters who were left were usually trustworthy and reliable ones.

In the case when the company was requested by the City Management to send Hunters for some requests that had something to do with public image, it would prioritize those Hunters who had good personalities due to their track record.

In order to prevent the Hunters with powerful weapons from turning into bandits, the Corporate Government usually put a requirement on certain requests that the Hunters had to be registered with a mediator company and must have a relatively good image.

Dale usually worked alone and only formed a team temporarily with the help of a mediator company.

He had a hint and was looking for a particular ruin that might earn him a lot of money. Although he was able to get the information about where that ruin was through his connection, he did not get the information about the monsters around that ruin. Because of that, he thought that it would be a bad idea to go there alone and ended up asking the mediator company to introduce him to some Hunters. And those Hunters were Guyver and Colbert.

Result-wise, Dale's expedition ended up as a failure this time. They were not able to get their hands on any expensive relics and when they decided to just go back home, they encountered a powerful monster and had to escape that ruin in a hurry.

Dale believed that it was Guyver's and Colbert's fault that they failed.

[This Guyver guy can't even properly scan the area for monsters, he was just loitering aimlessly in the ruin and got detected by monsters because of that!! And that Colbert didn't even try to hide it when he was about to abandon us!! It's would have been much better if I had come here alone!! I'll never work together with these two again!!]

But all this was from Dale’s point of view. Both Guyver and Colbert thought that Dale was too scared to make any swift decision which made their expedition a total failure.

In all actuality, it might be just a matter of compatibility between their personalities, but putting that aside, all of them still felt awkward after that failure.

As Dale parked the vehicle near the mansion, he noticed Akira’s vehicle.

He took a good look at Akira’s vehicle.

“Someone’s here first, huh. Well, it’s raining cats and dogs here, no wonder another Hunter would come up with the same idea.”

Guyver glanced at Akira’s vehicle as he was putting on a camouflaging sheet on their vehicle.

It was obvious that the tray was packed with a lot of relics, but because it was covered with a camouflaging sheet, Guyver could not really see how many relics were in it.

“I bet it’s from this ruin.”

Colbert suddenly interjected in, but when Guyver heard that, he replied back as if he was mocking Colbert.

Colbert annoyedly replied back.

“Then where do you think all of those relics come from?”

“Like hell if I know.”

Guyver snapped back at Colbert.

They then checked the area around that mansion. There were dead monsters around the area but there was nothing suspicious. They then noticed Akira by the end of a hallway.

Akira was standing near the entrance of one of the rooms, he was watching the surroundings with CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun in his hands. He also noticed Dale and the other Hunters the moment they came in sight.

Akira walked a few steps toward them before opening his mouth.

“I’m sorry to tell you this, but can you take any other room? We’re using this room to take shelter from the rain.”

Dale raised both of his hands, trying to tell Akira that they were not hostile.

“Calm down, we’re also Hunters. We’re only here to take shelter from the rain on our way back home from the ruins. Are you also on your way back from a ruin? Just so you know, I have no plans to cause any trouble.”

Guyver and Colbert lowered their guns. When he saw that, Akira also lowered his guns.

He then said.

“I’m also a Hunter, but I’m here today for an escort request. If you have no business with us, I hope that you would take shelter somewhere else…”

Since Akira wanted to reduce any unpredictable factors, he hoped that Dale would take his friends somewhere else.

But Dale did not step back.

“Don’t say that. This must be some kind of fate. Let’s at least share information.”

Dale wanted to have someone to talk to about his expedition, or to be more precise, he wanted someone that could help him vent his stress by complaining about Guyver and Colbert. Moreover, making connections was essential for Hunters, and that was doubly true when it came to a Hunter like Akira who was nice enough to be there as an escort and not for hunting relics. Thus Dale wanted to make some connections with Akira if it was possible.

Guyver threw a friendly smile at Akira.

“I don’t mind if you want to exchange relics too, you know? Moreover, if you’re here as an escort, it’s your employer who will decide to meet us or not, right?”

Guyver could not forget about the relic pile that was on Akira’s cart. He thought that if he could somehow ask the owner of those relics to exchange some of it, he might be able to see what kind of relics were in that pile.

Akira hesitated for a bit, he then decided to ask Sheryl. After all, getting more connections with the other Hunters might be a good thing for Sheryl. That was why Akira decided to ask her rather than making his own decision.

“…I’ll go and ask then, wait here for a sec.”

After saying that, Akira went back to the room where Sheryl and her gang were.

Sheryl heard about the situation from Akira and decided to meet with Dale and his friends. Akira was a bit surprised by that, but since Sheryl decided to do so, he had no plan to criticize her at all. He then let Dale and his friends into the room.

After that, Dale and his friends introduced themselves to Sheryl and continued talking with her. While they were doing that, Akira was just standing silently next to Sheryl with both CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun on his hands without lowering his guard at all.

Among the three of them, Dale was the one who was talking the most with Sheryl. From their conversation, it felt like they could get along well with each other.

Sheryl smiled while listening to Dale, it was as if her eyes were sparkling, showing her interest in what the other person had to say. She enthusiastically encouraged Dale to continue his story, sympathized with his complaints, and praised his hard work.

She already understood how much effect her beauty had when talking with others, that was why she thoroughly took care of her skin and hair every day. She was also wearing an old-world dress that looked expensive and was using it skillfully as if she was familiar with such dresses. While on the other hand, since the other children present were only wearing clothing that was a bit better than most of the children in the slum city, it boosted Sheryl's appearance even more.

Sheryl continued her silly talk with Dale while trying to convey that she was not hostile. Because of that, Dale could not stop venting his stress from his failed expedition that day. As a result, their conversation dragged longer and longer.

Dale, who seemed to be interested in Sheryl, stopped boasting about himself and asked about her and her gang.

"So then, uhmmm, are you some kind of representative or something?"

"Yes, I'm the representative of a small gang in the lower district of the Kugamayama city, or more like, I'm the head of that small gang."

"That's a pretty impressive feat considering that you're still so young, what's the name of your gang?"

"It's still a small gang, so we don't have a name yet. Not to mention that it'll attract more attention if we have a name and it might cause needless conflict. We're trying to lay low and avoid any problem right now."

"I see… It sounds rough."

“Not at all, compared to the hard time that the Hunters have when facing the monsters out in the dangerous wasteland, our problem is not that bad. We don’t have anything that can be compared to the rewards that the Hunters get from hunting monsters or from selling relics. By the way, what kind of relics did you find lately?”

“Well, let’s see…”

Dale tried to remember the relics that he sold lately as they continued their conversation.

“Say, Alpha. This might be just my imagination, but…”

Akira who was standing silently next to Sheryl was a bit surprised and somehow a bit terrified, but he tried his best not to show it outside as he asked Alpha for a confirmation.

“Sheryl is trying to probe information out of those Hunters while keeping her own information a secret. I agree with you about that point, I think that she’s doing it intentionally.”

The conversation between Sheryl and Dale was mostly about Dale’s team. Although the conversation shifted to about Sheryl from time to time, she was always able to subtly steer the topic back about Dale and his friends and it seemed that Dale did not notice that at all.

Dale and Sheryl talked about a lot of things. When the topic was about the ruin, they would talk about the monsters that Dale had encountered or about the relics that he had found in the past. Although all of them were information that a Hunter would not normally share with the other Hunters except when they were getting paid, thanks to Sheryl’s sympathy and praises, Dale started blurting out those information for free.

And even after that, Sheryl would still occasionally show her sympathy or throw some praises exactly when he was expecting for them, thus Dale just could not stop himself.

As he was watching Dale continue blurting out those sensitive information, Akira tried to remember all of his exchanges with Sheryl and asked Alpha.

“I didn’t leak any information when I talked with Sheryl up until now, right?”

“Don’t worry, I’ll properly warn you when you’re about to make that blunder.”

“I see. Well, the only sensitive information that I have is about you, so I guess it should be okay, huh?”

“Well, Akira, you sometimes lowered your guard and turned at my direction. So she might think that you have a weird habit of looking at a random direction when you’re deep in thought, but that’s all.”

“…Wait, that’s because you always wear strange clothing, you know? Is it still my fault?”

“It’s not like I’m saying that it’s your fault. And also, it’s so rude of you to say that. If you keep saying something like that, I’ll start using even weirder clothing to train you.”

Alpha was smiling invincibly and teasingly at Akira.

“I’m sorry… please don’t…”

Akira quickly apologized. He did not want to see Alpha in any super strange clothing that would even take him by surprise.

As Dale was boasting about his ‘adventurous’ story to Sheryl, Guyver was keeping distance while silently observing them.

Guyver was surprised when he entered that room since the scene inside was so much different from what he was expecting. He thought he would find Hunters resting inside the room. Since there was only one vehicle with its cart filled with relics, judging from that, he expected to find at most 6 Hunters. He also thought that Akira was guarding the entrance since he was the weakest among those 6 Hunters.

Some Hunters preferred to work as a paid mercenary to accompany other Hunters to the wasteland while any relics that they found during their expedition would all be owned by their employers. Guyver thought that Akira was one of those Hunters.

But what he found inside that room was a beautiful young girl who employed Akira and the other small children in shoddy looking clothing. It did not seem that there was another Hunter except Akira inside that room. Those children did not even seem like they could handle a fight well.

While Dale was talking with Sheryl, Guyver scanned the room and lightly checked all the children in the room. He also kept his eyes on Akira whilst trying to figure out Sheryl's situation from what he heard from their conversation.

After Guyver finished checking everything there, he then interjected in Dale's and Sheryl's conversation.

"Can I say something for a bit here? I have a suggestion, this must be some kind of fate that we met each other here. We're both on our way back from hunting relics. So how about we exchange relics? Although we don't have that many, we got ourselves some good relics, you know?"

There were not that many Hunters who would sell all of the relics that they found in the ruins to the Hunter Office. So in order to adjust the relics that they collected according to the type of the relics preferred by the merchants that they sold those relics to, Hunters sometimes exchanged relics between each other. Usually, Guyver's suggestion was a profitable one for both sides.

But Sheryl looked apologetic as she declined that offer.

"I'm really sorry. The relics that we gathered are nothing more than cheap relics. I don't think we have anything worth exchanging."

"Don't worry, every merchant out there has a different preference. Your relics might not be worth much if you sell to the merchant that you frequent, but they might fetch a good price with the merchant that we frequent. Don’t worry about the price, it’s not like we have to exchange anything if we don’t find anything worth exchanging.”

“But it would take some time for us to unload the relics.”

“I’m the one suggesting it, so we’ll help out too.”

“…We’re planning to head back to the city as soon as the rain stops, so it might be a bit hard time-wise to unload them and load them again immediately afterwards…”

Although Sheryl was trying to decline his offer, Guyver kept pressuring her. Even though Dale found it weird that Sheryl was trying to decline the offer, because he liked her more than Guyver, he took Sheryl’s side.

“Whoah there, it’s not like you have to press her to do that, right?”

“…Well, that’s true, sorry about that.”

After Dale interjected, Guyver quickly apologized.

The reason why Sheryl refused the offer to exchange relics was to avoid having Dale and his friends looking down at her gang after seeing the cheap relics that her gang had gathered.

Sheryl noticed that Dale and his friends were misunderstanding her position. It seemed that they thought her to be the head of some kind of a big gang. Basically, they thought that Sheryl was someone with quite a load of money.

To be honest, Sheryl was just the head of a small gang and she did not have much money. Normally, she would not even be in that place. It was all thanks to Akira, who provided the transportation means and guard escort, that she was able to come to that place. Moreover, Akira paid for all the expenses for their expedition. Although Sheryl did pay some amount of money as a request reward to him, it was just a small portion of what he had paid in order to prepare for the expedition. And, in the end, the money that Sheryl used to pay Akira was the money that she got thanks to him in the first place.

If Dale and his friends noticed that the pile of relics in the cart was nothing more than just cheap relics and Sheryl and her gang were nothing more than just powerless and penniless children of the slum city, they would treat her and her gang differently. In the worst-case scenario, they might even start attacking her gang. That was what she thought.

Sheryl was immensely relieved that she had coaxed Dale. Thanks to that, she was able to maintain the trio’s misunderstanding.

Although, it was still unclear whether it was a good or a bad thing.

While they were waiting for the rain to stop, Guyver suddenly said to Dale.

“It’s so boring that we have nothing to do here, so I’m going to look for relics around here for a bit.”

Dale looked surprised and asked Guyver.

“You do know that there are no expensive relics left around this place, right?”

“It’s fine, I’m just going to search for relics to pass the time. Moreover, there are dead monsters around the area, so I might find some equipments left by the Hunters that those monsters killed.”

“…I see. Well, it’s up to you.”

Although he said that, Dale cursed Guyver deep inside his heart.

[Geh! Damn hyena!!]

There were all kinds of Hunters out there. Dale was someone who thought that it was rude to salvage equipment from the dead corpses of the other Hunters.

It would be fine if it was something that he stumbled upon by pure chance. But if he started to go to the wasteland to intentionally salvage equipment from the dead Hunters, Dale believed that it would only be a matter of time before he started to hunt for equipment from the still alive Hunters too.

Dale thought that Guyver would leave the room right after that, but instead, he went to the other side of the room, to a group of Sheryl's gang's members. He then started speaking with them while mostly focused on Sebla.

"I'm going to search the mansion, you guys want to come?"

Everyone there looked surprised when Guyver said that to them. Dale quickly interjected.

"What the heck are you thinking you're doing?"

Guyver replied back flatly without a trace of hostility.

"What? I'm just inviting them to search for relics."

"I'm telling you that you shouldn't bring them with you without Sheryl's permission!! Or more like, do you think they can hold a fight in the first place?!!"

"It's not like I'm forcing them to come. Moreover, I don't expect them to help me fight monsters, I'm inviting them to help me carry relics. I'll do the fighting. Ahhh, are you worried that we might cause a dispute when dividing the loot? I'll just give them the relics if they're just cheap relics. Like I said before, I'm just looking for a way to spend time."

The children that Guyver invited glanced at Sheryl's direction. Although Akira's expression did not change at all, Sheryl who was beside him obviously looked a little angry. They wanted to search for relics in that mansion, however, they hesitated to take Guyver's offer since it might cause Sheryl to get even angrier at them.

But that was excluding one person who had already annoyed Sheryl beforehand.

Sebla cautiously asked Guyver.

"Are you seriously going to give the relics to us?"

Guyver smiled and replied.

"Yeah, I have no interest in cheap relics after all."

"Alright then, I'll come with you."

As Sebla stood up, Guyver's smile widened.

Guyver was about to bring Sebla with him without Sheryl's permission, looking at that, Sheryl was making an unpleasant face. Dale was determined to stop Guyver if it was needed, so he asked Sheryl.

"Are you sure you don't need to do anything?"

"I won't stop him, but I won't take responsibility either."

Sheryl answered briefly without any change in her expression.

It was obvious that she had already given up on Sebla. She did not mind if Sebla died after going with Guyver, she also planned to leave him behind in case if the rain stopped and he had not returned. Of course, even if he returned back to the city after that, Sheryl planned to kick him out from the gang.

And if Sebla caused any trouble for Guyver, she had no plans to listen if Guyver came to her to complain nor she planned to apologize to him.

Guyver and Sebla then left that room. For some reason, Sheryl looked slightly relieved.

Now that Guyver was no longer in that room, Dale quickly vented his irritation about Guyver by complaining about him to Sheryl.

After Sebla and Guyver left that room, rather than starting to look for relics around that mansion, they quickly moved to another room away from where they were. After Sebla entered that room, Guyver checked his surroundings before closing the door.

Guyver then pulled a battered chair and sat on it with its backrest to his front. He then reached to his back and signalled Sebla with his head to take the other chair.

Sebla looked confused as he obediently took a seat while Guyver just kept smiling at him.

Guyver actually invited Sebla to come with him since he knew that Sebla also wanted to look for relics in that mansion but did not have the ability to do so alone, and to top it off, he seemed to be displeased with Akira and Sheryl.

This was because Sebla was unconsciously looking down on Akira and Sheryl. He thought that Akira was only a boy who got a little lucky which allowed him to buy powerful weapons while Sheryl was only a girl who got ahead of herself after getting Akira’s support.

That was why Sebla was not really scared even when Sheryl and Akira were next to him. And although Akira was someone who might kill him in a single snap of a finger without any hesitation, his hatred and prejudice toward them dulled his sense of danger.

While on the other hand, unlike Akira, Guyver, who was in front of him right now, was simply a stranger with enough strength to kill him. He was someone that Sebla just met, so he did not know anything about the other person.

That was why Sebla felt a little scared. But in order to hide his fear, he asked Guyver.

“A-aren’t we going to look for relics?”

“Well, just calm down for now.”

Guyver was still smiling at him, but that smile did not even have the slightest trace of good-will.

“There’s one thing that I want to ask you. Don’t worry, it’s nothing bad. I just want to know your honest opinion about those guys.”

From the start, Guyver had no wish to search the mansion for relics at all. He was only interested in picking a random kid to gather more information about Sheryl and Akira.

He was actually having some problems with money. To be more precise, he had a huge debt. Although the deadline was closing in, he still had no idea how to pay his debt.

Today, he had actually lost his hope of repaying that debt. He had bought expensive information about a certain ruin where he might be able to discover expensive relics and so he was planning to find some expensive relics today to pay for his debt. Although that information came from a questionable source with questionable accuracy, it was enough for him to place his bet on that information.

Although there was a lot of frauds like that, fortunately enough, Guyver hit a jackpot. He got the information of several unexplored ruin sites where he might be able to find expensive relics.

Guyver was winning his gamble up to that point, but then bad things happened to him.

The information that he bought did not mention anything about the monsters in that ruin. When they encountered a strong monster, they had no other choice but to run away. If it was not for the other Hunters, who did not expect to find those monsters and ended up dividing the attention of those monsters, they might not have been able to escape from that ruin alive.

In the end, they ended up bringing back only a small number of relics, and of course, they still had to divide those relics among themselves. Basically, it was not even close to enough for repaying his debt even if he took all of those relics for himself.

Lending money to the Hunters in the eastern district was a dirty business. After all, the Hunters did not have any stable income, they might even die anytime without notice. And since they were armed, there were cases where they even lashed back and refused to pay their debts. So in short, any companies in the eastern district that offered loans to those Hunters had prepared themselves with enough power to forcefully collect the money that the Hunters borrowed from them.

Guyver was desperate for money in order to avoid getting sent to the infamous hellish workplace to return his debt.

So he was now trying to get some information out of Sebla who looked a bit scared of him. Of course, he expected to get slightly inaccurate information out of Sebla about Sheryl and Akira. But even so, it was enough to get the information that he wanted.

Guyver’s desperation of money had already twisted his mind. Because of that, he strongly wished that the relic pile behind Akira’s vehicle was filled with expensive relics. Rather than deciding based on the information he would get from Sebla, he already made a guess that they were indeed expensive relics. That was why he started to gather more information in order to confirm his guess.

Right from the start, Guyver already thought that Sheryl was on her way back from another ruin. And that ruin was an unexplored ruin and the information about which had not spread among the Hunters. He thought that Sheryl was trying to secretly carry out relics from that particular unexplored ruin.

There were two ways to make sure that certain important information would not leak to the public–either only tell the people that one absolutely trusted, or make sure that other people who also knew that information are dead.

Guyver thought that it was the former case for Akira. According to what he heard from Sheryl, it seemed that she placed a lot of trust in Akira. That was why she only took Akira to escort her.

While the other children were the latter case. Guyver was sure that the other children were the children of the slum city who had no idea of the value of the relics that they gathered, and even if she killed those children once they did their job, it would not cause any ruckus at all. Basically, they were the perfect expendable pawns for secretly carrying out relics. That was why Guyver was sure that Sheryl was there to secretly carry out relics from an unexplored ruin.

But unlike what he expected, according to Sebla's information, those relics were gathered from Higaraka Residence Ruin. Although that took him by surprise, Guyver quickly returned back to his sense and made another guess to make everything click together.

He guessed that Sheryl used Higaraka Residence Ruin as a hidden stow or maybe a delivery place for sensitive relics that should be handled carefully. Guyver thought that Sheryl did that to disguise those relics as cheap relics.

According to Sebla, Sheryl was the one who decided which building to loot and what relics to take out from each building. And if she used slum city's children to help her and also prevented them from knowing what they were carrying, then everything would make sense.

Moreover, if the relics on the cart were really cheap relics, then there was no need to even put on a camouflaging sheet on top of it. So it must be those relics that would give Sheryl profit even after deducting the price of the escort, transportation, and the ammo expense.

Among all the children in that room, Akira and Sheryl had obviously better equipment than the rest of the children. Sheryl's dress also seemed to be an old-world dress which was way better than the common dress. So basically, she must be someone who had enough money to buy old-world dresses.

Even though Sheryl brought with her an escort, Guyver refused to believe that she would intentionally go out to the dangerous wasteland herself if it was not for something that was worth that risk.

Guyver's twisted money sense because of the debt that he was shouldering caused his guess to lean more towards the direction that the relics on Akira's cart were expensive relics.

"Say, Sebla… Was it again? Ahh, I'm Guyver, I forgot to tell you my name before. So then, Sebla."

Sebla was overwhelmed by the ominous vibe from Guyver.

"W-what?"

Guyver was still smiling at Sebla as he continued. It was obvious from his voice that he had made his decision.

"I have a good idea, wanna listen?"

Sebla was completely drowned in Guyver's ominous aura.

___-*___*___*___

Nothing in particular happened as Akira continued waiting for the rain to stop. Not too far from him, Sheryl was talking with Dale and Colbert. Akira was standing there as Sheryl bodyguard, while the children from Sheryl's gang were doing various things to pass the time.

Then suddenly there was an explosion followed by gunshots. Although those sounds were drowned in the rain, the Hunters inside that room quickly reacted to that faint noise. Akira quickly covered Sheryl and scanned his surroundings. While Dale and Colbert quickly went to the window to check the source of that sound.

The moment Dale saw what was happening outside, he immediately shouted.

“Our vehicle!?!!”

Dale and Colbert panicked. Akira calmly and carefully checked outside the mansion, he could see a vehicle moving away from the mansion.

Akira checked that vehicle with his binocular, it was not his vehicle.

Dale shouted as he was obviously shocked by that sudden turn of events.

“The auto-drive home function, huh!? But that’s impossible!! It should still have enough armour plating on it!!”

Dale’s guess was correct, but it did not stop the vehicle from moving away from the mansion until it eventually vanished into the rain.

Not too long after that, Guyver returned back with more stuff than when he left the room.

Dale quickly ran to him.

“Guyver!! Our vehicle’s auto-drive activated and it went back to the city!!”

In contrast to Dale who was panicking, Guyver looked completely calm.

“Yeah, I know, it was the monster.”

“Hah?!”

“A monster attacked our vehicle, well, it’s because we just left it there in the open after all.”

“What do you mean?!”

According to Guyver’s explanation, he encountered a monster when he was passing near their vehicle. Although he was able to repel the monster back, it caused enough damage to activate the auto-drive function on their rental vehicle and Guyver was too busy facing the monster to stop their vehicle. It seemed that the explosion and the gunshots were from him fighting that monster.

Guyver unloaded the stuff that he was carrying on the floor.

“Fortunately, I was able to save the relics and our ammo reserve and equipments.”

Dale frowned, but his expression quickly turned grim.

“What exactly were you doing back then? If you could save all of this stuff from our vehicle, you should have had enough time to kill the monster, right?”

Guyver turned to Sebla and said.

“This guy said that he wanted to see our equipment, that was why I took these out of the vehicle. And as I was showing it to him, the monster suddenly came at us, you know. So it’s not like we were taking them out while fighting that monster.”

“But even so, you should have been able to protect our vehicle!!”

Guyver hesitated as he glanced at Sebla again.

“Well, uhh, I know that it’s my fault, but I can’t really protect the vehicle while also protecting this guy. So I ended up fighting that monster while using the vehicle as our cover, you see. It was also because I was caught off-guard since I couldn’t detect that monster thanks to the rain…”

Sebla looked apologetic and said.

“…I’m sorry.”

He then bent his neck so deep that no one there could see his face, because of that, Dale chose not to reprimand him any further. Since he thought that it was not a good thing to strongly blame Sebla in front of Sheryl, Dale just clicked his tongue and decided to hold himself from asking him to take responsibility.

But it did not change the fact that they lost their vehicle now. In that situation, in contrast to Dale, who was making a grim face, Guyver looked completely calm. It caused Dale to become even more annoyed.

"…You look pretty calm there, you know? How can you stay calm like that? We just lost our only means to return back home, you know?"

Guyver smiled lightly and said in a relaxed tone as if he was trying to calm Dale down.

"Just calm down. It's true that we lost our vehicle. But fortunately, there's still one vehicle left in this place, remember?"

Guyver then turned to Sheryl. Dale and Colbert followed suit and looked at Sheryl too. Sheryl's expression stiffened.

Dale then apologetically asked her.

"Well, that's how it is. So like, can you please give us a ride back to the city?"

Guyver too smiled and asked Sheryl.

"You'll basically get 3 more Hunters to escort you for free, so I think it's not a bad proposal, right? We can even drive the car for you if you want. It's hard to fight monsters while driving the vehicle for your Hunter there, right?"

That was not a bad offer for Sheryl, but she then glanced at Akira to check with him. Being the escort was Akira's job, if Akira seemed to have any objections, Sheryl would have to come up with some kind of explanation to reject that offer.

Akira did not change his expression as he carefully said to Sheryl.

“We don’t have much choice, let’s give them a ride.”

Sheryl then lightly bowed to Dale and his friends.

“Very well, Dale-san, Guyver-san, Colbert-san, we’ll be counting on you on our way back.”

“Just leave it to us.”

Dale confidently replied as the representative of that team.

Akira kept his eyes on Dale and his friends, to be honest, he was against giving them a ride back to the city. Although it was true that they would have more Hunters to help in case they had to fight monsters, it would also increase the unpredictable factors that he would have to handle.

But with that being said, if Akira declined that offer and left them in the wasteland, they might even start a fight. So to be honest, it was not like he had any other choice as he reluctantly agreed with their offer.

“Alpha, what do you think?”

“You definitely need to keep your eyes on them.”

“Thought so.”

Akira also figured that all of his good predictions would betray him and any of his bad premonitions would come into reality. Which in that case, he had to prepare himself to face it.

If he knew that his bad premonitions were accurate, then he could reduce the possible loss by getting himself ready to brace for it. If he did that, he would not sustain much damage even if it really happened. That was what Akira was telling himself in order to sustain his mental stability.

In the middle of the rain outside the mansion, there was a vehicle that was traversing the wasteland without any driver inside it, it was Dale’s vehicle.

A part of its armour plating was crumbling down. Because of that, the control unit installed in that vehicle judged that the vehicle would be destroyed at this rate. As such the auto-drive function inside it activated and drove the vehicle back to the city on auto-pilot.

The display of that vehicle's control unit was showing the reason as to why the auto-drive function was activated. It based its results on the findings of the diagnostic device installed in the control unit of that vehicle.

It was saying that the auto-drive function was activated because of the damage caused by gunshots or explosion. The scanning device installed in that vehicle did not detect any monsters around when that happened. The display was also showing a warning that shooting at the unit might cause a misunderstanding, in which case the evaluation of the customer might be lowered because of that.

The vehicle kept on heading towards the Kugamayama city while displaying that message which no one read.

It had been quite a while since Guyver returned back. Dale was checking the stuff that Guyver retrieved before their vehicle left. After checking the relics, he proceeded to check the equipment and the ammo reserves, his face suddenly turned grim.

"Hey! The decoy device is not here, nor the ammo."

The decoy device referred to any type of device that could be used to attract monsters' attention. There were a lot of ways to use them in the ruin, they could be used to gather monsters in one place and then take them out all together in one go, or they could be used to sneak from the monsters as they gathered in a certain place. These devices used all kinds of means like sound, heat, smell, light, or vibration to attract monsters.

Of course, if they were not careful when using the decoy devices, the Hunters could end up attracting powerful monsters from the deeper part of the ruin. There were various ways to activate them, some of them could be activated using remote activation, or time-set, or even by sensor trigger. Some of them could even be launched like a projectile.

These decoy devices were of course much more expensive than a normal bullet. And the decoy devices that they lost were all owned by Dale. So no wonder his face turned grim.

But then Guyver answered apathetically.

“They’re not there? They should be still in that vehicle then.”

“You didn’t take them out of the vehicle?”

“It’s not like I took all the equipment out from the vehicle. I only picked out the equipments that boy wanted to see.”

“…Dammit! Those are expensive, you know?”

Dale was extremely frustrated. If he knew this would happen, he would have used all the decoy devices when he escaped from that ruin. Even in the middle of that rain, they should at least still have some effects. If he had used the decoy devices to fool the monster back then, he would have had no need to take shelter from the rain in this mansion.

While Dale was still lamenting his loss, Guyver suddenly stood up and was about to leave the room again. But Dale annoyedly shouted at him.

“Where do you think you’re going?”

“I’ll patrol the area while looking for relics in this mansion. After all, there might still be some monsters around.”

But then Dale snapped back at him.

“…Isn’t it because you roam around aimlessly that the monsters easily spot you? Isn’t that also the reason why our vehicle got attacked?”

Dale was basically blaming him for loitering around their vehicle and getting their vehicle attacked.

Guyver just laughed it off as he said.

“Even if you say so, there might still be some monsters around, you know? So it’s better if we keep our guards up, ain’t I right? Don’t worry, I won’t go near Sheryl’s vehicle. After all, I too don’t want to have to walk back to Kugamayama city.”

Guyver left the room after he said that. Sebla then followed behind him afterwards. When Dale saw that, he shouted at Guyver.

“Are you seriously going to bring that boy too!?”

“This boy also feels guilty about what happened and he’s trying to make it up for that blunder. So just let him do it, will you? You just stay here and protect Sheryl and the other children. If you don’t do at least that much, I feel like they won’t give us a ride back home after all. Later then.”

Guyver then left that room together with Sebla.

Akira kept looking at the door through which Guyver and Sebla exited the room. His bad feeling would not go away.

“Alpha, can you check what that Guyver guy is doing from here?”

“Unfortunately, they are outside my detection range. The rain really reduced my detection range after all.”

“I might be overthinking this, but in case if they mess with our vehicle, would you be able to tell from here?”

“If that’s the case, then there’s no need to worry. I’m connected to the control unit in your vehicle. Although I set the detection range to the minimum to conserve the energy, it would leave a record if anyone tries to approach it. You can look at that record from your information terminal, although, you won’t get the latest record unless you’re within the data transfer range.”

“Then it should be fine, huh…”

“Are you suspicious of them?”

“Yeah, I have a bad feeling about them. I always have a good sense when it comes to dangerous things, you see. There were times when I was saved thanks to that. Well, it’s not like everything will be fine as long as I don’t have any bad feelings, so I can’t completely put my guard down too.”

“…I see.”

Alpha thought that since Akira could connect to the old-world domain, he might have been receiving some kind of information without him even realizing it. He then might have been analyzing and interpreting that information unconsciously and mistook it as his intuition. After all, if he could come up with something without any basis, that would be easily interpreted as an intuition.

Although it looked like Alpha was smiling like usual, she was telling herself that she needed to be careful about that. Akira noticed that Alpha was staring at him. So he tilted his head and asked her.

“What’s wrong?”

“Hm? I was just thinking that you are being a bit too paranoid. It’s true that it’s a good thing to be careful of any possibilities, but it’s impossible to consider all kinds of possibilities in the first place, not to mention that it would be highly ineffective too. You can just leave that kind of things to me, I have confidence in my calculation ability after all!”

“Well, that’s true, I’ll be counting on you then.”

Alpha smiled invincibly but gently to Akira.

A few minutes passed by since Guyver and Sebla went out of the room.

While in the room, Dale was showing the relics that he gathered that day. Both Sheryl and her underlings were looking at those relics with full interest.

Dale proudly told them the tale of those relics.

“Of course, the people during the old-world did all kinds of jobs and it seems there were similar companies compared to the current age. It’s still unclear whether they had those companies since they were also human like us, or it is because the people of this era are imitating the old-world people. Well, putting that aside, take a look at this relic. This is a Yasunabashi Corp logo. There were bad and good companies among the old-world companies. Yasunabashi was one of those good old-world companies, so people are willing to buy their products at a good price. If these people are not being careful, they would buy anything at a good price as long as it has this logo. Because of that, some bad Hunters make counterfeits by affixing forged logo of Yasunabashi Corp onto some random garbage that they find. And it’s not rare for relics exchange centres to get fooled by that. But of course, the relics exchange centres that properly examine the relics can quickly identify these fakes. I heard that it's easy to identify fake relics since this logo is printed with some kind of advanced old-world technology. After they discovered that, some Hunters who got lucky and found an old-world printing machine started using that machine to print this logo. And that's how these relics fakers and the people from the exchange centre are trying to outwit each other…"

"U-uhmmm."

Sheryl suddenly interrupted Dale who was enjoying himself.

"I'm really thankful for giving us all of this information, but are you sure it's okay to share this info?"

Although Sheryl did intentionally encourage Dale to leak out information, she was rather worried since he just could not stop blurting information. Sheryl thought that she should calm him down first and so she interrupted him there.

After Dale calmed down a bit and looked back at what he said, he also noticed that he might have said too much. But after he saw Sheryl's worried expression, he quickly came up with excuses to balance out all the information that he gave.

"Well, uhhh, it's not exactly a secret after all. So I think it's fine. Moreover, you can just take it as my payment for giving us a ride. I don't want to be left in the wasteland without any means to go back to the city after all."

"If that's the case, thank you very much for sharing them with us."

Sheryl lightly bowed and smiled at Dale, who blushed and started talking again.

Akira was observing them not too far away from them. He then asked Alpha while carefully trying to make sure that his expression did not change.

“That guy just blurted out secret information like it was nothing. So this is Sheryl’s ability, huh. To be honest, it’s a bit scary. If you ask me what exactly is scary about it, its the way she makes that guy happily leak information.”

From Akira’s point of view, the information that Dale was giving was valuable information. If Akira tried to get that information by normal means, it would take him a lot of money and time. Even the price of that information would put a dent on Akira’s savings. But Sheryl was able to extract those information through simple conversation. No wonder Akira felt a bit scared of her.

Alpha then told Akira her evaluation about Sheryl, she adjusted the way she said her evaluation in order to give Akira a warning at the same time.

“It’s because Sheryl knows her strength well and she’s using that to its fullest extent. She has the talent and now she’s the boss of a gang, I’m sure she made a lot of effort to sharpen that talent. Akira, you should be careful about her too, you know? And of course, this is not limited to Sheryl only. As you get stronger, more people will try to approach you to get some benefits out of you. It’s fine if they’ll also give some kind of benefits for you too, but I’m sure a lot of them are only going to leech off of you.”

Akira then tried to objectively evaluate himself.

“I understand. I’ll be fine, maybe… As long as they don’t try to bait me with good food like those meals from that restaurant.”

There was an occasion in the past when Shiori invited Akira for a meal in a high-class restaurant. After having experienced the level of meal that completely destroyed Akira’s view of food, he was not sure if he could keep his brain straight if he was baited with that kind of food. When something like that happens, he would have no other choice but hope that Alpha would stop him.

Alpha smiled and said.

“It seems that there’s a need for you to earn enough money to go to that restaurant from time to time, huh?”

“That’s very true.”

Akira sounded a bit optimistic when he said that.

Suddenly Alpha’s expression stiffened, Akira who noticed that quickly got his guard up.

“Akira, carefully peek out the window with your aiming device.”

“Is it a monster?”

“That’s what exactly you’re going to confirm. There’s some noise triggered within my detection range, if it’s not from a monster, then let’s just forget about it.”

The current Alpha was almost fully reliant on Akira’s information-gathering device to gather information. Because of the rain, Alpha’s detection range was greatly reduced, so in order to check more thoroughly, Akira had to do it himself using his aiming device.

Akira readied his rifle next to the window and peeked outside through the aiming device. He followed Alpha’s instructions to adjust the direction he was checking and so he quickly found the source of the noise.

“That thing, huh? That’s pretty big.”

Akira spotted a monster away from the mansion. It was obvious from the first glance that it was a carnivorous monster. Its fur that was drenched in rain looked heavy for some reason.

That monster was sniffing around as if it was looking for something, but it did not seem that it had noticed Akira.

“It doesn’t seem like it’s heading this way… Right? It seems that it’s looking for something around that area though, I wonder if there’s anything there?”

Although that monster had not noticed Akira yet, it also would not move away from the mansion. It kept on loitering around in the same area.

“I don’t remember doing anything bad to that monster though.”

Although they had to be careful with that monster, it was not like that monster was coming at him either. After Alpha said that implicitly, Akira calmed down a bit and replied with a light joke.

Dale and Colbert were also watching the outside through the other windows.

Dale was watching the situation outside without the help of any equipment and so he did not find any monsters. He then asked Akira.

“Did you find anything?”

“Yeah, a monster. A big one, it’s just loitering around that empty building over there.”

Dale pulled out his binocular and looked at the direction that Akira told him.

“…That monster, huh? You’re pretty good to be able to spot that monster. You weren’t really checking the outside while you’re staying in this room, right?”

Akira lightly smiled when he said that. Alpha, who heard that, smiled smugly.

Akira was basically saying that Alpha was high-tech. While Dale thought that Akira was talking about his equipment.

[…Leaving his skill aside, he's basically saying that he has good equipment, huh. Is it because this boy is strong enough to protect Sheryl alone that she did not bring anyone else with her? Don't tell me that his body is a cyborg body. When he said that, does he mean not only his information-gathering equipment but also his cyborg body? Or he means more about his own skill?]

From Dale's point of view, Akira's age and aura did not give any impression that he was a strong Hunter. But his evaluation changed now that he knew Akira was able to find a monster sooner than him.

[How strong is this boy? If I know how strong he is, I can at least guess how much reward he gets from escorting these kids. Then from there, I can guess how much money his employer, Sheryl, has… Well, I guess I'll get a chance to find out on our way back.]

Unlike what Dale expected, the chance to see Akira's ability would come way sooner than he thought.

Colbert was also using the aiming device on his rifle to check the situation outside just like Akira. It did not take long for him to find the monster that Akira just spotted.

The moment he spotted that monster, Colbert's face distorted with fear, his hand that was grabbing his rifle was slightly trembling. Very soon his trembling stopped, but his expression turned grim. His face was obviously showing a deep hatred toward the monster that his rifle muzzle was pointing at.

Something snapped inside Colbert that made him pull the trigger of his rifle. Gunshots reverberated throughout the room. The bullets flew out from his rifle and accurately hit that monster. But it did not inflict any serious damage to that monster.

That monster noticed Akira and the other Hunters as it roared. It immediately started running toward Akira.

"Die!! Die!! Die!!!!"

Colbert kept shooting at that monster while cursing it. Due to Colbert's shooting skill, all of his shots hit that monster. After showering in those bullets, that monster started to move slowly, it eventually dropped down and stopped moving. But Colbert did not stop shooting at it with a desperate face. It took sometime before he started slowing down and eventually let go of the trigger.

Everyone in that room was directing their gazes at Colbert. Akira was just surprised by that sudden outburst, nothing more. But Dale was obviously looking angry as he was sending his gaze to Colbert.

"Why did you do that?!!"

Colbert shouted back at Dale with more or less the same volume.

"Of course because I want to kill it!!"

"It didn't notice us until you shot, you know?!"

"Are you going to wait until it attacks you?! You kill them before they have the chance to kill you!!"

As Dale and Colbert started to argue, a gunshot suddenly interrupted them.

It was from Akira. Both Dale and Colbert immediately turned to Akira, who then calmly said.

"Can you do that later? To be more precise, after you guys take care of the rest."

After he said that, Akira started shooting. The bullet that he shot hit another monster that was running at his direction and blasted that monster's head off to small pieces.

Around the dead monster that Colbert just killed, there were already some monsters gathered around. Those monsters quickly noticed Akira and the other Hunters as they rushed toward the mansion.

Colbert quickly started shooting too, Dale clicked his tongue before helping out.

Monsters of all sizes started to gather and formed a swarm as they rushed toward the mansion. 2 legged lizard, 4 legged beasts, 6 legged turtles, 8 legged horses. They had such a distorted form as if someone made them as a pure joke, their body was half biological and half mechanical as if they stopped midway from turning into a complete robot.

The turtle monsters had a big cannon perched on their shell and they directed those cannons at Akira.

When Akira saw that monster, he could not help but get shocked.

“The heck is that?!”

“That’s the Tochka Turtle. We’re lucky that they haven’t reached adulthood yet. Their weakness is their cannon mouth. Don’t just look at it, start shooting.”

Alpha operated Akira’s augmented suit, Akira aimed the CWH anti-material rifle on his hand toward that cannon and pulled the trigger.

Due to Alpha’s advanced calculating ability, Akira was able to shoot the inside of the canons of those turtles accurately. Those bullets then hit the ammo reserve inside those cannons and set the gunpowder within them to explode, taking out the tochka turtle and the other monsters around it.

As Akira saw the tochka turtle explode into small pieces of flesh, he praised Alpha.

“That was nice, but still, to think that there’s a dangerous monster like that in this place, was this place always this dangerous before? Did this place really change that much just because that greedy crocodile got killed? Moreover, why are so many monsters gathering like this? Are they looking for a place to take shelter from the rain too?”

Akira’s questions were understandable. Alpha did not see that coming. Or to be more precise, Alpha thought that the possibility of such a thing to happen was negligible. After all, if she had known that this would happen, she would have not recommended Akira to take shelter in that mansion.

But leaving Alpha aside, Akira was not in a position to think about that. Alpha then told Akira to keep his focus on shooting the monsters.

“Let’s put that aside for later. You’ll have a lot of time to think about that question after you survive this swarm.”

“That’s true.”

Akira quickly took his aim at the next monster and pulled the trigger. The piercing bullet pierced through the trunk of an 8 legged horse as it fell down to the ground, the other monsters behind it then just trampled over its body and killed it.

Akira and the other Hunters had the upper hand there. Akira had the support from Alpha. While Dale and Colbert had brought with themselves pretty powerful equipment since they were planning to go to an unexplored ruin that day. Thus it was to be expected for them to have the upper hand against the monsters in Higaraka Residence ruin which had a relatively low danger level.

They were able to clean up the monsters without any problem including those monsters that normally should not be roaming around Higaraka Residence ruin. Every time they spotted a strong looking monster, they would focus their firepower and quickly take it out, and if the relatively weak monsters got close to them, Akira would quickly scatter them using his DVTS minigun.

As his minigun spewed countless bullets at those monsters, due to Alpha’s support, all of those bullets were able to find their targets. Of course, it was impossible for all of them to hit the monsters’ weak points. But it was enough to deal severe damage to them. The minigun quickly turned those monsters into a mixed mess of flesh and mechanical parts.

Dale saw that and was honestly amazed.

[So strong!! Although we're facing this many monsters, he doesn't panic at all and calmly takes them out. His shooting skill is also amazing. It seems that he even knows the weak points of these monsters too. He only used one bullet to kill the tochka turtles. It's obvious that he's not shooting these monsters randomly, he's carefully picking out which monster he has to kill first. He's really good.]

Since Colbert was screaming on top of his lungs while shooting at those monsters, from Dale's point of view, Akira looked ever so calm as he was shooting at those monsters without saying anything.

Akira's shooting performance was due to Alpha's support. The reason why he looked so calm was simply because he had fought a bigger swarm in the past, it also showed Akira's trust in Alpha's support. He was silent because he was actually talking with Alpha through telepathy, so Dale could not hear it.

But Dale did not know about that at all, thus he could only see Akira as a really skilled Hunter. That difference between Dale's evaluation and Akira's real ability would cause Akira some troubles down the road.

Sheryl was silently watching Akira from behind him. Even in such a situation, she still looked completely calm with her usual smile. Gunshots echoed through the room, the sounds of cannons from outside the window could be heard even inside that room, Colbert was still screaming on top of his lungs, the monsters could be easily spotted from inside that room, but even so, Sheryl's reaction was completely different compared to the other children that were panicking in that chaotic situation.

Erio, who saw Sheryl's calm expression, approached her and asked her as if he was looking for reassurance.

"A-are we going to be okay?"

"Don't worry, just calm down."

Sheryl smiled as she said that to Erio. There was not even a shred of fear in Sheryl's smile.

Erio calmed down a bit seeing how relaxed Sheryl was, although it was unnaturally so. He then mumbled to himself.

"T-that's right!! Akira is strong after all!!"

"Yep, that's why you should calm down too. Don't worry."

Sheryl looked at the other children and smiled. The children who saw that calmed down a bit.

They then started talking to each other as if to avert their attention away from the fear.

"T-that's right. Boss is so calm there, so I'm sure it's going to be okay."

"Is that Akira guy really that strong? Well, I guess he really is, huh."

"But still, it's amazing how the boss is so calm even in this situation. I guess you have to be that good to be a boss, huh?"

"Boss is amazing on her own, but Akira is extraordinary."

A bullet flew into the room from the window from time to time. Every time that happened, all the children would scream and scatter to look for a place to hide, but even in that situation, Sheryl did not move at all.

The children who were looking down on Sheryl realized their mistake when they saw the current her. They started to recognize her as not only a proxy of Akira but as the boss of the gang.

The reason why Sheryl was unnaturally calm was because of her trust in Akira and also because a part of her had actually already given up. Ever since that day when she asked for Akira's help and he decided to give her a helping hand, Sheryl was always under the mercy of Akira's support.

Even right now, Akira was protecting her from the swarm of monsters heading to that mansion. This fact alone made her calm. Even if that level of calmness was like a tranquillizer, even if it had a similar effect to drugs, even if Sheryl knew that herself, she did not mind it at all.

That blind faith and full reliance were what built up Sheryl right now. As long as she did not lose Akira, she might stay like that forever.

The battle continued with Akira and the other Hunters having the upper hand. They first prioritized taking out monsters with long-range weapons. So they started with killing the Tochka Turtles and other monsters carrying big cannons or at least rendering them unable to use their cannons. When they shot the head of the two-legged lizard that had its arms turned into guns, the lizard that had lost its control unit would lose control and shoot the other monsters around it.

Their next priority was the monsters with weapons and other monsters that looked dangerous. These monsters mechanically, or more like instinctively, ignored the difference between their fighting power as they rushed toward Akira and the other Hunters. The overwhelming number of monsters in that swarm was crushed under the rain of bullets. The already dead monsters in the front were being pushed and trampled from behind by the other monsters, thus turning them into unrecognizable minced meat.

After they finished most of those monsters, the rest of the mechanical monsters that recognized the difference in their fighting ability started to retreat while the biological monsters that started to feel fear also left the place.

The rain had stopped by then and there were no longer monsters detected around the mansion. Akira’s battle eventually came to an end.

The Hunters did not suffer any fatal injuries. It was the best outcome, that was of course if they did not account for the expense of the bullets that they exhausted in that battle.

After Akira finished that fight, Alpha smiled and showed her appreciation to him.

“You did well. You were able to keep calm when facing such a level of a swarm, that was well executed.”

“It’s smaller than the swarm that I’ve faced in the past after all. Not to mention, I have better equipment compared to back then. So I guess this is to be expected.”

“Since you can say that out normally now, it shows that you’ve grown. And I’m glad to hear that.”

Akira looked pretty happy since Alpha praised him. Alpha made sure to note that reaction from him.

Dale sighed, slowly sensing that the battle had ended. As he started to calm down, he also started to get angry at the same time.

He then turned to the source of his anger.

“Colbert!! This is your fault!! If you hadn’t taken that shot, we would have been able to avoid the fight just now, you know!!”

“Haah!? What’s so bad for a Hunter to kill monsters!?”

Colbert, who had not calmed down from that fight, shouted back at Dale. Although it felt like a fight would start there, the mood suddenly changed.

Colbert suddenly calmed down and took a deep breath. He then looked down apologetically and said.

“Sorry… I caused you trouble there.”

Seeing how Colbert suddenly calmed down and honestly apologized as if he was a completely different person, Dale was so surprised that his anger immediately faded away.

“…I was scared… Really scared… That’s why I took that shot before I even realized it.”

Colbert told the others the reason why he suddenly shot at that monster. Akira found something weird as he asked Colbert.

“Scared? Of that monster? Well, it did look like a big monster, but at that range and with your shooting skill, I don’t think there was anything for you to be scared about.”

Unlike Akira who was relying on Alpha’s support, Colbert was able to shoot at that monster accurately with his own skill. Even after that, he was able to perform in that fight without slowing the others down. So Akira thought that as long as he had that skill, there should be nothing to worry about.

Colbert glanced at Akira and started telling him the reason.

“…I almost got killed by a monster in the past, you see. Although I was able to survive it, I lost both of my arms. I sometimes still get nightmares from that time.”

Colbert looked at both of his arms with a distorted expression, Akira sounded sorry as he asked him.

“Those arms… are they prosthetics?”

“My left arm is prosthetic, but for my right arm, I took a regeneration treatment to regrow it. To be honest, I want to regrow both my arms, but I don’t have enough money. And with the maintenance that I should pay for the prosthetic, I just can’t gather enough money… So… that monster looked just like the monsters that ate my arms, you see.”

Akira had an experience when he stuck his arm into a monster’s mouth and shot his rifle from inside the monster. If he was late even by a few seconds, his arms would have been eaten by that monster. Bad things could happen to anyone, Akira felt a bit scared when he imagined it. He sympathized with Colbert who went through that first hand.

Colbert took a deep breath and bowed.

Even after Dale calmed down and Colbert honestly apologized for what he did, Dale still could not lower his fist.

Akira was in a good mood after getting praised by Alpha, he was also feeling sorry for Colbert. So he thought that he had to come up with something to change the subject.

“Well, with that many monsters that we defeated, there should no longer be any of them left around. Not to mention that we got to kill monsters that might attack us on our way back in an advantageous situation. It’s not really that bad. The rain has stopped too, so let’s get ourselves ready to head back.”

Dale at least tried to confirm something with Akira.

“Guyver and that boy from your envoy haven’t returned yet though.”

“Call them and tell them to get back as soon as possible. I’m sorry but I prioritize Sheryl’s safety, there’s a good chance that all of those corpses outside might attract other monsters after all. So I have no plans to wait for them in case we can’t contact them nor to go out and look for them. If you want to stay here to wait for them, you can go ahead and do that. After I escort Sheryl and the other children to the city, I can return here again.”

Dale pulled out his information terminal and called Guyver. Although he still could not connect to the city’s network, with the rain in that area stopped, he should be able to at least reach Guyver’s information terminal if they were still inside the mansion.

In case if he could not reach Guyver, Dale was thinking of just leaving him behind. Even Dale himself had no plans to stay behind in the dangerous wasteland to look for someone that might already be dead. Not to mention if a monster ate him, then he would not leave a corpse behind. Dale did not have the leeway to just look around the Higaraka Residence ruin for a corpse that might not even be there.

But his worry quickly vanished, it was because Guyver had returned to that room.

The anger inside Dale from that needless fight was still lingering. So he vented his anger at Guyver.

“Guyver!! Where were you when we needed extra hands?!!!”

Guyver just laughed lightly.

“Calm down, it seems that you guys got attacked too, huh?”

“So you too?”

“Yep, we got attacked too. We somehow survived though. Then I noticed that the rain had stopped when we were done, so we quickly returned back to this room. I bet you guys are planning to go back to the city as soon as possible now that the rain has stopped, right? By any chance, were you planning to leave me behind?”

Guyver jokingly asked that question, to which Dale annoyedly replied.

“…Humph, yeah, if you were not back.”

“Whoa whoah, that’s just too mean, you know.”

Guyver laughed when he said that, although he was about to get left behind, he did not show any displeasure at all.

After that, they finished all their preparations and left the Higaraka Residence ruin to return back to the Kugamayama city.

Around the area where the first monster that Akira spotted loitered, there were multiple small cylindrical objects scattered. Those were the decoy devices that Dale lost.

The monsters that Akira and the others took out were gathered there because of those decoy devices.

Guyver was sitting on the driving seat with Akira next to him, while Colbert and Dale were sitting on the backseat. As not to get in the way in case of a fight, Sheryl was sent to the cart together with the rest of her gang.

Guyver offered to drive saying that it was to make up for not being present when the mansion was attacked by the swarm of monsters. To be honest, Akira did not mind at all, but since Colbert and Dale were pressuring Guyver to do that, he ended up driving the vehicle.

The vehicle was swaying left and right as it traversed the wasteland. There were wreckages scattered around the route that they were taking; with some of them not entirely buried under the ground, the vehicle shook as it bumped with those wreckages.

The one who picked that route was the driver, Guyver. So Akira asked him.

“Say, why are we taking this route?”

“It’s still better than getting stuck on a muddy road, right? This route should not have any muddy roads, but it’s a little bit bumpy though.”

Although Guyver’s explanation was reasonable, Akira was not fully convinced by that.

Akira then asked Alpha.

“Say, Alpha, about that monster from before though…”

“Well, we do have time for that now, so let’s talk about it.”

“Don’t you think that it’s weird? I know that I have bad luck, but that swarm didn’t feel like a pure coincidence.”

“Let’s assume that it was not a coincidence and someone intentionally gathered those monsters there. There are only 2 possible ways of doing that, either that person runs around the wasteland to attract those monsters or by using a decoy device.”

“Decoy device?”

Akira then turned to Dale and the others and asked them.

“Say, did you guys bring decoy devices with you?”

Dale, who did bring some before, answered that question.

“I did, but I don’t have it right now. Why do you ask…? Ahhh, about that swarm of monsters, huh?”

“So you did have them?”

“I left them in our vehicle. So I lost them when our vehicle went back to the city on autopilot. Well, even if I did have some back then, it was not a situation where you would use the decoy device, right?”

Dale laughed after he said that.

Akira just kept his face looking out to the wasteland without saying anything. It was because he knew the answer to that question, he might be the unlucky person that Dale was talking about.

Seeing how Akira was keeping silent, Alpha smiled teasingly at him. When Akira noticed it, he annoyedly jabbed at her.

“…What?”

“Don’t be angry. Even if that’s true, you did survive, right? And that’s all that matters. So in short, it was not that big of a trouble for the current you. You really got stronger, don’t you think so too?”

“Yeah yeah, I’ll leave it like that.”

Akira was just sitting there looking out to the wasteland without saying anything, Guyver who was beside him was also driving without saying anything. Although Dale found that sudden silence a bit weird, he just decided to ignore it.

Just like when he was leaving for the wasteland, Akira fixed his CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun back on his vehicle. At the moment, he only had his AAH assault rifle and A2D assault rifle with him.

Guyver glanced at Akira’s equipment.

“Won’t you at least let the children on the back borrow some of those rifles?”

“Why should I?”

“If you think so, you can just lend them yours.”

“I’m doing that already, you know? I’ve lent one of my guns to that Sebla guy. You have those big weapons on the back, so it’s okay to just lend them those assault rifles, right?”

Akira peeked back at Sebla who was in the back cart. It was true that he was holding a gun and some grenades. But even so, Akira did not feel any reassurance from seeing that.

Akira then replied to Guyver.

“No.”

“Why?”

“They’re my weapons. Even if we get attacked by monsters again, it’s much more useful when they’re with me.”

“…I see. Well, I won’t force you.”

Akira did not get to encounter any monsters even after they got out from the Higaraka residence ruin. He prayed that nothing would happen until they reached the city. But it was quickly proven that his prayer would not come true.

“Akira, it’s a monster.”

“…I guess it won’t go that easy, huh?”

Akira turned to the direction where Alpha was pointing, he quickly spotted a monster running toward the vehicle. It was obvious from their distance that the monster was a carnivorous monster.

“Blame the rain, there’s still some effect left from the rain, so it’s like we’re still in a colourless mist. That’s why I was late detecting that monster.”

As Akira’s gaze was fixed in one direction in the wide wasteland, Dale and the other Hunters found it weird and followed his gaze, thus they quickly spotted that monster too.

Guyver stopped the vehicle, Akira immediately criticized him.

“Oi, why are we stopping?”

“You won’t be able to get a good aim while the vehicle is rocking, right? We can get off the vehicle and take a good aim on that monster now.”

After he said that, Guyver hopped off the vehicle. Dale and Colbert looked at each other before hopping off the vehicle too.

Akira decided to stay in the vehicle just to be safe. Guyver kept his eyes on Akira who did not hop off from the vehicle.

He then shifted his gaze from Akira to the back cart. When he did that, Sebla hopped off from the cart and joined Dale and the other Hunters.

“Whoah there, are you planning to make him fight too?”

Guyver laughed lightly and said.

“Isn’t that exactly why I’m lending my gun to him? If you’re worried, you can just hop off from there and help us too.”

Akira thought for a bit.

“Alpha, are there any other monsters?”

“None. I’ll let you know when I find any.”

Akira then hopped off from the vehicle. It was not for keeping Sebla’s safe, but it was to make sure that Sebla would not cause extra trouble. It was also to help take out that monster and get back to the vehicle as soon as possible.

There were 4 Hunters against one monster. So Akira thought that there was no need to take out his CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun. Thus, he just left them on the vehicle.

Colbert readied his rifle and took an aim at that monster. Sebla just stood there in silence. Dale ignored Sebla, he just kept his eyes on the surroundings while making sure that he was not blocking Colbert’s aim.

Akira kept his eyes on that monster, he was ready to jump in to help if Colbert was having some trouble taking out that monster.

Everyone there thought that they just needed to quickly take out their target and return back to the vehicle. But there was a minor difference in what they were calling as their targets.

Guyver was being careful of Akira and the other Hunters, he was observing them as if he was looking for an opportunity.

He suddenly jumped away from that place. The other Hunters thought that Guyver jumped out because of that monster’s attack, thus they immediately focused their attention on that monster. But the very next moment, a blinding light and deafening ring drowned Akira and the other Hunters as they were thrown on the ground.

For some reason, Akira was able to keep himself conscious. But because of that light and that loud ringing, he was severely dazed thus preventing him from making any swift reaction. He thought that there was a monster nearby, so he felt the urge to get back on his feet as soon as possible and confirm his situation. Although he knew that well, he just could not do that.

“…W-what was that? Alpha?”

“Akira! Get up!! Quickly!!”

Alpha shouted at him. Akira understood that it meant he was in a deadly situation. In that case, he had to get on his feet as fast as he could. He did not care about the reason, for now, he just had to get on his feet. Akira understood very well that following Alpha’s instructions as fast as he could was the best possible choice to fix his situation.

So, Akira, who was lying face down on the ground, slowly pulled himself back up. He was trying to get on his feet while still severely dazed. But in that situation, when he was still so dizzy, it would be almost impossible to make any quick manoeuvres. He was still swaying left and right as he pushed his body against the ground, got on his knee, and looked up.

The moment he did that, he saw Guyver in front of him with the muzzle of his rifle pointing at him.

Guyver’s finger moved ever so slowly as he was pulling the trigger. He was staring at Akira full of killing intent, Akira was able to see even the slightest change in Guyver’s expression. Akira could clearly feel his time perception stretched out as the passage of time from his point of view considerably slowed down.

“Move away from there!!”

Akira did not wait for Alpha’s instruction as he quickly leapt away from that spot.

Guyver pulled the trigger, his rifle spewed out countless bullets that just sliced through the air right where Akira was just a moment ago and hit the wreckage on their trajectories. The bullets made rattling sounds as they hit those wreckages.

Akira instinctively scanned the area for his rifle as he leapt from that spot, he was in perfect sync with the movements of his augmented suit that was controlled by Alpha. Thanks to that, Akira was able to quickly reach out and grab his rifle. He then got on his feet, aimed at Guyver, and pulled the trigger. But because he was still severely dazed, he was not able to hit Guyver at all.

But even so, Guyver was taken aback by that swift move. He quickly jumped to the nearest wreckage and hid behind it.

Akira's face turned grim. His consciousness was still not fully recovered yet. In the middle of that hazy situation, Akira asked for Alpha's help.

"…Alpha, I'm sorry but I can't get a good aim, can you help me with that?"

"I'm already doing it. I'm already increasing your accuracy as high as possible in your current situation."

"And my shot missed even after that, huh. Did that attack damage my augmented suit?"

"That's not the problem. Although I'm controlling your augmented suit right now, I'm controlling it through your body. So if you lose your consciousness or have a hazy mind, my support will also get diminished. That's why you missed your shots."

"…I understand. I just need to recover… The medicine, where did I put my medicine? Did I leave it on the vehicle? Or is it inside my rucksack? Where did I drop it? Hm? Where is it?"

Akira's still dazed mind started to veer off into something unnecessary, thus Alpha quickly straightened that up.

"Akira, calm down, I'll give you my instruction. You need to reposition yourself first."

"…Alright."

Akira followed Alpha's instruction as he repositioned himself.

Guyver was still hiding behind the wreckage as he started cursing Akira.

“Dammit!! Not only did he evade my shot in that situation, he even started shooting back at me too, huh!! I thought he was just a normal boy with dangerous weapons?!! This is not what I expected at all!! That damn brat!! Giving me wrong information like that!!”

After he listened to Sebla’s information and decided to take the relics in the cart for himself, Guyver was determined to kill Akira and the other Hunters.

Guyver was the one who shot at Dale’s rental vehicle and activated its auto-drive function. There was a good possibility that Akira would move separately once the rain stopped, thus Guyver took out the only means for Dale’s team to get back to the city in order to come up with an excuse so that they could go back together to the city with Akira. And in case if Akira refused to give them a ride back home, Guyver was planning to get Dale’s and Colbert’s help to start a fight against Akira.

The reason why Akira had to fight the monster swarm not too long ago was also because of the decoy devices that Guyver set near the area. Guyver took the decoy devices from Dale’s vehicle and put them around the mansion after setting it to activate after a few minutes. He intentionally left the decoy devices in the area where those monsters would be able to easily spot Akira and the other Hunters and then he evacuated himself to a safe place.

If Akira and the other Hunters were killed by the monster, then he just needed to recover the relics from the vehicle later. Even if no one got killed, there was a good chance that the monsters would wound some of them, or at least exhaust their ammo reserve. Whatever it was, it would give Guyver some extra advantage when he fought them. Although none of them were wounded, it was at least enough to provoke Dale and Colbert.

Guyver also included Sebla in his plan, Sebla was given a different role and had made him promise to help out. Then in order to win Sebla’s trust, Guyver lent some of his equipment to him. Guyver had mixed a remote detonation stun grenade among all of those equipment that he lent to Sebla. Of course, he did not tell Sebla about that.

The reason why Guyver offered to drive the vehicle himself was so that he could select a situation where he would have the upper hand when he fought Akira and the other Hunters. The reason why he suggested Akira to lend his rifles to the other children in the back cart was so that Akira would lose some of his weapons and to check if he still had some ammo left for his powerful CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun.

To be honest, Guyver wanted to activate the stun gun after making sure that he was staying away as far as possible from it. But there was a good chance that the leftover effect from the rain might interfere with its activation, thus he could not stay too far away from that stun grenade. Then fortunately enough, Akira and the other Hunters decided to stay close near Sebla to make sure that he would not cause any trouble and to give him support when needed. So Guyver did not even take a second guess before he activated the stun gun.

And this was the aftermath. He could not kill Akira and he was forced to hide behind a wreckage.

Guyver looked grim as he mumbled.

“Is this because I trusted the information from that boy? Nah, I guess it doesn’t really matter now. I just need to kill him and take the relics for myself, I still can fix this!!”

Guyver had to take out Akira and the other two Hunters while they were still dazed from the effect of the stun grenade. Once they recovered, it would be 1 against 3 and he would not have any chance to win.

He made his decision and leapt out from behind the wreckage.

Akira was still hiding behind another wreckage while waiting to recover. But he had no other choice but to cut that short as Guyver was not the only threat present. They hopped off from the vehicle to take out a monster that was running in their direction.

The monster had already gotten close to where Akira was, and he could not afford to let that monster too close to the cart attached behind his vehicle.

He peeked out from behind the wreckage with his rifle ready on his hand. But his vision was still blurry and he still could not stand up straight. Since he was sure that he would not hit his shots on target, Akira changed his aim from killing that monster to just provoking its attention.

Akira scattered bullets around that monster. Although none of them hit that monster, it was enough to attract its attention. That monster quickly moved behind a wreckage to take shelter from Akira's shots.

Akira clicked his tongue, it was because even though he shot that many bullets, none of them hit that monster. He had hoped that at least some of them would get hit even if it was by pure chance. With his luck, he might miss some of his shots even if he took a careful aim, but it was strange that he would not get a hit even if he scattered a lot of bullets at his target.

Moreover, although that monster was not strong enough to charge at Akira while eating those bullets, it was also not that weak to just run away after such provocation. Akira had hoped that it was actually just a weak monster with a scary appearance, but that was not the case either.

If it was a strong monster, Guyver would not have done what he just did. After all, if it was really a strong monster, even if Guyver was able to kill Akira and the other Hunters, he then would have to face that monster alone. So in that case, Guyver would have waited until 4 of them killed that monster before activating the stun grenade. But unfortunately for Akira and the other two, that monster was not weak enough to just run away after that barrage and it was not strong enough to make Guyver wait until they killed it.

"Jump to your right!!"

Alpha shouted at Akira and moved his augmented suit at the same time. Akira did not resist that movement as he followed Alpha's instruction and jumped to his right. The moment he did that, a bullet passed through beside him.

Guyver did not stop shooting as he aimed his rifle at Akira. Although Akira was still a bit dazed, he was able to quickly roll over and evade those shots thanks to his augmented suit.

Guyver looked completely desperate. He never thought that Akira would be able to evade it. According to his experience, he should have been able to fatally wound Akira with that shot.

Guyver's face twisted with terror, but he quickly overwrote it with irritation and anger.

"He even evaded that?! I'm shooting from his flank, you know?! Did he foresee that I'll do that? That's just impossible!! Even if he somehow noticed my position from his information-gathering device or something and predicted my shooting trajectory, there was no way he could measure my timing too!! That must be just a pure coincidence!!"

Akira started shooting back while peeking out from behind wreckage. Although he was aiming at where Guyver was, the bullets just flew randomly around the target without hitting their real target, as such, they were only enough to prevent Guyver from returning shots.

Guyver noticed Akira's inaccurate shooting and said to himself.

"Look at his shots, he doesn't know my position for sure and he's not in a condition where he can aim properly!! His previous evasion must have been just a pure coincidence, that boy is still dazed from the stun grenade!!"

Guyver was mostly saying that to reassure himself. But his brave front was quickly cracked.

[But he got up sooner than Dale and Colbert. It must be just a pure chance too. It's also by pure luck that he evaded my shot right after he got up.]

Guyver wanted to think that it was all just a pure coincidence. Although he did not know the reason behind Akira's actions, he didn't even try to think about it. It was basically the limit of his ability as a Hunter.

Akira got back to hiding behind wreckage and tried to recover. Although he was slowly recovering, it would still take a few minutes before he could get back to fighting normally.

“Akira, over there.”

Alpha pointed her finger at something. Akira immediately turned to the direction that she was pointing and saw Dale and Colbert slowly getting back on their feet. Seeing that, Akira immediately shouted at them.

“Guyver is trying to kill us!! And the monster is also somewhere nearby!! If you guys are not my enemies, then go and kill the monster!! I’ll deal with Guyver!!”

But both looked confused. Akira did not know whether it was because they could not hear him since they were still recovering, or because they could not process what was going on, or because they were just feigning ignorance.

Dale and Colbert noticed Akira. He was pointing his finger at the monster that was closeby. Colbert who saw that quickly pointed his rifle at that direction and carefully checked the area for that monster, Dale quickly followed suit.

“It seems that they’ll take care of that monster.”

Akira let out a long breath.

“…Alright then. It seems that I don’t need to fight those guys. This is getting better, so then, where’s the other guy?”

“He’s over there.”

Alpha pointed in another direction and Akira’s gaze quickly turned there. Thanks to his enhanced view due to Alpha’s support, Akira was able to see Guyver’s body outlined in red behind a wreckage.

“…This reminds me of how nice this function is. How exactly are you doing this?”

“It’s by using my advanced calculation ability to analyze all the information I gather around you. Right now, I focus on analyzing the data especially around that guy.”

“Is it from the information gathered through my information-gathering device?”

“That’s one of them. Of course, I’m also using the information from your information-gathering device too. Other than that, I’m mostly using the information from your 5 senses. It’s not an exaggeration to say that the human body is an amalgamation of information-gathering devices.”

“I don’t feel like I’m gathering that level of information though.”

“Gathering information and understanding the information that you get is not the same. It’s crucial to ignore the information that you don’t need. If you try to analyze all the information that you receive from all of your 5 senses, it would quickly fry your brain.”

“And you’re saying that you can do that, huh?”

“Yep, that’s the gist of it. But for some reason, there are sometimes people who could unconsciously pick out important information from other unimportant information and analyze them. These people usually have sharp intuition. I guess it’s because they have a lot of chances where they can unintentionally hone that ability.”

“Intuition, huh? I guess it’s the same as that bad feeling that I sometimes get from time to time, huh. I had a lot of opportunities to hone my intuition after all.”

Akira remembered his past and realized it.

“Well, as for your good premonition that usually misses, I’ll make it up for you so you don’t need it anymore. So just hang around with me, okay?”

“For example?”

“Let’s see. First of all, I’m giving you my support even right now. This is the best example and it does help you a lot, don’t you think so? Because of that, you’re able to explore dangerous ruins, find expensive relics, and learn important information as well as fighting skills.”

“Well, you’re right about that. Thanks.”

“Other than that, you’re able to monopolize this beautiful body created through an advanced calculation, right? Isn’t that just wonderful? Right?”

Alpha took a pose as if she was showing her body to Akira. Akira glanced at her, his face was saying that he had no comments at all.

“Uhh, uhh, w-well, yeah.”

Akira stuttered as if he was evading that question. His answer was directed both to Alpha and to himself.

“Wait there, that was a rather vague reaction. Is there anything that you don’t like about my body?”

“Not really, it’s just your imagination.”

Akira was obviously playing dumb there. Those words were both for teasing Alpha as well as to dodge from having to seriously answer that question.

Alpha smiled at Akira, it seemed that she had returned to her usual self.

“Now then, since it seems that you’ve recovered enough to do some silly talk like this. How about we go and start our counter-attack?”

“Yeah, I’m more or less already recovered. Let’s go.”

Akira had recovered from the effect of the stun grenade. So, in short, Alpha’s support through his augmented suit had returned to 100 percent. He basically had recovered back to his usual condition. Akira’s expression turned sharp, his mind changed from defending himself to aggressively attacking his opponent.

He jumped out from behind the wreckage where he was hiding and made a beeline for Guyver. If Guyver came out and aimed at him, it would have been very dangerous. But thanks to Alpha's support, Akira could clearly see where Guyver was hiding.

Although he had the choice of waiting for Guyver to peek out from behind the wreckage and snipe him the moment he did that, Akira thought that the other two might have some problem dealing with the monster behind him. Not to mention, the monster might attack Sheryl and her gang too. As such, Akira decided to quickly take out Guyver and go back to protect Sheryl and her gang.

Guyver was hiding behind a half-destroyed wall. In order to shoot him, Akira had to take a big detour and shoot him from the side or from above. Akira thought so as he asked Alpha while still running.

"Let's take a much safer route, run straight at him."

"Straight at him? Do you mean shooting through the wall? This rifle is not enough to do that, you know?"

Akira was carrying an AAH assault rifle with him. Both the magazine and the bullet were not of piercing type. As long as he did not have the CWH anti-material rifle that he had left in the vehicle, it would be impossible to shoot Guyver through that wall.

"It's no problem."

Alpha just said that and smiled.

Guyver was able to notice Akira, who was approaching him, both from Akira's footsteps and the signal detected from his cheap information-gathering device. His face distorted with fear as he readied his gun and looked left and right. His brave front had already completely crumbled down since his position was swapped from the hunter to the hunted.

“Where is he coming from? Which direction?!”

Since he was hiding behind a half-destroyed wall, he could not climb it and shoot at Akira because he felt like he would be showered in bullets and drop dead the moment he did that.

He could feel that Akira was already right on the other side of that wall. With his augmented suit, it was not impossible for Akira to jump over.

Guyver thought that Akira would do that, thus he readied his gun and shifted his focus to above him, waiting for Akira to show himself.

Guyver’s attention was completely focused on watching above him. He was ready to shoot anything that flew over him.

But the next moment, the wall in front of him suddenly crumbled down.

After Akira arrived next to that wall, he mustered all the power of his augmented suit to deliver a destructive kick on that wall. With the help of Alpha’s support, the leg part of Akira’s augmented suit turned hard the moment his kick touched that wall thus increasing the destructive power of his kick. That powerful kick was enough to destroy the wall that was already withered because of the harsh environment in the wasteland.

The wall crumbled down on top of Guyver, thus making him lose balance. He pulled the trigger on his rifle by accident and fell on his back. The bullet that flew from the muzzle cut through the air and flew away aimlessly.

That sudden turn of events completely caught Guyver off guard. But his confusion immediately cleared up the moment he saw Akira pointing his rifle at him from the other side of the crumbled wall. He would be dead now, for him, there was nothing more urgent than that.

Akira did not hesitate at all as he pulled the trigger and released a barrage of bullets at Guyver.

[…This boy is super strong… That damn brat… Telling me… False info…]

In the last few seconds of his life, as he was on the death door, he cursed Sebla.

Akira looked at Guyver's dead corpse, which was drenched in blood, with cold eyes.

"Is he dead?"

"He's not a cyborg, so I guess he's dead for good."

"Nice, let's head back then."

After receiving confirmation from Alpha, Akira quickly lost interest in Guyver and headed back to his vehicle.

Sheryl was overwhelmed trying to calm the children down.

Loud explosions and blinding light that suddenly came out of nowhere, Dale and Colbert lying on the ground, Akira and Guyver shooting each other and moreover, a monster coming running at them; there were numerous reasons for those children to panic.

But Sheryl did not flinch, and she bravely forced everyone to shut up. However, there was a limit to how long she could continue to keep them quiet. After all, the sound of gunshots showed no signs of stopping any soon, which proved that the battle was still going on. The children were under great pressure and were close to breaking down.

Sheryl scanned the situation and looked for Akira. Not too long after that, she saw Akira running toward her direction. He did not seem injured at all.

She let out a relieved sigh.

“Akira is on his way back. I’ll go and ask him about the situation, so wait here.”

After Sheryl said that to her gang member, she went to meet Akira. The other children also calmed down when they saw Akira unscathed.

Sheryl jumped off the cart and went to Akira. While that happened, Sebla slowly pushed himself up, he was still all wobbly.

Sheryl also noticed Sebla when she was looking for Akira, but she just ignored him. It was because she did not care whether Sebla was dead or alive.

Akira was relieved when he saw that Sheryl and her gang were still okay. Now he just needed to wait for Dale and Colbert to kill the monster.

Akira did think of helping Dale and Colbert, but he prioritized going and making sure Sheryl and her gang's safety first. If only he had not stepped off his vehicle, he would not have to face all the troubles that he just went through. Thus, he thought that it was sensible to be cautious at least now.

He saw Sheryl walking towards him. He also noticed Sebla pulling himself up from the ground not too far from her. It seemed that Sebla was yet to recover from the effects of the stun grenade, so Akira did not put much attention on him. But that proved to be a wrong decision.

The moment Sheryl passed beside him, Sebla suddenly reached for her arm and pulled her towards him. He then strangled her and pushed the pistol in his hand on her.

"Stop, don't move!!!"

Sebla yelled desperately at Akira.

Sebla had mostly recovered from the effect of the stun grenade. But his movements were dulled because of the fear, confusion and panic.

He had made a deal with Guyver to betray Sheryl and her gang. He and Guyver planned to kill Akira and the other people and share the relics among them. Sebla knew that it was Guyver who shot at Dale's vehicle, he also left all those devices around to attract the monsters, and he had always been looking for a chance to kill Akira and the other 2 Hunters.

Sebla did lose his consciousness when he was hit by the stun grenade, but he woke up relatively faster. However, he kept himself close to the ground while the confusion prevailed and utilised the chance to slowly checked the situation around him.

But he could not understand much of what was going on. He did hear gunshots, so he guessed that someone was fighting. He did not find Akira's corpse around so there was a chance that Akira was still alive. Thus, he guessed that Akira was fighting against Guyver. That was all that he could make out of the situation.

He then saw Akira return back alone. The moment Sebla saw that, his face twitched. There was a good chance that Guyver was dead at that point, but Guyver being alive or not was unimportant for him right now. He was more interested in knowing whether Guyver told Akira that he was planning to betray Sheryl and her gang as well as to kill Akira and the other 2 Hunters.

The reason why Akira glanced at Sebla was simply to check him. But to Sebla who was in a panic, it seemed as if Akira found out from Guyver that he was also planning to betray him and so he was coming to kill him now.

Sebla was blinded by the terror of losing his life. Right at that time, his eyes caught Sheryl. He could not come up with anything else as he aggressively grabbed Sheryl's arm.

He did not even think about the consequence of his action.

As he tried to blackmail Akira by holding Sheryl hostage, Sebla's face was twisted with fear, and the hand which held the gun was also shaking. It was a very dangerous situation.

Sheryl shouted at Sebla with full hostility.

"Do you really know what will happen to you if you do this?"

“Shut up!! Just shut your mouth!”

Sebla shouted back at her as he prodded his gun.

Akira then tried to calm Sheryl.

“Sheryl, Don’t provoke that guy, it’s dangerous. Just calm down, and try to keep your mouth shut. Don’t try to complicate things. Alright?”

Sheryl was thinking of looking for a chance to break from Sebla’s strangle, but after Akira told her that, she just obediently stayed quiet.

Sebla felt that strange change in behaviour from Sheryl. His face that was twitching in terror changed into a slight smile.

“T-that’s right!! Just shut up and don’t do anything stupid!!”

Thinking that he was getting the upper hand, his tension eased off a little. Hence, he was now able to reconfirm his situation. But once he realised that he was hopeless against Akira, who still had his rifles, his tension raised up again.

Sebla’s gaze quickly focused on the rifle that Akira was carrying. He then glared at Akira and shouted.

“Drop your gun!! Now!!”

Akira locked his gaze with Sebla, thinking about what could be done. But when Akira focused his gaze on him, Sebla flinched back and tensed up.

Right before Sebla’s nervousness manifested into action, Akira dropped his rifle to the ground.

Alpha never imagined that Akira would drop his rifle, that was why she looked at Akira with a surprised expression.

“Akira?!”

Akira did not answer her question, he focused all of his attention on Sebla.

Sheryl was also surprised when she saw Akira drop his rifle since she also thought there was no way Akira would do that. After all, she thought that he did not care too much for her.

She was so happy that she was even close to crying, she did not expect Akira would even do something so dangerous as to drop his rifle in front of his enemy just to save her. While at the same time, she was also feeling so much guilt as she forced Akira to do something that dangerous.

Sheryl was so filled with emotions as her eyes started tearing.

Sebla smiled mockingly after Akira dropped his rifle. It showed that Akira was listening to his order. That caused him to calm down and feel that he had the upper hand. The figure of Akira standing there just looking at him seemed to Sebla as if Akira had given up and had no idea how to get out of that situation.

Sebla had the choice of keeping Sheryl as his hostage and escaping from that place. But his fear and hatred toward Akira pushed him to take a more aggressive approach.

Right now, Akira had no rifle with him, so he might be able to kill Akira now. As that thought passed through Sebla’s mind, he couldn’t let it go. His thoughts manifested as he pointed his gun at Akira, grinned, and pulled the trigger.

But Akira was able to easily evade the bullet launched from Sebla’s gun.

Akira had placed all of his focus on Sebla, he was aware of the ever so slightest move that Sebla made when he tried to shoot. Sebla was moving in slow motion from his point of view. As such, Akira was able to correctly judge when and where Sebla would shoot from where he was aiming the muzzle, the slow-motion when he pulled the trigger, and the slight change in his expression.

Akira had stretched his time perception and was able to easily evade Sebla’s shots.

While Sebla’s gun was away from Sheryl, Akira quickly closed the distance between him and Sebla. He then grabbed Sheryl with his right hand and pulled her away from Sebla, while his left hand got hold of Sebla’s gun and sent Sebla flying with his right kick.

Sebla did not even have the chance to express his surprise when he saw Akira evade his shots. His focus was immediately shifted to the pain on his stomach as he was thrown into the air.

When Sheryl returned to her senses, she found Akira grabbing her right arm. Sheryl, who realized that Akira saved her, hugged him tightly.

Sebla was still confused by that sudden change of events and the pain in his stomach only made his confusion worse. He placed his hands on his stomach as he rolled around in pain.

Akira looked at the gun in his left hand that he took away from Sebla. He then threw it away as if he had no interest in it. It was the gun that Guyver lent to Sebla, so there was no telling what kind of trap was installed in it. Akira walked back to his rifle and equipped it while Sheryl was still clinging on him.

He then pointed his rifle at Sebla. Akira’s eyes met Sebla’s who lied on the ground pale-faced. Sebla’s expression greatly distorted as the pain in his stomach was slowly replaced with fear of death. Akira’s expression did not change much when he saw that. He was about to pull the trigger but he suddenly stopped.

Akira turned to Sheryl who was still clinging at him.

“He’s one of your gang members though, what do you want to do with him?”

“Just kill him.”

Sheryl answered Akira’s question without any hesitation at all. For her, there was no benefit in letting Sebla live. He took her hostage and tried to shoot Akira, although she might forgive him for the former, the latter was simply unforgivable as long as Akira did not tell her to let him go.

Akira looked at Sebla again. Sebla stared back at Akira with anger and hostility, it showed that he was already a lost cause.

All kinds of things ran through Sebla's mind. The difference between him and Akira although they were living in the same environment until not too long ago and how they were so different right now. Sebla vented out his frustration which sounded as if he was whining.

"Dammit… You just got lucky…!! What's so different between us!?"

Akira, who was about to pull the trigger, stopped when he heard that. There was a moment of silence between them. He then answered Sebla's question.

"Didn't you just say it yourself? That's true, it's our luck. You are just not lucky."

After he said that, Akira pulled the trigger. The bullet pierced through Sebla's torso, it took a few seconds before Sebla stopped breathing.

Akira looked pitifully at Sebla's corpse. If he had not met Alpha, he would have been dead like that too. But Akira quickly scrapped that thought. Even if someone would have shot and killed him, it would have been because of a different reason.

Not too long after that, Dale and Colbert also returned after they took care of the monster. Akira pushed Sheryl, who was still clinging on him, away and she obediently concurred.

Akira was still on his guard, it was obvious that Sheryl was crying up until just now, Sebla was lying dead not too far from them, and Guyver was nowhere around. All of these cues made Dale and Colbert frown.

Both lowered their guns and walked to Akira. Dale took another look around and said to Akira.

"I want to know what just happened first, is it okay?"

“Sure.”

Akira, Sheryl, Dale, and Colbert exchanged information to confirm what was going on. After Dale understood the gist of the matter, he mumbled.

“That bastard! Doing something like this!! But still, although it’s weird to say this myself, that guy is pretty crazy to pick a fight against all three of us. Did he not think what would happen if his ambush failed? Was he so confident that his ambush would work perfectly?”

Dale looked surprised and angry as he said that. He had explored an old-world ruin together with Guyver. Thus, he more or less knew of Guyver’s skill. And according to his judgement, Guyver was average at best.

Colbert interjected and answered Dale’s question.

“…That might be because of his debt.”

“Debt? That guy has debt, huh?”

“Yeah, I heard that it’s a pretty big debt. I also heard that he was originally planning to pay his debt with the relics that we would gather today.”

Dale looked a bit pained as he said.

“Don’t tell me that he had no way of paying that debt as the deadline was coming close so he got desperate. I guess he planned to take our relics and Sheryl’s relics to amass a lot of money either for paying his debt or for running away from his debt, huh. Now that I remember, he also rushed forward without checking for enemies in the ruin. I guess he really was that desperate…”

Dale tried to make sense of everything that happened that day with the new information he just received. But in the end, they were all just his guesses, and with Guyver dead, there was no way to confirm them.

Akira then interjected.

“We can do that later, let’s get to the vehicle and head back to the city.”

As they were about to head back to the vehicle, Colbert suddenly stopped them.

“Ah, wait for a sec. It’s kinda hard to say this but… There’s one thing that I want to do.”

“What?”

“If it’s possible, I want to take Guyver’s body back. Ah, I also brought myself a body bag, so it won’t get your vehicle dirty… So, is it ok?”

Colbert understood that what he was asking was something unpleasant for Akira and the others. As a matter of fact, Dale and Sheryl looked obviously annoyed.

Dale looked at Colbert and said with displeasure.

“Just leave him alone. Some monsters will take care of him in no time. That’s a suitable ending for that guy, don’t you think?”

“Even though he’s like that, I worked with him for a long time. Not to mention, I have my trauma with monsters… So like, I feel bad leaving his corpse for the monsters…”

Akira thought that if it pained Colbert that much, then he could just dig a hole and bury the corpse. He found it weird since there was no need to bring it back to the city, thus he popped out a rude question for Colbert.

“What are you planning to do with his corpse after bringing it back to the city? Are you planning to look for his family and give the body to them?”

“No, I will hand it over to the Hunter Office. If he had left his contact address when he registered his name, the Hunter Office would at least try to contact his family, that is if he did submit his family information too. The Hunter Office will take care of the corpse after that. By the way, in order to reduce the number of Hunters who have gone missing, the Hunter Office also recommends bringing Hunter’s corpse to them, you know?”

That was one of the efforts to keep the Hunters under control and make them stay ethical. It would also help the City Management if they could tell which Hunters went missing and which Hunters were dead. Of course, they would assume the Hunters who went missing were already dead, but it was not like they could actually treat those Hunters as deceased. Those Hunters would need to stay missing for a while and there was a lot of administration stuff that needed to be approved before they were declared dead. But by bringing evidence that they were dead such as their corpses, the City Management and the Hunter Office could bypass the administration stuff and cut short the waiting time.

“Well, it’s only recommended and not compulsory. But the Hunter Office does suggest us to do that. If it’s about profit, by doing something right like that, the Hunter Office will have a better impression on us. Not to mention that law-abiding companies also include the personality of the Hunters when they’re looking to hire Hunters. By taking Guyver’s corpse back, we would not get treated like those Hunters who tried to attack the other Hunters on the same team, or at least it would lessen the chance for that. It’s basically about karma.”

After listening to Colbert’s explanation, Dale nodded. After all, it was something that concerned him too. Colbert then turned to Akira and Sheryl.

“I can understand your opinion. So like, well, it’s not like I’m doing this to make it up for you, but I’ll give mine and Guyver’s share of relics to you. They’ll fetch you quite a lot of money if you sell them.”

Sheryl interjected. It was because although it would be just ‘quite a lot of money’ for Colbert, it would be a huge amount of money for Sheryl and her gang.

“Yeah, I too messed up, after all. I caused everyone trouble when we were back in the mansion. Even after we said that we would help escort you in exchange for a ride back home, one of my companions attacked you, and now, I’m asking permission to go bring that person’s corpse with us. It would be nothing strange if you’re angry and decide to leave us here. So like, it would be great if you accept our share of relics so that it can at least reduce your anger.”

After he said that, Colbert glanced at Dale. Dale hesitated but he then gave up and said.

“…Alright, I know I’m also at fault here. I’ll also give my share.”

Sheryl asked them again to confirm.

“Are you really sure about this?”

“Yeah, I don’t want people to just leave my corpse for the monsters when I’m dead after all.”

Dale smiled bitterly when he said that.

Sheryl looked at Akira to ask for his opinion. So Akira said to her.

“I guess it’s fine. You should take their offer while you have the chance.”

If Akira does not mind, then Sheryl had no problem with it either. She lightly bowed and took their offer.

“I understand, if that’s the case, I’ll thankfully accept your offer.”

“Thanks and sorry. Alright then, let me get this done fast. Just wait here for a few minutes.”

Colbert then went to retrieve Guyver’s corpse alone.

After he finished retrieving Guyver’s corpse, they quickly continued their way back to Kugamayama city, leaving Sebla’s corpse together with the corpse of the monster that Dale and Colbert killed.

Although a lot of things happened, Akira was able to return back to the city safely. But of course, each of them had different opinions whether they could say that they really did return back safely.

Akira stopped his vehicle near the city, it was somewhere around the border between the wasteland and the slum city. Dale and Colbert said their goodbyes before they went their separate way. Colbert carried Guyver's dead body to the city while Dale went straight to the lower district.

Sheryl and her gang members went back to their base first without loading off the relics. She then told everyone who was left in the base to help carry all the relics in the cart to their base.

Akira was sitting on the driver seat while waiting for Sheryl's gang to finish unloading all the relics in the cart.

"Say, Akira."

"Hm?"

Akira turned to Alpha who was sitting beside him on the driver assistant's seat. Alpha was still in her swimsuit. Although she still looked weird in the middle of the wasteland, Akira who was starting to get used to that did not react any differently now, at least not until Alpha changed into another dress.

Alpha asked Akira something that sounded trivial, but to her, it was an important question.

"It's about when you saved Sheryl. Why did you drop your rifle?"

When Akira was in the underground city, he did not drop his rifle even when Reina was taken hostage. Alpha would accept Akira's excuse even if he simply said that Reina and Sheryl were 2 different cases. But for the sake of her goal, it was imperative to keep Akira alive.

If there was someone that Akira would sacrifice his own life for, Alpha would have to think of a way to handle that person.

Akira proudly answered.

“I had a feeling that I would be able to evade his shots without trouble. No, that’s not right, it was because I wanted to confirm it. Although I did that when I fought with Guyver too, the time with Sebla was the first time I was able to reproduce the feeling I had when I compress my time perception. I guess the reason why I couldn’t do that in my training with you was because deep down, I knew my life was not in danger. But now that I was able to do it, I feel like I should be able to do it better next time.”

“You didn’t think what would happen if you failed?”

“I bet you would move my body by controlling my augmented suit, right? You did that when Guyver shot me from behind, remember…? Uh, was it a situation where you couldn’t do that?”

Akira’s expression stiffened, if that was the case, then his life was really in danger there. Alpha looked at Akira who was frowning and said.

“There was no trouble about that. It’s as you said, at that time, I was about to move your augmented suit to evade that shot, but you suddenly moved on your own. Putting that aside, I think that’s the reason why you could evade Sebla’s shot. But that is not the reason why you dropped your rifle.”

Akira seemed uncomfortable as he said.

“I was able to kill him without any loss, right?”

But Akira suddenly seemed to realize something as he added.

“Well, it was because I was sure I would be able to kill him even if I dropped my rifle. That’s why I did that. I thought that I could pick the option where I had a better chance of safely saving Sheryl. The situation was different compared with Reina in the underground city. If I wasn’t sure that I would be able to do that, I wouldn’t have dropped my rifle.”

Akira had no plans to get himself killed, Alpha knew that very well. As her worry was resolved by his answer, she smiled at Akira and said.

“It’s all good if that was not a suicidal move. I think I don’t need to remind you about this, but it would be bad for me if you die. The reason why I’m helping you is because it’s an upfront payment for taking my request. So basically you have a debt to me. I have no plans of letting you go from that debt unless you finish my request, you know.”

“I know, I know. Although we had a lot of trouble this time, I think I’m growing stronger and stronger. I should have a better chance in finishing your request. I hope you’re satisfied with this for now.”

Alpha and Akira were talking to each other while throwing jokes from time to time.

As Akira was having a silly talk with Alpha, Sheryl’s gang was transporting the relics from the back cart to their base.

Since some of the relics were pretty big, Sheryl’s gang was gathering quite a lot of attention. But there was no worry of getting attacked since people who saw them knew that they were transporting relics from a Hunter’s cart.

Trying to rob them of those relics meant picking a fight against that Hunter. Because of that, Sheryl’s gang was able to safely transport the relics even when they went through a territory in the slum city that was owned by a different gang.

Akira remembered his fight against Guyver and said to Alpha.

“But still, I’m glad that was a stun grenade. If it was a hand grenade, it would have been really bad. Well, the stun grenade itself was pretty dangerous though.”

“Either it was because he didn’t have a hand grenade, or it was because he thought that he might be in the blast range too. We’re saved because of that though, and we were lucky that it was right after the rain stopped.”

“Does it have anything to do with the rain?”

“To be more precise, it has something to do with the colourless mist effect of the rain. The colourless mist effect reduced the intensity of the light and the sound, so the effect from stun grenade must have been considerably weakened. Although, that’s also the reason why it’s hard to detect a monster in the middle of a thick colourless mist. If I have to give you an example, the DVTS minigun didn’t make much sound when you used it, right? If there was no colourless mist, it would have made a very loud sound, you know.”

“I see, hm? But I used that minigun before the rain started, right? And it wasn’t that loud then?”

“Colourless mist is ever-present in the eastern district although the thickness level is different in each region.”

“Is that so? Ah, that’s the reason why the monsters can’t detect us, right?”

Akira was spending time by learning about what Hunters knew directly from Alpha.

Not too long after that, Sheryl informed Akira that they had finished transporting the relics. Akira was about to turn the vehicle on and head back home when he suddenly realized something.

“Now that I remember, Colbert said all of those excuses and we ended up carrying Guyver’s corpse back to the city while we just left Sebla’s corpse in the wasteland. But when we separated, Colbert was not heading to the direction where the Hunter Office was, I wonder why is that?”

“It’s not like you know him personally and neither is he a Hunter, so it’s normal to leave Sebla’s corpse behind like that. Moreover, when you said Hunter Office, you meant that big Hunter Office branch, right? There are other smaller Hunter Office branches in the city, you know.”

“Is that so? Well, I guess you’re right.”

Since it was not something that interested him, Akira accepted her explanation and stopped thinking about it.

After Colbert separated from Akira and Dale, he headed to the city alone. He then waited for someone to arrive.

In about 30 minutes after Colbert contacted someone, a vehicle stopped close to him. It was a small vehicle designed to be used inside the city.

A man stepped out from that vehicle. Colbert pointed at the body bag that was lying close to him. That man then opened the zipper on the body bag and confirmed that it was indeed Guyver's corpse. He smiled and turned to Colbert.

"It's Guyver. Thanks for the hard work."

"Now that I've done my job, tell them to transfer my reward."

"I know. Just wait for a sec here."

That man then operated his information terminal and contacted someone. Suddenly, Colbert begrudgingly said to that man.

"This is the last time I'm taking this kind of job, okay?"

"Please don't say that. Unlike this dead guy, we think that you're a good Hunter and we trust you. It's not easy for us to get a Hunter like you, you know. We'll give you a reward suitable for the job, okay?"

"It wasn't worth the risk this time. You're lucky that I'm not asking for an extra reward for this job."

"You are not satisfied with the reward? In that case, you should discuss it with the boss. We're just goons, so we can do nothing about it… Oh, it seems that the reward is already transferred, can you check it?"

That man saw a message in his information terminal and conveyed the contents to Colbert. Colbert took out his own information terminal, checked his bank account, and confirmed the payment.

The man then took the body bag and stuffed it in his vehicle's trunk.

"I know it's not easy working as a Hunter, but it's not easy to work as a collector either. We have to go collect the dead body of people in debt like this, you see."

That man was a debt collector sent by the company that lent its money to Guyver. Although Guyver did not know about it, Colbert was actually his observer. It was Colbert's job to watch over him and secure his body if he died. It was to make sure that he would not escape so that they could throw him to labour work in case he could not pay back his debt and to quickly collect his body as soon as possible when he got killed.

There were many private assets that could not be seized if the Hunter was still in 'missing' status, such as the Hunter Office bank account. The fastest way to seize those assets was by bringing the owner of the assets to transfer those assets, regardless of whether the owner was alive or not. In order to make sure that it was not the collector company that killed the person and brought the corpse to the Hunter Office to seize his or her assets, it was important to have someone else as a witness to testify that the person was actually killed in his line of work. The paper works could be done faster if the witness was someone trustworthy with a good track record.

With Guyver's corpse in their hands, it was easy to guess that the collection agency would seize all of Guyver's assets, including the money that he saved to escape from that very debt.

Colbert laughed uncomfortably and said.

"I know how hard it is to work as a collector. The guy who came to collect my debt ended up in the grave after all."

"Oof, scary. It seems that you're in a very bad mood today. Well, I'll listen to your story on our way, hop in."

That man and Colbert then hopped into the vehicle and they went to the city.

Sheryl was in her private room, talking with Akira through her information terminal.

“…I understand. See you tomorrow then, I’ll be waiting for you… Yes, good night.”

Akira then ended the call. Although she was smiling all the time when she was talking with Akira, her face immediately showed her tiredness the moment the call ended. She then let out a big sigh.

Her call with Akira was basically him telling her that he would not come to the base for today since it was already pretty dark outside. To be honest, Sheryl wanted to use that as an excuse to make him sleepover in the base again, but her wish was not granted.

A lot of things happened that day and she was extremely tired both physically and mentally. Since her bathing time was around the corner, she decided to take a good rest while in the bath.

After Sheryl grabbed her stuff to take bath and exited her room, she suddenly heard her gang members making noises. It seemed that Erio and the other children were excitedly sharing their stories from the wasteland. Since someone got killed, the story became even more intriguing for the other children. But then on top of that, the reason that guy ended up dead was because he took Sheryl hostage and tried to kill Akira, thus the other children could not help but feel excited as they listened to the story.

Erio noticed Sheryl. It was the perfect chance for him to escape from all the other children who were bombarding him with questions.

“Oh, it’s the boss’ bath time. Sorry but I have to go and guard the bath.”

“I’m sure you’re tired, you can take rest for the remainder of the day.”

Sheryl believed that everyone who went to the wasteland that day must be very tired right now, that’s why she said those kind words to Erio. But Erio shook his head and said.

“No no no, don’t worry, I’m good. It’s not really that tiring to just stand guard anyway.”

“Is that so? Well, it’s up to you.”

Sheryl found his reply a bit weird, but she did not pay much attention to it and continued heading to the bathroom.

Since she went out to the wasteland that day, Sheryl took more time washing her body. She carefully cleaned her body before she dipped herself in the bath.

As her tiredness was melting into the warm water, Sheryl relaxed and recollected all which happened that day.

Sheryl always organized everything that she needed to review every day, she would self-evaluate her actions and use them as references to how she should react in the future. But since she was more tired than usual, the only memory that was replaying in her mind was the memory that left the biggest impression on her. It was the moment when Akira saved her when she was taken hostage by Sebla.

Sheryl smiled as she kept replaying that memory inside her head. Every time she did that, the scene would change bit by bit making Akira's action look much more heroic and the scene became overly dramatized.

Soon, her smiling face turned into something different, maybe because the scene that was playing in her mind had already turned into a completely fictional scene.

She noticed that her body got increasingly relaxed as her head sunk deeper and deeper into the warm water. Engrossed in the soothing feeling, she eventually submerged her head in the water but she was able to pull herself up in a panic before any accident could happen.

"…That was dangerous."

She knew that if she continued staying in the bath, it might happen again. Thus she told herself to be more careful as she continued enjoying the bath.

The same thing repeated at least twice before she decided to finish her bath.

Erio and Alicia were standing guard in front of the changing room. It was essential to make sure that no one tried to peek at Sheryl and got themselves kicked out of the gang.

Alicia glanced at Erio. It was obvious from his face that he was awfully tired, thus Alicia worriedly said to him.

"Sheryl also told you that you can take rest, so why don't you go and do that? I'm sure you're very tired too, right?"

"Yeah, that's why I'm taking rest here. The other children would bombard me with questions if I take rest somewhere else. It's tiring to answer their questions. I've even told the same story for about 5 times already!"

Erio sounded really tired when he said that. When he went to the wasteland with the other children, he was carrying a weapon despite it being only a cheap gun. Because of that, the other children seemed to be comparing him with Akira, who did all the amazing hard work back then. They were asking Erio what he did in the wasteland.

“…It’s true that I was carrying a gun. But there’s no way I can do what a Hunter does on a daily basis out there, you know. Every time they asked me what I did and I said that I didn’t do anything in particular, they would look at me with a shocked face. There are even some children who began complaining and telling me what I should have done. But they would immediately shut up when I say that they should take the gun the next time we go out to the wasteland. Those damn bastards!”

Erio sounded really annoyed. Alicia’s expression changed as she heard his reply, it was a mix of worry and fear.

“…I don’t know, you should ask Sheryl about that.”

To be honest, Erio did not want to ever go to the wasteland again. But if Sheryl told him to go, he then would not have any other choice but to go. Leaving that part aside, Sheryl’s gang was actually a pretty comfortable gang. Thus he could not afford to make Sheryl angry at him and get kicked out of the gang.

Erio’s expression changed into something that showed more fear and worry than Alicia. So, Alicia tried to cheer him up.

“I’ll ask Sheryl not to assign you with the same members as this time if you get sent to the wasteland again.”

“I’ll be counting on you.”

“By the way, it’s not like you did anything that might anger Sheryl, right?”

Erio averted his gaze, Alicia noticed that and pressed Erio for an answer.

“Wait, what did you do?”

“No, nothing. She should have forgiven me after sending me out to the wasteland today. Maybe, I hope so.”

“Seriously now, what did you do?!”

Erio looked flustered as Alicia kept pressing him for an answer. There’s no way he could tell his lover, Alicia, that he saw Sheryl naked. He tried his best to avoid having to answer Alicia’s question.

At the same time, Akira was taking a bath in his own house. He planned to go straight to the bed and sleep after finishing his bath.

Although he did not realize it until he was in his own home, he was actually pretty tired that day. The moment he took off his augmented suit, he could feel all of his tiredness in one go. He was only able to avoid falling down to the ground after squeezing all of the power that he had left to keep himself up. Akira then quickly finished the minimum level of maintenance for his equipment and decided to take a bath first before going straight to the bed.

Akira took his time enjoying his bath as he let his body float on the comfortable warm water. He could feel tiredness melting away from his body as he made sure not to fall asleep by accident in the bath.

“Akira, there’s something I want to talk about.”

“…Yes?”

Akira looked absent-minded as he turned to Alpha. Alpha was also inside the bath together with him. Or to be more precise, she was projecting that kind of image into Akira’s view. Alpha used her fictional image to the best of its potency, she adjusted her already beautiful body to fit Akira’s taste.

Normally, people would at least give some kind of reactions when they saw Alpha’s naked body. But Akira’s reaction was really dull, it was not clear whether it was because he was too tired to give any reaction or it was because he had already gotten used to it. Humans could really get used to almost anything.

Seeing how Akira was looking at her with no more than usual interest, which was showing almost no interest in her body, Alpha thought a lot of things in the back of her mind as she struck up a conversation with him.

“Although a lot of things happened today, we also got quite a lot of relics. So then, when is your next plan to go to the wasteland again?”

Akira obviously looked confused.

“Next time? Are we going to do that again? Together with Sheryl’s gang?”

“With what happened today, I honestly don’t think that Sheryl would accept the same offer next time though. In the first place, what about my ammo expense? I did use quite a lot of bullets today, I don’t think Sheryl can pay for them, you know?”

Alpha smiled smugly.

“If it’s about that, then there’s no need to worry. Since there was no need to hide the destination, I made sure to take a general-purpose subjugation request too. And with the number of monsters that you defeated, it should at least give you some money to cover for the ammo, right?”

“I see. I did use quite a lot of ammo after all. It’s good to know that I don’t have to worry much about it.”

The ammo expense was paid from Akira’s own wallet and he did not expect to have to fight a swarm of monsters. It was good news for him that he could minimize the unexpected expense. But that was not enough as a reason to invite Sheryl again.

“…But still, I think Sheryl would still reject that offer, you know?”

When Akira said that, Alpha looked back at him with a serious expression and said.

“I’m sorry but I prioritize your growth more than Sheryl’s interest. Also, I’ll have to prioritize your training for the sake of my goal. Since I had to help you during today’s escort mission, it means that you failed the training. I need you to get stronger, so it would not be a good thing to reduce the chance for you to train. And just like I told you before, Sheryl will also get some benefits from this offer.”

Akira looked hesitant. It was because he knew well that he did not have enough strength.

Alpha frowned.

“If you really don’t want to do it, I won’t force you either. I don’t want you to hate me for forcing you after all.”

Akira continued talking with Alpha after that. Although a lot of things happened, Sheryl did get quite a lot of profit in the end. So it was basically up to Sheryl whether to take that offer again or not.

“I’ll at least ask Sheryl about it. If she agrees, then I’ll do it again.”

“Alright then. Next is about you.”

“About me? If it’s about the mistakes that I made today, can you do it tomorrow instead? Even if you tell me now, I might just forget it.”

Akira was only half-conscious as he was enjoying the bath. It was not a situation where he could properly react to a review discussion.

“That’s not what I meant. When that guy asked you what’s so different between him and you, and you said that it’s all about luck, remember? I don’t think that’s true. I know more than anyone else how hard you’re working yourself. After all, I always stick around you since the day we met. Not to mention, the reason why you were able to meet me was because you worked hard to the point that you were able to go to the ruin, right? That’s why I don’t think you’re the same compared with that boy and I don’t want you to have any similar thoughts.”

Alpha smiled smugly at Akira as she said. In that smile, she was actually saying that she didn't make any mistake in choosing Akira.

Akira looked a bit surprised when he heard her, his expression then turned back to normal as he said.

"…it's not like I think I'm the same as him. I do think that I have worked hard before I met you and I keep working hard even after I met you. But that guy might have also given the same amount of effort too, he might have even given more effort than me. But it's a completely different matter whether his effort gave him result or not."

Akira looked down as he recalled his past. His gaze was directed at the swaying water surface.

"…I know that I'm giving effort, but…"

"But?"

"I don't think it's anywhere near the effort that I gave before I met you. That's why, I'm just lucky. I won't say that's it, but I think the contribution from my luck is too big to ignore. Which means that boy is just unlucky. That's why I don't really think that everything he said was false."

There was not a trace of self-deprecation or empathy in Akira's face. It was just his objective evaluation of himself.

"I'm really happy to hear that you actually think so highly about meeting me."

Alpha smiled teasingly as she slid closer to Akira. Akira immediately realized what he said and bashfully looked away from Alpha.

After Akira finished his bath, he went straight to the bed and fell asleep. Alpha looked at the sleeping Akira and began her reflection.

Alpha recognized and praised Akira's hard work in order to increase her likeability. She even considered his personality when she said that, but Akira's reaction was duller than what she expected.

She thought that the way she worded it out was counter-effective, there was a need to fix that flaw.

Alpha had always been and would always be observing Akira.

The next day, as previously decided, Akira visited Sheryl's base. He directly went straight to Sheryl's private room.

The moment Akira put his rifle down and sat on the sofa, Sheryl sat on top of his lap and clung to him as if it was a normal behaviour.

Sheryl looked a bit bothered, it seemed that clinging on Akira while he still had his augmented suit on did not feel too good. She placed both of her hands on Akira's shoulders, extended her arms, and complained straight to Akira's face.

"It's hard, can you take it off?"

"No."

Since Akira refused, Sheryl started to grumble.

"Isn't it fine? It's not like you'll lose anything."

"I'll lose my augmented strength. It's a pain in the ass to put it back on too."

"That's just too bad."

Sheryl looked disappointed as her hands reached behind Akira's back and she clung on him again. Akira, who started to get used to her, just sighed.

"So then, Sheryl, where do you want to start?"

"Alright. First of all, about the relics that we brought back, what should we do with them?"

“Even if you ask me… You can do whatever you want with them.”

“But you should at least decide your share and the other details…”

Akira tilted his head.

“My share?”

“Yes, although we only lent you manpower, we did contribute by sending some of my gang members to the wasteland. So, it would be great if you could decide on the share that the other children could accept. But of course, I’ll help to convince them no matter what you decide.”

These children went out to the wasteland because of Sheryl’s order. They had to collect relics while under the fear of getting attacked by monsters, and to top it off, they did get attacked by a swarm of monsters. Thus it was understandable that they would be angry if they only got a small number of relics as payment. Of course, Sheryl could shut them down by telling them what happened to Sebla who betrayed her, but it would not erase their dissatisfaction. That was what Sheryl thought.

Akira noticed that Sheryl was misunderstanding something there, so he explained to her in order to clear up her misunderstanding.

“What are you talking about? Those relics are all yours and your gang’s. That’s why I’m telling you to do whatever you want with them.”

Sheryl stiffened when she heard Akira’s answer.

“A-all of them?”

“Including the relics from Dale and Colbert too?”

Seeing Sheryl flustered there, Akira found it a little weird.

“All of them, so those relics are included.”

Sheryl remained frozen as she replayed Akira's answer again and again on the back of her mind. She was making sure that she did not omit or mishear anything. She then concluded that she did not mishear it, and that there was no deeper meaning behind his answer.

Since Sheryl was frozen there while clinging at him, Akira called her.

"Sheryl?"

Sheryl then stepped off from Akira and sat beside him. She sounded hesitant as she said with a low voice.

"…Uhmm… I don't really know the details, but like, don't you need them to offset the ammo expense and other stuffs?"

"I see, I made sure to get money from the other source for that, so there's no problem."

"I-is that so? Then how about an extra reward? There were a lot of unexpected things that happened after all, like that fight against the swarm and the other Hunter…"

"Reward? Ahh, reward for the request, huh? You should actually deduct some of it, after all, I put you in more danger by letting those Hunters come with us and you also got taken hostage too. No matter what happened, the fact is that someone I should protect got killed, so it was basically a failure on my part as my job was to escort you and your gang members. Since those relics are the reward for finishing the request, I'm fine with not getting any."

"…I see."

Akira's answer seemed to make Sheryl more depressed. She hung her head low, she felt like she just got into a huge debt that she would never be able to return.

Akira did not understand why Sheryl was so depressed. From his point of view, she had to go through a lot of bad experiences in the wasteland, not only he basically half-forced her to go along with his training, she got attacked by a swarm of monster, then the Hunter, who they gave a ride to, also attacked her, and to top it off, she was also taken hostage.

Akira, who thought that he did nothing good for Sheryl, decided to give all of those relics to her in order to reduce his guilt. But there was a huge gap between their perspectives.

Akira was bewildered while Sheryl looked depressed, there was an awkward silence between the two of them.

Someone suddenly knocked on the door. Akira and Sheryl quickly turned to the source of the sound. Sheryl still looked depressed as she stayed quiet, Akira, who was at loss on what to do, answered in her stead.

The door opened and Alicia entered the room.

“Sheryl, Katsuragi-san is here…”

Alicia noticed the mood between Akira and Sheryl, she then tilted her head in confusion.

There were 3 people gathered in the base’s guest room–Akira, Sheryl, and Katsuragi. Alicia just left 3 glasses of drinks in that room before hurriedly excusing herself out.

Katsuragi looked a bit confused feeling the mood in the room, after he asked what was going on, he then sipped the coffee and said.

“…Well, so that’s how I heard that you guys returned back from the wasteland with relics and I’m here today just to check those relics.”

Akira replied to Katsuragi.

“I see, so you’re here to buy the relics, huh? But those relics are from Higaraka Residence Ruin. They’re not those expensive relics that you usually handle.”

“They’re from Higaraka Residence Ruin? Why would someone on your level go to that ruin? There are no more expensive relics in that ruin, you know? Do me a favor and go to a ruin with better relics next time, alright?”

“It was Sheryl and her gang who went there for the relics. So those relics are Sheryl’s.”

Katsuragi frowned, it was obvious that he was suspicious of Akira’s unexpected answer.

“They’re Sheryl’s? Didn’t you hire them to collect the relics?”

Katsuragi knew well of Akira’s ability, he then guessed how much it would take to pay a Hunter with similar skill as a bodyguard. One thing was for sure, Sheryl should not have enough money to pay Akira. His suspicion got deeper, he then tried to ask for more information.

“Sheryl’s gang doesn’t have enough money to have you escort them, right?”

Akira sounded as if he was only making excuses as he said.

“…Well, about that, like, you know, friendly discount.”

“If that’s the case, then you’ll give me a friendly discount too, right?”

“Well, you know what, I guess I should rethink about my relation with you if you’re in so much trouble that you can’t pay for my reward.”

Katsuragi and Akira then laughed. Although both of them seemed to be just getting along with each other from the outside, they were actually carefully gauging each other’s reaction.

Katsuragi then changed into his business smile and looked at Sheryl and Akira.

“Well, since I’m here, can you show me the relics? There might be some expensive relics that amateurs can’t recognize, you know?”

Unlike what Katsuragi expected, his offer was immediately accepted and he was guided to the storage room. The storage room was filled with all the relics that they brought back from the Higaraka Residence Ruin. Even after Katsuragi scanned the whole room, he found nothing but cheap relics that Hunters usually found in Higaraka Residence Ruin.

[They’re really relics from Higaraka Residence Ruin. I was hoping that it was just an excuse for Akira to store relics, that he can’t leave in his home, in Sheryl’s gang… But I guess I was expecting too much…]

The relics that Sheryl received from Dale and Colbert were placed inside her private room since she planned to give them to Akira later. If Katsuragi saw them, he would try to buy them from her.

Katsuragi sighed, it was obvious that he had lost interest.

“…So, Sheryl, what do you plan to do with these relics?”

“I’m thinking of selling them.”

Sheryl, who had somewhat recovered, calmly answered Katsuragi’s question. She could not afford to show Katsuragi that her relationship with Akira was shaken a bit.

Katsuragi then warned Sheryl.

“Just to make it clear, I won’t buy them, you know?”

“There’s no need to worry, we’re planning to open our own stand to sell them. We’ll clean those that can be cleaned and fix those that can be fixed before putting them out for sale. We might also sell some of them to the other gangs that we have a connection with.”

Since Sheryl planned to go to the Higaraka Residence Ruin to collect relics, she had always been thinking of the way to exchange the relics into money. Her conclusion was to sell them herself, although she had some inklings as to how much she should sell them for, she had no guarantee whether it would go well or not.

Katsuragi had lost interest in all the relics in that place, so he apathetically said.

“I see, well, good luck.”

Beside Katsuragi, Akira seemed to be deep in thought.

Katsuragi went back right after that, he was a busy person after all.

After Katsuragi left the base, Sheryl, who had regained her calm, turned gloomy again. Although she was calmer than before, it did not change her situation at all.

She glanced at Akira and realized that he was thinking about something.

Akira’s gaze was directed to the relics inside that room. Sheryl looked at those relics again, but she did not find anything out of ordinary.

She seemed confused and asked him.

“Is there anything wrong with the relics? If anything piqued your interest, I don’t mind giving it to you.”

“No, that’s not it. Sheryl, you plan to clean and fix them before selling them, right?”

“Yes.”

“There’s something that I want to ask from you…”

“Of course!!”

Sheryl quickly replied even before Akira told her what he wanted to ask of her. Akira winced back when she suddenly interjected like that.

“Then wait here for a bit.”

After he said that, Akira left the base.

Not too long after, Akira returned back with a filled rucksack. He then unloaded everything inside that rucksack on the floor, those were the relics that Katsuragi refused to buy from Akira the other day.

Akira then turned to Sheryl and asked.

“Can you sell these relics too?”

Sheryl, who heard that, turned gloomy again.

Akira himself thought that he was pushing troublesome stuff to Sheryl, that was why he thought it was the reason why she looked depressed. But in actuality, it was because she was expecting to get a much harder request from Akira. If that was all that he asked from her, it would be not even close to enough to repay her debt to Akira, that was why her expression turned depressed again. Their perceptions of the situations were completely opposite.

Sheryl then asked Akira.

“Uhmm, is it okay if I ask you the details in my private room? I want to ask about the price and how to sell them… After all, they’re your relics, so it’s not like I can just decide the price on my own…”

“I see, you’re right.”

Akira and Sheryl then returned back to Sheryl’s private room.

He then explained to Sheryl, who was sitting in front of him, about the details of his request.

Akira wanted Sheryl to sell them for a high price as possible. There was no time limit and it was okay if she could not sell them at all in the end. He also wanted the other related information such as when and to whom Sheryl sold them, for how much they were sold, how long it took for Sheryl to sell them, etc. Although he asked a number of things, all of them were easy requests.

Sheryl listened to Akira's explanation and understood what he really wanted from his requests.

Basically, Akira wanted to check the relic market, and he wanted to do that through Sheryl. He wanted to make sure if the relics that Katsuragi would not buy from him were really cheap relics, or was it that they could be sold at a high price as long as he knew where to sell them, or that maybe there was actually a way to process them into something that could be sold at a high price. If Sheryl sold them in her stand and someone bought them at a high price, then there was a good chance that Akira's guess was correct.

The relics that Akira gave to Sheryl would only collect dust in his house. Even if they were sold only for a small price or even if no one would buy them at all, Akira would not lose anything.

"Of course, there's no need to worry about it too much, I'm okay with any result. I know that you guys are busy too. So, your share is half the selling price… I guess that's all from me, do you have any questions?"

"I understand. I don't know how high I can sell them for, but I'll try to do my best."

Sheryl smiled invincibly at Akira, there was no trace of hesitation or doubt in her smile.

Akira felt relieved seeing her reaction. Since there was no restriction or limit in his request, Akira thought that she could do his request as a side job. So it should not put too much burden on her.

But Sheryl focused more on the fact that Akira did not place any particular expectation in it. Unlike yesterday's escort request, this was a request from Akira that would clearly bring some profit for him. It was a good chance for her to return her debt to Akira that she kept piling up. Sheryl thought that if she could make enough profit for Akira, if she could prove to him that she was useful, then Akira would not easily abandon her.

No matter whatever it was, Sheryl wanted to be useful to Akira. She must become someone useful to Akira. Sheryl thought that her situation was pretty bad since she had become dependent on him as well as all of the debts that she had to Akira. Thus, this request from Akira seemed like a perfect opportunity for her.

If Sheryl expressed her happiness, Akira might find it suspicious. She had regained her composure enough to notice that and just smiled at him. Akira thought that Sheryl had calmed down and smiled in return.

Although both of them took the situation in a completely different manner, both of them were smiling at each other.

Akira thought that it should be okay to invite Sheryl to the Higaraka Residence Ruin again right now. But right when he was about to invite her, Sheryl suddenly asked him.

“So then, Akira. Do you have any other business after this?”

“Eh? Not really.”

“In that case, would you please accompany me to go shopping?”

Sheryl smiled widely when she said that to Akira.

It was not like Akira had any pressing matter to take care of, so he really did not mind going. The moment he was about to say yes, his information terminal suddenly rang, it was a notification for a message. When he checked it, it was from Elena and Sara. The content of the message was about the next schedule to go exploring the ruin again.

“Ah, I’m sorry, something came up, just invite me again next time.”

“I see. It’s really unfortunate. But since you said to invite you again next time, it means that you’re willing to accompany me, right?”

“Yeah.”

“Thank you very much, I’ll be looking forward to it.”

Sheryl was delighted with that promise. Although there was a little bit of displeasure since Akira did not prioritize her, she tried her best to hide it from him.

Akira planned to go to the unexplored ruin together with Elena and Sara again.

Just like before, he met up with Elena and Sara near the border between the wasteland and slum city. The situation was the same as Alpha planned to stop giving her support once Akira was out in the wasteland.

Alpha donned a full-body battle suit with a fastener on her upper and lower body. The glossy fabric stuck tight to her skin as it pronounced her already charming body lines even more. The fastener in front of her extended from under her neck, all the way down between her legs, and to the back. She let that fastener open down to her belly. Her fair skin was clearly exposed through that opening, showing that she was not wearing any underclothing.

If the people around Alpha could see her now, there was no doubt that she would gather a lot of attention. Although it showed less skin than her usual swimsuit, there was not much of a change in its seductiveness.

Akira saw that and stopped himself from making any comments thinking that it was at least better than her usual swimsuit. Clearly, he had more or less gotten used to it by now.

He saw Elena and Sara heading his way as the meeting time was getting closer, Alpha then smiled and told Akira that she would stop her support.

“So then, good luck for today.”

“Alright.”

“You can call me anytime if you feel lonely, okay?”

In contrast to Alpha who smiled when she said that, Akira pouted. Alpha then just giggled and vanished from Akira’s vision.

Before Elena and Sara arrived there, Akira took a deep breath and returned his expression back to normal.

Elena and Sara stopped their vehicle next to Akira’s, Akira smiled at them.

“I’ll be in your care for today.”

Elena smiled and replied, but somehow, her smile was a little clouded.

“We’ll be in your care too. But there’s something I want to ask you first. Akira, do you have an auto-drive function on your vehicle?”

“Yes.”

“Can you set it to follow behind us?”

“Sure.”

“Okay, once you set it like that, can you get on to our vehicle? There’s something I want to talk about.”

“…? Alright.”

Akira did find that a little weird. Even so, he set his vehicle in auto-drive to follow behind Elena and Sara's vehicle before hopping into their vehicle. Once Elena made sure that Akira had set himself in, she then started the vehicle and drove to their destination.

Sara, who was sitting in the driver assistant's seat, stood up and turned back to Akira who was sitting behind her, she then apologetically said.

"Please let me apologize first, we're really sorry."

"What happened?"

"It seems that someone discovered the ruin that we went together the other day."

Akira was obviously a little surprised. He did expect that it would happen sooner or later, but he did not think that it would happen so fast.

"…I see. But it's not like it's Sara-san and Elena-san's fault, or like, do you have any idea why that happened?"

Elena, who was driving the vehicle, answered Akira's question.

"Nothing. Or at least, we've done our best to make sure that wouldn't happen. Well, even if the information about the existence of the new ruin leaked from the selling route that we've employed, there is no way they would know about the location of the ruin too. And according to my scan back then, no one was following us either."

Akira just smiled lightly and said.

"Well, it's just a pure coincidence then. So I don't think it's your fault. Not to mention that it might be because of something that I did. After all, I went back straight to the city the first time I returned back from that ruin. So it might have been me all along."

It was indeed unfortunate that other Hunters knew about that ruin, but that would happen sooner or later anyway and this time it happened sooner than expected. That was all Akira thought.

Elena and Sara frowned when they heard Akira's answer, Elena then mumbled.

"…So you're not suspecting us at all, huh? Aren't you least bit suspicious that we sold the info about that ruin? I did tell you that the info of an unexplored ruin alone can fetch you a lot of money, remember?"

"Not at all."

"Why can you be so sure about that?"

"The reason, hmm….? Just my intuition, I guess."

There was a short pause before Akira continued. He was thinking of any excuse as to why he thought so and conveyed anything that came up in his mind to Sara and Elena while half-joking.

"Moreover, if it was Elena-san and Sara-san who were selling the info for money, I'm sure both of you would come up with a method that would bring you lot more money, like selling the info piece by piece, right? Well, that's just my intuition though."

Elena's and Sara's serious-looking expression softened when they heard Akira's reply.

Elena laughed and replied with a joke as well.

"That's true. If it was me, I would do it in a more profitable manner."

"If it's you, I'm sure you'll mix some fake info while selling it. After all, it'll fetch you more money while leaking less info, right?"

Sara also jumped in with a joke, Elena laughed and said to Sara.

"But of course! I'll sell them as expensive as possible too!!"

She then smiled and said to Akira with a calm voice.

"Akira, thank you for trusting us. I'm honestly happy that you do."

There were many reasons why a team of Hunters broke up, one of them was trust issues. Exploring the old-world ruin means that they were putting their lives on the line to search for expensive relics worthy of that bet. And those expensive relics were the very thing that made these Hunters doubt each other. Thanks to that, there were many Hunter teams which broke up and ended up pointing their rifles at each other.

But Akira completely trusted Sara and Elena, he did not doubt them at all. Elena was extremely delighted with that fact.

Elena, who was starting to feel embarrassed, decided to change the subject.

“Alright then!! That’s it for this matter!! Now to the next subject, listen closely, okay?”

“Okay.”

“Although we’re heading to the same ruin that we visited previously, it might be pretty dangerous this time. So I need everyone to be extremely careful. If anyone gets some bad feelings or any other reasons that make you think it’s better to withdraw, don’t hold back and tell the others too, we’ll immediately withdraw when that happens. I just want to put that out first. Akira, you’re okay with that, right?”

“Yeah. Let’s be extra careful this time. By the way, Elena-san, why do you think that the ruin would turn dangerous this time?”

There were no monsters around that ruin when they visited last time, so Akira was a bit confused why Elena thought it had turned dangerous.

Elena then answered his question.

“When info about a new ruin comes out in the market, it will include all the info regarding that ruin like its location, the interior map of that ruin, the monsters around and inside that ruin, the relics that you can find inside that ruin, and many other kinds of info. But this time, according to our investigation, no other info except the location is available in the market right now.”

“A lot of Hunters will flock to that ruin if they know they can find expensive relics in that ruin, so like, isn’t that just because the people who sold the info didn’t want that to happen?”

“Of course, that’s also one of the possibilities. But there’s also another possibility, it might be because no one returned back alive after diving into that ruin, so no extra information about that ruin comes back to the city. Or the companions of the Hunters, who dove into that ruin, waited outside and killed them on their way back. That would explain why there’s no other info other than the location of the ruin. Or maybe, the people who sold info deliberately only sold the location to make others explore that ruin and wait for the info about the interior of that ruin to be available in the market, that way they can prepare themselves better for exploring that ruin.”

Hearing this, Akira nodded with a serious expression.

“…I see. Let’s be extra careful this time.”

Akira completely erased the thought that the ruin should be safe just because he did not find any trouble the last time he visited that ruin.

On his way to the ruin, Akira was at a loss whether he should call for Alpha or not, but after hesitating for a long time, he eventually decided not to do it. After all, unlike last time with Sheryl, Akira had no extra luggage this time. Not to mention, he had Sara and Elena with him too. They had also decided to withdraw the moment any of them thought that things might get dicey. So Akira decided to do his best on his own for the time being.

Unlike last time, they went to the ruin directly rather than taking any detour. When they stopped their vehicle behind a wreckage near the ruin, they saw a completely different scene compared to the previous time they came there.

There were countless corpses of biological monsters scattered around the area, they were riddled with bullet holes. There were also remnants of mechanical monsters that were blown up with some kind of explosives. And of course, there were also empty magazines, bullet casings, and other equipment as well as dead Hunters among them. All of them were the remnants of fights between Hunters and monsters.

Akira scanned the area and mumbled.

“That’s a hell lot of them!”

It was a huge mess, the rubbles from the explosives that both the monsters and the Hunters used, flesh and blood of the biological monsters and Hunters, mechanical parts both from Hunter’s equipment and the mechanical monsters. All of them mixed together and scattered all over the area. It could be inferred that a group of Hunters fought a big swarm in this place.

Sara also scanned the area and said.

“If these Hunters came here for the ruins, then where did all these monsters come from? Did these monsters come from the inner part of the ruin? Elena, did you find anything?”

Elena checked the signal from her information-gathering device.

“It’s alright. There’s no monster around the area. If these monsters did come from inside the ruin, it seems that the Hunters have killed every single one of them.”

As Akira approached the entrance to the ruin, his expression turned grim as he noticed that the fight was fiercer around that area.

“…If there were this many monsters in this place, it was actually a good thing that the location of this ruin leaked out. Basically, we had other Hunters scout the inner part of this ruin for free thanks to that.”

Elena agreed with Akira’s opinion.

“You might be right about that. The scariest thing about an unexplored ruin is that it has as many monsters as the unclaimed relics inside it and we have no information about both of them at all. Looking at this, it is better to assume that no one was able to return back alive from searching the ruin, and that’s why there is not much info about the ruin available in the market.

Either we just got lucky when we came here last time, or someone made a huge blunder inside the ruin. Akira, we can withdraw now if you want to."

"…I'll leave that decision to Elena-san. At least for me, I don't think we should withdraw yet."

There was a trace of hesitation in Akira's voice, it showed that he carefully made that decision after considering the possible danger. Elena smiled happily and said.

"Alright, let's go then."

Sara seemed a little bit excited as she joined in.

"I look forward to seeing your performance, but don't push yourself too hard, okay?"

Akira, Sara and Elena stood in front of the stairs leading down the underground ruin. The wreckage and rubbles around the entrance looked as if they were shoved out of the way by something huge, and that trace continued all the way inside the ruin. It seemed that there was some kind of powerful monster inside.

Akira took his CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun off his vehicle. He did not forget to stuff his rucksack with ammo too.

Akira prioritized filling his rucksack with ammo rather than reserving space for relics. He was planning to throw away some of his magazines in case he found expensive-looking relics later. After all, it was better to find himself having to throw away ammo rather than finding himself running out of ammo.

Thanks to his augmented suit, Akira did not find any trouble carrying all those ammo. Although the energy consumption of his augmented suit increased, it should still have enough energy to last for the day.

Sara and Elena were also gathering their equipment from their own vehicle. It seemed that they were making sure that they had everything they needed since they noticed the ruin was more dangerous than they thought.

Elena then asked Akira.

“Akira, are you ready?”

“Yeah. I’m ready.”

“Alright then, let’s go.”

Elena pointed her rifle to the interior of the ruin and pulled the trigger. The grenade launcher equipped on her rifle launched a canister that vanished deep inside the ruin. Elena and Sara started going down the stairs after that, Akira followed suit after them.

While going down the stairs, Akira suddenly asked Elena.

“Elena-san, what did you do back then?”

“Back then? That’s a mini information-gathering device. I used it to get more accurate data of the area and to check for any monsters.”

“Ohhh, so there’s something like that, huh.”

“That one is a canister type that can be launched from a grenade launcher, but there are many other types that you can use, you know. Some of them can be controlled manually or set to automatically explore the floor. There are even controllable drones that you can use to explore the area.”

“That sounds really convenient. How much do they cost?”

“They’re pretty expensive. The drones can even cost up to 1,000,000 Aurum per drone. It’s all good if they returned after exploring the ruin, but sometimes they get destroyed by the monsters or the connection gets interrupted and the drone crashes. There are even cases when they returned back while bringing some monsters together with them. Not to mention, if you get unlucky, some monsters can trace-back the drone and detect your location.”

“I see, so that canister type, how much does it usually cost?”

“That’s about 10,000 Aurum per canister. It’s pretty expensive for a single-use equipment, so I plan to retrieve it later if it’s possible… The reason why I didn’t use it last time was because it would be a waste if something breaks it. So I just thought that there was no need to use one back then, but this time it seems that the ruin has turned more dangerous than before, that’s why I used it just to be safe.”

Elena seemed a bit flustered as she replied. She had done that all for the sake of maximizing the possible profit from the exploration. After all, if they ended up in red because of that, it would beat the main purpose as to why they explored the ruin. Since they decided to bet their lives on exploring the ruin, it was important to return back with more money.

In order for them to minimize their expenses, they had to put their lives in more risk. It was indeed a harsh world. That was what Akira thought.

As Akira went down the stairs, he noticed the traces of something big and heavy running up the stairs. But the stairs were not that damaged, so it did not cause much trouble for Akira and the others as they walked down. It showed just how amazing the old-world building was.

After they went down the stairs, they went through the same hallway that they went through last time. But the interior of that hallway was so much different compared to the previous time they visited the place.

Unlike last time when they had to use a flashlight to explore the hallway, the hallway was bright enough without any extra illumination this time. Looking at the shadow that cast straight below them, they knew that the light came from above, but there was no lamp-like object fixed in the ceiling at all.

Elena looked around and said.

“So this facility is still active, huh. I wonder if some Hunters went to the deeper part of the ruin and did something to turn the facility back on.”

The interior was bright enough for them to see far deep into the ruin. There were traces of explosives, bullets and blood on the hallway, showing that fights happened there.

Akira stared into the deeper part of the ruin and said.

“There are traces of battles here too, there are also traces of something big and heavy passing through the stair… It’s really weird that there’s no dead monster or Hunters in this place.”

Looking at the traces, the battle should have happened a few days ago. And judging from the blood splatters, there should be at least multiple dead organic monsters or at least human corpses in the area. Since there were traces of mechanical monster wreckage above the ground, it meant that there should be at least some leftover mechanical monsters too. Akira thought that it was impossible for all of them to reach the surface without getting killed on the way.

Sara made a guess and said to Akira.

“…I’m not really sure either. But I think that the cleaning drone might have cleaned them up.”

Although the old-world ruins were left unmanned for years, some of them were always kept clean and in tiptop shape. It was all thanks to the cleaning drones and the self-repair function that was still active even right now.

Those kinds of ruins were relatively more dangerous. Since any traces of monsters were regularly cleaned up, making it harder to gauge the danger inside that ruin. Not to mention, the security functions might also still be active and they would try to eradicate any trespassers.

“It seems that there’s no monster around, let’s carefully go deeper.”

With that signal from Elena, they continued exploring deeper into the ruin while keeping their guards up.

They eventually reached the hall where they collected some relics the previous time they came there. They did not meet any monsters yet. Although there were traces of battles here and there, they did not find any dead corpses from those battles either.

The way forward was branching into two hallways. They noticed that there were traces of something big and heavy having passed through the right hallway, the destroyed ticket gate near it showed the strength of that unknown thing.

Elena turned to Akira and Sara and asked them.

“Which way to go?”

Sara and Akira did not hesitate when they answered Elena’s question. All of them agreed to go to the left.

When they continued to the left hallway, they found themselves inside an underground city.

There were shops and stands lined up inside, but most of them were already in a destroyed state.

And unlike inside the hallway, there were traces of battles complete with the corpses of the organic monsters, wreckages from the mechanical monsters, and the dead Hunters.

Elena’s expression turned grim. But it was not because of the number of the dead Hunters scattered in front of her, nor was it because most of the relics were destroyed by the explosives that were used in this place.

She turned to Akira and Sara.

“Akira, Sara, are you guys ready? They’re coming.”

The moment she said that, Sara and Akira moved to her front and readied their rifles. Akira put his rucksack down and lined up extra magazines on the ground around him. Sara also did the same as Akira.

From the goggles that he was equipping, Akira could see information from his information-gathering device as well as from Elena's information-gathering device. He could see countless signals coming in his direction.

Judging from the movements of those signals, it was rather obvious that they had noticed Akira's position. More and more signals kept appearing in the detection range. The monsters in that area were still alive and kicking. They were only taking a short rest after cleaning up the Hunters that went in before the trio.

Akira pulled the trigger almost at the same time as Sara. As gunshots echoed through the area, it signalled that another fight had started.

Sounds of monsters came out from deep inside the underground city as well as from the already destroyed shops in the area as they quickly gathered at Akira's location. There were all kinds of monsters, some of them were carnivorous monsters with large strong legs, some of them were half-cyborg dogs with conspicuous mechanical body parts. There were even missile pods with legs that burst out missiles randomly as if it did not care if they hit the other monsters.

Those monsters ran from behind wreckage to wreckage while closing into Akira's position, but Akira quickly took them out together with the wreckage that they were using to hide with his DVTS minigun. The powerful DVTS minigun also made a quick work of the monsters that were caught moving from one wreckage to another. The bullet storms destroyed everything, both the monsters and the wreckages.

As for the monsters with long-range weapons which were shooting from far away, Akira would take cover behind sturdy-looking wreckage and use his CWH anti-material rifle while relying on the information received from his information-gathering device to aim at them. The powerful piercing bullet from his CWH anti-material rifle could easily pierce through the rubble and the monster hiding behind it.

Elena was also providing support fire while shooting some mini information-gathering devices into the deeper part of the ruin to perform more accurate detection. She then sent the location of monsters with long-range weaponry as well as the trajectory line of the projectiles that they shot to Akira and Sara. She was also sending the precise locations of the monsters that were approaching Akira and Sara to make sure of their safety while providing them support fire.

Sara used the information from Elena to accurately aim at those monsters. She used her A4WM Repeater Grenade Launcher to shoot the monsters that were hiding behind the rubbles from above them or by bouncing the grenade off the holes on those rubbles.

Sara trusted Elena's information and kept blasting grenades into those monsters. Most of her shots hit the vital points of those monsters like their heads or their cannons which then caused a localized explosion.

Although they had the upper hand in that battle, Elena's and Sara's expression somehow looked grim.

Sara then asked Elena who knew the best about the situation they were in.

"Elena, about those monsters though…"

"Yeah, some of them are the same type of monsters that we found in the Kuzusuhara ruin underground city."

"…I see, so my guess is correct, huh."

Sara's expression turned grimmer than before.

The underground city located under the Kuzusuhara ruin was filled with powerful monsters, enough to make the City Management set up a forward base there. During their forward base aid request, Sara and Elena had to fight back those monsters that were coming out from the underground city. There were even times when they were overwhelmed by some of those monsters, but at that time, they were able to receive reinforcement from the other Hunters who were standing guard and the tanks nearby, thus they were able to fight back those monsters without any trouble.

In case if those powerful monsters were mixed in the swarm that they were facing right now, then they were indeed in a very bad situation.

“As far as my detection goes, these monsters are relatively weaker than the monsters that we faced in the underground city. But still, it’s not normal to find these monsters in this place.”

Sara then turned to Akira.

“Akira, are you okay over there?!”

“I’m fine!!”

“That’s good to hear!! Some of these monsters are dangerous!! There’s no need to try saving your ammo, use your full power!!”

“Understood!!”

Akira’s answer was firm, there was no trace of panic or fear in his voice.

Sara and Elena smiled when they heard his answer. Judging from his answer, it seemed that Akira was able to hold himself just fine in that battle, thus their focuses that were unconsciously leaning toward worrying about him, in case if he was in danger, shifted to the monsters in front of them. Thanks to that, it greatly reduced the time that they needed to clear up the monsters.

Even without Sara’s recommendation, Akira was already using his full power without worrying about his ammo expense. But he had to still worry about his leftover ammo. He carefully gauged the enemy and used the openings to quickly replace the empty magazine of his rifle before immediately returning back to shooting and pushing back the monsters that were approaching him. Since he had no other choice but to use his bullets, he was trying to use them as effectively as possible.

As not to make any mistakes when reloading, he would throw his empty magazines far away from him. But after some time, the number of empty magazines around him had significantly increased.

Because of the absence of Alpha's support, Akira's shooting skill was lower than usual, and also his actual skill was not enough to efficiently take out the monsters in this situation. Akira was actually compensating that by shooting more than usual, as such, he was using more ammo.

[…I still have some reserve magazines left in my rucksack. When I have to use them too, I'll call for Alpha. That is if Alpha can still provide me with support in this place though… I guess I should try to ask her now to confirm that while I still have the chance, huh?]

Akira hesitated for a bit, but he quickly made up his decision.

[No, that kind of pessimistic way of thinking will be fatal in this situation! Moreover, if I can't handle this situation myself, that in itself is a fatal flaw that will definitely get me killed sooner or later! I have to get stronger! That's why I have to handle this myself!]

Akira pulled himself together and continued shooting.

He was trying to get stronger, he was also putting extra effort to get stronger, and for that sake, he placed himself in more danger. The source of that desire was nothing more than his own will to get stronger. But in reality, there was another reason that he himself did not realize as to why he was trying so hard.

As the fight continued, the sound of gunshots that echoed through the underground city summoned more and more monsters. Those gunshots would not stop as long as the Hunters were still fighting the monsters.

Then eventually the gunshots stopped.

The last person who was holding the trigger was Akira. As the final bullet that pushed through the barrel of his rifle pierced through the head of the last monster alive, it signalled the eradication of the monsters in the area. And with no targets to shoot, the battle came to an end.

The underground city was wrapped in silence, Akira looked around his surroundings while still on high alert.

5 seconds passed, then additional 10 seconds, the silence still continued. After another 10 seconds, Elena smiled and said.

“No more signals. It seems that there are no more monsters around, it’s alright now.”

Elena and Sara finally lowered their guards. Akira let out a big sigh.

There were not many magazines left. Akira smiled lightly, he felt more confident since he was able to survive the battle without Alpha’s support.

Sara smiled and walked to Akira.

“You looked pretty calm there, you did well. There were even some monsters from the inner part of the underground city mixed in that swarm, normal Hunters who never faced those monsters would at least have some hard time fighting them, you know?”

“Well, I was using my ammo without holding back after all. Although, at that point, it can be said that I was already hard-pressed. Had it continued any longer, I would have racked a huge ammo expense since I used quite a lot of ammo to kill those strong monsters that Sara-san and Elena-san warned me about… So those monsters are the ones from the inner part of the underground city, huh?”

“Yep, that’s right. They are actually pretty weak compared to the other monsters that you can find in the inner part of the underground city. For the bigger monsters, you’ll have to get help from a tank to kill them, you know. But I don’t think we’ll encounter any of them in this place. And even if we do, they’re pretty huge, so we can just return back to the narrow hallway. There’s no need to fight them here.”

Elena smiled and joined in.

“Now then, since we’re also in red right now, let’s gather some relics from this place to make sure that we end up with more money than we used.”

Elena then scanned the area around her one more time. That particular area of the underground city was already half-destroyed. After all, both the monsters and the Hunters who fought in that place did not care what happened to the ruin in that area. Although the structure itself was still standing strong thanks to the old-world technologies, the relics inside it did not share the same level of durability.

“…That is… if we can still find good relics in this area though.”

Elena smiled bitterly when she said that.

Rebuild World – Chapter 85, How The Information Spread

Akira, Sara and Elena started gathering relics. Although they encountered some unexpected fights, it was not enough of a reason for them to just go back home. Indeed, it was important to return back alive from the old-world ruin, but it was also equally important to come back home with relics. After all, it was not like they went out to the old-world ruin with their lives on the line just to return back in red.

They dug through the rubbles, dead monsters, and corpses of Hunters, searching for relics.

Akira filled the empty space in his rucksack with relics. He chose the relatively still good-looking relics that he could find since most of the relics in that place were either already destroyed or drenched in blood or oil.

Some of the relics were thankfully still fully intact, relics with strong casing were left untouched by the blood and oil outside. Akira was searching for those kinds of relics.

"…Hm?"

He suddenly raised his voice.

“Akira, what’s wrong?”

“Uh, I found underclothes for women…”

“Really?!”

Sara shrieked in delight. Just like what she told Akira before, she was in dire need of durable underclothing. If it was possible, she wanted to get more of them.

“…It seems that blood had slipped through its wrapping though.”

It was as Akira said, the wrapping of that underclothing was actually torn and some kind of liquid had seeped through that opening, thus turning its colour into something strange.

“… I see, that’s really unfortunate.”

Sara sounded very disappointed.

Akira then left that underclothing on top of rubble near him. He had no plans to put that inside his rucksack as he quickly returned back to look for more relics.

He then found something else.

“….Huh?”

“Akira, what’s wrong?”

“Nothing, just another underclothing, but…”

“…But?”

It was the second time, so Sara calmly asked Akira.

“…It has a bullet hole.”

It seemed that a bullet had randomly pierced through that underclothing.

Sara knew that it was not Akira's fault, but she then smiled at Akira and asked.

"Akira, what kind of bullying are you playing here?"

"I didn't mean to bully anyone."

Akira simply answered Sara's question. After all, it was not like he did that on purpose.

Sara, who looked a bit annoyed, seemed to realize something as she smiled mischievously. As she directed her displeasure after getting disappointed for the second time into another direction, she then smiled teasingly at Akira.

"Or is it like you want to see me wearing that?"

"N-No…"

Akira flusteredly answered her question, his face had turned beet red. Sara looked completely satisfied with his reaction.

Elena sighed exasperatedly and said to Sara.

"Stop teasing him already and move the rubbles aside, will you?"

"Yes yes, I know."

There was a good chance of finding intact relics around that place, thus Sara focused on searching relics around the same area with Akira.

There were all kinds of shops in the underground city, but compared to the type of relics that they found, they were only able to find a few different types of relics. The other Hunters might have already carried away some of the relics from this area, or some of them might have gotten destroyed from the battles that happened there, or they might have turned into dust after being left in that place for years. Whatever the reason was, it did not change the fact that only a few relics were left around. There was nothing that Akira and the others could do about it.

They might still be able to find some relics if they moved all the rubbles aside and searched carefully. They could also dig out relics from under the crumbled shops. But of course, they did not have enough time to do any of that. There was a good chance that they would encounter monsters on their way back, thus it was better if they focused only on collecting small relics that they could easily carry back with them.

But, even so, it was enough to fill up Akira's rucksack to the brim. Although there might be some relics in bad conditions mixed in, it was still better than coming back empty-handed. Because of all the ammo that he used in the last fight, Akira was able to bring back quite a lot of relics with him.

Sara suddenly came to Akira and pointed her finger at the relics on top of the rubble.

"Akira, if you're not planning to bring them back, can I take them instead?"

It was the underclothing that Akira found. One of them had suspicious-looking liquid seeped through the wrapping while the other one had a bullet hole. That was why he did not consider taking them back with him.

"…Sure… Wait? It's not like you're planning to use them, right?"

Akira looked a bit weirded out, he thought that they were not in a usable state.

Sara laughed and said.

"Of course I won't use them like that. I'm planning to bring them to a specialist and have them fixed. If I'm lucky, it will be as good as new and it's way cheaper than buying new underclothing."

"So there are specialists for this too, huh. Sure then, I don't mind if you take them."

"I see, I'll go ahead and take them then."

Sara then put them inside another transparent wrapping before placing them inside her bag.

That transparent wrapping piqued Akira's interest.

"Sara-san, what's that plastic bag?"

"This? This is a plastic bag to preserve the relics. I usually use this to carry relics that look fragile or easily damaged. This is just a cheap bag, if you use the expensive bag, it can even protect the relics from gunshots too. It's just a small hack that you can employ to increase the quality of relics that you carry back home."

Akira looked amazed.

"So there's something like that too, huh. Hmmm, I guess I should buy some too."

"That's right. It's really convenient to carry dirty relics inside this bag. You won't lose anything by keeping some handy too. Ahh, but I don't recommend replacing the original relics wrapping with this bag. After all, the original wrapping might actually be more durable than this bag."

"I see."

Akira just received another advice on how to be a good Hunter. Getting such new information was one of the benefits of exploring a ruin together with the other Hunters.

They finally finished gathering relics in that area. Although there was an unexpected fight, they were able to harvest a good number of relics.

Elena then asked Sara and Akira what they planned to do next.

"Now then, what's your next plan? I don't mind going back to the city now, but personally, I want to go further a bit to get more information about this ruin. Since we've killed most of the monsters around this area, this should be a good chance to do that."

Akira looked to the inner part of the ruin, he remembered that his original aim when he came to that ruin was to look for something that was located deep down there. It was the very thing that was indicated by the pointer in his vision when he was searching for that ruin, it was for the Lion Steel Corp information terminal.

“That’s right. The relics in the deeper part of the ruin might still be intact, it might be a good idea to at least check them.”

After Akira found an unexplored ruin and the info about that ruin spread among the other Hunters, he had lost most of his reasons to go to that ruin. But even so, he thought it might be a good idea to at least check the terminal inside.

“I still have enough reserve ammo too, so I guess we can continue going deeper.”

Since Sara also agreed, they decided to continue going deeper into that ruin.

The underground ruin that they were in was not that big. The whole area was illuminated by unknown light sources, but thanks to that, they were able to see clearly the interior of that place. There was also a staircase leading to the surface, but according to Elena’s scan, the entrance was buried under rubbles. It was not very surprising since if that staircase did connect to the surface, someone else would have discovered that ruin before them.

There were traces of battles here and there, it could be inferred that the relics in that place were also left in a bad shape.

Elena finished scanning the area. She did find another hallway, presumably connecting to the other places in the underground city, but she could not see how far that hallway went. So she thought that it was a good place to finish the exploration for that day and decided not to go any deeper.

But then she suddenly stopped, her expression turned serious.

Sara, who noticed it, found it suspicious as she quickly readied her rifle and closely watched her surroundings.

“Elena, did you find something?”

“Somebody’s there.”

Akira put his guard up. But he did not feel any human presence and it was confirmed by his information-gathering device which did not detect any signal.

Elena noticed Akira’s misunderstanding and explained it to him.

“It’s fine, it’s not like someone is hiding using a camouflaging sheet or something. I’m getting some kind of signal from behind that door, it might be from a Hunter who came here before us and somehow survived until now.”

Elena was pointing at a door not too far from them. That door was bent in a horrible form, probably by some monsters as it did not seem like it could be easily opened.

As Akira and Sara turned to the direction of that door, a voice came out from a crack behind that door.

“Heeey!! Is someone there?!! Someone’s there, right?!! Answer me!!”

The person behind that door was shouting in desperation for anyone he could find in that underground city.

After Akira, Sara and Elena looked at each other, they walked toward that door.

As the man behind that door caught a glimpse of the trio, he shouted in delight.

“Thank goodness!! I’m saved!! You guys are Hunters too, right? What happened to the monsters in the area?”

Elena answered his question as the representative of their team.

“We’ve killed all the monsters in the area. Anyways, what are you doing in that place?”

“We were running away from those monsters when we ended up here!! Please!! Help us!!”

“We? How many people are with you?”

“With me included, there are 5 people over here. The other 4 are also inside this room. Can you please open the door? It’s all good that it was strong enough to withstand the monster, but now it’s bent and we can’t open it. Can you guys do something about it?”

There was a short silence before Elena turned to Sara and Akira.

“What to do? Should we help them?”

“What are you talking about? You shouldn’t be hesitating here!? We’re also Hunters, just like you, we should help each other when we’re in trouble, right?!”

“I’m sorry but we have had experiences of meeting people like you in a similar situation but they ended up trying to kill us instead. So it’s not like I can simply trust you guys. Not to mention that there are so many dead Hunters out here. It means that basically, you guys abandoned them just to save your own lives, right?”

“W-well, it couldn’t be helped. The monsters were too strong, we had no chance to win, we just got lucky that we found this door close to us when the others didn’t even get the chance to evacuate here too. As a team leader, I chose to prioritize the life of my own team members. I can’t ask them to risk their lives just for the other Hunters whom we just met exploring the same ruin.”

“I see, well, I can understand your decision.”

“S-so?”

“Basically, you’ll understand if I use the same argument to leave you there, right? I have team members that I’m responsible for too.”

“P-please have mercy.”

That man pleaded from behind the door.

Elena turned back to Akira and Sara.

“So then, what should we do?”

Sara stepped up first to answer that question.

“Let’s see, we can at least open the door for them, right? After that, well, let’s have them escape from this place with their own power. There’s no need for us to escort them all the way back to the city or to the surface.”

“You’re right, I guess we can do that much. Akira, are you okay with that?”

“Sure, but then, what should we do to open this door?”

When Akira said that, Sara smiled smugly and said.

“Let’s kick it down.”

Sara then stood in front of the door and said to the guy behind that door.

After she said that, Sara used the full power of her nanomachine augmented body to deliver a powerful blow to that door. The banging sound indicated just how much force her kick had delivered to that door as the door got bent even more. Sara then continued kicking that door, although it bent more and more, the door itself was still standing there.

Sara frowned as she noticed that the door was stronger than she had thought, she then mumbled.

“This door is pretty strong.”

Akira came and stood next to Sara. She understood what he meant as she smiled at him.

After they looked at each other for a few split seconds, they kicked the door simultaneously. Both of them used their augmented strength, which allowed them to carry heavy weaponry unthinkable for a normal human, to deliver their kicks on that door at the same time.

The door was sent flying with a loud bang. The heavy door flew and landed right in front of the guy who was behind that door just a few minutes ago.

That guy stared at Sara and Akira with his jaw dropped. Elena just stood on the other side while smiling bitterly at him.

Now that the door was down, all the Hunters trapped in were able to leave the room. All of them looked extremely tired but also relieved at the same time. Since they ran to that room to save their lives, they must have been psychically exhausted staying inside that room.

Sara then said to those Hunters.

“We’re going back home now but don’t tail us!! You guys should go back home on your own!!”

Elena then added.

“Or at least keep your distance that we deem to be acceptable. If you guys are too close, we’ll see that as a hostile action.”

The leader of those Hunters, Revin, flusteredly turned to Elena and Sara and said.

“Wait for a sec!! Are you going to just leave us behind?!”

Elena showed no hesitation when she said that.

“I’m sorry but we’re being utmost careful right now… Or is it like you want to fight us here?”

Elena’s and Sara’s smiles vanished. It was not like they were showing hostility toward Revin and his team, but instead, it meant that they were serious about what they said.

Revin looked at Sara and Elena while being overwhelmed by their pressure. In his eyes, both Sara and Elena were beautiful ladies, he figured that they might have gone through a lot of difficult situations thanks to their beauty which made them be extremely cautious against strangers.

He then turned to Akira, his eyes were pleading for help, but Akira then apologetically said to him.

“Uhh, I’m sorry but just recently I gave a ride to some Hunters who asked for my help and one of them tried to kill me. So I understand Elena-san’s and Sara-san’s decision.”

“Who the heck was that bastard!!!”

Revin cursed his situation. The fact that they got locked inside that room was enough of bad luck that he did not think he would get hit by another bad luck so soon.

“If I’m not mistaken, his name was Guyver. I heard that he had a huge debt, so he tried to kill me and the other Hunters to get his hands on more relics.”

“We don’t have any debt, okay!! You guys have no debt, right?!”

Revin shouted as he turned to his team, the other Hunters then nodded at him.

After hearing what Akira said, Elena turned to Akira and asked him.

“Akira, were you okay?”

“Yeah, I didn’t get injured and I was able to kill him. So it ended without any problem.”

“I see, I’m glad to hear that.”

Elena smiled.

Revin placed both of his hands on his head, he was at loss on what to do. Akira, Elena and Sara refused to go together with them. At this rate, he and his team would really get left behind. There might be some monsters lurking around somewhere, and even if they were able to reach the surface, they still had to go back to the city. And with their current reserve ammo, their chance of survival was really low.

Revin then tried to negotiate with Elena.

“…Alright alright, let’s do this instead. I’ll send an SOS request to you. If you guys escort us back to the city, well, since there are 3 of you, we’ll pay 3,000,000 Aurum for the reward. It’s not a bad offer, right?”

If Revin sent an SOS request, then it would be an official request sent through the Hunter Office as the proxy. It carried more weight than just a simple promise.

Elena was also a Hunter, if it was a request then she might as well consider it. She then thought for a while and said.

“Well, that’s not a bad offer.”

“Right?”

Revin’s expression relaxed for a bit as he felt that he finally got something that might help him salvage his situation. But Elena then said to him with a serious face.

“But it’s a different story whether you can pay for it or not, right?”

After he heard Elena’s question, Revin began to panic. He then desperately pleaded to her.

“Of course we’ll pay!! What is it now?! Do you have a bad experience of this thing too?!”

“The last time we received a similar SOS request, the requester gave us a hard time when we asked him to pay for the reward and the ammo expense. The request even mentioned that the ammo expense will be paid by the requester. Well, we did make him pay in the end though, but it was really a huge pain in the ass.”

“What the heck!? What’s wrong with you guys?! Why did you guys meet so many of those bad people?!!”

Revin shouted in reflex. He thought that there was a limit on how bad his luck could be, but that did not seem to be the case.

“By the way, that guy’s name is Katsuragi”

“Alright alright!! Then how about this!! Old-world relics!! We’ll give all the relics that we found inside the room. I don’t know for sure if they can get you 3,000,000 Aurum, but it should be able to get you quite a lot of money. They’re still in good shape after all. So how about that?”

If this did not work, Revin had nothing more that he could offer. That was why he looked really desperate.

Elena turned to Sara and Akira again.

“What do you guys think?”

Judging from Elena’s intonation, she leaned more towards taking that offer compared to the previous offers. But it did not sound like she was looking forward to taking that offer either. It was more like she was okay either way.

Akira then asked Revin.

“Can you tell me what kind of relics you have?”

“They’re mostly clothes. It’s not like those clothes that you can use in place of Hunter armours, they’re mostly normal clothes and some underclothing too. Well, I’m not sure myself if I can call them normal clothes though, like, you know, old-world clothing sometimes have a very weird design, right? What can I say… The culture is just so alien for us.”

“I see… Well, since it seems that you have something to pay me with, I don’t mind taking your offer.”

After he said that, Akira turned to Sara. Elena smiled and looked at Sara too. Sara seemed a bit embarrassed as she returned a smile and said.

“Alright then, let’s take that offer.”

Revin and his team let out a big sigh. They were greatly relieved that Akira, Sara and Elena decided to take their offer in the end.

They then walked to the hallway leading to the surface. It was the same hallway they passed when they went down there.

Elena was talking with Revin as to know how they ended up inside that room. It was in order to gather information about the area.

Revin understood what Elena was trying to do. For the Hunters, information about a ruin was something that they could sell for money, so normally he would not share the information that he had so easily. But since Elena was the leader of the team that eradicated the monster swarm that he and his team could not fight, he chose to avoid souring her mood if it was possible.

Just like Elena and Sara who did not trust Revin and his team, Revin also could not completely trust Elena and Sara without any reason. He thought that when the push came to shove, they might abandon him and his team.

So in order to buy more time, he started his story from when he left the city rather than going straight for what happened in that ruin.

Since Elena might tell him to just skip the unimportant part of his story, he glanced at her to check her expression. But Elena seemed to be listening to him just fine, so he continued his story starting from how he got the information about that ruin.

There was a pub in the lower district that Revin frequented. That day, he and his team were enjoying cheap beers while talking about their plan in that pub just like usual.

In reality, it was not like they were talking about anything in particular. With the alcohol mixed in their blood, they were only talking about random stuff. The moment they veered from the main subject about where to go next, it was obvious that their discussion would not be productive.

At that time, a guy suddenly came to them offering the location of a ruin that was just discovered recently.

That kind of thing was a common story for fraud and scams. A lot of Hunters were fooled by similar occurrences. After all, if they got lucky, an unexplored ruin could turn them rich in a single night. It was understandable that such a talk would easily lure those Hunters.

But not all cases were scams. The possibility of such information to be true was more or less the same as the possibility that it was a scam.

There were cases when Hunters found an unexplored ruin filled with monsters that they could not handle, thus they did not have any other choice but to earn money only by selling that information. There were also cases where Hunters from a gang or people working in a corporation secretly sold classified information about relics or ruins. And last but not least, some people intentionally spread information about ruins and relics in order to incur damage to the competing corporations.

Although Revin and his team hesitated at first, they decided to buy that information in the end. There were many reasons why they decided to do so. The information about the location of that ruin and the information about the inner part of that ruin were sold separately, but both of them were sold at a relatively cheap price. Their deal was that Revin would pay a portion of the price upfront, he then would go to that ruin to gather relics and then pay the rest later.

Compared to the information about the inner part of that ruin which cost quite a lot of money, the information about the location of that ruin was pretty cheap. Not to mention, he could go and verify the authenticity of that information before paying the rest of the money. So, even if that was a scam, it would not cost him much.

And in case if that information was genuine, then he might be able to strike it rich in one go. This gave enough reason for him to accept that deal.

That guy, who sold the information, had given the same offer to the other Hunters too. Some of them accepted his deal, prepared themselves with enough equipment, and went to that ruin.

On their way to their destination, Revin and his team regained their logical faculties and started to doubt whether they got scammed. But when they arrived at the coordinates they had received, they did find a ruin that they never knew of until then. Revin then happily sent the remaining payment to that guy and waited for the rest of the information about the inner part of that ruin to be sent into this information terminal.

But at that time, that guy was busy making deals with the other Hunters and did not have the leeway to respond to Revin. As they were waiting for the information, more and more people arrived at that ruin. Now that many Hunters knew there was really an unexplored ruin in that place, they began spreading the information via their own channels.

Some of those Hunters waited just outside the ruin like Revin and his team, but more and more Hunters started thinking about going ahead and searching the ruin.

Eventually, one of those Hunters just could not wait for the information about the inner part of the ruin and decided to dive in. Soon after that, more and more Hunters got swept by the flow and decided to go into the ruin without waiting.

Although no one knew for sure how big the ruin was, they guessed that it would not be as big as the Kuzusuhara ruin. So in short, the number of relics inside that ruin was limited. If they waited too long outside, the other Hunters might take out all the relics inside that ruin and leave nothing for the Hunters who came in late. All the Hunters in that place thought so too.

Revin was pushed by that line of thinking as they also decided to go into that ruin.

When Revin’s story reached that point, Elena suddenly interjected.

“There’s a hallway right after the stairs leading down, right? Do you still remember how the hallway looked when you went down?”

“Well, it looked just like a normal hallway to me.”

“Was it bright inside? Was there any trace of battles? Did you see any monster corpses?”

“Yeah, it was pretty bright, as for the traces… We were in a hurry so I didn’t really pay much attention. As for the monster corpses… I think there were some in the hallway. We were running while avoiding those corpses, so I’m sure about that. I think those corpses are from the monsters killed by the Hunters that went in first before us. So as for the traces from battles, there should be some traces left from those fights.”

It seemed that the state of that hallway had changed in a short span between when Revin’s team went there and when Elena and her team arrived there.

“I see. You can continue your story.”

After Elena said that, Revin thought for a bit before continuing his story.

“…Then after that, we looked around and ended up in that area. When we were collecting relics together with the other Hunters, suddenly a huge swarm flooded out from the hallway we came. We did try to fight back, but we were overwhelmed by the number and the strength of that swarm. It seemed like some strong monsters were mixed in that swarm as well. We basically had no chance of winning that battle. We then ran inside that room and locked the door. We just kept ourselves locked inside while hoping that the monsters would be gone. And we waited until you guys saved us. That’s all.”

“When you passed through that opening, there’s another hallway other than the one leading to the underground city, right? Did you guys check that hallway?”

Revin was planning to feign ignorance, but when he saw the look in Elena's eyes, he immediately gave up.

"…Well, we did. There were no shops in that hallway, so we quickly returned back and went to the other one."

"What was it like inside that hallway? Do you have any data about the interior of that hallway? If you're going to explore an unexplored ruin, you at least do that much, right?"

"W-well about that…"

"So you do, huh? Give it to me."

Revin looked extremely displeased.

"Please give me a break, the relics that we found inside that room are the most expensive things that we found, you know. And we're giving them to you. I'm planning to make up our loss today by selling the information about the interior of this ruin. If we don't do so, it'll definitely affect our Hunter activity in the future. And now you're telling me to just give it away for free?"

"In that case, you can sell it to us first. I'll give you 500,000 Aurum for the information."

"…Are you really going to pay for it?"

"That's if the relics that you gave us really worth more than 3,000,000 Aurum. If they don't, then I'll take that information for free as compensation."

"…Dammit, okay okay!!"

Revin did not have much choice as he gave Elena his general-purpose data storage. If he did not give it to her, she would doubt whether the relics that he gave were really worth enough for accepting his SOS request.

Elena docked that data storage into her information-gathering device and analyzed the data in it. When she was done, she was able to see topological data of the area that she did not check before, including the hallway that they did not go to.

Her expression immediately turned grim.

“Sara, Akira, we need to hurry up and get out of this place.”

After she said that, Elena increased her pace. Although they did not encounter any monsters the last time they passed through that hallway, she was moving even faster than she would in a safe place. Akira and Sara looked a bit surprised, but they quickly matched their paces with Elena’s. Revin and his team pushed themselves to follow the trio’s pace as well.

As Elena was walking so fast that she was close to running, Sara asked her.

“I have a bad feeling about this, so I want to get out of this place as soon as possible. I’ve analyzed the topological data that I received from Revin. According to that data, there’s a station on the end of the other hallway. It’s a station for those underground subways. Akira, do you understand what a subway is?”

Akira tried to remember what Alpha told him about the subway.

“…If I’m not mistaken, it’s about those trains that run under the ground, right?”

“Yep, that’s more or less correct. Because of the monsters, there are not that many subway stations in the eastern district, you can only find them in big cities. But it seems that it’s common to find them in the federation of nations’ central district. I heard that they use it to connect different nations in the central district. I wonder if that’s true or not. But putting that aside, the subway runs through underground tunnels.”

“I see. So then, what’s so bad about the subway?”

“You remember that I said some of the strong monsters that we found in the underground city were mixed in that swarm, right? Then judging by the fact that this facility is still active, we can assume that the subway is still functional too.”

Sara noticed what Elena was trying to say, her expression also immediately turned grim. She then tried to confirm her guess with Elena.

“…So in short, the train might have carried the monsters from the Kuzusuhara ruin all the way here, huh? Good grief, some of those monsters in that ruin can only be defeated using a tank, you know? It’s rather strange since this place was so safe the first time we came here.”

“At that time, this place was completely dark. So in short, this facility was still inactive. Someone who came after us must have done something to activate this facility, and thanks to that, the underground subway now makes a brief stop in this place.”

Sara sounded as if she was asking for Elena’s confirmation.

“W-well, even if that’s true. Those strong monsters are huge monsters, so it’s not like they can pass through the narrow tunnel to come here, right? So even if some of those monsters came from the inner part of Kuzusuhara ruin, they’re only the relatively weak monsters, right? Which in that case, we should have no problem to go against them, right?”

It was true that all the monsters that they encountered until now did not pose much danger for Elena and Sara. After hearing Sara’s guess, Elena relaxed a bit.

“…You’re right about that, I guess I was too worried.”

Elena smiled, she then turned to Akira to apologize for making him worry.

But his expression was grimmer than before. Elena, who saw that wondered what was wrong.

“…Elena-san, can I ask you something?”

“There’s this monster called greedy crocodile, right? It’s a monster that evolves by eating other monsters, so like, are there greedy crocodiles inside Kuzusuhara ruin?”

“It’s not like the inner part of Kuzusuhara ruin is filled with them, but it’s pretty common to find them there.”

“I’m just speaking hypothetically, alright? What if some of those greedy crocodiles were carried here when they were still small through the subway and they quickly evolved after eating all the dead monsters in this area, that’s completely possible, right?”

Akira then looked at the traces left inside that hallway. Those traces indicated that something big and powerful had passed through that hallway.

“It’s not like I’m being too cautious, but I think that it’s the reason why although there are so many traces of battles in this place, we don’t find any monster corpses. Now that I think about it, doesn’t the trace grow bigger and bigger as it goes deeper into the ruin?”

Elena and Sara then looked at the traces left on the floor. It was as Akira said, the trace inside the ruin was bigger compared to the trace in the hallway. Elena then said.

“…You’re right, that’s definitely possible. As I thought, we should get out of this place as soon as we can. I don’t want to meet that monster in case if it returns back to this ruin.”

Sara and Elena agreed with each other.

“That’s true, let’s hurry up.”

Right after that, they immediately started running toward the surface. Revin and his team were barely able to keep up with them.

Silavin: OMG. They just rat out Katsuragi! Hahaha!
And it was so obvious as well. XD

Akira was running through the long hallway in the underground ruin. Although him, Elena and Sara were still in good shape, Revin and his men were barely able to keep up, they were close to their limit.

Revin suddenly asked them to slow down.

“Wait, wait, I don’t think I can go any longer!! Can you at least slow down a bit?”

Elena immediately replied back.

“No, if you can’t keep up, we’ll leave you behind. The longer we stay here, the dangerous it becomes. If you don’t want to die, then keep on running. Just so you know, we’re already running slower than usual even right now.”

“How exactly are you even doing that? Are you using that thing? That augmented suit thingy? None of us is using an augmented suit, you know. So please be kind.”

“How in the world did you even think of coming to an unexplored ruin without it? Do you want to kill yourself or something?”

Elena’s opinion was rather harsh, it might be because she knew just how bad their situation was, but what she said was not wrong.

Revin glanced at Akira, seeing how a Hunter younger than him was already using an augmented suit, he threw a question to Akira that sounded more like a complaint.

“Like I said, we came to this unexplored ruin expecting to return home with a lot of money so that we can buy better equipment, okay? Even you too bought that augmented suit after selling expensive relics, right?”

“Well, that’s true. But in order to pay for it, I had to use almost all of my savings. Thanks to that, I had to live in an inn without a bath for a few days. It wasn’t that easy getting this augmented suit.”

Akira vaguely recounted those days. Looking at his current equipment, it was unthinkable that he would have lived in such a situation.

Revin was a bit taken aback by Akira’s unexpected reaction.

“I-I see.”

Elena then jabbed at Revin again.

“I bet you spent all your money on women and booze, right? That’s why you couldn’t save enough money to buy good equipment. It’s true that working as Hunters means that we would die anytime, but if you spend your money recklessly every day, there’s no way you would be able to buy good equipment, you know?”

The moment he heard that remark, Revin immediately groaned. Elena’s guess was spot on. His men also did the same, it was obvious that they realized they were also at fault.

Akira then asked Revin.

“Don’t you have some medicines with you?”

“We already used all that we brought. It’s not like we were able to run away from those monsters without getting injured at all.”

“I see, do you want to buy mine then? I still have quite a lot with me.”

“Really? Thanks and sorry, how much is it?”

“2,000,000 Aurum per box.”

“The heck? That’s so expensive!! What’s with that price? Just how much money do you guys want to squeeze out from us?!”

Revin was thunderstruck by the price that he shouted in reflex. The price of that medicine was totally different from the price of the medicines that he and his men usually used.

But Akira replied calmly.

“It’s the same price that I paid when I bought them. I’m not profiting from it, not even a single Aurum. Moreover, these medicines are powerful enough to save you even when you’re already on your death’s door. It’s true that it’s expensive, but it’s way cheaper compared to my life. It’s up to you to decide whether it’s more expensive than your life or not. So, do you want to buy it?”

“…Still no.”

Revin and his men squeezed everything that they had to keep up with Akira, Elena and Sara as they were running through that long hallway. There was no doubt that they would experience severe muscle pain when they get back to the city.

He and his team were trapped for a long time in a situation where they did not have enough money to gather more money. Seeing how there was a younger Hunter in front of them who did well buying better equipment with the money that he saved in order to gather more money, they swore to themselves that they would also do the same from now on.

His men decided that they would stop spending their money on women and alcohol and use it for buying an augmented suit instead. Although It was a different story whether they would still think the same tomorrow too, but at least, they did think so now.

They eventually arrived in front of the stairs leading to the surface.

But Elena suddenly turned back and stared at the hallway that they just passed. Her expression immediately turned grim, Akira and Sara reacted to that by staring back at the hallway too.

Revin and his men, who were barely able to catch up with them, felt that sudden mood change. He then nervously asked Elena while still trying to catch his breath.

“Hey, what’s going on?”

Elena explained their current situation.

“If you don’t want to die, climb the stairs as fast as you can, the monsters are coming.”

“…Hah?”

Revin’s reaction was a little bit late, he was already both mentally and physically tired. He unconsciously did not want to admit that his situation was getting worse and it slowed his mind from processing the situation.

Elena then shouted at him.

“Don’t just stand there and start running!! Do you really want to die that badly!??”

Sounds started echoing from inside the hallway. They were the sounds of monsters’ roars, hissing sounds from machines and some heavy stomping sounds.

Revin and his men also heard those sounds which quickly made them understand what was going on. They started taking the action that they should have taken way sooner as they desperately ran up the stairs with faces filled with terror and fear.

Sara readied her automatic grenade launcher and shot grenade shells toward the hallway. After explosions echoed through the hallway, the sounds from the monsters stopped. But not for long, they started to hear those sounds again from the hallway in no time, and those sounds were getting louder and louder.

Elena turned to Sara.

“Sara, I’ll leave it to you to slow them down. We’ll go to the surface and get ourselves ready to leave this place, so there’s no need to hold this place for too long. You just need to buy some time and quickly retreat after that. If it seems that you won’t be able to hold the monsters back while waiting for Revin and his men to retreat, you can just abandon them.”

Although they did receive an SOS request from Revin’s team, Elena thought it would be all for naught if Sara fell here. They would save Revin’s team if it was possible and just abandon them if that was impossible. That was all there was to it.

“Roger that. I’ll be careful, so you guys need to be careful too, okay?”

Sara smiled when she said that. She then handed the other things that she did not need to Elena and Akira. After Elena and Akira received them, they quickly went up the stairs.

They then came across Revin and his team, who had started climbing the stairs, ahead of them. However, they were already exhausted. Although they were still swinging their legs, they were moving very slowly.

Akira shouted at them.

“Want the medicine now?”

Akira would only wait for an answer until he passed beside them, so they only had a few seconds to answer.

Revin looked at Akira and shouted back.

“Dammit!! Give it to me!”

Akira then dropped a box of medicine beside Revin and his team as he kept running to the surface with Elena without slowing down.

Revin used his leftover power to pick up and open those medicines, he then took a capsule out from the box and swallowed it in a hurry.

He quickly regained his strength, even before the medicine actually started working due to the placebo effect from that 2,000,000 Aurum per box medicine. And when its effect started to kick in for real, as expected of expensive medicine, it immediately boosted his physical condition.

“…This thing works wonders! As expected of 2,000,000 Aurum per box medicine!!”

He quickly handed over the medicine to his men. Now that they had recovered their vigour and power, they started running up the stairs as if they were completely different people from just a moment ago.

Akira and Elena climbed the stairs and reached the surface. They quickly scanned their surroundings and confirmed that there were no monsters near the entrance, they then went to their respective vehicles and got themselves ready to leave that place.

They parked their vehicles not too far from the entrance as not to block Sara’s way out from that ruin, and then they waited for Sara and the other Hunters to come out from the entrance.

Akira looked down the stairs, he could see Revin and his men not too far down below, their expression was a mix of fear from the monsters and hope since they were already close to the surface.

But his expression immediately turned grim. He quickly jumped off from the driver seat and once again walked down the stairs, he could not see Sara behind Revin and his men.

Sara was slowly walking up the stairs while repelling the monsters that were approaching her. Her movements were relatively slow. It was obvious from the way she moved that she was injured. She might have gotten hit by some splinter as the blood that was flowing out from her head had already doused her face in red.

There were many reasons why she got injured, some of the monsters that she was fighting were stronger than the monsters usually found in the underground, some monsters had ranged weaponry, some tended to attack her even if they also injured the other monsters, she had no place to hide and she sometimes did not have enough time to evade the monsters' attacks. And above all, she took too long before she decided to retreat.

Although Sara thought that she was fighting just like usual, in reality, that was not true. If she was fighting like usual, she would not make a fatal mistake like taking too long a time before deciding to retreat. Elena had even told her to just abandon Revin and retreat when the push came to shove. If it was her usual self, she would have retreated sooner.

Sara then realized the reason why she made that fatal mistake.

"…Ahhh, I see, I wanted to show my good side to Akira."

Sara smiled, she was laughing at herself. As a veteran Hunter, she wanted to show off her skills to Akira. She wanted to amaze him by holding back the monsters without any trouble even when she had to protect Revin and his men. She wanted to live up to Akira's expectations since he always looked up at her as a great Hunter.

That feeling disrupted Sara's ability to make the right decision. It made her want to achieve a better result which caused her to take a more dangerous choice. It made her greedy.

Being able to stay collected and keep fighting calmly in that situation was enough to show her ability. Sara herself had no plans to die in that place, she had not given up returning back alive from that place. If only she had a few minutes of break, the nanomachines inside her body would quickly heal her wounds.

But as long as she was in the middle of a fight, her healing rate would be considerably slowed down. Just withstanding the kickback from her gun was enough to aggravate her wounds.

And even if she decided to drop her gun and ran up the stairs, in her current condition, the monsters would reach her first before she could reach the surface. Thus, she had no other choice but to slowly climb up the stairs while suppressing the monsters although it slowed down her healing rate. If she abandoned the only means she had to fight back, the monsters would catch up with her and she would be dead in no time. While on the other hand, she did not have unlimited ammo to fight back the monsters.

According to her experience as a veteran Hunter, it would be bad to keep doing the same thing. But at the same time, her experience was also telling her that there was no other viable choice. Sara just gritted her teeth as she continued fighting back the monsters.

Akira, who was running down the stairs, did not stop even after he spotted Sara and the monsters ahead of her. He did not slow down as he readied his CWH anti-material rifle and took an aim at those monsters.

“Alpha!”

“Leave it to me!”

He showed no hesitation when he asked for Alpha’s help. Alpha suddenly appeared within his view and replied to him, at the same time, her support was back online.

Akira pulled the trigger, he had already loaded his CWH anti-material rifle with CWH special ammo. Thanks to Alpha’s support, his shooting was highly effective, even close to godly. The CWH special ammo that could even easily destroy tanks pierced through the monsters in the front and took out the monsters behind them too.

He did not slow down his shooting, he made quick work of the monsters that were running up the stairs. Due to Alpha’s support, Akira was able to accurately snipe the weak points of his targets. The big monsters that got shot fell down and blocked the other monsters from climbing up the stairs. They then rolled down the stairs while taking some monsters down with them.

The monsters that formed the vanguard quickly fell and died one by one, but even so, the monsters behind them continued pushing forward without a care.

Akira was only carrying his CWH anti-material rifle since he decided to leave anything that might slow him down back in his vehicle, and that included his DVTS minigun. In exchange for the lowered firepower, he loaded CWH special ammo into his CWH anti-material rifle. Thanks to that, he was able to move relatively faster without sacrificing much firepower.

After Alpha quickly confirmed Sara's situation, she then gave a command to Akira.

"She's wounded, but her life is not in danger. Pick her up and start running, it's faster than repelling the monsters while waiting for her to recover."

Akira used the kickback from his rifle to stop his momentum. He then quickly picked Sara up with his left hand and started running up the stairs. While he was ascending the stairs, he continued shooting at the monsters behind him without even looking back at them. Although it seemed like he was shooting randomly, he was actually properly aiming at the monsters with help from Alpha and his shots were also properly hitting those monsters.

Although she was shocked at first, Sara understood that Akira was there to help her. She also understood that she would only slow him down if she made any needless moves, thus she obediently let Akira carry her to the surface.

Elena was still waiting for Akira and Sara on the surface, she quickly noticed that Akira went back down to help Sara, but it was not like she could leave her station too. She decided that the best course of action for her was to wait for Sara and Akira on the surface so that they all could leave the moment they escaped the ruin. Although there were no monsters around at the moment, monsters could appear anytime without notice, she could not afford to drop down her guard there.

Even after some time passed, Sara and Akira did not appear. Although to be more precise, she had been waiting only for a few seconds, but even a second felt too long for Elena and she just could not stand it. And it was enough to make her expression fill with desperation.

Her desperation was also felt by Revin and his team. They were all on Elena's vehicle since Akira left his vehicle with no driver.

Although Revin and his team looked relieved when they boarded her vehicle, looking at how Elena was waiting for Sara instead of leaving that place, they started to feel uneasy.

One of Revin's men mumbled nervously to her.

"…S-say, isn't it bad if we keep staying in this place…"

"Shut it."

Elena snapped back at that guy. There was no trace of hatred when she said those words. Her calm voice carried an invisible pressure that shut that guy as he looked away from Elena.

Then at the next moment, Akira came out from the ruin while carrying Sara. He immediately headed to his vehicle and jumped in. The moment he did that, his vehicle suddenly turned-on on its own.

Elena, who saw that, also quickly started her vehicle. The sudden acceleration threw Revin and his men out of balance and they hurried to grab on to anything.

Akira and Elena quickly sped their vehicle away from the entrance. Right after that, the monsters that were chasing Akira and Sara flooded out from inside that ruin, they were relatively small monsters, small enough to pass through the stairs.

Because he was in a hurry, he just threw Sara on the back seat. Alpha was already driving the vehicle. When Akira was about to sit on the driver seat, Alpha suddenly stopped him.

“Which side?”

Akira turned to the direction where Alpha was pointing at, she was pointing at the entrance to the stairs leading down into the underground ruin. As he focused on the entrance, he felt that something big was trying to force its way out from that stairs as smaller monsters were pushed or even thrown out from that entrance.

Then suddenly, a huge monster jumped out from the stairs. Its size was almost as big as the entrance’s width. It opened its huge mouth and crushed countless monsters inside its mouth.

It looked like a huge snake but its scales resembled a mix-match mosaic of different monsters. There was even something that looked like a broken cannon embedded into its scale. As it forced its way out the stairs, some of its scales got peeled off and dropped to the ground.

Akira dropped his jaw in shock when he saw that huge monster which was way bigger than any other monsters he just fought.

Due to its momentum when it forced its way through the stairs, that huge monster looked like it actually jumped out from the entrance. But after losing its momentum in the air, it then fell down to the ground due to gravity. It landed with a loud bang and crushed all the small monsters underneath its huge body.

That loud bang snapped Akira back to reality, he inadvertently shouted.

“What the heck is that thing!?”

Alpha answered his question.

“I believe that it’s a subspecies of the greedy crocodile. Those monsters that were inside the hallway were not chasing you, they were running away from that greedy crocodile.”

“Greedy crocodile?! I don’t remember seeing a greedy crocodile like that one, you know?!”

“I did say that it’s a subspecies of greedy crocodile, right? Remember that greedy crocodile evolves according to what they eat, and since it was living in that hallway for a long time, it might have adapted its body shape to the hallway. Now then, don’t just stand there and start shooting. Don’t shoot at that big monster, aim for the smaller ones instead. If its food runs to your direction, there’s a good chance that you’ll get caught up in its feeding time. I’ll handle the driving, so you should handle the monsters.”

Akira jumped to the backside of his vehicle, grabbed both CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun and aimed at the small monsters that were running away from that huge greedy crocodile before pulling the trigger.

Sara quickly turned back and helped Akira too. They were aiming at the monsters that were running in their direction. Bullets from Akira and grenade shells from Sara rained down at those monsters and massacred them.

The monsters that slowed down after getting hit by Akira’s and Sara’s barrage were quickly chomped and swallowed by the huge greedy crocodile. It was indeed a very greedy crocodile. It kept chomping down the smaller monsters no matter whether they were biological monsters or mechanical monsters. Since its attention was focused on the prey near it, it ignored Akira and Elena who were speeding away from it.

Elena was driving her vehicle at a high speed. She was trying to catch up with Akira’s vehicle since she would block Akira and Sara’s aim if she drove behind them. But in order to do that, Elena was driving pretty recklessly.

Revin and his men desperately clung on anything they could find so that they would not fall off the vehicle. They were sure that Elena would not stop the car to pick them up if any of them fell off and it was obvious that the huge monster would be happy to munch at them if that happened. Their faces were filled with terror as they were holding tight and screaming on top of their lungs.

Akira and Elena blazed through the wreckages and rubbles while speeding away from the monsters behind them. As they were getting away from that place, the huge monster started to look smaller and smaller, and when that huge monster was no longer visible with naked eyes, they knew they had finally escaped from those monsters.

Akira and Sara looked at each other, then gulped down at the same time. It was unclear whether they did it because they felt so relieved or it was because of something else, but then they suddenly started laughing.

Akira and Elena were driving straight to Kugamayama city. After they got away from that huge greedy crocodile, they did not get to encounter any more monsters on their way.

Putting some more distance between that monster and them, they stopped the vehicle after checking the safety around the area. They then resumed their drive once Akira and Sara moved to Elena's vehicle and Revin and his men moved to Akira's vehicle.

Elena looked worried as she asked Sara.

"Sara, are you really okay?"

"I'm fine, don't worry. I won't die just because of something like this, not to mention, my wounds are mostly healed already."

Sara smiled, affirming that she was really okay. As in matter of fact, she had already recovered to the point that she would be able to fight normally in case if they encountered more monsters on their way back to the city.

When Elena saw Sara was bleeding from her head, she was extremely worried about her.

“Well, I guess it’s fine if you say so. Good grief, don’t scare me like that. Just because your body is stronger than a normal human, it’s not enough of a reason to do reckless things, you know. I did tell you not to be reckless, didn’t I?”

Sara’s body was enhanced by the nanomachines. Thus her body was way stronger than that of a normal human. But it did not make her invulnerable, she would still die when seriously injured.

“I’m sorry, things are going so well lately that I guess I got a little bit too cocky. I’ll be more careful next time.”

Sara smiled as she apologized to Elena, but her smile was clouded compared to her usual smile. It somehow felt like she forced herself to smile in order to avoid getting herself too depressed.

Elena looked at Sara and decided to stop dwelling on that subject. As long as Sara returned back alive, felt sorry for her action, and promised to do better next time, that was enough for Elena. After all, scolding her too much would only be counter-effective.

Sara herself knew that she was feeling rather down, so in order to change the mood, she smiled and turned to Akira to thank him.

“Akira, thank you for saving me.”

Elena quickly followed up with a bright voice.

“I also feel grateful to you, Akira. Thank you.”

Akira was a bit surprised by their sudden thank you, so he flustered when he replied back to Elena and Sara.

“Don’t mention it. And I’m sorry, it seems that the ruin is way more dangerous than I thought. There’s also that monster right at the end. I’m just glad that everyone got out alive.”

Seeing how Akira seemed down since he was feeling responsible for what happened, Elena smiled and said to him.

“It’s not your fault. Exploring an unexplored ruin is always dangerous. We both knew that well when we decided to come to that ruin.”

Sara also agreed with her.

“Elena is right. It’s not something that you should feel guilty about.”

“Moreover, although it sounds cruel to say this, but if we had returned back as soon as we finished collecting relics, today’s exploration would have ended up without any trouble, right…? We might really have bad luck when it comes to meeting other Hunters in the old-world ruins.”

Elena meant to say that as a joke, but now that she said it, it made her think about that possibility for real. Sara and Akira groaned as they realized that what Elena said might be true.

Akira felt that the subject of their conversation was leading toward a bad direction, thus he tried to remember anything that contradicted that way of thinking as he presented it to Elena and Sara.

“Uhmm, well, I met Sara-san and Elena-san for the first time in an old-world ruin, so I don’t think it’s all that bad… Or at least, that’s what I think.”

Akira realized that he said something that was way out of his character and felt rather embarrassed.

“W-well, you’re right about that. I guess I was just a bit too paranoid.”

“T-that’s true.”

It might be because Akira’s embarrassment propagated to Sara and Elena, they stuttered when they replied back. The mood between the three of them felt a bit awkward.

The only one who was not embarrassed at all and was smiling like usual was Alpha.

“You’re right, after all, you got to meet me in the old-world ruin too. So I can reassure you that it’s not true.”

“…That’s a good point, but you’re not a Hunter, right?”

Alpha made a displeased face and said.

“Good grief, you should just agree with me here, you know? We’re talking about compatibility here, or are you saying that you don’t like me?”

“Not at all. You really help me in a lot of ways.”

After talking with Alpha, Akira regained his calm. He also forgot about the embarrassing thing that just happened.

Elena suddenly came up with another subject, it felt like she did that intentionally to hide her embarrassment.

“Now then, once we return back to the city, there are a lot of things that we need to do like going to the Hunter Office to take care of the SOS request. So I’m thinking of deciding things that we can decide here while we have the chance. I’ll make some suggestions, just tell me if you don’t agree with any of it.”

“Alright.”

“First of all, about the money that we get from today’s exploration. Since Sara would cry if we sell all of the relics that we gathered today and divide it equally among the three of us, so I think it’s better if each of us sells our own relics, is that okay?”

If they did not do that, Sara would have to sell the old-world underclothing that she gathered just to buy it herself later. And of course, she would have to pay more than when she sold them if she did that.

“I’m okay with that, but then, what should we do about the relics that we will get from Revin?”

“Hmm, Sara, do you have any good ideas? If not, then we might as well sell them all and divide the money equally.”

“Well, can you let me buy the underclothing at market price before selling the rest?”

“Even if you say so, who exactly is going to decide the market price for it? And how? Even if you find a way to do that, are you sure that you can get an accurate price? Also, are you going to buy them at market price or at the selling price of relics merchants?”

It was not like Elena was trying to pressure Sara, she just wanted Sara to know that if they picked another option, then they would have to make a lot of adjustments.

But Sara, who really wanted to get the old-world underclothing, made another suggestion.

“…Then how about equally dividing the relics between us?”

“How exactly are you going to do that while making sure that the three of us get the same worth of relics? It’s not easy to decide the worth of a relic. So who is going to do that? I don’t mind if we want to talk it out, but I’m not sure that it’ll end up peacefully.”

“In that case, how about asking a relic appraiser to do that for us…?”

“Sure, but which relic appraiser would we ask for help? And who will pay for the cost too? What if we find out that there’s a big gap between the prices of the relics and we are not able to come to an agreement on how to divide them, then what should we do?”

Elena pointed out various difficulties with Sara’s idea. Akira himself did not really care how exactly they were going to divide the relics, he was just going to agree with any plan that Sara and Elena came up with.

He mumbled as if it was none of his business.

“Dividing relics sounds really rough.”

“Well, to be honest, Elena is actually intentionally pointing out all the details so you can use this chance to learn how to negotiate. If you go out hunting for relics with other people, you’ll have to negotiate with them on how to divide the relics just like now.”

“Ohh, I see, that’s true.”

When Alpha told that to Akira, he thought that doing something like this would be a huge pain in the ass. Some of the Hunters who wanted to avoid things like this tend to have a proxy to do it on their behalf and they would agree with anything that their proxies decided on. Akira somehow understood the feeling of those Hunters.

He suddenly got an idea and decided to voice it out.

“Those relics were originally given to us in place of the 3,000,000 Aurum reward from the SOS request. So if anyone here wants to buy them, then how about having that person buy those relics with 3,000,000 Aurum? And then if we divide that 3,000,000 Aurum equally between the other two, it should be pretty fair, right? If no one would buy them, I’ll do it. After all, I’m the one who came up with this idea and it’s a good chance for me to learn how to sell relics too.”

Sara listened to Akira’s suggestion and said to him.

“In that case, I’ll buy them. It was me who originally wanted those relics. I’ll transfer the money to your account later, is that okay?”

“Okay.”

Elena then moved to the next subject.

“I guess that ends the subject about the relics. The next problem is regarding the information about the ruin. I’m thinking of selling the information about that ruin, then we can divide the money that we get from selling that info equally among us after we deduct the cost of ammo that we used today. But of course, I won’t sell the info if Akira is against it. So, are you okay with that, Akira?”

“Sure. I don’t mind at all.”

“Akira, are you really okay with that? The information about the location of that ruin, the interior of that ruin, and the monsters in that ruin will quickly spread, you know? There might be still some expensive relics left in the deeper part of that ruin, are you sure that you won’t regret it?”

“It’s okay. To be honest, I have no plans to go to that ruin with that huge monster ever again.”

It was obvious from his expression that Akira really did not want to go to that ruin ever. So Elena and Sara just smiled bitterly.

Elena then said.

“Let’s at least make use of that information to earn as much money as possible. But still, to think something like that would appear, searching an unexplored ruin is really a dangerous thing.”

Sara smiled and said.

“You can say that again. It would be a great help if that huge thing got stuck in the small hallway.”

All of them laughed together, after that, Elena continued.

“Alright then, I’ll be responsible for selling the information that we gathered today. Akira, send me how much you spent for your ammo later.”

“Okay.”

“And that will take care of most of the things. Now, let’s just hope that nothing happens until we safely reach the city.”

Elena’s prayer might have been answered since they did not encounter any trouble on their way back to Kugamayama city. But no matter what it was, the fact was that Elena, Akira and Sara were able to return back alive.

They stopped their vehicles in the wasteland not too far away from the city. There, Revin handed over the relics rewards to Elena and Sara, who then said goodbye to Akira and headed to the city. It seemed that there were a lot of things that they had to do like taking care of the SOS request and selling the information.

Akira was left together with Revin and his men in the wasteland. He then told them to board off his vehicle. Seeing how Akira was still sitting on the driver seat after they boarded off, Revin asked him.

“Hey, what’s the meaning of this? Are you telling us to walk to the city?”

“Don’t worry, the request is to escort you guys back to the city, so I’ll properly escort you guys to the city.”

“Then why did you tell us to get off from your vehicle?”

“…? What is it?”

Revin clearly looked confused, but to be honest, he and his men actually knew what Akira was talking about. And as expected, their guess was not wrong.

Akira asked them with a flat tone.

“The medicine, 2,000,000 Aurum, how are you planning to pay for it?”

Revin and his men averted their eyes.

Silavin: Haha. I picture adults looking away like kids in front of a kid. What a cute sight.

Akira was sitting on the driver seat, talking with Alpha to kill time, while waiting for Revin to finish his discussion with his men.

Now that Akira had calmed down after he got out of that ruin, he started to feel a tinge of regret.

"…But still, it's such a waste and it's really unfortunate. There should still be relics in that ruin. If only we were able to search the ruin more and carry all of those relics before the ruin somehow activated, I wonder just how much money that would have fetched me."

Alpha smiled and cheered him.

"It's an unexplored ruin after all. Things like this are normal. We still have some leftover data from the Lion Steel Corp, so we can just place our hope at our next location."

"You're right… Haah…."

Although that day he was able to return with some profits, he was not able to return with a lot of riches from an unexplored ruin as he had wished.

Akira himself thought that there should be still a lot of relics left in that ruin, so it would be hard for him to simply forget about that ruin.

Revin and his men were sitting not too far from Akira, they were discussing how to pay for Akira's medicines. One of them looked pretty depressed as he asked Revin.

"…So, what exactly are we going to do now?"

Revin's expression was not much different from that man.

"Isn't that exactly why we're sitting here discussing? Tell me if you have any good ideas."

"Even if you ask me, it's 2,000,000 Aurum, you know? Can we really afford to pay that kind of money? Or more like, you're the one who bought it, so why should we pay for it too?"

Revin looked displeased as he said.

"Are you seriously going to blame me for it? Would it have been better for you if we had kept climbing the stairs with that speed and got killed by the monsters?"

"I didn't mean it like that."

"Then what did you mean by that remark?"

Revin and his men started to make a ruckus, but the moment Akira glanced at them, they quickly calmed down. Another guy from Revin's team then said.

"For real though, what are we going to do now…"

They were all in trouble since they had no idea how to pay Akira.

Revin and his men were talking about the medicine that they bought from Akira which cost them 2,000,000 Aurum. Akira asked them to tell him who would pay and when and where he would receive the payment.

Revin and his men were 5 members in total, so dividing it equally, it would be 400,000 Aurum per person. It was not a huge amount. But if they paid that money, they would not be able to buy ammo for their next expedition. After all, they still had to pay for their food, accommodation, and ammo. They simply did not have enough money to spare.

Another guy then hopelessly said.

"…I guess we have no other choice but to sell our relics."

Another guy quickly refuted his suggestion.

"Don't you remember that we paid them with our relics?"

"We only gave them the relics that we found inside that room. I'm sure all of you are hiding other relics that you found elsewhere, right? If we pooled them together, we might be able to get at least 2,000,000 Aurum."

They then looked at each other, they all understood what that guy was talking about. Revin sighed and took out all the relics that he was hiding, the other guys who saw that also gave up their relics.

One among them reluctantly took out the relics that he was hiding. Revin twitched as he saw that because that man only offered clothes.

Revin immediately called that man.

"You there, you took out nothing but clothes though."

"But I found only these clothes in the ruin."

"Do you really think they'll believe you? They'll definitely doubt it, you know. Just take them back, we can sell it later and divide the money among us."

That guy then retrieved those clothes. Revin looked at all the relics lined up in front of him and made a long 'hmmmm'.

“…To be honest, I’m not even sure we can get enough money with just these relics. But well, I guess at least we can use this to negotiate.”

He then went to Akira.

After Akira listened to what Revin had to say, he asked about something that bothered him.

“Even the relics you found in the room that looked like in good shape were only worth about 3,000,000 Aurum, right? So like, are you sure the rest of the relics would be able to fetch you 2,000,000 Aurum?”

“Well, I think it’s at least possible. Let’s just head back to the city for now, after all, I can’t really ask merchants or appraisers the worth of the relics if we stay here, right?”

There were certain areas in the city where the public order was really bad to the point that it would not be strange for Hunters, who returned from the wasteland, to get robbed. But even so, those areas were still safer compared to the lawless wasteland.

Once they were inside the city, even if Revin and his men had no money to pay Akira, Akira won’t be able to just shoot them where they stood. In contrast to that, something like that would likely happen outside the city or in the wasteland. That was why Revin wanted to reach the city as soon as possible.

Akira did not notice that at all. The only reason why he was staying outside the city was so that it would be easy to chase Revin and his men if they tried to run away.

Akira thought for a bit before saying.

“You only need someone to appraise those relics here, right?”

Akira pulled out his information terminal and contacted Katsuragi. The call got connected soon after he pressed the call button.

“Akira, huh? It’s rare for you to call me like this, is it something profitable?”

“It depends on your ability as a merchant.”

“I see, it’s money talk then. So, what do you have?”

“I just returned back from the old-world ruin with relics, can you come here and check them?”

“Sure, but since you called me, you do have the relics worth calling me there, right?”

“I got those relics from an unexplored ruin, they are from the underground ruin. They do look pretty expensive though. And also, if you come here to pick them up, I’ll at least tell you where I found them.”

“I see, send me your location… Alright then, I’m coming there now, just wait for a bit.”

Katsuragi then ended the call. After that, Akira turned to Revin.

“Just wait for a bit.”

“O-okay.”

Revin frowned, he looked rather pale. He was not expecting for Akira to know a merchant whom he could call over all the way to where they were.

It did not take that long before Katsuragi’s trailer arrived there, it was one of the benefits of having a portable shop.

Akira lined the relics in front of Katsuragi. After Katsuragi finished checking all of those relics, he then made an offer to Akira.

“Let’s see, how about 8,000,000 Aurum?”

“Got it, we have a deal.”

“Nice! I’ll transfer the money right away… So then, how about those relics? You’re not going to sell them?”

Katsuragi glanced over at the relic pile on the backseat of Akira’s vehicle.

“Those are the relic types that you won’t buy. You did teach me that, remember?”

“Well, that’s true, but I can at least take a look at them. It’s just me trying to build a good relationship with you. Even for the clothes, if you have enough of them, I can even make a connection especially to sell those types of relics, you know? Well, even if I say that, it’ll take quite a lot of time to build a new route like that. But since I’ve been dealing with a lot of wholesalers lately, it’ll at least still turn in some money.”

“Thanks for the offer but it’s fine. I found another route to sell those types of relics, you see. So I’m thinking of bringing relics that you won’t buy to that person.”

“…I see. Okay.”

Although Katsuragi was smiling on the surface, he was cursing deep inside. When he gave the explanation about how to sell relics to Akira before, he intentionally evaluated some of the relics with a lower price, and those types of relics were clothes and small accessories. He was actually thinking of intentionally not buying them first, and then buying them for cheap later as to make Akira feel indebted to him.

Akira’s fighting ability was indeed amazing but he had no knowledge on how to sell the relics that he gathered. Or at least that was what Katsuragi thought. That was why he mixed some false information when he explained how to sell relics to Akira. He wanted to paint an impression so that Akira thought it was hard to sell a particular type of relics, and later make Akira feel indebted to him by offering to buy those relics at a cheap price from Akira.

But it seemed that Akira had taken care of that part himself. So Katsuragi’s evaluation of Akira slowly changed because of that.

Katsuragi did regret the fact that he could not earn more profit, but it was not like he could keep himself occupied by that. So he just changed the subject and talked about his goods.

“Now that you got more money and I’m already here too, how about you buy something from me?”

But Akira pointed at Revin and his men and said.

“Before that, can you check their relics too?”

“Are they your friends? Did you go hunting relics with them?”

“No, but I found them inside the ruin that I was exploring.”

“Well, it seems that I can put my hopes up for their relics then.”

Katsuragi smiled and went towards Revin. While Katsuragi was checking Revin’s relics, Akira went to Katsuragi’s trailer to spend his time browsing weapons and other stuff.

After Katsuragi finished checking the relics, he looked disappointed and said.

“Well, I guess the total worth is only about 500,000 Aurum.”

“500,000 Aurum?! Are you trying to scam us or something?!”

Revin panicked when he heard Katsuragi’s statement.

When Akira said that Revin and his men went to the same ruin as him, Katsuragi thought that he could put his hopes up on their relics. But compared to Akira, their equipment looked way cheaper and the relics that they brought were a huge disappointment for him. Some of the relics they brought were dirty or even badly damaged, and it was rather obvious that they were not some kind of high ranking Hunter. These were the reasons why Katsuragi was only willing to pay that amount of money for those relics.

Katsuragi looked like he was in a bad mood, he did not even bother to show a fake smile as he said to Revin.

“That’s the amount of money I’m willing to pay. Even if you bring them to the Hunter Office, I think you’ll get even less money. If you don’t agree with that amount, then just don’t sell them to me, I won’t force you to sell them to me either. Well, later then.”

After Katsuragi said that, he turned and was about to go back to Akira, but Revin suddenly stopped him.

“Please wait!! Are you going to tell him that too!? Can you please not do that?”

That amount of money was not even enough to pay half the price of Akira’s medicine. Revin was terrified of how Akira would react to that, so he desperately tried to stop Katsuragi.

Katsuragi noticed that something was going on there and looked a bit surprised.

But his expression suddenly changed to a smile as he kindly asked Revin.

“What’s going on here? You can at least tell me, you know. I’ve been doing business with that Akira for quite some time now, so I might be able to help you out.”

Katsuragi smelled a chance to make a lot of money, so he did not even try to hide his smile.

After listening to Revin’s explanation, he sympathized with them and said.

“That sounds rough. I do business with Hunters, so I can understand how rough it is. Well, I’m glad that he saved you. Now then, since having you guys work hard and gather a lot of relics also helps my business, I can at least lend you some help, you know.”

Revin’s face looked both grateful and a little suspicious.

“I-is that so? So what exactly are you offering?”

“Of course, I can offer to smooth things out between you guys and him. But still, it’s not easy dealing with Akira, you know. Negotiating with him is not an easy task at all. I do want you to at least remember that. You might also know that Akira is a strong Hunter. His fighting skill is nothing to scoff at and he’s also quite a violent boy. He’s actually protecting a certain gang in the slum city and I heard that he doesn’t hesitate when it comes to killing other people. From the rumour that I heard, there was a time when a certain gang in the slum city that was hostile to the gang that he’s protecting went to negotiate with him, but they got cocky during the negotiation and Akira killed that guy with no hesitation at all. He then dragged the corpse to the base of the gang that sent that guy.”

“…T-that boy is insane.”

Revin who was listening to Katsuragi’s story could not help but word out his impression about Akira.

Katsuragi noticed that Revin was misunderstanding something there, but he did not bother to correct it as he continued.

“You can say that again. That’s why, to be honest, I don’t want to ask him to reduce the amount of money that he demands or to give more time to get that money. I’m sure you can understand me, right?”

“Th-then, what should we do…?”

“That’s why you can just leave it to me. Although it might be a bad deal for you guys, I hope you can understand that it’s the best deal that you guys can currently get. I’ll try my best to talk with him. As for my reward, well, when you guys become Hunters who can earn a lot of money, you guys should come to my shop to buy stuff. So, what do you think? Of course, I won’t stop you if you want to do something about it yourself… But to be honest, I don’t recommend that.”

Katsuragi urged Revin to make a decision, but it was a different story whether they actually had any other choices or not.

Revin and his men gave up and decided to place their hopes on Katsuragi's offer.

Akira was still browsing inside the trailer. Most of the goods were weapons for Hunters, but there was also some other stuff in display inside that trailer.

He took a certain object from one of the displays.

"Relic bag, huh. I guess I'll buy some."

There were all types of bags lined up on that display, bag for clothes, bag for machines, waterproof bag, bulletproof bag, electric-proof bag, shockproof bag, all types of bags. Some of them were single-use bags while others were reusable bags. And of course, their prices also varied.

"There are all kinds of bags though. Alpha, which one do you think should I buy?"

"I'm not sure either. It's not like they're that big anyway, so how about buying multiple types?"

"I guess I'll do that."

Akira picked some bags and put them inside the shopping basket.

He then picked another thing.

"Waterproof spray, huh… It can protect weapons from moulds. Special offer, buy now to get a shock protector as a bonus… Well, I buy this kind of weapon maintenance tools from Shizuka's shop, so I guess I don't really need it."

Akira put that back and reached for another object.

"Jamming smoke… Yuzumo Corp General-Purpose A28 type. To check for the compatibility with your information-gathering device, please check the composition and confirm with the maker of your information-gathering device… Is it better if I have this too, Alpha?"

“It’ll also lower the sensitivity of the information-gathering device that you are using, so I don’t really recommend it.”

“I don’t need it then.”

Akira put it back on the display.

While he was in the middle of browsing stuff, Katsuragi suddenly entered the trailer and engaged Akira with a smile.

“Oh! So you’re finally interested in buying my goods, huh? Make sure to buy a lot of things, okay? All of them are good stuff!”

“You’re done checking their relics?”

“Yeah, and I heard about their situation too. Just wait here for a bit.”

Katsuragi went inside the back room and returned with the medicine that he sold to Akira the other day.

“Here, you basically just need a replacement for the medicine that you sold to them, right? So, is this enough?”

Akira seemed suspicious of Katsuragi, it was true that he had no complaint as long as he got his medicine back.

“Yeah, so, what are you scheming?”

“Don’t say that. I’m just advertising my business, I do this so that they’ll frequent my shop. Even I won’t do something like this for free, you know. I’ll make sure that they’ll pay me for that medicine.”

“I see, so that’s the real reason, huh. Sure then.”

“Alright then, with this, they’re indebted to me now. But with that being said, I recommend you not to hang out with them too much. I’m not sure what happened, but they’re pretty scared of you for some reason.”

“…Well, a lot of things happened back in the ruin after all.”

It was not like Akira had no idea why Revin and his men would be scared of him. It was nothing strange to be scared of an unknown Hunter who was way stronger than yourself, not to mention that Elena was planning to abandon them at first and Akira did agree with her. Akira did not try to think any deeper as he thought that it was to be expected for them to be scared of him.

“Is that so? Well, it’s none of my business anyway, so I guess I shouldn’t stick my nose there. Ah right, you’re in the middle of shopping, right? If you have any questions, just ask away, I can explain to you anything about the goods here. Oh! relics bag, huh. In that case, I recommend you to get this one.”

Katsuragi smiled happily as he kept talking to Akira. He was trying to prolong Akira’s stay inside the trailer as long as possible to make it look like he was having a difficult negotiation with him.

Akira finished shopping about 30 minutes later. He ended up buying a lot of things. As he was looking at his shopping bag, he hoped that he did not buy anything that he did not need.

Katsuragi then saw Akira off as they left the trailer.

“Akira, you can just head back home. I’ll take Revin and his men back to the city. Of course, I’ll have them buy some of my stuff on our way back too. I’ll also gather the information about the ruin from them.”

“Is that so? Alright, later then.”

Akira then got in his car and left that place.

Katsuragi’s smile vanished and was replaced by a deeply serious expression, he then turned to Revin and walked towards him.

Seeing Katsuragi approaching them, Revin and his men asked him.

“S-so how was it?”

Katsuragi’s serious expression did not change.

“…We made a deal. There were some difficulties, but I ended up temporarily paying for your debt. As long as you guys don’t approach Akira, I’m sure he won’t do anything to you. I think.”

“I-I see, thank goodness.”

Revin let out a sigh of relief, he thought that he was able to avoid the imminent danger.

But then Katsuragi apologetically said to Revin and his men.

“…So then, well, in the end, each of you owes me 400,000 Aurum. I know that it’ll cause inconvenience in your daily Hunter activities, but I hope that you’ll understand. We’ll talk about the interest and the other stuff regarding the debt later. I’m sorry.”

“…Debt, huh?”

Revin and his men frowned, all of them were aware that most of the Hunters with debt ended up tragically, and now they had taken a step closer to such a tragic end.

“I don’t think I even need to remind you of this, but you guys will pay it eventually, right? In case if you don’t… I’m sorry but I think I’ll ask for Akira’s help. I don’t want to do that, but I have my reputation to uphold as a merchant, you see.”

Seeing how Katsuragi looked pitifully at them, Revin and his men’s faces turned pale.

“Well then, how about we discuss the details inside my trailer.”

As Katsuragi walked back to his trailer, Revin and his men followed behind with heavy steps.

Katsuragi, who was leading Revin and his men to his trailer, smiled in secret.

__*__*__*__

A few days after that expedition.

Inside a certain pub somewhere in Kugamayama city's downtown. A certain man was sitting on a table, although there were 6 glasses of beer on that table, that man was sitting alone. He was the person who sold that information about the ruin to Revin.

The ruin that Akira discovered was named Yonozuka station ruin. It seemed that it was the name of the subway station inside that ruin. One of the Hunters, who explored that ruin, found the nameplate of the station and that name then got adopted as the official name of that ruin.

Since Elena sold the information about that ruin, it spread quickly among the Hunters. Although the information had spread widely, there were barely any Hunters exploring that ruin. It was because the presence of that huge monster was also included in the information that Elena sold as well as the fact that there was a good chance the monsters in Kuzusuhara ruin underground city used the subway tunnel to go to that ruin.

Since even the Hunters, who had experience in dealing with the monsters in the underground city when they were guarding the forward base, had to run away from that ruin to stay alive, the other Hunters could easily grasp just how dangerous the Yonozuka Station Ruin was. Because of that, the Hunters who thought that they were not strong enough to challenge that place avoided going to Yonozuka station ruin.

Some Hunters thought that it was just fake information in order to prevent other Hunters from exploring that ruin. But these Hunters then ended up contributing to the number of Hunters who went to that ruin and never returned.

Some of the skilled Hunters, who were confident in themselves, dared to go to that ruin to collect some of the many relics still left inside. But it was a completely different story whether they could return back alive or not, it all depended on these Hunters' skills.

That man was the only person who returned back alive after exploring Yonozuka station ruin. It was him and his team who activated that ruin.

When they reached the home platform of Yonozuka station, they messed with the controls there and activated the facility. Then monsters flooded out from the tunnel and killed everyone except that man.

The reason why he was spreading that information was as a form of revenge. He thought that if he kept sending Hunters there, someone might kill the monsters that killed his friends.

Since that man was selling the info cheaply, he did not earn much money from it. His dream of finding an unexplored ruin and getting rich had been crushed and all his close friends were dead.

All the money that he got from selling that information was used to buy expensive alcohols. He would spend his days drinking those alcohols while reminiscing about his dead friends.

Meanwhile, in the other place, Akira was getting ready to go out to the wasteland again. Although he had no plans to go to that particular unexplored ruin, he was still planning to find the other unexplored ruins. In order to do that, he used the data that he acquired from the Lion Steel Corp's terminal to help him search for unexplored ruins.

As Akira was about to turn on the vehicle inside the garage, Alpha who was sitting on the driver's assistant seat suddenly said to him.

"Akira, there's a notification from the Hunter Office."

"A notification?"

Akira pulled out his information terminal and checked the notification.

"Bounty Info, notification for new bounty monsters…"

Akira looked puzzled as he checked the details of that notification.

It was not the usual monster-hunting request, it was a special bounty request with fixed prize money and a huge monetary reward. This type of request was usually issued for strong monsters that did not fit the place that they were in or the monsters that caused damage to the city's economy. These monsters were known as bounty monsters.

That notification worked both ways, it would attract the attention of the Hunters who had enough skill to hunt those bounty monsters as well as to warn the other Hunters to be careful of those monsters. After all, if those Hunters, who went to the old-world ruin to gather relics, got killed and are unable to bring back the important old-world relics to the city, it would cause trouble for the city too.

While on the other hand, it was the perfect chance for the Hunters who were confident in their skills to make a name for themselves. When a Hunter took out a bounty monster, his name would also be announced as the person who killed that bounty monster. Not only would he get a huge amount of money, his Hunter rank would receive a huge boost, his Hunter record would be decorated with that achievement, and his name would also receive renown. Every time a new bounty request came out in the eastern district, skilled Hunters would flood the wasteland to hunt for that bounty monster.

There were 4 new bounty monsters. Their names, descriptions, bounty prizes, and other details were publicly posted in the Hunter Office. As for their location, they were only able to draw a big radius as to where they might be roaming. That area included Yonozuka station ruin that Akira explored the other day.

Akira's expression turned grim, he remembered that huge greedy crocodile.

"Alpha, about this bounty notification…"

"I think that monster is one of them. Since there are 4 bounty monsters, I guess more similar monsters came out to the surface. Although there were traces of battles in many places, we found no traces of corpses. It is likely that corpses were eaten by the other greedy crocodiles while they were on their way to the surface. There's a good chance the monsters that left those traces in the hallway left that ruin and attacked Hunters and the other monsters that they encountered."

In that particular hallway, there were traces of battles, but strangely enough, there were no monster corpses nor dead Hunters. As Akira expected, it might have been because some kind of monster had eaten all the leftover corpses. Then that particular monster might have evolved, and after it grew stronger, it might have started preying on the other weaker monsters around it and grew even stronger to the point that it was dangerous enough for the City Management to warrant a bounty request.

Akira stepped down from the vehicle without saying anything. Alpha then asked him.

“Are you not going to search for unexplored ruins today?”

“Yeah, if I go out to the wasteland, I feel like my bad luck will get me to meet one of those bounty monsters after all.”

Alpha smiled after hearing his reply.

“You’re right. We can’t underestimate your bad luck after all, so I guess it’s the right choice to not go out today, huh.”

Akira pouted, but he just obediently returned back to his house.

After that, he spent his days studying inside his room and training himself.

Rebuild World – Chapter 88, Shopping With Sheryl

Akira was strolling with Sheryl in the Kugamayama city's lower district. He was fulfilling the promise he made the other day.

Since the report said that one of the bounty monsters was spotted in the wasteland somewhere near the city, Akira decided to watch the situation for a while before going out to the wasteland again. He was worried that his bad luck might get him to meet that monster the moment he went out to the wasteland. Accompanying Sheryl doing shopping was also for wasting time while waiting for the situation to get better.

Sheryl and Akira were heading to the market around the big Hunter Office branch that was attached to the wall. The area around this Hunter Office was a relatively safe area compared to the other places in the lower district. Because of that, most of the expensive shops and stands gathered around this area.

But to be more precise, the truly luxurious and expensive shops were located inside the inner wall and it was impossible for Akira and Sheryl to go there. So in short, the shops in this area were only expensive compared to the standard in the lower district and they gathered here since this area was relatively safer compared to the rest of the lower district.

Sheryl was walking happily next to Akira when Akira suddenly asked her.

“Although you said that you’re going to buy shoes, are you sure you want to buy shoes there? Only expensive shoes are available over there, you know?”

In reality, Akira never shopped in that place and he knew almost nothing about the shops in that area. It was all information provided by Alpha.

“That’s what I found in the network. Well, I’m not sure if that information is fake or not though.”

It seemed that Alpha could not affirm nor refute the information that she told to Akira.

“Alpha, It’s rare for you not being able to say anything about it.”

It was rare for Alpha to say something like that, Akira wondered. Sheryl looked hesitant as she said.

“I couldn’t find any shoes that matched the clothes that you gave me. I guess that place should have fitting shoes for me. If it’s too expensive, I’ll just give up.”

Akira looked over Sheryl. She was wearing one of the clothes that he gave to her. It was true that compared to her dress, her current shoes looked old and shabby. Since it was shoes that she bought from Katsuragi, they were more tailored towards exploring the wasteland. Not to mention, since the size of the dress was bigger than her actual size, her overall appearance looked a bit weird. But it was rather understandable since Akira could not find old-world shoes that might fit that dress.

Although it also depended on the condition of the clothes, most of the old-world clothes were considered expensive goods. So in order to get shoes that might fit that dress, she might not have any other choice but to go to the market around that area.

When a small child from the slum city went to one of those expensive shops, he or she would normally get kicked out. Even for Sheryl who came in that dress, the chance of her getting kicked out was still pretty high if they knew where she came from. That was also one of the reasons why she was going there with Akira. If she was accompanied by a successful Hunter, the chance of her getting kicked out would be considerably lowered.

Akira and Sheryl continued walking through the lower district toward their destination. The shop that they were heading to was a shop that Alpha randomly picked from the network, Alpha was actually guiding Akira there.

Of course, Sheryl didn’t know anything about it. Seeing how Akira did not hesitate as they proceeded through that area without getting lost, she thought that he must have frequented that area to the point that he remembered the layout.

They eventually reached their destination. It was a luxurious looking boutique. If he was the past Akira, he would have hesitated to go in. But since he was once invited by Shiori to a luxurious restaurant, Akira was able to enter that shop without showing hesitation.

Sheryl quickly followed behind him. To be honest, she was feeling very nervous, but since she had learned how to hide it, she entered the shop with a calm expression.

A female clerk quickly welcomed them as they entered, she was Kashua, the owner of the shop.

Kashua glanced at Akira. [He is a young boy Hunter with an augmented suit and properly maintained rifles, there should be no problem.]

Kashua then turned her attention to Sheryl.

[There is something strange about her appearance. The dress that she is wearing seems like an old-world dress, in short, an expensive dress. And she sure has put extra effort to make such a big dress look less weird on her. But compared to that dress, she is using shabby and dirty looking shoes. But anyway, she must be here as the Hunter boy's companion. So, there should be no problem.]

Kashua identified Akira and Sheryl as worthy customers. Thus she put on her business smile as she welcomed them.

"Thank you for coming to our shop, what can we do for you today?"

"Uhh, we're here looking for girl shoes."

After Akira said that, Kashua turned to Sheryl and looked at her shoes one more time.

"But of course! Please come in, I'll guide you to the shoe section."

Kashua's expression did not change as she guided Akira and Sheryl through her shop.

Sheryl followed Kashua's guide. Not too long after that, she was sitting on a chair having a hard time deciding among all the shoes lined up in front of her. All those shoes were recommended for her by Kashua. Sheryl was making a super serious face, all of those shoes that Kashua recommended were wonderful shoes. Even Sheryl was able to know that much, but because of that, the price of those shoes was also pretty high and she could not pay for those shoes with the money that she brought with her that day. She also noticed that Kashua slowly lowered the quality and the price of the shoes that she was recommending to Sheryl every time she brought a new pair of shoes.

One of the reasons why Sheryl was looking for new shoes was for selling the relics that Akira entrusted to her. She would be able to make a better impression by wearing matching shoes when selling those relics. She knew very well that putting a good overall appearance would be beneficial during a negotiation. In order for others to not look down on her, she was searching for shoes that would fit her dress. She was thinking hard on how to do that with the limited amount of budget that she had.

While Sheryl was busy doing that, Akira was walking around the shop, browsing the apparels there. Inside that shop, mannequins were used to show how the dresses would look when they were put on. Akira frowned a bit when he looked at those mannequins.

Alpha noticed that and thought his reaction was a bit weird.

“Akira, what’s wrong?”

“Nothing, I’m just wondering why I don’t feel anything when I look at these mannequins? Is it because they are just mannequins?”

“Do you want me to try it on?”

Alpha changed her dress to the same ones that the mannequin in front of Akira was wearing. Although the size was adjusted to fit on her body, it had the exact same design as the one on the mannequin. She then stood beside that mannequin.

Akira looked at the mannequin and at Alpha in turns. But just like before, he did not feel any big change in his impression.

“Yep, it doesn’t change much. It’s not that bad but not that good either, just a normal dress. This shop is supposed to be an expensive shop in the lower district, right?”

“Well, the clothes here are at least not as cheap as your underclothing.”

“Even if it’s an expensive dress judged by fashion experts for having a good design, it still looks normal to me, I don’t feel anything at all. As I thought, I might have no fashion sense.”

Akira remembered that the meal he had when he went to that expensive restaurant really blew his mind. He could agree that those meals were worth the money.

But that was not the case for fashion. Of course, their prices were not the same as the meal that he had in that luxurious restaurant, but he was expecting something more.

Alpha once again changed her dress, this time, it was an expensive-looking dress appropriate for a high-class lady. Walking through the lower district in that dress would warrant extra escorts, or at least, you would need the influence to let people know not to mess with you in order to ensure your safety.

“Compared to the last one, what do you think about this dress?”

“Not bad. It does look expensive, I at least understand that it’s on a different level compared to the other common clothes around here. If I find this kind of dress in the old-world ruin, I’m sure it’ll fetch me quite a lot of money.”

For Akira to think about how much money it would bring in case he sold that dress when he was actually asked about his opinion on the dress, it seemed that his way of thinking had really adjusted for his Hunter job. That might be one of the reasons why he had a bad sense of fashion.

“If that’s all you have to say after seeing my dress, I guess you have gotten used to it, huh.”

“Gotten used to it? Well, I do feel like I’m starting to get used to your clothes though…”

“I think that you’re misunderstanding something here, it’s true that my dress is nothing but an image, but it’s still a high-class dress. When you’re not worried about the expense for the fabric, you can get a very luxurious dress, as a matter of fact, the design and the outlook of my usual clothes are way better than the current fashion.”

“…So?”

“Basically, since you always see me in high-class clothing all the time, you’ve gotten used to it to the point that it dulls your fashion sense. Maybe.”

“…So in conclusion, my fashion sense is broken, right? Well, I guess it’s fine since now I know the reason why.”

Akira pouted a bit, while Alpha was smiling teasingly at him.

“Isn’t that fine? After all, every time you want to look at a beautiful girl, you can always look at me anytime, right?”

Akira smiled bitterly, he could not refute that.

Kashua, who was with Sheryl up until now, suddenly approached Akira.

“Excuse me, would it be alright if I ask you a question?”

“Excuse me for being rude, but, may I know how much your budget is for today? It seems that your companion is worried about the price. If I know the budget, I might be able to adjust my recommendation accordingly.”

It seemed that Kashua thought Akira would be paying for Sheryl. Akira then glanced at Sheryl, she was staring seriously at the shoes in front of her. It seemed that she was really at loss on what to do.

Akira thought for a bit and said.

“Inform me if it costs more than 1,000,000 Aurum.”

Kashua froze for a bit when she heard that.

“…1,000,000 Aurum? Is that correct?”

“Yes, I’ll be paying with my Hunter ID. Ah, if I have to pay with cash, I’ll have to go for a bit to withdraw the money though.”

“Please don’t worry, we also accept payment through Hunter ID. Just for confirmation, may I borrow your Hunter ID?”

It was a common thing for Hunters to lose their IDs during a fight in the old-world ruin. But Kashua was actually asking Akira’s Hunter ID to confirm whether he could really pay that much. It showed just how much surprised she was since it was something that she would never do normally.

After all, it was as if she was asking if Akira could really pay that much money. If she had asked that question to a short-tempered Hunter, it would not be strange if that Hunter got angered. Kashua suddenly realized that fact as she tried her best to keep calm and show a friendly smile to Akira.

But Akira did not feel offended by it and casually handed over his ID to Kashua. Kashua then used her information terminal to read Akira's Hunter ID. When the result came out on her information terminal, she was so surprised that she froze.

She then somehow returned back to her usual smile and returned Akira's Hunter ID.

"I'm sorry for bothering you so much. I'll recommend shoes that suit the aforementioned budget. Please do ask me if you have any questions."

She then lightly bowed at Akira and left.

Alpha then asked Akira.

"Are you sure you're okay with that? She'll make you pay close to the upper limit of your budget, you know?"

"It's fine. I think Sheryl is buying shoes today as preparation so that she can sell relics that I entrusted to her at a better price, right?"

"I think so."

"In that case, then this is a needed expense. If it will really help her sell the relics, then I have no complaints at all. And also, this is for confirming something."

"Confirming something?"

"I want to know how much she can change with 1,000,000 Aurum and how I'll react to that. If I don't feel anything at all even after spending that much money, I have no plans to make any comment about fashion nor spend too much money on fashion in the future."

Akira thought that if even 1,000,000 Aurum fashion did not give him any noticeable impression, then it only meant he really did not have any fashion sense at all.

“Hmmm. It’ll also be affected by the fashion sense of the clerk in this shop though, don’t you think that there are too many unpredictable factors?”

“If that happens, then it’s my bad luck in choosing a weird shop.”

“But I’m the one who picked this shop, you know.”

“Well, that only means that my luck is so bad that we can’t do anything about it even with your ability. Which also means that I really should give up on my fashion sense.”

Akira smiled lightly when he said that.

Alpha looked exasperatedly at Akira who suddenly decided to test his luck there. Although it was not something that might endanger his life, it might lower his evaluation of her ability.

Alpha was pondering if she should do something about it.

Kashua did not go to Sheryl after she talked with Akira, instead, she went right to the back room only for employees. The moment she passed through the door, her business smile changed to a real smile.

“Celen!! Are you awake?!”

After Kashua said that, a young girl dragged herself out.

“Onee-chan, you’re too noisy! You do know that I worked all night yesterday, right?”

Celen looked annoyed as she stared at Kashua. But Kashua ignored her and said.

“Get changed into something presentable and get out there.”

“But it’s your turn to watch the shop at this hour, you know? Just let me sleep, I’m really sleepy.”

“Just do what I say, quickly. And also, I’ve told you many times to call me miss manager, remember?!”

“…Geeez.”

Although she seemed annoyed, Celen did what she was told to. When Kashua saw that, she quickly went back to the shop.

Sheryl was staring intensely on the shoes that Kashua recommended to her. Every time Kashua brought different shoes to her, the quality and the price of those shoes were getting lower and lower compared to the previous one. Since Kashua did not recommend any other shoes, Sheryl thought that there might be no cheaper shoes in that shop.

Although Sheryl had enough money to pay for the shoes, those shoes were not good enough fit for her dress. But still, they were at least better than her current shoes.

She still had to use the rest of her money for something else. So she was at a loss whether she should spend half of her current money for the shoes.

Right when she was still pondering on what to do, Kashua came to her. She brought another pair of shoes to recommend to Sheryl.

“If those don’t suit your taste, then how about this?”

Sheryl thought that Kashua brought cheaper shoes as she turned to her. But her expression quickly changed to bewilderment.

The shoes that Kashua recommended looked obviously high-class. There was no mistaking that it cost way more than all the other shoes that she had recommended up until now. It was understandable since she brought the most expensive shoes in her shop.

Sheryl apologetically said to Kashua as a way to signal her that she wanted cheaper shoes.

“Uhmm, I’m really thankful for recommending these shoes to me. But it might be a tad too…”

Right when Sheryl was about to say ‘too expensive’, Kashua suddenly interrupted while still smiling at her.

“I’m sorry that I might have overstepped my bounds, but I have asked your companion as to how much he’s planning to spend today. We’re really sorry for only recommending cheap shoes up until now.”

Sheryl looked even more confused.

From Sheryl’s reaction, Kashua thought that she was feeling apologetic for making Akira pay for an expensive pair of shoes. That was why Kashua then told Sheryl that it was not a big amount of money for Akira, after all, as a businesswoman, Kashua also had to respect Akira’s wish to buy Sheryl that level of quality shoes.

“Please wait for a bit here, I’ll bring other shoes too.”

After she said that, Kashua placed the most expensive shoes in her shop on top of the table and took all the other cheap shoes off the table. She then bowed lightly to Sheryl before stepping away to replace those cheap shoes with the second most expensive shoes in her shop.

Sheryl, who did not know what was going on, was staring at Kashua’s back as she left that place. She then turned to Akira who she thought should know what exactly was going on.

Akira was browsing the apparel and eventually found himself standing in front of the male underclothing section. Expensive looking underclothings were lined up in front of him, of course, those underclothings were way more expensive than the ones that he usually used.

“Should I buy some underclothing too?”

“I won’t stop you, but I won’t recommend wearing them under an augmented suit. Since it’s not for Hunters, I’m sure it’ll get torn in no time.”

“Well, that’s true. I guess it’s better if I don’t buy it then.”

Akira then placed the underclothing in his hand back to the rack. It seemed that there were no goods that might suit his needs.

“Putting that aside, Sheryl is staring at you, you know.”

“Hm?”

He glanced at Sheryl to check on her. It seemed that she wanted him to return to her, thus he decided to walk back to Sheryl.

After Akira returned, Sheryl asked him what was going on and understood the situation. It was a good thing for Sheryl since it was hard to find the shoes that fit her needs with her current budget. But it was not like she could honestly feel happy about it either.

“…Is it really okay?”

“Yeah, like I said before, if it helps you sell the relics, then it’s alright. There’s no need to worry about it, just think of it as a small debt, you can just subtract it from the sales after you sell the relics.”

Sheryl smiled in relief.

“I understand. I’ll take you up on your offer then.”

She already had a bunch of favours from Akira that she needed to repay. Thus it was easier for her if Akira himself made that request.

Kashua returned with the second and third most expensive shoes in her shop. Celen who had finished changing her clothes eventually dragged herself out, still looking extremely drowsy.

Celen tried to remember the prices of the shoes that were lined on top of the table. She then looked at Sheryl and Akira before glancing at Kashua while thinking.

[Just because he looks like a Hunter with a lot of money, aren’t you a bit too excited? Well, I do understand your feeling though.]

Not all Hunters had a lot of money or were willing to spend a lot of money. But from time to time, there were peculiar Hunters who visited that shop. Some of them had their money perception distorted after getting lucky in the old-world ruin and returning back with a lot of relics. Some of them spent so much money on their equipment that they did not mind spending money at all. These Hunters showed less resistance when they had to pay expensive goods and they were merchants’ favourite customers.

Because of that, all shops would encourage those Hunters to spend as much money as possible when they were in that phase. Of course, that was leaving high-ranking Hunters aside. As long as they did not look like they were going to die anytime soon, shops would treat them hoping that they would do business with them for a long time.

Kashua was also recommending all kinds of other things to Sheryl. Although Sheryl did not have to worry about the budget any longer, she still did not want to buy anything that she did not actually need. And also one more thing, it did not prevent her from being at a loss on which one to pick.

Celen scanned Sheryl’s outlook. Leaving her shoes aside, Sheryl was using old-world relics. But the size of her dress did not fit her and it was obvious for anyone who worked in the fashion business. And now that she noticed it, Celen could not shake her mind off from it.

She then made a suggestion to Sheryl.

“Excuse me, if it’s okay with you, I can readjust the size of your dress while you’re browsing.”

Sheryl glanced at Celen and then looked at her own dress. Akira suddenly asked a question.

“Is that okay?”

But then another person answered Akira’s strange question with her own interpretation.

Kashua smiled confidently as she said.

“I can reassure you that Celen is very skilled in adjusting clothes. I’m sure you’ll find her work satisfying.”

Celen glanced at Kashua and sighed before she added.

“That dress is an old-world dress, right? After I readjust an old-world dress, it would be considered as a normal dress and its price would fall. If it’s one of your assets, I would not recommend readjusting it. But if I may readjust its size, it would look better on you.”

After Celen warned Sheryl and Akira of the downside of readjusting an old-world dress, Kashua looked at Celen.

[Whoah there, you’re the one who offered it so why would you say something that discourages them now?]

[What will you do if they ask for compensation later because we didn’t warn them? Or more like, isn’t that your job as the manager to tell them that?]

Kashua and Celen were still smiling while talking through telepathy, they had been stuck together for years after all, so they could more or less read each other’s minds.

Although Akira had given that dress to her, as a Hunter who hunted for relics, it might still offend him. So Sheryl asked for Akira’s opinion.

“Akira, what do you think?”

“Well, it’s your dress, so it’s up to you what you want to with it. But that aside, what are you going to do about your clothing while she’s readjusting that dress?”

Now that Akira mentioned it, Sheryl realized that point. The readjustment would take some time to finish, and even if she returned back to her base to change first, she did not have any other dress that she could wear to go to that shop. After all, it was unthinkable for her to go there with a slum city outfit.

Of course, she had the choice of taking her measurement there and then asking Akira to send and retrieve her dress, but that would mean she would have to bother Akira again and that was not preferable for her.

In reality, Akira did not think that far when he said that. He was just simply asking the question that came up in his mind.

Celen then said to Sheryl.

“If it’s about that. I should be able to finish readjusting around the evening if I start now, while I’m doing that, you can browse and try the other clothes in this shop.”

Sheryl could not decide, so she asked Akira again.

“Uhmmm, is it okay if I ask you to wait with me until it’s finished?”

“Sure, I have no other plans for today anyway.”

Sheryl smiled as she thanked Akira and asked Celen to readjust her dress.

After she let Celen take her measurement, she handed over all her clothes except for her undergarments to Celen. She then tried all the clothes that Kashua recommended.

Sheryl would ask for Akira’s opinion every time she put on a new set of clothes. Akira was only sitting on a chair while waiting for Sheryl’s dress to finish. Although Sheryl asked about his opinion again and again, he only gave a dull reaction every single time.

Akira had no confidence in his own fashion sense, Sheryl knew that very well since that one time when she went to Higaraka residence ruin with him. Because of that, she did not really get bothered by Akira's dull reaction as she kept enjoying herself showing her dresses to him and asking for his opinion. Of course, she planned to buy any clothes that incited a reaction from Akira.

Kashua received a message from Celen through her information terminal. She then excused herself and went to Celen's place.

Celen, who had finished the preparation to readjust Sheryl's dress, was staring at it while waiting for Kashua. It did not take long for Kashua to come. Seeing how Celen had not started yet, Kashua, who thought that Celen would have already started, lightly scolded her.

"Celen, is there any problem? You haven't even started working on that dress?"

Celen calmly replied.

"I've finished the preparation and I'm about to start. But there's one thing that I want to ask first."

"What is it? They're waiting for it, so make sure to finish it fast."

"How much should I ask for readjusting this dress?"

Kashua looked confused since Celen asked a strange question.

"How much do you ask? Of course, as much as you need for adjusting that dress, isn't that obvious?"

Celen hummed for a bit and then rephrased her question.

"My bad, that was a poor way to say it. After adding the prices of everything that he is going to buy, does he have any extra money to pay for this adjustment? Wait, maybe it's the other way around. After subtracting the cost of this adjustment, does he have extra money in his budget to pay for the other stuff?"

Kashua looked like she was caught off guard.

“He did say to tell him if it’s over 1,000,000 Aurum, at most, you only charge about 300,000 Aurum for readjusting dresses, right? I’m planning to make him spend the rest of his budget though. Celen, how much are you planning to charge him?”

“If there’s no limit on his budget, I’m planning to ask for 1,500,000 Aurum.”

Kashua was surprised since Celen asked for 5 times more than what she was expecting. But she quickly snapped back to reality and flusteredly asked Celen.

“…Hah?! 1,500,000 Aurum!? You must be kidding, right?!”

“I’m not kidding, that’s why I called you here. I can still stop here. You should tell them and ask them whether they want to choose to only adjust the dress or are they willing to go beyond their budget to make the readjustment and pay for their shopping as well. It’s your job to talk with the customers after all.”

“No no no, wait for a sec, why do you need that much money in the first place? You already made a rough prediction when you offered to readjust that dress, right?”

“That is where I made a mistake. I can only say that I made a bad prediction back there. This dress is made of a way better fabric than I expected. So I need better fabric and a more complicated technique to readjust its size. I have no plans to sell my skill cheaply, you know. Especially after seeing her undergarment, that thing is a high-quality undergarment.”

“How much do you predict it cost?”

“That isn’t too expensive though. My undergarment is still way more expensive than that.”

“I said ‘at least’. Depending on your luck, it might cost you more than 1,000,000 Aurum.”

Kashua looked obviously surprised.

“…You’re joking, right?”

Celen annoyedly replied.

“I never joke when it comes to fashion. In order to make a precise prediction, I need to check the quality of its fabric, its elasticity and smoothness, and if it has an old-world logo on it. That’s why I can’t say for sure. But if it’s one of those superior-quality undergarments that would even cause a fight among those people who are sitting on the top, it would be nothing strange if it costs more than 1,000,000 Aurum or maybe even a few Chrome.”

Celen made a serious face when she said that. Clothes that were sold in Chrome were on a completely different level compared to the clothes in that shop. Of course, Kashua thought that Celen only mentioned that as an example and it was not like Sheryl’s undergarment actually cost that much. But since Celen even brought up that example, she could not help but think that Sheryl’s undergarment must be quite expensive. Even Kashua could understand that much.

“…Can you… Like, check it more closely?”

“Do you really think I can just ask our customer for permission to check her undergarment closely just because we want to know how much it costs although it has nothing to do with readjusting this dress at all? And in the first place, it’s your job as the manager to ask that if you really want to know.”

Kashua panicked, she thought that Sheryl was only a potential customer, but now it seemed that she needed to be extra careful handling Sheryl.

“How exactly does someone with that cheap shoes get her hands on something so expensive?”

“Maybe she received that as a gift. That would also explain why the dress is not of her size too. The person who gave her this dress and her undergarments might be that Hunter who is with her, he might have found them in an old-world ruin. And since he didn’t find any shoes, they’re here to buy shoes. Well, it’s all just my guess though. If it still bothers you, you should ask him.”

“Hmmm, that would explain everything though…”

“The real problem is whether that Hunter knew the worth of that undergarment when he gave it to her or not. In case if he knew, then I can’t afford to mess up readjusting this dress. Although we did warn them that it’ll reduce the worth of this dress, I’m sure there’s a limit on how much reduction is acceptable. There’s no mistaking it that it’s worth will get reduced from an old-world dress into just a high-quality dress. Of course, I’ll give nothing but my best effort. But I’ll need a special technique to work with this fabric, and that’ll cost more than usual.”

“So it’s whether he knew the real worth of his gift when he gave them, huh? It seems that you think that he does though, is there any reason for that?”

“If he knew, then that’ll explain why he’s expecting to pay about 1,000,000 Aurum for the shoes. Everything makes sense if that’s the case. But it’s up to you if you want to consider the other possibility.”

Kashua actually agreed with Celen’s opinion. If that Hunter knew the real worth of that dress and came here to buy a few shoes suitable for that dress, it would indeed cost him around 1,000,000 Aurum.

She suddenly realized something there.

“…Wait for a sec. I’m the one who will have to confirm that and ask if he’s willing to pay more, right?”

“Well, that’s your job. Good luck, just tell me if they’ve made their decision. But if they decide not to do the adjustment, I’ll come with you to apologize too.”

Although Celen’s voice was neutral, she was actually pushing the problem to Kashua. Somewhere in her expression, she did look like she felt sorry about that.

Kashua placed both of her hands on her head as she walked back to Sheryl and Akira.

Sheryl was changing into her next dress inside a changing room as Akira was just waiting while sitting on a chair. That was when Kashua approached him with a slightly pale face.

She thought that it might be better to wait for Sheryl, but since it should be no problem as long as the one paying was okay with it, she decided to go straight to Akira. Since it would only get harder the more she waited, it was better to just go ahead and out with it. After all, the more she waits, the readjustment will take more time to finish.

Kashua made her resolve and spoke to Akira.

“Excuse me, there’s something I need to ask.”

After listening to her explanation, Akira did not take too long to make a decision.

“Alright. I’ll pay that extra 1,500,000 Aurum above the initial 1,000,000 Aurum.”

He did not show much reaction when he said that he would pay the extra 1,500,000 Aurum. Although Kashua was surprised by it, she was barely able to maintain her usual expression. But since it did catch her by surprise, she inadvertently asked for a confirmation.

“Yeah, I’m not an expert in readjusting clothing, so if you tell me that’s how much it would take, I bet that’s really how much it would take. It’s basically like fitting equipment, so I have no plans to get a bad result just so that I can pay less, not to mention that I want to see it in its perfect condition. So I’ll leave it to you… It’s okay if I leave it to you, right?”

“Of course!”

Kashua was able to completely hide her surprise as she said that to Akira with a smile full of confidence. She fully trusted Celen’s skill. If that was not the case, she would have recommended Akira to decline her offer. But even though she was confident of Celen’s skill, it took everything she had to hide her nervousness.

Akira did not notice that at all as he said to Kashua.

“Well, I’ll leave it to you then.”

“With pleasure, please let me excuse myself to tell Celen to start readjusting the dress.”

Kashua was about to head back to Celen, but she remembered something and asked Akira.

“…Excuse me, you did say that it’s something like your equipment, may I ask you how much you spent on your equipment? Although we handle a different kind of clothing, I couldn’t help but wonder.”

Akira did say that fixing Sheryl’s dress was something like making maintenance for his equipment. So Kashua thought that she should be able to gauge how much Akira was willing to spend this time from asking how much he spent on his own equipment.

Akira did not notice Kashua's intention as he casually replied.

"This? Well, I bought this suit as a combo with some of the other stuff too. So I don't think you can use it as a reference, you know?"

"People buy accessories and shoes to fit their dress, so I believe it's not that much different. So if I may, I want to know how much you paid in total."

"In that case, it was 80,000,000 Aurum."

"…As I thought, Hunters' equipment does cost way more than usual apparel. Well then, please let me excuse myself to tell Celen to start her work."

Kashua lightly bowed at Akira while hiding her grin before returning back to Celen. The reason why she was barely able to avoid getting herself frozen when she heard Akira's answer was because of her disposition as a businesswoman.

When she went back to Celen, she quickly told her to get started with the readjustment.

"Celen, I got confirmation. He said he'll pay the extra 1,500,000 Aurum. So you can start your work."

"Okay, by the way, how did you convince him to pay more?"

Celen thought that even if Kashua was able to get a confirmation in the end, it would at least take her some time to convince Akira. But not only was she back way sooner than Celen thought, she even got Akira's affirmation. Celen knew that Kashua was not that skillful, so she wondered what kind of technique she used.

Although that remark from Celen sounded as if she was a scammer, Kashua just ignored it as she quickly replied.

“When I told him about the situation, he didn’t hesitate to make that decision. And when I asked him how much he spent on his equipment, he said he paid 80,000,000 Aurum, you know. No wonder he didn’t bat an eyelash when he decided to pay for that extra 1,500,000 Aurum.”

“80,000,000 Aurum. Good grief, a healthy Hunter does earn a huge amount of money. Miss manager, can you go and seduce him?”

“Don’t be stupid and do your job. We did boast that we’re a shop which specializes in readjusting clothing and that we’re worth paying 1,500,000 Aurum, so I expect nothing less than perfect.”

“You don’t even need to tell me that, I won’t hold back.”

Then Celen started her work with a big smile and a serious face that showed her pride in her own skill.

As time passed by, Sheryl had tried a lot of clothes, but she had not decided to buy anything yet. She must have her reasons as to why she did that, but the biggest reason might be because none of them incited any particular reaction from Akira.

Kashua, who was always standing near Akira and Sheryl, slowly noticed that too. Thus she made a suggestion to Akira.

“Excuse me, would you like to try picking clothes for your companion?”

“Me?”

“Yes. I believe she’ll be happy too if you do that.”

Kashua thought that if it was something that Akira picked, Sheryl would definitely want to buy it.

“Well, even if you tell me so…”

Since Akira had no confidence in his fashion sense at all, he did not think it was a good idea. But Sheryl, who heard that, seemed to be interested in that idea.

“Eh, Akira will pick my clothing for me?”

Sheryl looked at Akira with eyes full of hope, which made it hard for him to refuse her. But to be honest, Akira did not think he could pick anything good.

Looking at the troubled Akira, Alpha just giggled and offered help.

“Should I do it for you then? Although, I can’t say for sure if I’ll do a good job since I’m not really knowledgeable with all the clothes in this shop.”

“Are you sure you’re okay with that?”

“I’m the one who chose this shop after all. So, let’s see if my choice can defeat your bad luck or not.”

“Now that you mention it, I did say something like that too.”

Akira decided to completely rely on Alpha to pick Sheryl’s clothing. He then looked back at Sheryl who was staring at him with hopeful eyes.

“Well, I’ll go and pick something, just wait here for a bit.”

“I’ll be looking forward to it while waiting.”

Sheryl smiled happily at him. Although, in reality, Akira was not the one who was picking clothing for her, she had no way of knowing that. She was so happy since she thought that Akira would do that for her.

Akira browsed through all the articles in that shop. Even though from outside it looked as if he was only randomly glancing through the clothes in the displays and racks, it was enough for Alpha to scan all the clothes there. But of course, Kashua who did not know that looked a bit surprised by how Akira was behaving.

He already made a round through that shop. But Alpha had not picked anything yet and he found that strange.

“You didn’t find anything good?”

“Nope. That was only to check all the clothes in this shop so that I can make a good combination. I’ll tell you which one to pick, so carry them when I tell you, okay?”

“Okay.”

Akira followed Alpha’s instruction as he went and picked a set of clothing complete with the shoes before he returned to Sheryl and handed them over to her.

Sheryl then went back to the changing room to try the clothing that Akira, or to be more precise, Alpha, picked for her.

After she finished changing, she stepped out from the changing room and bashfully asked for Akira’s opinion.

“H-how do I look?”

Rather than focusing more on showing the cuteness of a girl of her age, it was a beautiful dress that gave off innocence or pure feeling. It also had an opening on its back that showed a bit of Sheryl’s girly charm. Her already beautiful figure made that dress look even more attractive. Sheryl, who was clad in that dress, looked bashful as her cheeks turned reddish, it gave off a conflicting impression of cuteness and loveliness compared to the mature-like dress that she was previously wearing.

Kashua could not help but to give genuine praise.

“It looks really good on you.”

Kashua also gave Akira a compliment inside her heart. Other than the fact that all of those clothes that Akira picked were relatively cheap articles in that shop, she had no complaints at all. But also because of that, it was hard for her to recommend something more expensive right after that.

Alpha smiled smugly and asked Akira.

“How’s it? It’s pretty good, isn’t it?”

“Well, I think it’s better than all the other clothing until now.”

“You don’t look that excited though. Do you have any complaints or something?”

“Even if you tell me so. Just like you said, I might have gotten used to this kind of thing because of the clothes that you usually use. And also, to be honest, I like your current clothes more.”

In order to increase her likeability, Alpha’s appearance was actually adjusted to Akira’s preference, so it was not surprising at all. Not to mention, all of Alpha’s clothes were high-class clothes. Thus, it was rather unfair to compare that to Sheryl’s clothes.

Alpha just smiled bitterly as she said to him.

“Well, at least I know that you think the clothes I picked are better than what that clerk recommended. I guess I’ll settle with that for now. It seems that compared to your bad luck, my skill still has the upper hand.”

“What are you even talking about?”

Akira exasperatedly replied to Alpha, but of course, he did not show that on his face.

Sheryl was still waiting for Akira’s opinion. Since Akira was the one who picked it for her, he carefully chose his words.

“I do think it looks pretty good on you. What do you think?”

“I like it quite a lot.”

“I see, I’m glad to hear that.”

“Yes, thank you very much for picking this wonderful dress for me.”

Sheryl looked overjoyed as she thanked Akira.

Akira and Sheryl then sat on a chair and were talking to each other to spend time.

Sheryl, who was still wearing the dress that Akira picked for her, looked extremely delighted. She looked both mature and a bit childish from the other people's point of view.

They still had some time until Celen finished adjusting Sheryl's dress. Since Akira had paid for the bill, he actually could spend time outside the shop and return back later. But for Sheryl, Celen asked her to stay in the shop in case she needed her for basting or other fine adjustments. In order to get nothing less than perfect adjustment, Sheryl obediently followed Celen's request to stay in the shop. So Akira also decided to stay in that shop to accompany Sheryl.

While they were waiting, Akira also finished discussing about the things related to their next expedition to Higaraka residence ruin.

Unlike what he had expected, Sheryl quickly agreed with his offer to regularly go to gather relics. But after their discussion, there were a lot of changes compared to before.

One of the big changes was related to the ownership of the relics. All of the gathered relics would be owned by Akira; Sheryl and her gang would then sell them and get 50% of the profit from the sales. As for how to sell them, it was all up to Sheryl and her gang. It also applied to the relics that they had gathered last time.

Just to be sure, Akira then asked Sheryl again.

"Well, it might be strange to ask you this since I'm the one who came up with it, but a lot of things happened last time, so like, are you really okay with that?"

Sheryl and her gang had gone through a lot of stuff the previous time they went out to the wasteland. Not only did they get attacked by a swarm of monsters, one of the Hunters that were together with them also attacked them. But even so, Sheryl accepted his offer with a straight face and that made Akira a bit worried.

But her smile did not change at all as she replied.

“Yes, it’s a good offer for us too. Moreover, if anything happens, you would save us again just like last time, right?”

Sheryl was bashful when she said that. Rather than remembering the dangerous experiences that she had gone through, her mind was filled with how cool Akira was when he saved her. Although the scene that she remembered was not that far from what actually happened, it was still a bit exaggerated by Sheryl’s own imagination.

Akira thought that the last expedition was a failure, that was why he made a serious expression as he said to Sheryl.

“Yeah. Since I took in the request, I’ll do better next time.”

Sheryl looked immensely content. It sounded as if Akira was serious about protecting her, but of course, she herself knew that it was a bit of overstatement from her side.

“In that case, there should be no problem. Actually, I was thinking of making this request to you, but I was unsure whether you would agree to it.”

“Is that so? Well, I’m okay if you’re fine with it…”

There was actually something that still bothered Akira, but since he was the one who came with that offer in the first place, he decided not to press the question.

Sheryl and Akira then continued talking to each other to kill time. But suddenly, Akira felt like he had forgotten about something. So he asked Alpha for confirmation.

“Alpha, am I forgetting something?”

“Forgetting something? I don’t think you’re forgetting anything though. You’ve talked with Sheryl about that offer and I don’t think you have any fixed plan after this. And it’s not like there’s anything that you need to immediately prepare for.”

“Is it only my feeling? Hmmm, I feel like there’s something…”

“If I have to say something, you had only prepared yourself to go out to the wasteland assuming that there are no bounty monsters. So if you have any plans to go out to the wasteland any time soon, you’ll have to readjust your supply in case if you accidentally come across one of the bounty monsters. But you have no plans to go out any time soon, right?”

“…Ah, that’s it!”

Although that was not what Akira was looking for, since Alpha mentioned it, it piqued his interest. He might have to go out to the wasteland soon because of some kind of reason. After all, Akira knew well about his own bad luck.

“Yep, that does bother me. I guess it’s better if I prepare myself when I have the chance.”

“You’re really a worrywart. Well, there’s nothing bad from getting yourself well prepared though.”

Akira then told Sheryl that he would leave her for a bit.

“Sheryl, I just remembered that I had to do something, so I’ll leave for a bit. You just wait here and contact me if you need anything.”

“If it’s something that I can help with, I would like to help too.”

“No, I’m okay with going alone. I’m going to buy ammo and stuff, so it’s faster if I go alone since I have this augmented suit.”

“I see, alright then. I’ll contact you if anything happens.”

Sheryl looked slightly disappointed as she saw Akira off.

After Akira left her alone, she started to regain her calm as she realized that she was a bit too excited until now.

She took a deep breath to calm herself. By pure coincidence, she saw a mirror in front of her. She stared at her own reflection on that mirror, then stood up and took a pose in front of it. She could not help but start smiling again when she did that.

She was actually confirming her own appearance which she had polished in order to get the upper hand during a negotiation. By looking at her reflection, she could understand how she looked in others eyes.

Although Sheryl stood in front of that mirror for that sake at first, it slowly shifted to her enjoying the dress that Akira had chosen for her. When she looked at herself smiling in front of that mirror, she quickly snapped back and returned her expression to normal in panic.

Now that she had calmed down, Sheryl went back to her chair and started thinking about her plans for the future, to be more precise, how to sell the relics. She had to get as much money as possible out of those relics for Akira's sake too. Thus she seriously thought about what she should do to sell those relics.

Kashua noticed another group of customers entering into her shop, and she quickly welcomed them.

Her new customers were a group of 3. A lightly armed young Hunter boy and two girls. Kashua scanned their outer looks and recognized them as customers. Or at least, there was no need to kick them out from her shop. She then welcomed them with a big smile.

"Thank you very much for coming to our shop, how can we help you today?"

When Kashua spoke to them, one of the girls who was overwhelmed by the impression given by her shop twitched in surprise, so the other girl decided to step up and replied to Kashua.

“Uhm, we just want to look around for clothes and other stuff, is that okay?”

“Of course! I’ll be nearby. If you have any question or if there’s anything that interests you, feel free to call me.”

Those girls then walked into the shop, while the boy followed behind. He looked really tired as he mumbled.

“Say, can we take a rest for a bit? And like, we’ve been looking around for a while and you girls haven’t even bought a thing, you know? Is there really a need for me to be here to carry your stuff?”

It was obvious that the girls’ mood soured. It was true that they planned to buy new clothing, but since they were on a limited budget, they had to carefully choose their clothes. Moreover, both of them planned to show their new clothing to that boy. The reason why they had not bought anything was because that boy gave nothing but a dull reaction every time they showed the clothes that they picked.

“Just shut up and follow us. You promised us to accompany us for the whole day today, remember?”

Since it was rather embarrassing if they had to be honest with him, the girl hid her embarrassment by scolding that boy.

That boy did not notice the girls’ real feelings at all as he dragged his legs behind them.

“I know, I know. But Yumina, putting me aside, I think Airi is getting tired too, you know?”

“I’m not.”

Airi quickly interjected. Yumina smiled and replied.

“There, you heard her right, Katsuya? So stop complaining and come here.”

“Okay okay… I should’ve brought lighter equipment since it’s not like we’re going to the wasteland, huh?”

In order to protect Yumina and Airi who were only wearing normal clothes, Katsuya thought that he should bring some weapons and decided to carry pretty heavy equipment with him. It was too late for him to regret that.

Kashua’s new customers were none other than Katsuya, Airi and Yumina.

Although Katsuya helped Yumina and Airi choose clothes at first, he made an excuse saying that he was tired and was able to break away from them.

After Yumina and Airi complained and told him to return after taking a short rest, Katsuya was looking for a place to sit down. He then caught a glimpse of a table inside that shop and went to take a seat on one of the chairs around it.

He noticed that someone else was sitting on a different chair near that table. So he asked for permission.

“Uhmm, is it okay if I sit here?”

“Sure, go ahead.”

It was Sheryl. She smiled at Katsuya as she gave him her permission.

Katsuya, who was about to take a seat without waiting for Sheryl’s permission, suddenly stopped. He was smitten by Sheryl the moment he looked at her.

Sheryl was still wearing that dress which gave off a mature aura. Katsuya, who saw that, felt like Sheryl was on a whole different world compared to him. If someone told him that she was a young lady from the inner district who was visiting the outside of the wall, he would have believed without questioning it.

Katsuya was rather famous among the young Hunters in Drankam. Because of that, he was extremely popular among the young girls in Drankam and that caused his evaluation for girls to be extremely strict.

But even so, he was smitten when he saw Sheryl. Katsuya's evaluation of Sheryl, who was clad in that high-class dress, was completely different compared to the other girls around him. It was even enough to get him enamoured. From his point of view, her appearance was simply destructively beautiful.

Sheryl tilted her head since Katsuya was frozen still.

"…Uhmmm, are you not going to take a seat?"

"Ah, yeah, right."

Katsuya quickly snapped back to reality as he flusteredly took a seat.

Sheryl then looked away from Katsuya and returned back thinking about her plan. But she could feel Katsuya staring at her, so she decided to stop there.

If Katsuya said something, Sheryl would normally reply to him. But he was only staring at her without saying anything.

Thus, she decided to say something first thinking that it could not be helped. Looking at his equipment, it was easy to notice that Katsuya was a Hunter. While also killing time until Akira returned, she decided to extract any info that she could from a Hunter who had enough resources to visit that shop.

Sheryl threw a smile at Katsuya.

"Are you here with your friends today?"

"…Eh? Ah, yes, I am."

Katsuya was only able to flusteredly reply when Sheryl suddenly spoke to him. He was actually in the middle of thinking of any subject that he could use to strike a conversation with her. But since Sheryl caught him completely off guard, everything that was inside his mind suddenly vanished.

“Do you come here often?”

“H-here? W-well, I was actually accompanying Yumina and Airi looking for clothes and we somehow ended up in this shop. Shops around these areas look expensive, so I don’t really come here a lot, but like, ah, that Yumina and Airi, I wonder if they have enough money? Wait, they haven’t bought anything yet, so I guess it’s fine, huh?”

Katsuya was so nervous that he started saying things that Sheryl did not ask about. But even so, Sheryl kept on staring at him while still smiling. Since there was a beautiful girl staring at him, Katsuya tried to hide his embarrassment by laughing.

While on the other hand, Yumina and Airi were going around the shop, browsing the clothes.

Yumina took a cloth from a rack that interested her, she then checked the design and thought that it was pretty good. But after checking the price tag, she returned it back to the rack and inadvertently said.

“…Yikes, so expensive.”

That shop was selling high-class clothes by the lower district’s standard. And of course, high-quality clothes would cost a lot of money. It was not like Yumina could not pay for those clothes, but she needed extra courage to use that much money.

It might be a good reward for a Hunter who worked hard every single day. Yumina thought so, but if she bought it, used it, showed it to Katsuya, and Katsuya thought that it did not look good on her, there was no mistaking that she would get depressed.

So she decided to try it and show it to Katsuya first, but she could not find him around. Yumina then grumbled.

“Katsuya is not back yet? He’s taking too long, good grief, what exactly is he doing?”

Katsuya had made a mistake the other day that caused him to almost fight against Akira, and of course, Yumina and Airi were also roped into that incident. As an apology, Katsuya promised that he would accompany them for the whole day today.

Airi, who was with Yumina, then said.

“I’ll go look for him.”

“Pretty please.”

Airi then left Yumina to look for Katsuya. It did not take long before she returned alone.

Yumina, who expected Airi to return back with Katsuya, tilted her head in confusion.

“Where’s Katsuya?”

Airi was an expressionless girl. But that one time, she looked obviously grumpy as she answered Yumina’s question.

“Hitting on a girl!”

“…Hah?”

Airi’s bad mood also infected Yumina.

Silavin: Seriously. This guy seeks what he can’t have. Happened with Sara and Elena. Now, Sheryl.

For those worried, there is no NTR. So, don’t worry. Anyways, Sheryl is head over heels for Akira at this point. Well, mentally, she is dependent on him, so, head in her heels?

Rebuild World – Chapter 90, Katsuya and That Special Girl

Katsuya talked about a lot of things with Sheryl.

To be more precise, there was an obvious inclination in the subject of their conversation. They mostly talked about things related to Katsuya, like his story when he went to an old-world ruin or when he went on a monster extermination request, or about the gang that he belonged to–Drankam.

Katsuya thought that Sheryl was someone from the inner wall from the dress she was wearing. It was not rare for people from the inner wall to go out with some paid escorts. There were a lot of those escorts gathered in the big building sticking to the wall where the huge Hunter Office was located. The area around that building was considerably safer although it was still considered as a part of the lower district. Thus, it was pretty safe for people from the inner wall to walk around that area.

At first, Katsuya thought that the violence-filled daily life of a Hunter would be a boring story for someone like Sheryl. But since it seemed that Sheryl was listening closely to his story, he continued to keep telling stories about his life as a Hunter.

Katsuya felt very comfortable talking with Sheryl. Not only was she a beautiful girl that would listen closely to his rather boastful story, but she would even occasionally praise him right when he was expecting it. And when he told an unpleasant story or complained, Sheryl would look concerned and sympathize with his story as well as praising his will to get over that problem. Katsuya was drowned in the mood as he kept talking with her.

But Sheryl thought something was strange with Katsuya's story.

Katsuya was quite a handsome boy, it could be said that his face was above average. If he was working a job where he had to serve customers, it would definitely attract a lot of girls. If his story was correct, he was a skilled young Hunter and one of the best Hunters in Drankam. Since he worked himself so hard to be able to help his other fellow gang members, it could be inferred that he kept his friends dear. In short, he was a good looking young Hunter with skill and good personality. Sheryl's impression, opinion and intuition evaluated Katsuya highly.

And the other side of Sheryl, the part of her that coldly and rationally evaluated her opponent and continuously thought of ways to use that information to get the upper hand during a negotiation, also evaluated Katsuya highly. But compared to her intuition, it was relatively low.

To be more precise, her intuition actually over-evaluated Katsuya. Thus there was an obvious gap between that and her logical and calm evaluation of him. That was the cause of Sheryl's weird feeling.

Although she did feel that there was something strange in her own evaluation of Katsuya, she did not let it show in her face as she kept her smile while talking to him. While she was keeping that up, it encouraged her further to evaluate him even more highly.

Sheryl unconsciously thought that there was no mistaking it, Katsuya was indeed a skilled young Hunter. Making a connection with that kind of Hunter would be beneficial for her gang. Before she even realized it, she started imagining inviting him for a meal and walking hand-in-hand through the lower district in order to deepen their connection.

In her imagination, she pictured herself walking happily linking arms with Katsuya like a lover. That scene felt so heart-warming.

Then she pictured Akira coming from the opposite direction. Their eyes met, but Akira did not change his expression at all as he simply turned back and cut his ties with her.

When Sheryl returned back to reality, her face had already turned stiff. Her body was frozen out of fear, but she quickly recovered as she reminded herself that it was only her imagination and not reality. But it was not like her nervousness and shivers immediately stopped. Sheryl tried to calm herself by taking short breaths since her heart was beating really fast.

Katsuya, who noticed Sheryl's expression, worriedly asked her.

"…A-are you okay?"

Sheryl looked at Katsuya again, all of her baseless good evaluation of him had completely vanished. Her feeling was telling her that the young Hunter in front of her was simply a promising young Hunter, it was the same evaluation that her rational side was telling her.

She took a deep breath to calm herself. Once she calmed down, she then tried to dodge the subject.

"…I'm alright. I'm sorry to make you worry."

"What's wrong? Ah, did I say something that bothers you?"

"No, it's just that as I was listening to your story, it somehow reminded me of a traumatic memory when I got attacked by monsters in the wasteland… I'm sorry that I made you worry."

Katsuya worriedly asked her.

"Were you alright? Did you get injured?"

"I was fine. The Hunter escorting me saved me so I was able to survive the attack without any wound. As I thought, a skilled Hunter like Katsuya-san is really reliable.”

Sheryl smiled while observing Katsuya. He seemed a bit bashful as he smiled. It seemed that she was able to completely dodge the subject.

“Escort Hunter, huh. If you ever need an escort again, you can come to me any-“

“Katsuya! To think that you would leave us to hit on another girl like this!”

Yumina appeared from behind Katsuya, she was smiling but her smile was obviously projecting out anger.

When Yumina scolded him, Katsuya remembered that he was there to accompany Airi and Yumina. And at the same time, he also realized that he had forgotten Yumina and Airi as he was talking with Sheryl.

Katsuya flusteredly stood up from his seat and tried to calm Yumina while holding her with both his hands.

“Yumina! Airi!! It’s not like what you think!! It’s a misunderstanding!!”

Yumina cornered Katsuya further while still smiling.

“A misunderstanding? I see, a misunderstanding, huh. Then I’m sure you’ll give me a good explanation later, right?”

Katsuya looked at Airi, who was beside Yumina, asking for her help. But Airi only looked back at him with no emotion.

Sheryl could quickly understand that Airi and Yumina were Katsuya’s acquaintances from their exchange.

She then stood up from her seat and lightly bowed to Yumina and Airi.

“I’m really sorry. I was so interested in Katsuya-san’s story that I insisted him to keep going. Did I hold him back from some kind of promise?”

Yumina and Airi were so focused on Katsuya that they did not place much attention on Sheryl before.

But Yumina was surprised when she looked at Sheryl.

[…What a beautiful girl. That dress is also really pretty. It seems really expensive. I wonder if only people like this would shop in this boutique. Are we actually in the wrong place?]

Yumina ended up staring at Sheryl. She then realized that the beautiful girl in front of her had apologized to her, she got flustered for some reason as she replied back.

“I-I see. Well, uh, no, it’s not like we had a promise or something. It’s just that he said he would only take a short rest before returning back. So I was just wondering what happened since he didn’t come back after quite some time…”

“We were just talking about Katsuya-san’s experience as a Hunter. To be honest, I didn’t feel like he tried to flirt with me… Or was it only my imagination and you were actually trying to flirt with me?”

Sheryl smiled mischievously as she directed that question to Katsuya.

Katsuya shook his head in panic.

“No, I didn’t mean it that way at all, you know?”

In truth, Katsuya did not mean to flirt at all. But even so, although he did not do it intentionally, there were many girls who approached him after he said something which invited such misunderstanding. So he could not be sure that he did not say anything that would have caused such misunderstanding and ended his sentence as a pseudo question.

After all, since he really enjoyed talking with Sheryl, he felt that he might have said something that he should not without realizing it. That was why he could not give a straight answer to that question.

Sheryl then smiled to Yumina.

“Are you Katsuya-san’s girlfriend?”

“G-girlfriend!? No, I-I’m not his girlfriend though…”

Yumina was embarrassed and happy at the same time since Sheryl thought that she was Katsuya’s girlfriend. Her voice was getting feeble when she answered Sheryl’s question.

“Then, is the girl next to you Katsuya-san’s girlfriend?”

“…No.”

Airi’s long silence ended up with a no. Although she was still emotionless, her cheeks slightly turned red.

“I see. Since both Yumina-san and Airi-san’s names came up a lot in Katsuya-san’s story… I thought that one of you is his girlfriend… If I did something that bothers you, I apologize.”

Since Sheryl sounded apologetic, Yumina was only able to flusteredly reply back.

“N-no, it’s fine. Please don’t worry about it.”

If Katsuya really did say something to Sheryl that caused such misunderstanding, Yumina was really happy to know that. That was also the case for Airi too. Yumina and Airi’s mood suddenly turned for the better with that single exchange.

Katsuya blushed a little as he wondered if he really said something like that to Sheryl. But looking at the smiling Sheryl and blushing Airi and Yumina, it quickly slipped off his mind.

It was true that he did share a little about Airi and Yumina, but to be able to make a guess that they were his girlfriend only from what he said, it would require a lot of imagination.

Sheryl kept smiling while still looking at the three of them.

Celen suddenly came out and asked Sheryl for help with her dress adjustment.

“Excuse me to bother you, but can I ask for your help for a bit?”

“Of course, please excuse me.”

Sheryl lightly bowed to Katsuya, Airi and Yumina before she followed Celen.

The mood was a bit awkward between those that were left there, so they decided to return back to browsing clothing.

Yumina remembered about Sheryl while she was picking clothes. From her point of view, Sheryl’s dress looked very refined. She was looking for a similar dress in that shop, and right when she thought of that, Kashua was standing next to them while looking at them.

“Uhmmm, can I ask something? About the dress that the girl who was sitting over there was wearing…”

“Are you interested in that dress? That dress set is all from this shop. You can get the same set if you want to, so how about it?”

It was true that Katsuya reacted positively to that dress. So if she used the same dress, it might increase his evaluation of her. As she thought so, Yumina accepted Kashua’s offer.

“Yes, please.”

“…Me too.”

Airi who was listening to their conversation suddenly jumped in.

“Of course.”

Kashua smiled as she said that. Although that dress set was not an expensive set available in that shop, if she could sell 3 sets of that dress, it would fetch her quite a lot of profit. She gleefully proceeded to fetch the articles that Airi and Yumina asked.

Kashua quickly prepared the dress set and handed them over to Yumina and Airi. Yumina and Airi immediately tried them on, they then looked at their own reflection on a mirror before showing it to Katsuya. Katsuya looked at both of them and frowned.

His reaction was bland, but that was not enough to sour Yumina and Airi’s mood. They both looked at their own reflections on the mirror, glanced at each other and mumbled.

“…Not bad.”

To be honest, it was quite decent. In fact, they looked pretty good and all of them agreed about that. But Sheryl, who was wearing the exact same dress, looked way better; way more beautiful. They could not help but compare themselves with Sheryl.

Even Kashua could not say that they looked good in that dress even if it was only for lip service.

“If it didn’t satisfy you, how about changing the upper half into something else? I’ll bring something that might look good on both of you.”

“…Yes, please.”

“Me too.”

“Very well.”

Kashua smiled as she left and picked some dress for Airi and Yumina. Of course, she chose more and more expensive articles for her recommendation.

After they finished paying for their dress, Yumina, Airi and Katsuya sat on a table inside that shop to take a quick rest. In the end, they bought a completely different dress set than what Sheryl was wearing. All of it was packed in an expensive-looking box to make sure that they would not wrinkle.

Katsuya then threw a question to Yumina and Airi.

“So then, what’s your next plan? Are we going to another shop?”

“This is the last shop, we did use all our budget here.”

“Me too, it was expensive.”

In order to have Katsuya accompany them browsing through a lot of shops, Yumina and Airi were planning to be frugal with their budget. But they ended up spending all of it in that shop. But with that being said, they did not regret spending their money there. After all, as long as they got a positive reaction from Katsuya, they were all happy with that.

Katsuya looked tired as he said.

“I see. In that case, let’s go to a nearby restaurant and take a rest there while having a meal. There should be some good restaurant around this place.”

“… Me too… I’m tired.”

Both Airi and Yumina were Hunters. Their job included strolling through the wasteland with heavy equipment and fighting monsters. To be honest, they were confident with their physical stamina, but that was not the case for their mental resilience. After buying dresses that were way more expensive than they usually bought, Airi and Yumina were mentally drained. After all, it would be a huge disaster if they were not careful and got their expensive dress torn.

Katsuya turned his attention to the direction where Sheryl went. Kashua, who was standing in the same direction, thought that Katsuya was calling for her.

“Do you need me?”

“Ah, no, I just thought that Sheryl went that way, so I was wondering what she was doing.”

“If it’s about that girl… We’re readjusting one of her dresses.”

Kashua was unsure as to how much information could be given to Katsuya, but she then decided to give him that short answer.

Yumina who was listening to them seemed interested in that subject as she joined in.

“Readjusting?”

“Yes, other than selling high-quality clothing, we can also refit them. If you have any dresses that need readjusting, please, by all means, come to us.”

“Well, I am interested, but isn’t that usually expensive?”

“Since it’s readjusting an already finished dress, I can only say that it depends on the dress. But our professional fitter will give nothing less than perfect, I can guarantee that you’ll find it satisfying.”

Kashua gave her best smile when she said that.

Even Yumina always desired a custom-fit dress like that. But buying a dress set in that shop already took a huge chunk of her money. Her expression changed as she calculated the gap between reality and her dream.

Sheryl returned back after some time. There were 4 chairs around the table that Katsuya and his friends were sitting. So one of them was still empty, but Sheryl did not want to interrupt their conversation. Thus she chose to sit on another table.

Katsuya who noticed that invited Sheryl to sit together with them. Although she refused at first, she eventually gave up. She lightly bowed and took that seat. Katsuya could not help but start smiling.

Yumina looked at Sheryl. From Sheryl's outer appearance, Yumina thought that she was a lady from a rich family. Both her smile and her dress gave off a refined feeling as if they were living in a whole different world. It somehow made Yumina lose her confidence.

[…She's not only beautiful, she's just too different from me.]

Katsuya was rather popular among the girls around his age in Drankam. Because of that, there were many girls who had romantic feelings toward him, and that included Yumina. But even among all those girls around him, none of them was like Sheryl.

Yumina thought that difference came from the fact that she was a girl who went to the wasteland with weapons on a daily basis while Sheryl was a girl from the inner wall who was blessed with prosperity.

But that was a huge misunderstanding. The reason why Yumina felt that much difference was because of something else.

Sheryl's smile was nothing more than her weapon to get an upper hand when talking with other people. It was a technique that she learned with a substantial amount of effort. That smile was the first thing that caused Yumina to feel a big difference between her and Sheryl.

Just like Yumina, Airi could also feel the difference between her and Sheryl. But unlike Yumina, she more or less understood the real cause of that difference.

Sheryl had no romantic feelings toward Katsuya at all. Although she might act all nice since Katsuya was a promising Hunter, she did not show any interest as the opposite sex at all. Airi noticed that. It was something that was very rare among the girls who interacted with Katsuya. Even among the girls who only approached him to make use of him since he was a promising young Hunter, no one gave him the kind of treatment that Sheryl was showing.

Although Airi noticed that, she did not say anything. After all, she did not want to make any enemies unnecessarily and she thought that it was not something important to tell others.

Airi looked at Katsuya. He was smiling happily. Thus she decided to stop worrying about it.

Katsuya did not think too deeply as he threw a question to Sheryl.

“By the way, I heard that you’re readjusting your dress here.”

“Yes, the size was a little too big for me, so I’m refitting it.”

“I wonder how much that kind of thing would usually cost. Is it okay to ask you how much it took you?”

“I’m really sorry. To be honest, I don’t know much about it. So it might be better to ask that question to the clerk. As for my dress readjustment, it was 1,500,000 Aurum.”

Katsuya, Airi and Yumina were dumbstruck when they heard the exact cost. It was way more than what they expected.

Looking at their reaction, Sheryl thought that 1,500,000 Aurum was a huge amount of money even for promising young Hunters like them. It reminded her of how amazing Akira was since he easily paid that much money.

Kashua thought that it might disrupt her future business if they used that amount as a standard, so she interjected.

“It was a rather special case, thus it might be better if you don’t use that amount as a standard. Although it still depends on the request, it’s possible to refit a dress for 500,000 Aurum.”

Yumina frowned as she said.

“…But still, if it takes more money to readjust the dress compared to its original cost…”

“Since we’re refitting old-world clothing, we need to employ some special techniques. Not to mention, the tool and the fabric that we need to readjust the dress also cost a lot of money. Thus, I believe that it’s a justified price. Of course, if you want to readjust a normal dress, it would be cheaper too.”

That news shocked Katsuya and his friends. Not only did Sheryl decide to modify an old-world relic that might fetch her a lot of money if she sold it in a pristine state, she even paid 1,500,000 Aurum to have it refitted.

Katsuya could feel a gap between him and Sheryl. He smiled at her, but there was a slight shadow mixed in that smile.

“You’re really amazing.”

“…That would be true if I’m the one paying for it, but unfortunately, someone else is paying for me. Thus, I believe that it’s not me who is amazing. I think that Katsuya-san is much more amazing for being able to live independently working as a Hunter.”

Sheryl’s smile was obviously clouded, her voice was low when she replied. Although she intentionally did that, the words that she said were her real opinion. Except for one thing, she was actually thinking about Akira and not Katsuya.

“…Is that so?”

“Yes.”

As Katsuya timidly asked that question, Sheryl replied back firmly while smiling.

When he saw her smile, the shadow behind Katsuya’s smile vanished. He just continued to smile while trying to hide his embarrassment.

Yumina and Airi had recovered after a short rest. They thought that it would be a bad idea to stay there for long although they no longer had any budget to buy more clothes. Thus they decided to leave that shop.

Katsuya stood up and carried Yumina and Airi’s luggage. He hesitated for a bit before deciding to invite Sheryl too.

“Ahh, by the way, we plan to eat in a restaurant nearby. If it’s okay with you, do you want to come too?”

Yumina let out a big sigh.

She had been together with Katsuya for a long time. She knew him well, he had no ill-will toward Sheryl nor was he trying to flirt with her. She knew that Katsuya was simply inviting someone that he considered as a friend.

The usual pattern dictated that the invited person would misunderstand, and when she finally realized the misunderstanding, she was already so in love with Katsuya that she could not separate herself from him.

That was the reason why the team that Katsuya led in Drankam was always filled with girls. Although there were boys from time to time, they did not stay long, it might be because it was hard for them to stay in that team. Some people even started calling Katsuya’s team as a harem team.

As Yumina thought that the usual scenario would play out this time too, she looked at Sheryl with a resigned expression.

But unlike what she expected, Sheryl lightly bowed and refused Katsuya’s offer.

“I’m really sorry. For helping the readjustment, I can’t afford to leave this place. Not to mention, I’m also waiting for someone. So thank you for the invitation, but I have to refuse.”

Katsuya and Yumina were obviously surprised. Katsuya assumed that Sheryl would not refuse, that was also the case for Yumina based on her long experience with Katsuya.

But that was not the case for Airi. She was not that surprised, after all, she did think about that possibility.

“I-I see. Well, it can’t be helped. I’m sure we’ll meet again somewhere, someday.”

Katsuya was a bit taken aback as he replied. It was because he almost never got refused before.

“Yes, please be careful out there.”

Sheryl smiled at him. Katsuya looked at that smile and was relieved since it seemed that he did not offend her there.

After they left that place, Sheryl sat back on her chair and reviewed her conversations with Katsuya and his friends in order to extract any information that she could find.

Sheryl was especially happy to get the information about Drankam. Although it might be subjective information from Katsuya, it was still better than nothing. At least, it was enough for her to get a rough picture of Drankam.

She smiled happily thinking that information would be useful for Akira who was also working as a Hunter.

Not too long after that, Akira returned. Sheryl, who saw him, immediately smiled.

Akira took a seat on the same table with Sheryl and asked her.

“I’m sorry that it took me so long. Replenishing my ammo reserve turned out to be more time consuming than I thought. Well, you didn’t call me at all, so everything is fine, right? Or did something happen?”

“There’s nothing. If I have to say something, some Hunters from Drankam came here to buy some clothing. I ended up talking with some of them. Do you want to hear about it?”

That reminded Akira when Sheryl extracted information from a Hunter called Dale not too long ago.

Akira winced back as he thought that Sheryl must have done the same thing again.

“I-I see. Well, I can listen to your story.”

“Okay.”

Sheryl then told Akira all the information that she gathered and it was indeed an interesting subject for him too.

“…I see. So all the relics that Drankam Hunters gather are given to Drankam before selling them. So it’s not like the Hunters who gather those relics sell the relics themselves, huh.”

“Yes. It seems that they are paid a wage based on their Hunter Ranks and given bonuses depending on their track record. They are categorized to different groups like relics Hunters and monster Hunters, then the gang would distribute request depending on the group that they belong to.”

“So they get wages although they work as Hunters, huh. That somehow does not sound right to me. But that means that they’ll still get some basic wage even if they can’t get good relics, right…”

“But in exchange, the gang will earn a lot of money if they get expensive relics. But even so, some Hunters still hunt for expensive relics to increase their Hunter Rank regardless of the reward. And for the Hunters who don’t seriously hunt for relics, I heard that they get transferred to monster hunting group.”

“They do think about all kinds of scenarios, huh…”

As Akira heard about a different kind of lifestyle for a Hunter, he could not help but voice out his amazement.

“That was really interesting, thank you.”

He thanked Sheryl and she was delighted to hear that.

Sheryl almost never showed a fake smile to Akira. After all, from her experience, it had almost no effect on him.

“I’m glad that I could be useful to you.”

It reminded Sheryl that gathering information was indeed crucial.

Not too long after that, her dress was finally done.

Sheryl changed back to her original dress and returned to Akira. Celen thought that she did a good job as she made a satisfied expression, there was a shred of pride on her face too.

Sheryl nervously asked for Akira’s opinion while fidgeting.

“H-how is it?”

Akira looked at Sheryl with her newly readjusted dress and voiced out his opinion.

Sheryl was thrilled to receive such praise from Akira that she smiled happily while blushing.

The old-world dress, which could no longer be considered an old-world dress after the modification, looked beautiful on Sheryl, enough to make someone like Akira, who had a dead fashion sense, think that she looked good in it. The weird feeling that was present when it was slightly too big for her had completely vanished. While on the other hand, it was able to fully preserve the refined beautiful old-world design which further complemented Sheryl’s already charming figure. It seemed that Celen was indeed a skilled fitter.

Alpha smiled as she said to Akira.

“It seems that it is worth the 1,500,000 Aurum, right? If you had not given any good reactions, it would have meant that your fashion sense was really unsalvageable.”

“Even someone like me can recognize it. It was worth spending that 1,500,000 Aurum.”

Kashua then turned to Akira, who was amazed by that readjusted dress, and asked him.

“I hope you find it satisfying.”

“Of course. To be honest, I didn’t expect that it would change this much. I’m really satisfied with it.”

“Those praises are the greatest reward that we can ask for. If you need to readjust your dress, please, by all means, come to us again.”

Kashua smiled happily as she offered to do more business with Akira in the future.

After Akira and Sheryl left that shop, Kashua asked Celen.

“Celen, to be honest, that was way better than what I expected. Since when have you become that good?”

Celen smugly replied.

“It’s a mix of her base figure, the quality of the dress that she brought in, and my refined skill. That’s the reason I could produce such a miracle. To be honest, I don’t think I can ever do something like this again.”

Kashua was convinced by Celen’s explanation but she panicked when she heard Celen’s last remark.

“…What was that!? I did tell them to come here again if they need more refitting though?! There’s no mistaking that they’ll expect the same result next time, you know!?”

“Well, even if you tell me so. I’m going back to sleep now, don’t interrupt me this time.”

Celen left Kashua after she said that. She was already sleep-deprived when she started working. And since she was still exhausted, she planned to sleep until the next day.

She had done exceptionally well that day, thus she believed she would be able to get a good night's rest as she headed to her bed.

Kashua, who was left behind, worried. But then, she reassured herself that it was a good advertisement for her shop and 'all was well'.

Akira walked Sheryl back to her base.

On her way to her base, Sheryl was wearing the dress that she bought from Kashua's shop. As for her dress that just got readjusted, she put it inside a strong box. She knew that she could not walk around the slum city in that dress because of the danger, even the dress that she was wearing was barely safe to use in the slum city.

The people around her gang's territory knew well that Sheryl was backed by a powerful Hunter, thus none of them wanted to mess with her. But even so, if she wore the dress inside the strong box and walked around the slum city, there might be people who would try to attack her ignoring the fact that a strong Hunter was backing her up. That was why she could not wear that dress on her way back to her base.

After Akira walked Sheryl back to her base, he headed straight to his home. Although Sheryl found that a little unfortunate, she decided to focus on thinking about her next plan while she was inside her private room.

Sheryl glanced at her dress box. She changed to dress inside that box and stood in front of a mirror. She looked at her reflection that looked like a refined lady from a rich family. She then started smiling as she thought of a plan.

[As long as I have this dress that even Akira praised, I'm sure everything will go well.]

Sheryl smiled full of confidence with her next plan as she kept on looking at her own reflection on the mirror.

Rebuild World – Chapter 91, Bounty Hunting Invitation

Akira was patrolling through the wasteland around the city. It was because he had taken the patrol request from the Hunter Office. Just because there was a bounty monster roaming around the city, Akira could not afford to keep himself locked inside the city forever. Thus, he decided to go out while avoiding the areas where the bounty monster was spotted.

Akira was sniping at a monster from a moving vehicle, it was for his training so he had no support from Alpha. Of course, it was really difficult to accurately aim at his target from the constantly shaking vehicle. The hit rate was simply miserable. He kept on shooting while following Alpha's instruction.

"Alpha, is there any news about the bounty monsters? Did someone get at least one of them?"

"No, all the 4 bounty monsters are alive and kicking. There's almost no new information about them too. The latest one I could find only contained a more detailed description of the area where they were spotted and mentioned their increased bounty."

Akira sounded annoyed as he said.

“I don’t care who it is, I hope someone would take them out soon. It’s not like they’re hiding deep inside a ruin somewhere, right? They’re just roaming in the open space! Those Hunters with tanks should be able to make a short work of them, right?”

“Well, most Hunters with tanks only work further to the east, after all. If they send some of those Hunters here and the Hunters in this city take out those bounty monsters before the other Hunters arrive, it would be a huge waste of time and money. That’s why those Hunters with tanks are reluctant to bring their tanks all the way here. Of course, it’ll be a different story if no one is able to take the bounty monsters out after a while or if the bounty prize increases.”

Akira lowered his aim. He spotted other Hunters coming from the same direction as the monster that he was aiming at. It would be a pain in the ass if he missed his shot and accidentally hit those Hunters. Even aiming at their direction was enough to cause a needless misunderstanding.

“…Again, huh? Aren’t there too many of them around this place?”

Akira had been encountering a lot of Hunters lately.

“I’m sure it’s because they have the same idea as you, trying to avoid going to the areas where the bounty monsters were spotted. Just like you, they have nothing to do if they only stay inside the city, and taking the patrol request will at least get them some money. Meanwhile, from the City Management perspective, this request would make sure that the bounty monsters are not going to approach the city. That is why the City Management issued a lot of the patrol requests lately.”

“I guess I’ll increase my patrol radius, huh. It’ll be a pain to deal with if I get into a fight with another Hunter after all.”

Since the other Hunters had already moved away from the monster, Akira took another aim at the same monster as before and pulled the trigger. This time, he had Alpha's support in order to quickly take out that monster. The bullet went right through that monster's head and instantly killed it.

Akira could feel the big gap between when he had Alpha's support and when he did not. He then smiled bitterly and mumbled.

"I wonder how long it'll take for me to do this with my own skill."

"It depends on how hard you train, so let's patiently keep training."

Akira was driving his vehicle while Alpha was trying to cheer him up. After moving somewhere further from the city, he continued his shooting training.

The day started to get dark, Akira thought that it should be the time for him to finish his patrol request and head back to the city. On his way back, he encountered a lot of Hunters heading the opposite direction, they must be the Hunters who took the night patrol request.

The night patrol request had a higher reward than the patrol request for the day. Thus, a lot of Hunters preferred it. But looking at the number of Hunters who had taken that request, it seemed like they had run out of the day patrol request and had no other choice but to take the night patrol request. But if that was true, it also showed that most of the Hunters decided not to go out to the wasteland at all.

"Akira, there's a call for you."

"Who is it from?"

"Shikarabe from Drankam."

Akira tilted his head. It was because he did not remember anyone who he was usually in contact with having that name. Alpha noticed that and continued to explain.

"It's that other Hunter with whom you worked together in the underground city exploration with Elena and Sara, remember? He said something about the other Hunters who were in their team before you came in, something like having a fight against the other Hunters from Drankam.”

After listening to Alpha’s explanation, Akira finally remembered him. It was that male Hunter who was more or less as skilled as Elena and Sara. He was in the same team with Elena and Sara to explore the frontline during the Kuzusuhara ruin underground city’s temporary base aid request. He was a pretty strong Hunter.

“That guy, huh? I wonder what it is about?”

Akira took out his information terminal and picked up the call from Shikarabe.

“Shikarabe here. There’s something I want to talk about, do you have some time? Where are you right now?”

“I’m in the wasteland, near the city, on my way back home. So, what is it you want to talk about?”

“Well, it’s related to our work as a Hunter. I’ve talked about it with Elena and Sara too, it’s not anything strange. You can at least listen to the offer first before deciding anything. I’ll send you our location, if you are interested, come here. Later then.”

Shikarabe only left Akira with those words before cutting the call off.

Akira thought for a bit, he then operated his information terminal to send a message to Elena asking if it was okay to call her right now. It did not take long before a call from Elena came in.

“It’s Akira. Elena-san, do you have some time?”

“Sure, what is it?”

“If it’s going to be a long talk, how about we meet somewhere? I don’t mind if you come over, Sara is here too.”

“No, it’s just a short question. It should be fine to talk it through the phone.”

Akira then explained about his short exchange with Shikarabe to Elena. After listening to his story, Elena made a guess and said to Akira.

“Hmmm. I think he’s recruiting Hunters to join him in hunting the bounty monsters. It seems that Drankam is focusing its effort on hunting those monsters right now. Multiple Hunter teams from that gang are out chasing for the bounty prize, you know. We also got the same offer from Drankam too. They asked us to join one of their Hunter teams. The reward was pretty big, so we accepted it.”

“I see. So that’s the story, huh… But it’s not something that they would offer to a Hunter like me, right?”

“We were together during that Kuzusuhara ruin underground city exploration, remember? I guess he thinks that you should be a good addition to his team. Personally speaking, I also think that you’ll do just fine. I believe that Sara thinks so too. Well, you saved Sara back then in Yonozuka Station ruin. If I may say something about it, I don’t want to hear someone who has enough skill to save us call himself ‘a Hunter like me’, you know.”

“I-I’m sorry.”

Akira apologized in panic, Elena laughed bitterly and said.

“…Akira, I think you underestimate yourself too much. Being humble is a good thing, but some people might react negatively to it. So you need to be more careful.”

Akira thought that he evaluated himself pretty accurately. He believed that most of his performance was thanks to Alpha’s support. Although that might be really the case, the other people thought that his performance was all from his own strength.

Akira’s real ability was hidden behind Alpha’s support, thus Akira himself did not completely grasp his own real ability. That was the main reason why he evaluated himself lowly.

Elena then continued.

“Going back to our main subject, I think there’s nothing hidden behind that offer from Shikarabe. Although, I’m a little bit bothered by the fact that Drankam would even pay other non-member Hunters for the bounty request, well, I bet that they really want to get their names out by defeating the bounty monster. After all, when you take out even one of the bounty monsters, the Hunter Office will announce that achievement in public. But it’ll only include the name of the team and team leader, the names of the non-member Hunters in that team will not be mentioned in the announcement.”

This meant Elena’s and Sara’s name would not be mentioned too. Akira found that weird since having their names out would bring them a lot of benefits.

“Elena-san, are you okay with that?”

“I don’t really mind. After all, it’s not like I’m working as a Hunter to become popular. And of course, because of that, I asked for extra rewards as an exchange.”

Akira giggled as he imagined that Elena must be smiling smugly right now.

“Putting that aside, I’ll at least hear his offer. Thank you very much.”

“If you’re going to take that request from Drankam, I’ll be counting on you if we get assigned to the same team.”

“Yeah, me too.”

Akira then ended the call.

Alpha was staring at Akira.

“What?”

“It’s nothing. If you’re planning to go to where Shikarabe is, let’s go there after you get back home first. The location sent by Shikarabe is the coordinate for a pub in the lower district. There might be no parking space for your vehicle.”

“You’re right… I guess I’ll at least let him know that I’ll go there later.”

Akira then used his information terminal to send a short message to Shikarabe.

Alpha thought that Akira should be thinking of taking that offer from Shikarabe. The reason why she made that guess was because Elena and Sara had taken that request. If Elena and Sara had refused, Akira might not even be willing to listen to Shikarabe’s offer.

It was rather unclear whether Akira realized that or not. But if she asked, Akira might realize it. Considering that it might affect her plans in the future, Alpha decided not to ask him.

Elena was sitting on a chair as she stretched her body. She was sitting in a very comfortable position, so comfortable that she might as well fall asleep on that chair. Though, it was an expensive chair that prevented her from getting tired even after sitting on it for a long time. It was her favourite chair that she splurged her money for.

She was in a very comfy getup. She was only in her undies and an information terminal that was attached to her head. It might be the side effect from working as a Hunter, who was regularly in the dangerous wasteland. So, she really put down her guard and relaxed when she was in her own house, where she was safe, it would not be an exaggeration to even say that she dressed rather slovenly when she was in her home.

Sara suddenly came in with some food. She was only wearing a shirt above her undies, just like Elena, she was in a very relaxed getup. It might be because she was always using a tight bodysuit when she was out doing her Hunter work, so Sara tended to use a very baggy getup that gave her a sense of freedom when she was at home. Both Sara and Elena would only change into something more respectable if there was someone visiting.

They were talking with each other while enjoying the meal.

“It sounded like you were talking with someone, is it something about tomorrow’s request?”

“Nope. That was from Akira. It seems Drankam also offered that bounty hunting request to Akira. But he hasn’t decided to take it or not, his offer came from Shikarabe.”

“So Akira has become a Hunter that even Drankam would request, huh. Well, it’s not that strange considering his ability… Wait? If it was an offer from Drankam, wouldn’t he have to talk with the person responsible for negotiation in Drankam first? So why would Shikarabe directly make that offer to Akira?”

When Sara pointed out, Elena also questioned that fact.

“Now that you mention it, you have a point there. Not to mention, when Shikarabe also made that offer to us, it seemed that he did not know we had already made a contract with Drankam… Is it because of some kind of misinformation inside the gang? He might be in a hurry since he doesn’t want other Hunters to make a deal with Akira before him.”

But that was all, it was just a small question, and after that exchange, Sara and Elena stopped from thinking any further about that subject.

There were a lot of pubs in the lower district. Since a lot of Hunters came there to drink booze after returning from the wasteland, those pubs were relatively dangerous places filled with rowdy Hunters. Not to mention, those Hunters would get drunk in those pubs while still carrying the rifles that they usually carried to the wasteland. Some of them would even drink until they were only left with their last shred of rationality.

Around those pubs, there were brothels where prostitutes would sell their services to those Hunters. Of course, those girls had people behind them who protected them in case something happened. It was simply an area that the people who could not handle a fight would never approach.

Shikarabe was inside one of the pubs in that area.

Shikarabe was sitting on a table further inside that pub, he was accompanied by other Hunters that looked more or less as successful as him. There were beers on top of the tables, but Shikarabe had not touched his yet.

The ones drinking those beers were his Hunter friends. One of them had a device installed inside his body to breakdown alcohol. Even if he was dead drunk, it would only take about 10 seconds for him to return back to normal. Some of them had drugs to help break down alcohol too. Thus, it should not cause any trouble during the negotiation for their tomorrow's plan.

Shikarabe opened his information terminal and confirmed Akira's massage. He then said to his friends.

"Akira will come here soon. I'll handle the negotiation, don't say anything unnecessary."

"I know, I know. So then, is this Akira guy going to be useful?"

"He, at least, won't be an extra burden to us. So how about the guys that you brought with you?"

After Shikarabe asked that question, his friends took turns describing the Hunters whom they had in mind.

"I have 2 Hunters with debt and their observer. They're pretty skilled. I've also talked about them with their creditors. They told me that they don't care if those Hunters get killed in the wasteland, but if that happens, they asked me to bring back their dead bodies. I've also asked others, but I'm not sure if any of them would come."

“As for me, I have 2 Hunters who wanted to come in order to make a connection with Drankam. One of them is pretty good while the other one is more or less as skilled as us. I’m also waiting for a call from the proxy corporation in case if other Hunters wanted to join in too.”

After listening to their explanation, Shikarabe asked them.

“If they’re really as good as us, rather than coming to us, they should be able to negotiate directly with Drankam, right? So what’s the catch here?”

“I don’t know the details. But I heard they got into a fight with someone and so they are looking for protection or something. I guess that’s the reason why they can’t go through the normal way. If you want to know the details, you’ll have to ask them directly later.”

“…So basically, they’re telling us to ask what’s going on with those Hunters ourselves and decide what to do with them, huh?”

Shikarabe’s team was aiming to hunt the bounty monster. They were gathering men for that purpose, it was also the main reason why Shikarabe called Akira.

But it was a little different from Elena and Sara who were invited by Drankam.

Akira was walking in the lower district, his destination was the pub where Shikarabe was. He was walking through a relatively dangerous area within the slum city.

There were some drunk Hunters knocked unconscious beside the road. The only reason that no one attacked them was because there were people who were monitoring the area so that it would not turn into a lawless zone. Not to mention, trying to attack those Hunters might get themselves killed instead. These people could not complain if they got attacked when they were sleeping beside the road, and the people who attacked them also could not complain if they got killed instead.

Akira ignored everyone who was trying to offer their services, mainly about alcohol or girls, in that place and headed straight to the pub. It was a pleasure district maintained with the money that the Hunters gathered from risking their lives. A particular kind of nuance and splendour was maintained in that area so that those Hunters, who exchanged their blood and sweats for money, would be willing to spend their money in that place. That place became the reason why some Hunters could still face the next day as well as the reason why some Hunters fell from grace.

Akira never came to that area himself normally. Thus, he could not help but look around with a face full of interest.

Alpha was walking next to Akira while evading the people who walked past him. Even if she collided with someone, her image would go through their bodies, so there should be no problem at all. But even so, she still evaded those people while walking beside him.

Akira found that weird and asked her about it.

“Alpha, is there any need for you to evade colliding with people? There should be no problem even if you collide with any of them, right?”

“Is it because it makes you feel sick when that happens?”

“No, but it’ll make you feel sick. Well, I don’t think it’s a problem though if it doesn’t bother you at all.”

Alpha then walked to one of the Hunters there and fused her body with that Hunter. The moment that happened, her face half-fused with the head of that Hunter and it made her look like a weird looking humanoid creature.

Akira frowned. It was true that it looked disturbing.

“I’m sorry, can you keep evading people like before?”

“Told you.”

Alpha returned beside Akira and smiled happily.

The equipment carried by the Hunters around them varied. Some of them carried huge weapons, those Hunters must have headed straight to the pub after they returned from the wasteland. Some of them even carried relics with them.

Akira himself only brought his augmented suit, AAH assault rifle and A2D assault rifle. He left his CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun attached to his vehicle and his ammo-filled rucksack back home.

He thought that he would not be allowed to get into the pub if he carried his usual weapons as if he was going to the wasteland, that was why he left most of his equipment back in his home. But he started to think that he should have brought those weapons with him.

Akira eventually arrived at the pub where Shikarabe was waiting for him. It was a fairly huge 3-storied pub.

When Akira entered that pub, the master of that pub frowned and told him to leave.

“This is not a place for a young boy like you. You should go back home.”

But Akira calmly gave a flat reply.

“You should say that to the person who told this young boy to come to this place. Someone by the name of Shikarabe should be here, do you know him?”

“No idea, but you can go ahead and look around… Good grief, who is this fool, who told a young boy like you to come to this place?”

Although he complained, the master of that pub gave his permission for Akira to come into his establishment. Since he did not get kicked out, Akira proceeded to look for Shikarabe inside that pub.

The pub was fairly big and there were a lot of Hunters present. It would be a huge pain in the neck to look for Shikarabe among all those Hunters.

“Where exactly is Shikarabe…? Should I try calling him?”

Akira pulled out his information terminal, but Alpha suddenly said to him.

“It seems that he’s on the second floor. Let’s go.”

Although Akira was a bit interested as to how Alpha did that, he stopped himself from asking any questions about it because he thought that he should get used to it. Even before Akira bought an information-gathering device, Alpha was already able to tell him the exact location of enemies around him even when they hid behind an object. Thus it would be weird to question how she did that now.

Akira had learned a lot of things from Alpha thanks to her classes. As he learned more and more about common sense from her, it reminded him more and more that she was an anomaly.

But to be honest, Akira did not really care who or what Alpha really was. The important thing to him was whether she was his ally or not, although she might be only helping him since she was in contract with him.

That was why Akira decided not to ask too much about Alpha. He prioritized on the most important part as he thought that there was no reason to needlessly ask about her techniques. It was so that he would not deplete his luck and that his days with Alpha as his ally would continue.

Akira followed Alpha’s instruction as he headed to the second floor and right to Shikarabe’s table. Just like she said, Shikarabe was really on the second floor.

Shikarabe quickly noticed Akira. He then waved to Akira and called out.

“Come over here.”

Shikarabe and his friends were sitting around a round table. Akira took the seat on the opposite side where Shikarabe was sitting. Shikarabe and his friends were sitting on the big sofa that was originally put there so that customers could sit with the server girls.

Shikarabe smiled at Akira.

“These two are my friends, Yamanobe and Velga. Yamanobe, Velga, this is Akira.”

Yamanobe looked at Akira with curiosity. While Velga looked at Akira with suspicion.

Akira did not care about them as he looked at Shikarabe’s eyes and asked him.

“So then, what is it?”

“Well, before that, do you want to order something first? Although this is a pub, they also serve meals other than the snacks for drinking alcohols.”

“No need. I’ll order something if it seems that it’ll be a long talk. Not to mention, I don’t know how much they cost too.”

Akira seemed to be cautious, Shikarabe smiled and said.

“I see. Let’s get into the main subject then. You heard about the bounty, right? We’re planning to hunt those bounty monsters. If we just want to kill them, we alone should be enough. But to be able to do that faster, with a better winning chance, and to take them all out, even us alone would not be enough. That’s why I’m recruiting for extra helping hands right now, and that’s why I called you here. I can guarantee that you’ll get paid handsomely, so, do you want to come with us?”

Everything that Shikarabe said up until that point was already guessed by Akira after hearing Elena’s explanation. So he calmly replied.

“That would depend on the terms of the contract. But if that was all, you could have told me when you called me, right?”

After Akira said that, Shikarabe’s expression turned serious.

“It would be bad if you make a decision without listening to what I have to say from here on. This request is not an official request passed through the Hunter Office. It’s simply an offer between two Hunters. I want you to agree about this part first.”

Shikarabe and his friends waited for Akira’s reply with serious expressions. But Akira was not sure what exactly those words meant. Although he knew that it was a pretty important point, he did not know anything further than that.

Akira then asked back, also with an equally serious expression.

“…If I take that offer, what kind of down-side might I be facing? Tell me as much as you can. I’m sure you know this even without me telling you, but secrets like that are the main source of conflict in the future. And don’t give me that ‘I didn’t tell you because you didn’t ask’ thing. I’m not someone from Drankam, I’m just a Hunter who is used to working alone. That’s why I’m not really familiar with the conventions and other subtle things between Hunters.”

“Very well. Just tell me if anything still bothers you.”

Shikarabe then explained his offer in detail to Akira.

Requests that did not get passed through the Hunter Office were basically informal requests. To be more precise, even if Akira was paid by Shikarabe to help him fight the bounty monsters, it would not get written in his Hunter track record.

Furthermore, there was no insurance for such requests. For the requests that were passed through the Hunter Office, in case if there was a defect in the request or if the reward went unpaid, it would leave a record. Thus it would help force the Hunters to follow through with their contracts. And so without it, the only people who protect the contracts would be the Hunters who signed those contracts. There were cases where Hunters used violence to claim their unpaid rewards and got framed as robbers instead and got themselves killed in the end.

The trustability of such requests was so low that people usually took any of those informal requests as a scam.

Putting aside if the reward was worth that risk or not, Akira was offered a huge amount of money for that request. They would subtract their expenses from the bounty prize before dividing it equally among them. But Shikarabe and his friend were not included there. Although the final number of people was still subject to change, if Akira and the other 4 Hunters excluding Shikarabe and his friends were able to defeat a bounty monster, the rest of the prize money would be theirs after subtracting their expenses and Shikarabe's share.

As for the payment, Shikarabe would get the money from the Hunter Office first before distributing it to the other Hunters through bank transfer. Even if they failed taking out the bounty monster, Shikarabe would still pay 1,000,000 Aurum to Akira. But in this case, Akira would have to pay his ammo expense and the other expenses himself.

Akira thought carefully of Shikarabe's offer and asked everything that bothered him.

"There are some points that I want to confirm. First of all, for the expense, how much is acceptable?"

"I have no plans to put any particular limit. That's why I'll explain to you things that we won't accept. First, we won't include paying back your debt. If you can't join us because you have a debt to pay, we won't give you any money to pay for that debt. You'll have to pay that debt using the money that we pay you. Second, money for new equipment. It's to avoid Hunters who ask for compensation for buying equipment that is worth the same amount of money as the prize money. Just because the prize money is 500,000,000 Aurum, we won't give you any money if you buy yourself 500,000,000 Aurum worth of new equipment. After all, that would mean you would basically take away all the reward money from the bounty. But, we will reimburse you for the money that you spent on ammo or rental equipment… It would be a pain in the ass if you guys look for any loopholes. That's why for my offer, even if we are able to kill a bounty monster, leaving the expense aside, all three of us won't take even 1 Aurum more. I can guarantee you that."

"Second question. How many people would be on the team?"

“Including you, it’ll be at least 4 people. Although it still depends on how our negotiation goes with the other Hunters, I think it would go up to somewhere around 15-20 Hunters. We do plan to get as many people as possible, but we won’t go above 30.”

“Alright, is there any guarantee that you would really pay the reward?”

“None.”

Shikarabe gave a straight answer without any hesitation. Akira’s expression turned grim, it was as if Shikarabe and Akira were putting pressure on each other with their gazes.

After a short silence, Shikarabe then added.

“…If I have to be honest, I prefer to pay your reward than to have to fight you over the reward. If I really think that you don’t have enough skill to pose a threat to me, in the scenario that I don’t pay your reward, I wouldn’t bring this offer to you in the first place. After all, it would be useless to bring you with me if you’re really that weak.”

Akira stared at Shikarabe and thought. If he took that positively, it meant that Shikarabe recognized his skill. But if he took that negatively, it meant that Shikarabe would do that if he discovered that Akira was not that powerful. So in the end, depending on his performance, it could swing either way.

“…Lastly, why don’t you pass it through the Hunter Office? You could have offered me this request through an official contract, right?”

When Akira asked that question, Shikarabe frowned.

“Are you going to refuse this offer unless I tell you the reason?”

“Yes. After all, I don’t want to get roped into some troublesome conflict without realizing it.”

Shikarabe turned to Yamanobe and Velga. Velga smiled bitterly and said.

“It’s fine to tell him that, right? It’s only a matter of time before it gets out to the public. Well, I can understand if you don’t want to tell him though.”

Yamanobe also agreed with Velga.

“It should be fine as long as he’s not going to spread it around. He’s the guy that you picked, so if it’s possible, I don’t want to lose him just because we didn’t tell him about that thing.”

Shikarabe sighed, he then turned back to Akira.

“Don’t tell anyone, okay? It’s due to a problem in Drankam. So don’t tell anyone outside Drankam about this.”

Akira nodded firmly.

“Alright.”

Shikarabe judged that Akira was not lying. He then looked so annoyed as he said.

“…Well basically, there is currently a power struggle within Drankam.”

Drankam was one of the countless Hunter gangs in Kugamayama city. It was also a private military organization that focused on Hunter jobs.

There were many Hunters in Drankam. When it was just a union of a small clique of Hunters, it had no problem at all. But as it grew, factions started to form inside the gang, to the point that it sometimes disturbed the management of the gang.

As Drankam grew into a huge organization, the gang started to take in common people to make sure that the gang's management could continue smoothly. Although it gave a boost to its growth, it also worsened the faction problem.

Some frictions started to spark between the management and the other people in the gang. As they needed more Hunters to fill the executive positions, inexperienced Hunters started to flow into the gang. Those people who never stepped outside the safe city would give orders to the people who faced the dangers of the wasteland firsthand, they even complained saying that the very people who went out to fight the monsters used too much ammo or medicines, or scolding them for bringing back bad relics or not enough relics to justify the expense. Although that might be the correct way to manage a big organization, it still rubbed the Hunters the wrong way.

Then there was one particular faction that started to rise lately. It was a faction of young Hunters that kept gathering influences. The very people backing up this faction were the people of the upper echelons who decided on the rule of how the gang will be organized, to be more precise, they were the people who made the new rule about prioritizing young Hunters. They were the Hunters with no particular past achievements, it was rare for these Hunters to get to the upper echelons position.

The young Hunter faction had a feud with the veteran Hunter faction inside the gang. Shikarabe was a part of the veteran Hunter faction, and so he was aiming to get the bounty monster in order to win that war of influence.

After listening to Shikarabe's story, Akira more or less understood the reason behind Shikarabe's offer. He then asked Shikarabe about the points that he did not fully understand.

"I understand that there's infighting inside Drankam. So, how exactly is that related to not passing this request through the Hunter Office?"

"It means that I'll have to go through Drankam's administration before I can get it to the Hunter Office, if I do that, some information might be leaked to the other faction. So it's to prevent that from happening. Moreover, it's better not to get this offer through Drankam so that we can adapt and make better adjustments in case if something happens. For example, if I try to bring along a rather suspicious Hunter with debt, the other faction or the office might cause some trouble. So that's basically it."

"That sounds rough."

Akira sympathized as he mumbled those words. It seemed that joining a big gang brought more trouble than he had thought.

Shikarabe then asked Akira.

“If you don’t have any more questions and okay with it, it’s about time I hear your answer.”

Akira thought for a few sec.

“I don’t mind taking your offer, but I have a couple of conditions. I always fight alone, so I want you to let me stay like that. I’ll still help you with your strategy, but don’t expect me to work together with another team. And also, I’ll leave if I judge that we don’t have any winning chance. Although I’ll ignore you even if you tell me to stay and fight, I’ll at least let you know when I leave. I don’t want to die after all. If you’re okay with these conditions, then I don’t mind taking your request.”

“Those conditions are rather a lot to ask for, you know.”

“I can say the same to you too. I’ll be an unofficial part of your team, even my name won’t be recorded. I have no plans to be your sacrificial pawn. So?”

This time, it was Shikarabe who took some time thinking. After a few seconds, he smiled confidently and said.

“Very well, we have a deal.”

Akira and Shikarabe made a deal there. Although Akira would act separately, he was added to Shiakarabe’s bounty hunting team.

Alpha looked a bit surprised by that.

“Akira, are you really okay with that? Weren’t we going to avoid meeting with the bounty monster?”

“I at least got him to agree that I can run in case if I think we have no winning chance… Or is it still too dangerous with my current ability?”

“It’s not like you’re going to fight it alone, so I don’t plan to stop you. It just caught me by surprise that you suddenly got so interested in doing this.”

“Is that so? I think it should be relatively safe though, and since the reward is pretty good, I just thought that it might be okay to take the request. After all, it would be a problem to me if no one won’t take those bounty monsters out anytime soon since I can’t go to the ruin to gather relics.”

Alpha then thought. The reason why Akira decided to take that offer was mostly because of that conversation with Elena. For Alpha, anything that could greatly influence Akira action was bad news.

It was still tolerable for now. But no one knew how it would affect him in the future. Thus, Alpha decided that it would be better to come up with a way to mitigate it.

After that, Akira stayed in the pub to meet the other team members.

He moved to another seat since he would be blocking the next person negotiating with Shikarabe if he kept sitting on that chair that was across the table from Shikarabe. There was an order terminal fixed on the table where they were, Akira used that terminal to order some simple meal. He then waited for his meal to come while talking with Shikarabe about the details of his request.

Shikarabe had decided on a simple plan to hunt for the bounty monsters. The next day, at 4 in the morning, Akira would meet up with Shikarabe and the other Hunters outside the city before going to hunt for the bounty monster. As for which monster among the 4 bounty monsters that they were going to hunt, Shikarabe would gather information both from Drankam and from other routes and decide right before they went out on their hunt.

Although, in the worst-case scenario, someone might hunt the 4 bounty monsters before they could even try. But it was not like they could go right now. Shikarabe and his friends had a lot of things to prepare first. They were in the middle of making that preparation while gathering more Hunters. It seemed that they even planned to work overnight tonight to finish their preparation.

Not too long after that, a girl wearing a sexy dress came with the meal that Akira ordered. She was surprised to find a young boy like Akira there.

She then placed Akira's order on the table and asked Shikarabe.

"This is a pretty young newcomer, not to mention that this is the second floor. Shikarabe, are you the one who brought him here?"

"Yes. This guy will be busy today and tomorrow, so don't try to offer anything to him. Tell that to the other girls too."

That girl made a friendly smile and said.

"Of course we won't offer anything to a small boy like him. How about your friends?"

"I'm sure the master also told you that we're going to be busy too, right? He didn't tell you? Everyone in this table is out of question."

"What boring men! Why are you even on the second floor?"

"We have a lot of things going on too. When we finish this job, we'll throw a big party and spend a lot of money here. So wait until then."

"Don't forget those words, okay?"

She smiled seductively before leaving that place.

Akira was not sure what they were talking about, so he asked Shikarabe.

"Is there anything special with the second floor?"

"Well, the third floor of this building is a brothel. So the waitresses on the second floor also offer their service and will go to the third floor. So people who only want to drink would stay on the first floor in this building."

After hearing Shikarabe's explanation, he understood why he was told to leave when he was on the first floor. He looked at Shikarabe with a blaming gaze.

“…You shouldn’t call a boy to this place, you know.”

Shikarabe lightly laughed.

“Age doesn’t matter when it comes to being a Hunter. It’s not like I chose this place in order to annoy you, it’s just that it’s better to talk about an unofficial request on the second floor. So just ignore it.”

Akira sighed, he then decided to ignore the fact that he was on the second floor and started eating.

A group of 4 men approached the table where Akira and Shikarabe were. Yamanobe noticed them and waved his hand. They were the people that Yamanobe called and the people who accompanied them. Basically, 2 Hunters with debt, their observer, and someone sent by their creditor who would be the one negotiating with Shikarabe.

The observer and the person from the crediting company took a seat. The Hunters in debt stood behind them. The guy from the crediting company started first.

“Are we late?”

Yamanobe, who was dissatisfied, replied.

“Yeah, so you better bring the people that I asked you for making us wait like this.”

“Of course, if it was only random people, we can bring as many as you want. It’s hard to find the people who satisfy your requirements, you know. So like, just forgive us for being late. There are not that many Hunters out there who have enough skill to hunt bounty monsters while not minding taking an unofficial request not from the Hunter Office, you know?”

“Isn’t that why I paid you a lot of money? So if the people that you bring me are useless, I won’t let that slide.”

“I know, I know. Let’s start the negotiation.”

Yamanobe started his negotiation with Tomejima. Akira was still eating his meal while listening to them. The guy working as the observer then sat beside Akira. Akira knew him, he was the Hunter who Akira met in Higaraka Residence Ruin, it was Colbert.

“…Yo, been a while.”

Since Colbert talked to him first, it was not like Akira could just ignore him now.

“We meet again huh, Akira.”

“Observer for Hunters with debt, huh? Is it your main job?”

“Nah, just a side job. The company that guy is working for, I owed them the money that I spent to fix my arms which got eaten by the monsters. So it’s either I pay them the money or I have to do this kind of job for them. Since I want to fix my prosthetic arm too, I still need money. So then, why are you here? How about your job to escort Sheryl?”

“Being a Hunter is my main occupation. Sheryl’s escort is not.”

“I see.”

“Yeah.”

Akira and Colbert ended their conversation with that awkward closing. The air between them felt rather tense, but it was all blown away when Akira sighed.

“So that explains why you knew about Guyver’s debt, huh. I really hope you’ll do your job properly as an observer, you know. If you did back then, we wouldn’t have had to get in that trouble.”

Colbert just laughed and said.

“I know, I’m sorry. I never thought Guyver was that stupid.”

“Don’t tell me that Dale too…”

“Nah, he doesn’t have a debt and he’s not an observer for Guyver. He’s completely unrelated to us.”

Observers did a lot of things in the shadows to secretly watch over the debt-ridden Hunters. They even assigned some Hunters to join suspicious arbitrator companies. Then they got assigned on the same team as their target as if it was a pure coincidence.

Their front face was still an arbitrator company with proper permission from the Hunter Office, thus some other Hunters who were not related to that particular credit company also used their service. Dale basically was one of those Hunters. It was by pure coincidence that Dale and Colbert were assigned to the same team.

“I heard Dale sent a long complaint to the arbitrator company, but that was pointless. After all, it’s basically a creditor company pretending to be an arbitrator company in order to keep the Hunters in debt under its watch. Even if Dale caused a ruckus and told people how bad the company is, it’ll have almost no effect at all. It’s a half-dummy company, so it can just shed its old skin and restart again.”

“To think that Dale would get himself in that company, he’s really an unlucky guy.”

After listening to Colbert, Akira mumbled as if it has nothing to do with him. Well, it was about someone else after all.

But their exchange affected someone else who was present. It was one of the guys who were standing behind Tomejima. His name was Kadol, he was brought there to resolve his debt.

Kadol was already annoyed the moment he saw Akira. But he finally could not hold himself back as he suddenly interjected in the middle of the negotiation with a rude voice.

“Hey, is that boy also a team member?”

Tomejima quickly scolded him.

“Don’t interrupt like that! Just shut up and wait there!”

But Kadol ignored him as he said annoyedly.

“…I’m going to risk my life out there, you know?! So I don’t want a small boy like him joining the team and reducing my share of reward!!”

Everyone turned to Akira, who looked completely calm.

Kadol pointed his finger at Colbert and said.

“Moreover, isn’t that boy his acquaintance?!! Are all of you guys planning to cut my share and get them for yourself?!! Don’t fuck with me!!”

Tomejima suddenly came up with something. He saw a way to make him get the upper hand in that negotiation, thus he scolded Kadol and told him to shut up.

“Just calm down and shut up!! Don’t interrupt the negotiation!!… Colbert, you watch him!”

In order to hold Kadol back, Colbert stood up from his seat and stood next to Kadol. Tomejima then continued.

“…Well, uhh, I can understand him though. So yeah, adding a small boy like him as a member will only reduce our share, you know? Can you do something about that?”

“What exactly do you want me to do? If you’re here to negotiate, I’m sure you have thought of some terms too, right?”

“I won’t tell you to take that boy off the team, but I want you to reduce his share depending on his skill.”

Tomejima looked at Akira as he said that. He heard that there were a lot of young Hunters in Drankam, and he also heard that due to its preferential treatment, the gang loaned good equipment to those young Hunters regardless of their skill. He thought that Akira was one of those young Hunters.

Kadol more or less thought of the same thing as Tomejima, except it was worse. He thought that Shikarabe colluded with Tomejima by bringing that boy Hunter so that his reward share would be reduced.

Yamanobe then looked at Akira and Shikarabe. Akira was in contract with Shikarabe, thus he would need both of their agreements first to change the contract now.

Shikarabe looked annoyed as he checked on Akira, but Akira just started eating peacefully as if it was none of his business.

Shikarabe sighed and looked at Tomejima with a straight face.

“No, we already had a deal that his share is based on the number of people in the team. I can’t just change that to comply with your demand.”

Tomejima smiled bitterly and said.

“Whoa whoa. No matter how you look at it, isn’t it unfair for that boy to get the same amount of reward as the people that I bought today?”

Shikarabe made a serious face.

“If we divide the reward based on skill, no matter how we do it, it’ll only end up with a conflict. You guys bring us 3 people and we pay you 3 people worth of money. The contract will not change. To be honest, you should be happy that we assume you’re worth the money that we pay you.”

Shikarabe used themselves, i.e Shikarabe, Yamanobe and Valga, as the indicator when he said that, but Kadol thought that he was being compared to Akira.

Kadol, who thought that he was getting mocked, could not hold himself back as he shouted.

“Are you telling me I’m weaker than this brat?!”

Kadol still had some of his common sense left. But after his scream, Akira, who was still eating as if it was nothing, looked at him with an annoyed face. Akira then sighed as if he was just a minor bother to him and returned back to eating. That exact thing blew the last shred of rationality from Kadol. It looked as if Akira was mocking him.

Letting the anger take his body, Kadol quickly grabbed his rifle and pointed its muzzle at Akira. He himself did not know for sure if he wanted to kill Akira or just wanted to scare him. He just moved purely following his emotion.

But Kadol's rifle was suddenly sent flying. He did not have the chance to even react as a muzzle was prodded into his mouth. It went so deep down to his throat and he found himself already lying on the ground.

Amidst the confusion, Kadol could see Akira standing in front with a rifle in his hand that extended to Kadol's mouth. Akira was also the one who sent his rifle flying. Kadol finally realized that he had lost his rifle. As he looked at Akira who was standing expressionless in front of him, he finally realized that his life was hanging by a thread.

As Kadol tried to fight back, Akira pushed the rifle deeper down his throat. Kadol coughed in pain, his face was filled with terror and he finally calmed down.

The people who only saw the result without knowing how that happened were all dumbstruck, while the people who knew how that happened were only a bit surprised and smiled with approval. The former was Tomejima and his men, while the latter was Shikarabe and his friends.

Especially for Shikarabe, he had a good look on Akira's move. There was no mistaking it that Kadol grabbed his rifle outside Akira's field of view. But even so, Akira was able to react to it. He quickly closed the distance between them, hit away Kadol's rifle from Kadol's hand with his left hand, then smoothly pulled out his rifle with his right hand and prod it into Kadol's mouth.

Colbert did try to stop Kadol, but Akira was even faster than him even though he was closer to Kadol than Akira.

Shikarabe smiled and thought.

Although he was amazed by Akira's moves, he was also trying to find the reason why Akira could do that. His guess was not correct, but not entirely wrong either. His ability to make such a guess was proof of how good he was as a Hunter.

Although Shikarabe was the one who invited Akira to the team, Yamanobe and Valga actually were still suspicious of Akira's real ability. But their opinion was changed in an instant. They thought that it was as expected for Shikarabe to invite such a Hunter and approved that Akira would be an important addition to the team's power.

Akira was still pushing the muzzle of his rifle into Kadol's mouth, he was expressionless as he stared at Kadol. He then casually asked Shikarabe.

"Shikarabe, if I kill this guy, how much will it affect tomorrow's plan?"

Kadol tried to break away, he knew that Akira was not trying to scare him. Akira was seriously asking that question to Shikarabe.

Shikarabe was a bit surprised by that question, but he did not try to stop Akira.

"It won't affect much. It seems that this guy can't judge his own situation well after all. You can do anything with him."

The only reason why Akira had not pulled the trigger yet was because Kadol was already in a contract with Shikarabe. And if Akira killed him, it would lower his success chance for hunting the bounty monsters. But with that answer from Shikarabe, most of his worries were already resolved.

Akira's eyes suddenly turned dark and ominous. Kadol who was looking at those eyes was frightened. His life was hanging by a thread, but before the thread snapped, Shikarabe suddenly said.

"But if you kill that guy here, the master of this place will ask you to pay for cleaning the corpse and the blood. Not to mention that he might also ask for money to repair the bullet hole on the floor too. We won't help you pay that, you know?"

Akira then grumbled.

"It won't be counted as reimbursed expense?"

"No. You'll have to deal with the master, I'm sure he'll come here angry after hearing the gunshot. We won't help you with anything."

Akira sighed and pulled back his rifle. His desire to kill Kadol was not big enough compared to the aftermath that he should deal with later. If it was in the middle of the wasteland, Akira would have killed him. After all, if it was the wasteland, he could just pick a random place and dump the corpse there. A lot of people had the same line of thinking, that was why the civil order in the wasteland was the worst.

Akira turned back to Shikarabe and his friends.

"I'm leaving. I feel like it'll only cause me more trouble if I stay here. Not to mention, I have to wake up early tomorrow. Just to be safe, send me the position and time for the meeting tomorrow to my information terminal."

"Alright. Make sure to finish your preparation by then and don't be late, okay?"

"I know, see you tomorrow."

Akira then headed to the stairs. But he suddenly stopped and added.

“…And also, I don’t care if you want to pay that fool there, but it might be better not to expect him to return back alive, you know.”

“I totally agree with you.”

Shikarabe laughed as he said. The thing that Akira wanted to say was well conveyed to him. Akira then headed to the stairs and went to the first floor.

Yamanobe mumbled as he saw Akira off.

“That boy is really short-tempered. People like him tend to kill too much and get broken later.”

Valga also made his remark, but compared to Yamanobe’s remark which was rather negative, his remark was positive.

“There’s no guarantee that he would take that insult lightly. It was more or less an act of self-defence. I think it’s a good idea to keep that distinction in mind, you know?”

“Depending on where you put that line, you might be taking it too lightly. I mean like, look at the aftermath over there.”

Yamanobe then pointed at Kadol. With that easy to understand example right in front of him, Valga nodded in approval.

Kadol was about to pull himself up and retrieve his rifle. But before could he extended his hand, Colbert appeared and got hold of his rifle. Colbert then kicked him and knocked him unconscious with face down on the floor. But he managed to let out a scream of pain, so Colbert just told him.

“Just sleep there.”

Colbert then warned the other debt-ridden Hunter.

“You too, don’t try anything funny.”

As Colbert sent his glare to him, that hunter could not help but to give a firm nod.

Yamanobe and Tomejima laughed awkwardly.

“Now then, we were in the middle of a negotiation, right? Well, it’s true that I didn’t ask you in particular not to bring a fool who would point his gun at his teammate. We haven’t made any deal yet, and we haven’t made any detailed plan yet. It could even be said that we’re not teammates yet. So let’s keep that in mind as we continue our negotiation.”

Tomejima let out a cold sweat as he tried his best to look calm, his hard negotiation was just about to start.

__*__*__*__

Akira was on his way to the wasteland, the sky was dark, it was not clear whether it was in the middle of the night or early in the morning. He was heading straight to the meeting ground to meet Shikarabe and the other Hunters for hunting bounty monsters.

It was still a few hours until the sun rose. Although he slept sooner than usual the day before, he still did not get enough sleep for the day. He was driving his vehicle while trying to stay awake.

Alpha, who was sitting next to Akira in the driver assistant seat, said.

“I can do the driving if you want to get some sleep. I’ll wake you up when something happens, so don’t worry. Being sleep-deprived would affect your performance after all.”

“Is that so? I’ll be counting on you then… Wait, if I sleep, won’t it affect your driving? If I lose consciousness, you won’t be able to control my augmented suit, right?”

Akira remembered when that happened because of a stun grenade, thus he wanted to check that with Alpha.

Alpha just smiled and said.

“No problem. The vehicle is not like your augmented suit, it won’t affect me even if you lose consciousness.”

“I see, I’ll be counting on you then.”

Although Akira did not understand what exactly was different about his vehicle and his augmented suit, if Alpha told him that it would be okay, he was sure that it would be okay. Thus he decided to get some sleep.

Alpha smiled as she saw Akira starting to fall asleep. She then adjusted her driving so that he would not be late while also not interrupting his sleep.

After Akira got a good nap, Alpha woke him up.

“Morning, did you get a good sleep?”

“…Pretty much, yeah.”

Akira was still a bit dazed as he looked around to confirm the situation, the sun had still not risen yet.

“How about getting something to eat while you still have the chance? There’s no guarantee that you’ll have a chance to eat after you meet up with Shikarabe.”

“You’re right.”

Akira took out the Hunter ration from the pile of his stuff in the backseat. Half of that pile was ammo and other equipment but there was some food too.

The Hunter ration was completely made of a different material from the normal ration.

Although it tasted normal and had a normal texture, it would get completely broken down inside Hunter’s body and produce almost no waste. It also suppressed bowel movement and urine production. You could even use it in place of medicine. It was engineered so that it would not cause any harm in case it got mixed in the flesh and blood when your stomach got punctured while still digesting the ration. It got digested so fast too and increased the sharpness of your mind. It was augmented with so many extra effects and safety features that you did not need in case you spent your peaceful and normal life in the city.

Akira had bought a lot of those rations to try using them. The ration that he had that day was a coffee and sandwich, both of them looked completely normal from the outside. Or to be more precise, the sandwich was soft and the coffee was warm, just like normal food. He made a long “hmm” and said.

“If you don’t like it, you can choose something with better taste next time. Warm tasty food is important for your combat performance after all.”

“You have a point there. I have some surplus money too, I guess I can afford that much of luxury… Maybe.”

“It’s weird to hear that from a Hunter who doesn’t hesitate to use 2,000,000 Aurum medicine or pay 80,000,000 Aurum for equipment. It should be okay for you to get something better to eat daily, you know?”

“Even if you tell me that, it’s not like I have any complaints with my usual food.”

The food that he was eating on a daily basis back in his home was not that different compared to what he ate when he was still staying in inns. But even so, his food was still way better than most of the food in the slum city. Thus, at the moment, he was really satisfied with his current food. Of course, Akira himself wanted to eat something better, but he was still hesitating about paying a huge amount of money for that.

“Well, I won’t force you or anything. But, just remember that it should be okay for you to afford a little bit of luxury. At least enough for you to pick the Hunter ration you like.”

“Yeah, I’ll keep that in mind. In that case, I might as well eat some more, that was not enough to fill my stomach.”

Akira then extended his hand to the back seat and took another Hunter ration. Looking at that, Alpha just smiled bitterly.

Right after Akira finished his meal, the meeting ground started to come into his view. Shikarabe and his friends were already waiting for him there.

Shikarabe and his friends spent the whole night preparing themselves and finally went out to the meeting ground. Shikarabe's APC was parked in the meeting ground with a few other vehicles parked around it.

Akira parked his vehicle near the other vehicles, he then stepped down from his vehicle and walked toward Shikarabe and his friends who were discussing their plan for that day near the APC.

Shikarabe quickly noticed Akira.

"Akira, you're here, huh. How are you today?"

"All good."

"I see, we'll start as soon as its time. Make sure that you finish all your preparation by then. Once you're done with your preparation, just stand by and you're free to do anything while waiting. I'm going to be busy for a while, if you have any question, just go and ask Yamanobe."

Shikarabe then pointed his finger toward the APC. The back door of that APC opened up and Akira could see the other Hunters who would go with him today, the other people who were waiting in their respective vehicles around that APC also looked like Hunters.

Akira then followed Shikarabe's order and went to the APC to do up his preparation. He then took some stuff inside that APC and carried them back to his own vehicle.

The stuff that he had taken consisted of a lot of things. A walkie-talkie and a communication code, rocket launchers designed to fight huge monsters, a configuration chart of the jamming smoke that Shikarabe had prepared, and extra data to adjust information-gathering devices. It also included the info about the bounty monsters that Shikarabe had gathered and CWH special ammo. Although Akira also brought with himself extra CWH special ammo, it was always good to get more ammo reserve, thus he thankfully accepted it.

Akira then used the close-range data transfer to download the new data. Since his information-gathering device was connected to Alpha, she was able to use the new data too. As a matter of fact, Alpha quickly analyzed the new data and had set the information-gathering device to minimize the effect from the jamming smoke.

Akira finished his preparation and waited for the time to pass. But if he just sat there and waited, he might start feeling sleepy again. Thus he followed Alpha's suggestion to do light exercise outside his vehicle to keep himself awake.

Alpha spread out and rotated her 4 limbs one after the other. She then turned around to bend her hip, then stretched her hands and stood skilfully on one leg. That posture further boosted her already charming figure. Although Akira had been used to it, the fact that he barely reacted to that scene showed that he was very insensitive about that kind of thing.

Akira was doing light exercises while still in his augmented suit, so when he did not stretch enough, Alpha would control his augmented suit to forcefully stretch his body.

“Alpha, that hurts!”

“Your body is stiff, it’s important to stretch your body to reduce injury and increase your performance. I guess it’s a good idea to keep doing your augmented suit training and regularly readjusting it.”

“P-please be gentle. O-ouch!”

“Don’t worry, you still have some medicines.”

Alpha smiled when she said that.

“That’s not a level where you can say that I don’t need to worry!!”

Akira kept complaining while doing his stretching, but he did not tell Alpha to stop.

Alpha spread her legs and bent forward to show how it is done. She spread her legs in a straight line and bent so much that her chest touched the ground, she looked completely alright in that position. While on the other hand, Akira gritted his teeth in pain while trying to imitate her, but he was barely able to do that.

That was when Shikarabe appeared.

“What are you doing?”

Shikarabe was actually asking Akira why he was doing light stretching right now, but Shikarabe then remembered something else and asked Akira.

“…I see. By the way, just out of curiosity, is that augmented suit a sync-type or a read-type?”

“Uhhh…”

Akira did not understand what Shikarabe was talking about, so Alpha answered that for him.

“Akira, it’s a read-type.”

Hearing Akira’s answer, Shikarabe frowned a little and said.

“I see, I’m sure you’ll be fine, but be careful.”

Akira looked confused and asked Shikarabe.

“Be careful? From what?”

“There are Hunters out there who don’t do their research before using their augmented suits, you see. They think that anyone can use an augmented suit by just putting it on. So, in the past, I knew someone who bought a cheap augmented suit from the black market. He immediately used it without readjusting the augmented suit first, so he was still using an augmented suit based on other people’s data. Since he did not find anything wrong until then, after reaching the ruins he began stretching his body to check his augmented suit’s performance while killing time. Ah, by the way, his augmented suit was a read-type augmented suit, so it was still working based on the previous user’s data. So when he stretched his body, the augmented suit extended based on the previous user’s data and ended up tearing his ligaments.”

Akira frowned, looking a bit scared. Shikarabe then continued.

“A sync-type will not go further than what the current user can do, so something like that would not happen for a sync-type augmented suit. While the read-type augmented suit reads straight from the neuro-signals of the user, so it sometimes moves faster than the user intends. Since cyborg body has a different neural-signals than a normal body, incidents like that are not rare, you know.”

“…Don’t they have safety functions too?”

“I heard that the previous user had turned it off. There are a lot of Hunters who do something like that. After all, there are cases where they have to move so fast to the point that it’ll tear their limbs and break their bones in order to survive. So the safety function is actually a problem when they face such a situation.”

“What happened to that person after that?”

“He took a lot of medicines and somehow was able to return back alive. But since then, he was traumatized and he never used augmented suit ever again, instead, he’ll only use physical strengthening modification and normal armour.”

Akira turned to Alpha, who just smiled as usual. He told himself that Alpha had mentioned about medicines just before teasing him.

He then decided to change the subject to banish that thought from his mind. He stood up and asked Shikarabe.

“…So then, why are you here? Are we going soon?”

Now that Akira mentioned it, Shikarabe remembered why he came there.

“Ah, that’s right. We’ll move out soon, but not yet. I just have something I need to ask you, can you give this guy a ride?”

A young Hunter was standing behind Shikarabe. He was more or less as old as Akira. He then introduced himself to Akira.

“I’m Togami, nice to meet you.”

“Akira… Shikarabe, I just want to make sure of one thing here. Do you need me to help him and watch over him or something?”

“Nope, you can just fight the way you want. That’s our deal. Togami will also fight the way he wants. There’s no need to try too hard working together with him.”

“If he’s too much of a deadweight, I might throw him off from my vehicle, alright?”

“I won’t stop you. But if it’s possible, throw him into my vehicle when you do that.”

To be honest, Akira wanted to refuse Shikarabe’s request. But it was not like he was really against it. Because of that, he tried to make a lot of excuses to Shikarabe, but in the end, he ended up accepting it. So then, although he looked rather displeased, it was not like Togami was against it either.

Akira gave up and let Togami into his vehicle.

“…Alright, if you’re okay with that, I’ll let him get on to my vehicle.”

“Sorry about that, we’ll be going soon. Don’t be late, okay?”

After that, Shikarabe left Togami’s equipment there and went back to his APC.

Akira and the other Hunters started moving to hunt for the bounty monsters. They headed to the dark wasteland with Shikarabe’s APC leading on the front.

Togami was sitting on the driver assistant seat on Akira’s vehicle. His equipment was crammed together with Akira’s stuff in the back seat.

Togami still looked as displeased as he was before he climbed onto Akira’s vehicle. It seemed that he was offended by that exchange between Akira and Shikarabe.

He arrogantly asked Akira.

“Hey, what did you mean back then?”

Akira still locked his gaze forward as he casually replied.

“What did I mean by that? It’s as you heard. Do you really need me to explain it?”

After hearing Akira's answer, Togami looked even more displeased than before.

"Are you kidding me? You said that as if I'm just a deadweight. What is your Hunter Rank by the way?"

"21."

Hearing that, Togami sneered arrogantly and said with full of confidence.

"21? And you dare to talk like that about me? I'm 27, you know!"

Akira glanced at Togami, but he quickly returned back looking forward again.

That reaction angered Togami even more.

"Oii!! Are you listening to me!?"

Now that it had turned into something too much of a pain to deal with, Akira just ignored him.

Alpha, who was sitting in the mid-air beside Akira, pointed at Togami and asked.

"Are you sure it's okay to just ignore him?"

"If he starts bothering me more than that, let's just throw him to Shikarabe's vehicle."

He casually answered Alpha's question with that. Since Shikarabe had already given Akira his permission, Akira really planned to do that.

Togami kept complaining to Akira even after that, but Akira just ignored him. It did not take long before he clicked his tongue, sat down, looked at the opposite direction from Akira, and shut up.

Shikarabe, Yamanobe and Varga were in the foremost APC. The APC could fit 10 people, they used the leftover space for their ammo and other stuff.

But even so, it actually still had enough space for Togami.

Yamanobe was the one taking the wheel. The navigation control unit was showing the area where the bounty monsters might be. The scouting groups from Drankam were actively broadcasting information that was received to that APC. Yamanobe picked a route where they could avoid any needless fighting.

Yamanobe then asked Shikarabe.

“Say, why did you take that boy?”

“Which one are you talking about?”

“Togami, I know just how strong Akira is from yesterday’s incident. I have no problem bringing him with us… But that Togami, it’s not like I’m going to say that he’s useless, but at the same time, is there any need to bring him along? Not to mention that he’s also one of those young Hunters, so why did you bring him here?”

Shikarabe looked obviously displeased as he said.

“Even for me, it’s not like I brought him here because I wanted to. It’s more like he was forced onto me. When we were discussing about the budget, they told me to bring him along if I want to get more budget.”

“…Forced to, huh? Are you sure it’s okay to really take him along with us?”

“Although they told me to bring him along, it’s not like we have to make sure that he returns back alive. It doesn’t matter if he dies. It would be a huge pain in the neck to have him here together with us, that’s why I have Akira take him.”

Shikarabe laughed, Yamanobe just smiled bitterly and said.

“Seeing what happened yesterday, I have a feeling that Akira would really throw him off his vehicle.”

Varga looked honestly confused as he asked Shikarabe.

“I get why we have to take him with us, but why is he hunting for bounty monsters with us in the first place? He can just join the other young Hunters, right? So why us?”

Shikarabe looked irritated. That expression was directed to the people in Drankam’s management. That look was enough to answer Varga’s question.

Shikarabe had a close connection with Arabe, one of the officers in Drankam. He heard a lot of things about the inner Drankam management from Arabe. Shikarabe then explained that to Yamanobe and Varga.

The young Hunters in Drankam were mainly divided into two factions. Katsuya faction and anti-Katsuya faction. Or basically, Katsuya faction and not-Katsuya faction.

Katsuya faction had the support from the officers who supported the young Hunters prioritization plan. These officers were well-organized way up to the upper echelons, thus most of the suggestions that they made in Drankam were approved. Thanks to the influence held by those officers and the track record left by the Katsuya faction, they rolled out a huge amount of capital for this bounty monsters hunting.

While on the other hand, the anti-Katsuya faction was basically all the other young Hunters who were not a part of the Katsuya faction. It’s not like they had formed an organization or something. Moreover, more and more people who had not joined the Katsuya faction yet started to get absorbed into that faction as long as they did not have any particular reason not to join that faction.

There was a need for the anti-Katsuya faction to gain some kind of power to reduce the Katsuya faction’s influence within the gang. The other factions who thought so started to get their eyes on young Hunters like Togami, and started gathering skilled Hunters who did not like Katsuya.

With the record of hunting a bounty monster, it would help them to fight against the Katsuya faction. That was why they sent Togami to help Shikarabe and his team. Other than Togami, there were also other young Hunters from the anti-Katsuya faction sent to hunt for bounty monsters.

Varga looked exasperated as he said.

“The heck, so it’s basically to annoy Katsuya, huh. Ahh, now that I remember it, you do hate Katsuya, right? Hm? If that’s the reason, then there’s a need to make sure that Togami will return back alive, right?”

“They did ask me that, but I refused. If he doesn’t have enough skill to return back alive without anyone watching over him, then the bounty hunting record will just be a meaningless record. They immediately shut up when I told them that.”

“Well, if they’re going to use him to fight Katsuya, he’ll need to be at least that strong… What is Katsuya’s current Hunter Rank again…?”

Varga tried to recall Katsuya’s Hunter Rank, but before he could, Shikarabe interjected.

“It’s 32. There are not that many Hunters out there who could reach Rank 32 at his age. It’s understandable that she’s got her eyes on him.”

The girl that Shikarabe was talking about was Mizuha, she was a Drankam officer and an avid supporter of the Katsuya faction. Mizuha was the one who pioneered the young Hunters’ preferential treatment and she was promoting it even now. And as more and more young Hunters grew stronger, including those who were in the Katsuya faction, Mizuha’s influence as the main supporter of that policy also grew bigger.

Shikarabe then mockingly said.

“That woman is planning to use Katsuya to advertise Drankam. That’s also one of the reasons why she sent Katsuya for hunting bounty monsters. She also formed a team of mostly young Hunters for hunting the bounty monsters, and of course, the leader of that team is Katsuya. If that team successfully hunted bounty monsters, I bet she would announce it everywhere. A young skilled handsome Hunter, there's no doubt that the sponsors from the inner wall would be overjoyed to hear that."

Yamanobe laughed bitterly.

"That's true, that boy is rather handsome after all. People like us won't work for advertising the gang."

Varga, who was also laughing, noticed a signal from the detection device. He then said while still smiling.

"There's a monster on our way forward, should we use it to check this rising star of anti-Katsuya faction?"

Varga took his communication device and gave an order to Togami.

"Number 8! There's a monster forward! Go ahead and take care of it!"

All the Hunters in Shikarabe's team were assigned different contact numbers. Togami's was number 8, while Akira was number 9.

Togami was still staring at the wasteland with a displeased expression, but when he heard that order, he smiled boastfully and said.

"It's number 8! Roger that! I'll take care of it!"

Togami then turned to Akira.

"Hey!! Take me closer to that monster!!"

Akira did not say anything as he paced his vehicle faster. But because of that sudden acceleration, Togami lost balance and almost fell over from his seat.

Togami tried to regain his balance in panic and then said to Akira.

"Hey!! Drive more carefully, will you!! What the heck are you thinking?!"

Akira glanced at Togami, he let out a short sigh before returning his gaze forward again. Togami glared at Akira with full anger.

“You brat…”

Akira did not even bat an eyelash as he kept pacing his vehicle toward that monster without slowing down at all.

He was heading toward a carnivorous monster that was more or less as big as his vehicle. That monster quickly noticed the vehicles heading toward it, it immediately roared and ran toward Akira as it quickly closed the distance between them.

Akira did not even bother to look at Togami as he asked.

“So then, how close do you need me to get?”

“…Just stop somewhere nearby!”

Togami half sighed as he said that. Akira did not say anything as he slowed down his vehicle to a stop.

Togami thought that the other Hunters beside Shikarabe and his friends were Hunters without enough skills to join the bounty monsters hunt. He thought that they were there only to replace their lack of fighting power with numbers. After all, most of them did not look that strong, Akira was only a small boy while the other Hunters used weak-looking equipment such as a worn-out armour.

As a matter of fact, Togami was half correct. Lending good equipment for Hunters with debt might cause trouble in case those Hunters tried to use that chance to run away. Because of that, Shikarabe only lent them mostly worn-out equipment that they would throw away after one use. Those equipment would only fetch a small amount of money even if they tried to sell it and taking all of it while running away was not worth the trouble.

Togami thought that the reason why he was sent to join that bounty hunting team was because the higher official in the Drankam thought highly of his skill. Although that was indeed correct, it was a completely different matter whether Togami correctly evaluated his own skill.

Akira's vehicle had gotten considerably close to the monster that they were aiming for. Togami took his rifle and jumped off Akira's vehicle, he then mockingly smiled at Akira and said.

"They told me to take care of it. I can do it alone, you just shut up and watch me from there. I'll show you the difference in our skill."

After he said that, Togami ran to a position himself at a vantage point.

Once he reached his destination, he took out the powerful rifle that was prepared for hunting the bounty monster and aimed at that monster. He then confidently pulled the trigger. Although he missed some of his shots, he shot a lot of bullets to compensate for it. The bullets pierced through that monster's skin, flesh, and bones. For such a large vigorous monster, bullets which did not pierce through its weak points could only inflict minor wounds, but with enough small wounds, they turned fatal enough to kill it. And so Togami was able to kill that monster in a short time, which was rather commendable.

While he was focusing his shots at that one particular monster, the other two monsters quickly closed the distance. Togami spread bullets at those monsters to slow them down and wound them. The other monsters slowed down because of the wounds, they quickly noticed their dead friend and faltered. Togami kept on shooting at the rest of the monsters, he took his time to kill them.

Togami thought that he had done well enough to showcase his skill to Akira. So he walked back to Akira looking forward to his reaction thinking that Akira should have understood his power now.

But it did not go as Togami had expected. Akira was still sitting on the driver's seat while looking forward, he looked bored. Shikarabe's APC then passed beside Akira' vehicle.

Togami stood beside Akira's vehicle with a displeased look on his face. He was waiting for Akira's reaction from that fight just now. No matter whether it was a good reaction or not, as long as Akira would give him a reaction, he would be satisfied. If it was praise, he would accept it. And if it was an insult, he would take it as Akira being jealous of losing against him. So no matter what it was, it would give him some satisfaction.

But on the contrary, Akira did not show any reaction at all. He was not just simply ignoring Togami, it was as if his behaviour saying that it was nothing special at all.

Togami did not try to hide his irritation as he asked Akira.

"…Hey, don't you have anything to say to me?"

"Get in here, quickly. They'll leave us behind, you know?"

Akira somehow sounded exasperated when he said that.

Togami's expression immediately turned worse, he was about to burst when suddenly a call for Varga stopped him.

"Number 8, number 9, you're going to get left behind. Did your vehicle get damaged from that fight?"

Akira answered back.

"This is number 9. The vehicle is okay. But for some reason, the number 8 isn't getting into the vehicle. Can I just leave him behind?"

"Is number 8 somewhere near you? Number 8, are you hurt and unable to move?"

Togami sounded annoyed as he answered back.

"N-no, I'm not hurt…"

"Then get your ass back!!"

Varga shouted at Togami and closed the call.

Togami gritted his teeth and was somehow barely able to hold his anger as he dragged himself back into Akira's vehicle.

Akira quickly started his vehicle and tried to chase Shikarabe. He was able to catch up with them in no time.

Akira was driving his car without saying anything, but he was actually talking with Alpha through telepathy. Togami sat next to him while looking in the opposite direction from him. Although Togami was about to burst back then, they did not say anything to each other while driving. Togami knew that if he caused trouble there, it might cause Akira to make a blunder and hurt both of them, that was why he was somehow able to calm down.

The sun had risen up and shone its light onto the wasteland. Alpha basked under the sunlight as she smiled at Akira.

That was the moment when night turned into morning. The area that the sunshine reached turned into morning while the area that was still blanketed in the darkness stayed as the night, it was the moment when morning and night existed at the same time. In that ephemeral moment, Alpha's hair and skin somehow gave off a fantasy-like glossy aura under the morning sun.

"It's morning, Akira."

"You're right."

"…That was a rather dull response, don't you have like… something more to say?"

"Even if you tell me so…"

Akira looked around him and Alpha, it was not like he did not show any reaction at all, but he did not have enough words to accurately describe the feeling that was swelling inside his heart.

"Well, it's really something else compared to the morning in the slum city."

That was all that Akira said. There were a lot of things that he needed to have so that he could say those words, and if it was the past Akira, he would not be able to say those words there.

For example, in order so that no one would kill him in his sleep, Akira had to carefully pick where he slept and he ended up sleeping in places where sunlight could not reach.

The other thing would be the leeway to see the sunrise. Since he had to keep himself away from any possible threats, he had to focus his attention to the places where the sunlight could not reach, like the dark and shady places where he could get ambushed.

There were still other factors too, but basically, the past Akira did not have the leeway to leisurely watch the sunrise.

Even now, Akira still did not have the leeway to leisurely watch the sunrise.

Alpha suddenly pointed her finger toward the wasteland.

“Akira, it’s more monsters. They already noticed you and they’re heading this way.”

Akira could feel an irritation that he did not understand himself well enough, he then obeyed that irritation as he quietly went to the backseat. He took a stance and aimed the CWH anti-material rifle attached in the back seat to that monster, he looked somewhat annoyed as he carefully took an aim at that monster and pulled the trigger without hesitation.

He was using CWH special ammo at that time, thanks to the high-level accuracy support from Alpha, the bullet pierced right through between that monster’s eyes which was its weak point. After that bullet broke havoc inside that monster’s head, it pierced right through its torso and vanished into the wasteland. The shockwave from that hit was enough to rip off that monster’s limbs.

A call then came in from the communication device, it was from Varga.

“Number 9, a big-sized monster is coming from the right. Judging from its moving speed, it’s only a matter of time before it catches up with us, go and take care of it.”

“Number 9 here, it’s done.”

“…Hah?”

A short expression of disbelief from Varga passed through the communication device. It took some time for Varga to check the scanner, and after he confirmed that the signal had indeed vanished, he sounded a bit surprised as he said.

“…Ahhh, I’ve confirmed it too. You’re doing great, keep that up.”

“Number 9, roger that.”

Akira still looked slightly annoyed as he returned back to the driver seat. Alpha smiled mischievously while staring at that him. Akira felt a bit embarrassed as he jabbed at her to hide his embarrassment.

“What?”

“It’s nothing. It seems that you really enjoy watching the sunrise. You became really annoyed when that monster disturbed you.”

“…Well, yeah.”

Although it was not like Akira was enjoying the sunrise, he awkwardly responded to Alpha’s question with that short answer.

Alpha was still smiling at him, she knew a lot more about Akira that Akira himself knew. Although he had gotten used to her charming outlook, the sight of her basking in the morning light was even more charming than her usual look.

Togami, who stared at Akira as he returned back to driving, was amazed by Akira’s move there.

There was another monster near the monster that Akira just killed. It was a 1-metre big spider monster with a steel body. Cameras were fixed on its head in place of eyes. That monster was looking at Akira through those cameras.

After Akira and the other Hunters left that place, that monster finally started moving while making clunking sounds.

By the time Varga told Akira to take care of the monster that he detected, Akira had already taken care of that monster. Even Varga was surprised by that. He then flusteredly checked his radar and confirmed that Akira was not lying, and so he was still shaken when he replied back to Akira.

Varga then curiously asked Shikarabe.

“Shikarabe, where in the world did you find that boy? Wait, that’s not right. How the heck did you discover his ability?”

“There was a chance when we worked together in the Kuzusuhara underground ruin. That was the trigger.”

“Ohh, that, huh. If I’m not mistaken, they found a big Yarata scorpion nest there and executed a big scale extermination operation, right? I heard that the Katsuya faction was able to gather a lot of reward and achievement during that operation. So Akira also participated in that operation, huh?”

Shikarabe shook his head.

“Nope, as in matter of fact, he withdrew from the underground city request on the third day. So he did not participate in the extermination operation. The reason why I was able to see his ability was when I got assigned to a team of Hunters to explore the underground city.”

“So, did he do anything amazing there?”

“Not really, he was at least not a deadweight to me and the other Hunters. That was all there was to it.”

Varga tilted his head.

“Then why did you invite Akira? Judging from what you just said, there’s no real reason why we should invite him for hunting the bounty monsters, you know? Does he have anything particular written in his Hunter history?”

Yamanobe joined in and refuted that guess.

“Nah, there’s nothing amazing written in his Hunter history. Since Shikarabe invited that boy and after seeing what he was capable of yesterday, I went to the Hunter Office’s site to check his Hunter page. There’s nothing interesting in particular written there. He’s just a Rank 21 young Hunter, he has killed a lot of monsters and went up a few ranks sooner than most of his peers. That’s all that is written on his Hunter page.”

Varga looked a bit confused as he asked Shikarabe further.

“Then why did you invite him? Is it that thing? That Shikarabe’s intuition thingy? You always say that a good intuition is a crucial aspect for a Hunter.”

Shikarabe laughed.

“I know well enough not to rope both of you in solely because of my intuition, you know. Well, it’s true that it was because of my intuition at first, but I decided to invite him after I got more information about him.”

Shikarabe then pulled out his information terminal, operated it, and then gave it to Yamanobe and Varga. Both of them looked at that information terminal and checked the information displayed on its monitor.

Yamanobe looked slightly confused.

“Is this a copy from the Hunter Office’s webpage? I already checked it, you know.”

“You should already know why I went through all the work to get a local copy. It contains confidential information that you won’t be able to see normally unless you pay an information broker from the inside the Hunter Office. Look how it’s different from what you have read.”

Yamanobe then operated the information terminal to look for that difference.

“…There’s some difference in the request history. The details about the Kuzusuhara underground city request is really short… Hm?”

Yamanobe raised his eyebrows as he read through that short detailed description of Akira’s Kuzusuhara underground city request history.

“Confidential request from Kugamayama City Management… The details of the request… Is hidden. Ahhh, it must be a copy from someone who has no right to see this information, huh. The only available information that we can see is just a short summary of the request.”

Shikarabe then interjected.

“You can see the reward too, so check it out.”

Yamanobe and Varga checked the reward from that request. Both of them looked thunderstruck when they saw the number.

Yamanobe rechecked that number again to make sure that he did not misread it as he said.

“160,000,000 Aurum!? That boy is a Hunter who’s worth more than 100,000,000 Aurum, huh?!!”

That title referred to the Hunters who gained more than 100,000,000 Aurum in a single request. It was one of the indicators that showed the ability of a Hunter. Of course, there were not that many Hunters who could attain that title.

Although it was a customary title, if a Hunter had finished at least one request that earned that Hunter more than 100,000,000, Aurum or any other currency recognized by the Corporate Government, then that Hunter could claim that title.

But if a Hunter wanted others to treat him or her as a Hunter with that title, then he or she should find a way to prove it to other people. Thus it was hard for a Hunter who achieved that title from a confidential request, of course, that was excluding the people who knew about that confidential request.

Varga was honestly amazed as he said.

"…It says that 60,000,000 Aurum was used to pay for his medical bill. But it's still a reward that's worth more than 100,000,000 Aurum. There's no mistaking it, he's worthy of that title… No wonder he's that strong."

Varga then continued, but this time he sounded a bit suspicious.

"The only thing that bothers me is that this information is not set to be hidden by Akira himself. This information is not just simply hidden from public view, this means that it's basically forged public information. I bet it was forged after Kugamayama City Management made a formal request to the Hunter Office and Akira himself had given his approval too. What exactly happened?"

Shikarabe smiled and answered Varga's question.

"There was an incident the same day Akira withdrew from the underground city's request. The army sent from the Kugamayama city engaged in a battle against some relic thieves. Since the thieves were aiming for the relics in the underground city that were originally owned by the City Management, a lot of Hunters got roped in that incident. You guys heard about that too, right?”

“Yeah, but I heard that the army was able to easily apprehend the thieves. It was written somewhere in a small corner in the news sites.”

“I bet that incident has something to do with that confidential part in his Hunter history. It’s just my guess though, but I believe that Akira was somehow connected to that incident and did something which made the Kugamayama City Management pay him 160,000,000 Aurum. Either that or it was bribe money to make sure that Akira won’t leak anything. I can’t really judge his ability, but looking at the reward that he received, I can make a guess that he’s at least as strong as us. Does that convince you?”

Yamanobe smiled confidently and said.

“Yeah. But still, hypothetically speaking, if we can’t pay him enough reward, you’ll be in big trouble right, Shikarabe?”

Shikarabe laughed.

“No need to worry about that, it won’t be a trouble if we get to beat one bounty monster. Let’s have Akira work hard for his own reward.”

After Shikarabe said that, they laughed together. Being over-optimistic in their betting was normal in Hunter’s line of work. As long as they went out to the wasteland, they were gambling with their lives at stake. And so, these Hunters expected a high return for the high risk that they were taking.

Akira was driving his vehicle while talking with Alpha, so from the outside, he looked like he was driving silently. Or at least, there was no conversation between him and Togami.

Togami always had an annoyed expression plastered on his face, but now his anger was no longer present. And in its place, he had a cautious and curious face as if he was looking at an unidentified object. He had been looking at Akira for some time now.

Alpha then asked Akira.

“He’s been glancing at you, you know. Are you sure you want to just leave him alone?”

“It’s a huge pain in the neck to react to that. And it’s not like I can just throw him off from my vehicle just because he’s staring at me, so let’s just leave him alone.”

Akira knew that Togami was staring at him, but he just ignored Togami. As long as Togami did not strike any conversation, Akira had no plan to say anything to Togami. He would not even reply to Togami’s question unless he had no other choice.

“If you don’t mind, then I don’t really mind him either, but it really doesn’t bother you?”

“To be honest, it does, but ignoring him is a hundred times better than getting into trouble with him.”

“We should’ve refused right from the start, this was a mistake.”

“It’s not like I have any other choice. The person who made the request told me to take him with me, and to be honest, I didn’t expect he would agree to that condition.”

Alpha smiled, she looked a bit regretful.

“It can’t be helped then. Let’s just wait until we get a chance to throw him to Shikarabe’s vehicle.”

“Honestly speaking, I hope we don’t even need to do that.”

Akira looked exasperated when he said that.

Togami was still staring at Akira.

Akira was able to discover a monster even before Shikarabe told him about that monster, he then sniped that monster from a moving vehicle and was able to hit and kill that monster in one shot. If Togami asked himself whether he could execute the same feat, the answer was a loud and clear no.

In the first place, aiming from a moving vehicle was really difficult. Even if he was shooting from a stationary vehicle, sniping a monster from afar was already difficult enough. And even if he could hit his shot, he would need to either accurately snipe at the monster's weak point or use a powerful gun to be able to defeat that monster in one shot, both of these only increased the difficulty of executing such a shot. When you want to take out a huge monster, you would have to do both—use a strong rifle and hit the weak point—at the same time.

Togami was a Hunter skilled enough to be sent to hunt a bounty monster, but even if he overestimated his own ability, he was sure he could not execute the same feat as Akira just now.

Moreover, the person who did that was a Rank 21 Hunter who was supposed to be below his own Rank. Because of that, it really shocked Togami.

If it was a story that he heard, he would be able to just laugh it off as a joke or a lie, but Akira did that right in front of his eyes.

On the other hand, he could just think of it as a pure coincidence, a lucky shot that only happened once out of thousands of shots. That might be all there was to it, but Togami could not wrap up that incident as a lucky shot. The reason was because Akira did that so casually.

Akira did that as if it was nothing to him, he did it so easily and casually just because he could, it was as if he had just squatted a fly that passed in front of him. That was the only impression that Togami got from Akira's action. Also, Akira did not show any reaction after he executed that impossible feat and silently went back to driving.

As Togami kept on thinking and evaluating Akira, the image of Akira inside his mind was of an unknown boy Hunter who had a lower Hunter Rank than him. Since he could not admit that it was Akira's real ability, he could not hold his curiosity back and ended up saying something to Akira.

“…Oii, don’t get ahead of yourself just because of that lucky shot. I won’t ever admit that it’s your real ability.”

Togami actually wanted to confirm whether it was really a lucky shot or was it because of Akira’s aiming skill. But the words that came out from his mouth were completely different than what he actually meant.

Akira glanced at Togami and casually replied.

“I see.”

After he said that, Akira returned his gaze forward and continued driving. Normally, people would take his reply as an affirmation to what Togami just said. While on the other hand, it was a feat that Akira would not be able to execute without Alpha’s support, so it could also be understood as an affirmation from that point of view. Akira kept training himself every day so that he would be able to do the same thing on his own without Alpha’s support.

Togami laughed awkwardly after hearing Akira’s answer.

“…Hahaha, As I thought, it’s just a lucky shot, huh. Don’t surprise me like that. Ahh, now that I think about it, there’s no way a Rank 21 Hunter can do that in the first place.”

Togami laughed as if he was trying to convince himself, but since he himself was still not fully convinced by it, his laugh was somehow stiff and awkward.

⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯*⎯⎯

Drankam had a base in the Kugamayama city’s lower district. Somewhere near that base, a lot of Drankam’s young Hunters were preparing themselves to hunt for the bounty monsters. They were preparing their vehicles and equipment to go out to the wasteland and filled their APCs with supplies.

Elena and Sara boarded one of those vehicles and waited until the dispatch time while looking at the scene around them. They were the Hunters assigned to help the young Hunters from Drankam to hunt for the bounty monster. Their job was to fight under the other's orders. Both of them had already finished their preparation yesterday, so they had nothing to do but wait after they received the contact device specially used by Drankam members.

Sara looked at the other Hunters who were going to join them in hunting the bounty monsters and mumbled.

"There are quite a lot of them, but most of them are young Hunters. Some of them are even as young as Akira, well, it's not like I'm discriminating against them because of their age though. But it makes me worry with this many young Hunters. I wonder if they really understand that they're going to hunt for bounty monsters. It's not like we're going to hunt common strong monsters, you know?"

The longer someone was working as a Hunter, the more and more obscure his or her age became. But even so, it was rather obvious that the Hunters in that place were mostly young Hunters who were not even considered as adults yet.

Most of the Hunter equipment was designed to be used by adults, thus they were not perfect for young Hunters. As long as it was not some kind of fetish, even cyborg Hunters would not prefer to have a child's body.

Due to that, most of the young Hunters who looked like young children were really young children. And as young Hunters, they did not have long experience being a Hunter, the same thing could also be said for their skill too. Of course, there were some exceptions though.

Sara was observing those young Hunters preparing themselves while waiting. To be honest, she thought that most of those young Hunters were not ready to join the hunt for bounty monsters.

Elena then spoke to her as if she was trying to reassure her.

“Both their numbers and their equipment should be enough to defeat a bounty monster. Seeing the vehicles prepared for this expedition, it seems that they assume they’ll be able to successfully take down the bounty monsters. Although, I’m not really sure if the reward from the bounty is enough to bring them profit after preparing all of these equipment. Not to mention, they also pay other Hunters like us to help out too and it’s not like all of them are only young Hunters. So there should be no problem.”

Sara frowned a bit.

“…Depending on how you look at it, it sounds as if we’re here to look over these young Hunters though.”

“There’s no need to do that, it’s obvious that we’re here to look over these children. Leaving the bounty monster aside, the reward that we will receive this time depends on the young Hunters who can return back alive, you know. So, our reward will get a huge hit if the leader of the team gets killed. Since it’s not an escort request, there’s no need to try too hard protecting these children, but if we want to keep our reward, we should make sure that the leader returns back alive or take out the bounty monsters fast. Ah, this is confidential info though, so don’t tell anyone, okay?”

“Alright… I did hear that Drankam had a policy to prioritize young Hunters, but I never thought that they would go this far. To think that they would send young Hunters and their guardians to fight bounty monsters… Just what exactly is Drankam thinking?”

Sara sounded a bit bewildered when she said that.

Elena then jokingly replied.

“We might be looking down on them, you know. All of them might be as strong as Akira.”

“That in itself is scary.”

“Now that you mention it, that’s true.”

Elena and Sara then laughed together after that exchange.

They then noticed a group of young Hunters heading in their direction. Elena smiled at the Hunter leading that group.

“Team leader Katsuya, is it time to go?”

They were the team assigned to Sara and Elena. It had Katsuya as its team leader, then Katsuya’s close cliques, and some other Hunters who got roped in his shenanigans as the members. The members of Katsuya’s team were relatively high ranking members, they looked at Elena and Sara with a meaningful gaze.

Katsuya was a bit embarrassed since Elena called him team leader.

“Yes, we’ll start soon. Uhhmm, we’ll be in your care for today.”

Katsuya and Elena then nodded at each other, Elena smiled and said.

“We’ll be in your care too. Let’s give our best out there.”

“Both Elena and I will work hard for receiving the reward, so no need to hold back when you want to give us orders.”

Sara also smiled and joined their conversation.

“I’ll also give my best out there not to drag both of you down.”

After Katsuya said that and smiled, his face turned serious.

“Elena-san and Sara-san are actually assigned under my team, I might be an inexperienced leader, but please don’t move on your own since it might cause confusion. As long as it’s not an emergency, please stick to my orders.”

Katsuya was proud of himself for getting chosen as a team leader. He planned to give his best to turn his hunt into a success. In order to do that, he could not let Elena and Sara make their own moves although he was close to them. He said that with a serious expression to make sure that Elena and Sara understood well what he was trying to say.

Elena smiled and replied.

“Don’t worry, we’ll properly follow your orders.”

Both Elena and Sara did not seem to get offended at all. Katsuya’s expression relaxed as he looked relieved.

But there were people who got annoyed by that exchange between Katsuya and Elena. Among them was a young girl by the name of Lilina who was standing next to Katsuya.

Lilina did not even try to hide her displeasure as she shouted.

“Katsuya! You’re the team leader, so at least tell them not to get ahead of themselves just because they’re your acquaintances! And tell them to just follow your orders!!”

Katsuya looked surprised as he turned to Lilina, both Elena and Sara also looked at Lilina with a dumbfounded face. While for the rest of the Hunters there, half of them felt the same as Lilina while the other half were simply taken aback by that sudden outburst.

If Yumina was present, she would have tried to arbitrate that situation and calmed Lilina down, but at the moment, Yumina was in the middle of doing preparation somewhere else.

Katsuya was still at loss on what to do there. Since there was no one to stop her, Lilina was still glaring at Elena and Sara as she said.

“Since both of you are here because of a request, you need to at least pay some respect to the requestor and the team leader!! If you make such a friendly exchange just because you’re close with Katsuya, it might affect the team’s morale, you know!? Shouldn’t both of you be more self-conscious that you’re here because we pay you?!”

Elena looked completely flabbergasted, but she quickly changed her expression and smiled bitterly at Lilina.

Lilina's expression turned even stiffer as she thought that Elena was mocking her. Katsuya who regained his composure flusteredly tried to stop Lilina.

"Lilina!! Just shut up!!"

But Lilina jabbed back at Katsuya.

"What do you mean by that?! Or more like, why did you let outsiders join our team in the first place?! Do you think that we won't be able to handle the bounty monster?! Are we really that weak in your eyes?!"

"T-that's not what I mean…"

Katsuya was overwhelmed by Lilina's sudden outburst. She then turned her gaze back to Elena and Sara, she then sighed and said.

"Just so you know, we can take one or two bounty monsters without your help!! So just be careful not to get in our way, okay?!"

After Lilina said that, she quickly turned and left.

Katsuya's gaze bounced back and forth from Elena and Lilina, who was leaving the premises.

"I-I'm really sorry!! Please excuse me!"

Katsuya then quickly tried to catch up with Lilina after he said that to Elena and Sara. Elena and Sara lightly waved at Katsuya and watched him walking away.

The other Hunters quickly followed Katsuya and left that place too. Now that Elena and Sara were alone, Sara smiled bitterly and said to Elena.

"This isn't going to be easy."

Elena laughed lightly.

“Let’s just properly do our job out there. If they really don’t need us, we should be able to take it easy.”

“Do you think we can really take it easy?”

“Oh my, I did say that we should just focus and do our job out there, right?”

They both laughed after Elena said that. Both of them understood that they would not be able to take it easy at all. As a matter of fact, they knew that they would need to work hard out there, otherwise, there would not even be any reward. Both Elena and Sara agreed on that point.

———*—

Akira and his group were traversing the wasteland. They did not get to meet much trouble on their way to their destination.

Togami had somehow calmed down. He did not do anything that bothered Akira, at least, other than glancing at Akira from time to time with a curious face.

Suddenly, Shikarabe’s voice could be heard from the contact device, he sounded really serious.

“We’ll soon arrive at the area where the bounty monster was spotted. Our target this time is Tank Tarantula. The bounty prize is 800,000,000 Aurum. Get yourself ready!”

Both Akira and Togami’s expression changed as they got psyched up for the upcoming fight. Both of them listened to Shikarabe with a serious expression.

“Number 2 and 3 will take the front position once the fight starts, all the other Hunters will need to protect number 2 and number 3. Attract the Tank Tarantula’s attention and keep it occupied so it won’t aim its attack on number 2 and number 3. You can check your and the others’ positions from the display in the communication device, pay attention to it as you circle the target. Don’t use the rocket launcher until I give you my signal. Once number 2 and 3 finish their job, we’ll attack the target altogether. That’s all, are there any questions?”

After listening to that short description of the plan, Togami frowned and asked Shikarabe.

“It’s number 8. I need more information on the plan. Aren’t you going to give us orders as to where to go, where we should station ourselves, and when we can attack the target?”

“Other than the decision to withdraw, look around and make your own decision yourself.”

“So we basically can do anything we want to react to the situation, huh?”

“In the first place, we’re just a mix batch of Hunters. We’re not very organized that we can work together on a detailed plan. So make your own decision. But if it’s needed, we’ll also give you orders.”

Togami did not try to hide his displeasure as he said.

“…Give me a break, it’s your job to organize the team, you know?”

Togami was not exactly wrong there. Shikarabe’s orders were very open to interpretation, it basically discarded the advantage they got if they moved as a team. If they made a more detailed plan for them to work together, they would be able to more effectively dish out damages.

Shikarabe himself understood that fact. The reason why he did not do that was because he thought that it would be useless or might even be counter-effective. The only people who he fully trusted were his friends, Yamanobe and Varga. He did not trust that the other Hunters would properly follow his orders. He even thought that there was a good chance the other Hunters would get intimidated, scared, and eventually run away from the fight once they face the bounty monster.

Shikarabe did not expect any of them to do more than the least amount of work that they were needed to do. He did not believe even for a sec that the other Hunters would obediently follow his command. Rather than giving them a proper order, which they could not handle and instead pushed them to abandon the fight, Shikarabe thought that it was better to just give them rather vague orders.

But of course, it would be a whole different case if Shikarabe was gifted with a strong commanding skill. It would allow him to accurately identify the characteristics of the debt-ridden Hunters and Hunters with particular situations that he just met a few days ago and make sure that he only gave them orders that they could execute without much trouble. But Shikarabe himself knew well that he was not that good.

Shikarabe replied back with a strong tone to Togami.

“Is it that you can’t do anything unless I explicitly tell you what to do? If that’s the case, just make sure you don’t get in our way. Other than that, you can freely do anything you want. Anyone has any other questions?”

It seemed that no one other than Togami had any questions for Shikarabe. While Togami was enraged that he was not in a situation where he could ask any further questions.

“If no one else has any other questions, then that’s all. Make sure you work hard enough to earn your reward.”

Shikarabe then ended the call, but Togami did not stop glaring at the communication device.

They continued heading straight to their destination.

Shikarabe kept his eyes on the radar and the information display connected to his vehicle’s control device. The bounty monster was huge, so he should be able to easily notice it when it was somewhere close. He then spoke through the communication device again.

“Spread out, it would be bad if we stick close to each other like this.”

Shikarabe then turned to Yamanobe and Varga, they were number 2 and number 3.

Both of them were sitting on top of a wasteland bike inside the APC. The back door opened for both of them to go out. Yamanobe was carrying an anti-material sniper rifle while Varga was carrying a kick-backless hand cannon. An automatic reloading device was fixed behind their bikes and it was connected to their respective rifles.

Shikarabe threw a question at them.

“You guys ready?”

“Final check is done, I’m ready when you are!”

“Same here.”

Yamanobe and Varga smiled as they replied back to Shikarabe’s question. Both of them were a bit excited and nervous at the same time.

Shikarabe then asked them again.

“I don’t know how well the others will do their job as diversions. I’ll also use this vehicle as a diversion, so, do you want to go out now while you have the chance?”

Varga shook his head.

“Nah, I want to confirm the position of our target as close as possible before heading out. It would be a bad thing if we go out first and then get attacked first instead. This APC is already reinforced, right?”

“Yeah. It would be able to take some beatings. If it becomes dangerous to stay in this APC, I’ll give the order to withdraw. You guys need to be careful out there too, alright?”

“I know. It’s also Hunter’s job to return back alive. I have no plans to get killed because of greed.”

They then laughed together. Hunters always put dangers and possible rewards on a scale before making any decisions. Some Hunters decided to take more risk chasing for more reward and got killed instead. Up until now, Shikarabe and his friends were able to always return alive and they had no plans to break that streak now.

Shikarabe’s gaze returned back to the display. It suddenly showed a dangerous threat, it was from the bounty monster.

Shikarabe swiftly shouted at the communication device.

“I found the Tank Tarantula!! Get yourself ready!!”

Akira was able to locate the Tank Tarantula sooner than Shikarabe and his friends. It was all thanks to Alpha's detection ability.

Alpha pointed her finger toward the vast wasteland.

"Akira, the bounty monster is over there."

Akira grabbed his binoculars and looked at the direction where Alpha was pointing at. He quickly spotted a huge monster in that direction.

"That's the 800,000,000 Aurum worth bounty monster, huh… It's huge!"

The Tank Tarantula was a spider-like monster as big as a 3-storey house. 16 legs extended out from its abdomen and its whole body was covered in reinforced plating. The upper portion of its abdomen was equipped with 2 big cannons that you would usually only find on tanks. There were wheels and caterpillar tracks outfitted on the bottom part of its body.

It used one of his legs to push a scorched half-destroyed vehicle into its mouth and munched on it. The hard vehicle frame was easily crushed under its gigantic teeth before getting swallowed into its huge body.

“It’s eating a vehicle… Is it in the middle of a meal?”

“It might be one of the vehicles of the Hunters who tried to hunt it. If you approach it carelessly, your vehicle will meet the same fate. So let’s be extra careful.”

“If it only eats metal, did the Hunters escape? Or did they get eaten first?”

“Monsters like that are usually omnivores. Moreover, Hunters’ weapons and equipment are usually made of metal, and I’m sure it won’t even bother to separate them.”

“Well, that’s true. Even if it’s not an omnivore, I have no plans to feed it my vehicle.”

Akira spent a lot of money on his vehicle. Thus he had no plans to let the Tank Tarantula eat it.

“The amount of food that monsters eat is usually proportional to its size. If you leave it alone, it’ll only grow bigger and bigger with time, and with that, the amount of food it eats will also grow. Usually, monsters will get eaten by the other monsters before they can grow that big. But this one came from Yonozuka station ruin where it had an abundant amount of food.”

Akira remembered when he went to Yonozuka station ruin, he found a hallway filled with the leftover of battles but no corpses. When it was still small, the Tank Tarantula must have eaten the corpses and grown to a size where it could still fit the hallway. It then must have escaped the hallway to the surface and eaten all the wreckage around the area as it grew even bigger.

They approached the Tank Tarantula carefully while closely observing it. Its metallic exoskeleton body looked extremely tough and its huge powerful legs looked strong enough to crush a vehicle. Not to mention that the twin cannons on its back looked extremely powerful. Akira looked completely amazed by the appearance of that powerful-looking monster.

“But then again, if I can defeat that monster, it would earn me 800,000,000 Aurum, huh. I wonder how strong of a monster it is to be worth that much.”

“The amount of the bounty prize is not decided based on how strong a monster is. But at least, there’s someone who wants that monster dead as soon as possible to the point that they would even pay you 800,000,000 Aurum. It might be because it’s sitting on an important trading route, or it might be because it attracts strong monsters to gather in that place and worsen the monster distribution. There are basically a lot of factors that decide how much a monster is worth. And when you add the fact that it’s a strong monster that Hunters’ can’t easily kill, then it would be identified as a bounty monster. Think of it as a monster that’s way stronger than any of monster that you’ve fought until now.”

“You don’t have to tell me that, it’s rather obvious from what I can see. Like hell I would stand having monsters like that roaming the wasteland.”

“If you go further to the east, you can find a lot of monsters like that, you know?”

“I-I see.”

“And there are a whole lot of Hunters who can defeat that level of monsters without having much trouble. That’s why, even if there are monsters like this in that area, those monsters would not be identified as bounty monsters.”

“I guess there are still a lot of things out there that I don’t know, huh…”

Akira sounded contemplative as he mumbled those words.

Shikarabe’s voice came out from the communication device, he told everyone to start the battle. Akira quickly pulled himself together, Alpha smiled at him invincibly.

“We’ll start the fight against the bounty monster soon, are you ready?”

“Of course!”

“Alright then, let’s start!”

“Ah, wait for a sec.”

“What’s wrong?”

Alpha seemed a bit curious.

Akira turned to Togami and said.

“I won’t follow orders, I fight the way I want. Shikarabe had agreed with that too. I won’t try to work together with you, if you want to board off, then this is your chance.”

Togami who was already in a bad mood quickly exploded when he heard Akira’s words.

“Hah!? Are you kidding me?!”

“So you’re staying, huh? Got it then.”

Akira then turned to Alpha.

“Let’s start!”

“Roger that. If he gets thrown off the vehicle, it would all be his fault. So there’s no need to help him and just leave him alone.”

Alpha smiled when she said that as she took over the control of Akira’s vehicle and immediately turned up its speed.

Togami could not help but shriek as the vehicle suddenly accelerated and pushed his body deeper into his seat.

Since they were going to fight a bounty monster, Alpha’s driving was rather rough. Akira, who was wearing an augmented suit with Alpha’s support, could move around with no problem. But that was not the case for Togami.

Akira moved to the back seat, took his CWH anti-material rifle, and aimed at the Tarantula Tank that was still quite far away from them.

Although with its big size, the Tank Tarantula looked just like a blip with naked eyes from that distance. Not to mention there was the shaking and swaying from the vehicle too. Akira aimed at the Tank Tarantula through the aiming device on his rifle, Alpha added a lot of extra information in his vision.

Akira fixed the TP line created through Alpha's support such that it accurately targeted the Tank Tarantula. He focused his concentration and compressed the time as much as possible, the moment he felt the shaking from the vehicle slow down, he fixed his aim and pulled the trigger.

The bullet pierced through the air and flew straight to its target. It pushed against the air barrier formed on its tip due to its velocity which reduced its power on its travel before hitting its target.

But when it did, it just ricocheted after hitting the hard metallic exoskeleton of the Tank Tarantula.

The Tank Tarantula had already noticed Akira and the other Hunters. But since it was in the middle of its meal, it chose to focus on its meal rather than the Hunters that were still rather far away from it. Now that it received an attack, albeit a harmless attack, it quickly shifted its attention to Akira.

The huge cannon on the Tank Tarantula's back started to move. It was as if the Tank Tarantula was trying to aim its huge cannon.

Akira noticed its movements through his aiming device.

"Did that one hit?"

"It did, but it didn't inflict any damage. It won't do any damage no matter how much you shoot at it unless you go closer."

"I see, then I need to get closer first. My job is to keep it occupied as a diversion, so let's do my job properly."

“Well, you’re doing fine, it’s already focused its attention on you. My driving will be a bit rougher to evade its cannon, so be careful.”

“Roger that!”

Akira shifted his left hand from the rifle to grab his vehicle.

The Tank Tarantula already fixed its aim at Akira, its big cannons spewed out huge warheads with a loud bang. The kickback shifted its huge body, but not enough to throw it off-balance. It was able to hold off the powerful kickback using its multiple legs. But it did not stop there as it shot multiple warheads in succession, the huge warheads drew multiple parabolic lines on the sky as they flew toward Akira.

They rained down and created craters around Akira. Alpha quickly finished her calculation and predicted where those warheads would hit the ground, she then ignored the people on Akira’s vehicle as she controlled it to move away from the fallout area.

The sudden acceleration threw Akira and Togami off-balance. Akira used the power of his augmented suit to get a secure grip on his vehicle and avoid getting himself thrown off the vehicle while still standing. As for Togami who was sitting on the driver assistance seat, he got himself pushed between his seat and the door, thus he was also able to avoid getting thrown off.

The explosions from the warheads that rained down from the sky threw dust, smokes, and rubbles to the air. The shockwave and the pounding from the explosions shook Akira’s vehicle. It even threw the vehicle off the ground, but thanks to Alpha’s driving capability, it was able to land safely and all its luggage was also undamaged.

Alpha smiled casually.

“It seems that it has a bad aim. In this case, we can safely approach it.”

“That’s good to hear!! By the way, can you keep us further away from the warheads?!!”

Akira could feel the shaking transmitted through his legs. If he was not grabbing on his vehicle with his left hand, he might have been thrown off the vehicle by now.

“Don’t worry, with that level of firepower, we can at least take one direct hit.”

“You’re talking about the vehicle, right?!”

“Well, even if you’re using an augmented suit, there’s no way you can handle that warhead, you know. That’s unless you buy a better one.”

“Don’t be crazy, just how much do you think it would cost?”

“If you can defeat that Tank Tarantula alone, you should get enough money to buy one.”

“I don’t have that kind of money!!!”

“In that case, you should gather more money. Let’s work hard to earn that much.”

“Yeah, I can’t agree more!!”

Looking at Alpha who was smiling like usual, Akira got a bit worked up.

Shikarabe looked at that exchange between Akira and the Tank Tarantula through an on-board camera. The scene of Akira fighting against the Tank Tarantula that was border-line reckless was shown in a big monitor inside Shikarabe’s vehicle. Shikarabe, Yamanobe and Varga who were looking at that monitor seemed to be enjoying the show.

Yamanobe smiled and said.

“Not bad at all! As expected of a Hunter worth more than 100,000,000 Aurum. He’s doing pretty good there.”

Varga smiled casually.

“He’s doing a good job as a diversion. It might be sooner than we planned, but we should head out too. Shikarabe, open the door.”

Shikarabe pushed the button on the terminal and opened the rear door of the APC. He then left some words for Varga and Yamanobe.

“No need to be reckless, return back as soon as you finish your job.”

Yamanobe smiled and answered back.

“I know. Even for me, I can’t help but get a little excited after seeing that. But I have no plans to put myself in danger just to show off my skill.”

Varga laughed mockingly.

“I have no plans to crash and burn in glory, that’s the job for another person.”

Looking at how both of them reacted, Shikarabe looked relieved.

“Number 2, operation start!”

Yamanobe and Varga jumped out from the vehicle on their bikes. They accelerated their bikes while still on the air, the wheels were spinning furiously as they landed on the ground. Both of them left Shikarabe’s APC behind and separated into two teams as they headed to the Tank Tarantula.

Akira kept heading toward the Tank Tarantula while avoiding the warheads. In the middle of that, he also kept on sniping the monster using his CWH anti-material rifle loaded with CWH special ammo. Thanks to Alpha’s driving skill and her ability to predict the warheads’ trajectories, Akira’s vehicle was still doing fine.

When the CWH special ammo hit the Tank Tarantula’s armour, it bent and eventually stripped off that armour plating of the Tank Tarantula. As that armour part fell down to the ground, another undamaged armour plating was exposed under it, it was then pushed out and replaced the stripped off armour plating. At the moment, Akira realised he could not inflict any meaningful damage to the Tank Tarantula.

Akira tilted his head while still looking at the Tank Tarantula.

“My shots did hit, right?”

“They did. It at least inflicted some damages, enough to strip off the armour plating from that monster.”

Akira made a long hum. Until now, he was able to defeat anything that he met with one shot using CWH special ammo. The only exception to that was the powered armour that he fought in Kuzusuhara ruin the other day. But even when he was fighting against that powered armour, the CWH special ammo obviously affected the powered armour when they hit. Unlike that powered armour, the CWH special did not seem to have any effect on the Tank Tarantula. It reminded Akira that it was indeed an 800,000,000 Aurum bounty monster.

“I really have no other choice but to get closer, huh?”

“It’s dangerous to get any closer than this. You’ve done your job well as a diversion. I’m sure Shikarabe has some kind of plan, so let’s keep our distance while keeping it occupied.”

“That’s true. Alright then, I’ll leave the driving to you, please drive safely.”

“Roger that.”

“It’s kind of weird to say this myself, but you do get the ‘drive safely’ part, right?”

Alpha smiled mischievously.

“Oh my, I always drive safely, you know. Or like, did you get hurt somewhere?”

“Well, no.”

Alpha was not lying, Akira himself knew at least that much. It was just a matter of standard between her and the people on the vehicle that she was controlling. Moreover, Akira himself was rather preoccupied with the monster, so he had no leeway to worry about other things.

Togami was desperately grabbing on to the blazing vehicle. Both of his arms and legs were used to keep himself inside the vehicle so that he would not get thrown off-board. He kept his mouth shut since he felt like he would bite his own tongue if he tried to say something.

As for Akira, he was able to adjust his posture before the vehicle swayed thanks to the support from Alpha, thus he was able to stand without much trouble in the intensely rocking vehicle.

But that was not the case for Togami. Alpha's rough driving and the shockwave from the warheads threw his body around, he desperately grabbed onto the vehicle as he felt like he would be thrown off-board the moment he loosened his grip. He did not even have the leeway to aim at the Tank Tarantula.

Togami finally understood why Akira asked him if he wanted to stay. Just like he said, Akira did not care about Togami. Even if Togami got thrown off-board, it did not seem like Akira would stop to pick him up. Togami understood that fact very well.

And if he wanted to complain, he felt like he would bite his own tongue the moment he opened his mouth. And if he lowered his guard even for a second, he felt like he would be thrown off. He already had his hands full making sure that he would stay inside the vehicle.

Togami faced a lot of trouble in just turning his head toward Akira from the assistant driver seat. While Akira only looked a bit challenged as he kept on sniping at the Tank Tarantula.

[…Wh-what the heck is with this boy!? Is this really the power of a Rank 21 Hunter?! You gotta be kidding me!! Like hell I would accept someone like him as only a Rank 21 Hunter!! What the heck is going on here!? How the hell did I get roped in this situation?!]

He was utterly confused and kept on cursing his situation, that was all that he could do there.

The Tank Tarantula did not stop spewing warheads toward the Hunters who interrupted its meal. After all, there was nothing more obnoxious than those people who kept attacking you although it was barely effective at all.

Its first priority was Akira, then Shikarabe. Shikarabe was also shooting at the Tank Tarantula using rifles fixed into his APC. Although each shot was enough to blow a monster into minced meat, for Tank Tarantula, it did not have any effect at all. But at least, it was able to prevent the Tank Tarantula to stay where it was. With those continuous shots, the Tank Tarantula could not get a good aim.

Among the Hunters, the number 4, Nergo, was a Hunter with a battle cyborg body. It was obvious from his appearance that he was a cyborg as he raised up all his 4 arms equipped with powerful weapons and released a volley of warheads at the Tank Tarantula.

Nergo joined the hunt not for the prize, but he was aiming to make a connection with the Hunters from Drankam. The only thing that he asked in exchange for his participation in that hunt was to credit his name in that bounty hunt. As such, unlike the other Hunters who joined the hunt for money to pay for their debt, Nergo had to properly contribute to the hunt.

Just like Akira, Nergo exchanged shots with the Tank Tarantula in a rather close range as he kept on shooting at it with his huge guns. With his advanced driving skill, he evaded the warheads from the Tank Tarantula's big cannons, readied his own big guns, and released huge warheads back at the Tank Tarantula.

The other Hunters started shooting at that Tank Tarantula too. They were contributing to the fight just like Shikarabe expected them to, i.e. they were not helping at all.

As warheads from the Tank Tarantula landed around those Hunters, they repositioned themselves in panic and started shooting at the monster again, but their attacks did nothing other than revealing their position to the Tank

Tarantula. Since the Tank Tarantula was shooting at them, it at least recognized those Hunters as enemies. Or it might be just trying to immobilize them and eat them later.

Yamanobe and Varga kept on heading toward the Tank Tarantula without even shooting at it. Although they had prepared themselves to face some bombardments, it seemed that the diversions were working better than they expected so that they did not have to worry about the warheads.

After Yamanobe got close to the Tank Tarantula, he stopped his bike and looked at Nergo.

“There are other Hunters who are working as hard as Akira, huh. If he’s that powerful, he should’ve been able to strike a deal with the Drankam management instead. From what I heard yesterday, he doesn’t seem to be in so much trouble anyway… And with that power, there’s not even any need to hunt for a bounty monster, right? He can still acquire some money on his own like that, right? Or is it that he doesn’t have the money to do that?”

Although it bothered Yamanobe a bit, he decided to forget about that for now.

“Hey hey, remember that we’re in the middle of a job. It’s all thanks to the diversions that we’re not having a hard time, so let’s quickly finish our job here.”

Yamanobe was still on his bike as he raised up his rifle, aimed it at the Tank Tarantula, and pulled the trigger. The bullet-like projectile spewed out from the rifle’s muzzle, hit the Tank Tarantula, and stuck on its body. It was a small device wrapped in strong sticky glue.

He did not stop there as he kept on shooting at the Tank Tarantula. Since the sticky projectiles were completely harmless, the Tank Tarantula was ignoring him while more and more of those sticky small devices got stuck on its huge body.

“This is number 2, marking done.”

Varga's voice could be heard from Yamanobe's communication device.

"This is number 3, roger that. You can go back first."

"It would be bad if you miss your shot, so I'll stay."

"Yeah yeah."

Varga laughed and said that in response to Yamanobe's joke.

Varga was approaching the Tank Tarantula from another direction. Thanks to the diversions, he was able to get pretty close to the Tank Tarantula and the Tank Tarantula would not attack him as long as he did not attack it, but the Tank Tarantula might aim at him if he got any closer. After that short exchange with Yamanobe, he then decided to get closer.

While still on the top of his bike, he quickly closed the distance to the Tank Tarantula, he then aimed his kickback-less cannon at the Tank Tarantula and pulled the trigger before the Tank Tarantula could aim its huge cannons back at him. The projectile from the cannon exploded before it hit the Tank Tarantula's body and covered the area in thick smoke.

With the help from the automatic reloading device in the back of his bike, Varga kept on shooting that smoke warhead while still moving around. He shot some of the bullets to thicken the smoke around him while the rest went straight to the Tank Tarantula.

After that, Varga sped his bike out from within that thick smoke. The Tank Tarantula tried to shoot at him, but it could not get a good aim due to thick smoke. As such, the warheads just landed randomly around the area away from Varga.

If it was only normal smoke, the Tank Tarantula would not have any trouble aiming at Varga. The smoke not only blocked the visible light but also dulled all light spectrum as well as sound. Thus preventing any information to be perceived correctly and completely throwing the monster's aim off.

The smoke that Varga used was an advanced jamming smoke.

Varga then contacted Shikarabe.

“This is number 3, I’m done here too.”

Now that their victory was almost guaranteed, Shikarabe smiled and said.

“Roger that, get away from that place. You’ll also get blown off if you guys stay too close.”

Varga and Yamanobe swiftly replied back.

“Understood.”

“Just start the barrage.”

Shikarabe then changed the broadcast to all the Hunters there.

“This is number 1! You guys can use the rocket launcher now! Make sure to get close enough to get a lock on the Tank Tarantula! Pull the trigger together on my mark!! And don’t be late!”

Akira looked at the Tank Tarantula that was covered in smoke.

“Smokescreen, huh? I can’t spot the monster at all now.”

“That’s jamming smoke, you know. Since they gave us the information about the smoke beforehand, you can still check the insides of the smoke.”

Alpha then enhanced Akira’s vision, thanks to that, he was able to see clearly the Tank Tarantula inside that thick smoke. Akira was a bit surprised by that.

“Whoah, I can see it very clearly though. And it’s not like it can look at us too, right? Jamming smoke is really nice.”

“It seems that they’re using a pretty high-quality jamming smoke. It blocks as much information as possible for the Tank Tarantula while suppressing its effect on the information-gathering device at the same time. There are many cheap jamming smokes out there that are nothing more than just normal smokescreen. It seems that they spent quite a lot of money on this hunt… I just hope there will still be enough money to share after subtracting the equipment expense.”

“…I-it would be okay, right?”

Akira sounded worried.

Shikarabe then contacted everyone again to get the rocket launcher ready. Akira quickly put down his CWH anti-material rifle and started preparing his rocket launcher.

Due to the jamming smoke, the Tank Tarantula shot its cannons to a direction where there was no one present. It did stop shooting and tried to escape the smokescreen, but since some of the smoke canisters were stuck on its body, it did not take long before it got wrapped in a thick smoke again.

Since it was unlikely to get shot in that situation, Alpha stopped the vehicle. Togami was finally able to stand up.

“…H-hey!”

Togami actually wanted to complain to Akira, but Akira misunderstood him and threw a rocket launcher and its ammo to him. Togami was somehow able to receive it, but it did throw him off-balance again.

Akira quickly finished preparing his rocket launcher, the aiming device on the rocket launcher already indicated that it had locked on its target and that the homing feature was already on.

Shikarabe voice then could be heard from the communication device.

“We’ll start the barrage in 15 seconds!! This is the reason why we brought you guys here!! So if you don’t join the barrage, we’ll reduce your share of reward!!”

Togami started preparing his rocket launcher in panic.

“5! 4! 3! 2! 1!”

Akira was ready to launch his rocker launcher, Togami was barely able to catch up with him.

“Zero!!”

Together with that count, Akira and the other Hunters pulled the trigger.

Countless missiles soared and flew towards the Tank Tarantula. When they got close enough to the Tank Tarantula, they flew up to the sky, gathered up, recalculated their trajectories, and then hit the Tank Tarantula almost simultaneously.

They exploded with an amazing bang and blew everything around the area away. A blinding light flashed through the wasteland followed by a huge raising smoke, the shockwave finally reached Akira and the other Hunters.

Akira stood against the already weakened shockwave as he looked at the explosion with a dumbfounded face.

“…That was amazing. So you need to go this far to defeat a bounty monster, huh?”

Alpha then warned Akira who thought that he had already won.

“Akira, we don’t know if we defeated it or not.”

Akira inadvertently turned to Alpha, from the outside, he looked like a suspicious person who suddenly looked in a direction where no one was present. That was just how surprised he was.

“Eh!? No no no, there’s no way it survived that explosion!? And even if it did, there’s no way it’s fine after taking that explosion head-on. So we can just take it easy later while showering it with more missiles to deliver the finishing blow…”

Alpha then pointed her finger toward the Tank Tarantula.

“Look.”

Akira turned his gaze to the Tank Tarantula. Since the smoke was blown away by the explosion earlier, he was able to clearly see Tank Tarantula even without Alpha’s help.

Although it took the explosion head-on, it still survived.

Some of its legs were already blown away. The cannon-like object perching on its back was also missing. A chunk of its huge torso was completely destroyed as well as its caterpillar tracks and wheels on its lower body. But even so, the Tank Tarantula tried to force its legs to move just to get them broken and crumbled down with a loud bang.

Akira dropped his jaw and said to Alpha.

“I-it can still move even after taking that attack?! No, wait, it seems that it can no longer move. It should be okay, right?”

Shikarabe suddenly gave his next order through the communication device.

“One more time! We’ll execute another barrage once we get the guidance device attached on its body!! Make sure that your rocket launcher is ready!!”

Yamanobe voice was heard next.

“Number 2 here. Roger that, I’m on it.”

Then followed by Varga.

“This is number 3. What about me? Should I put the jamming smoke again?”

Shikarabe quickly answered Varga’s questions.

“Wait for a sec, let me check for a bit… It seems that it no longer has any long-range weaponries, it should be fine without the smoke. So save the smoke for the next bounty monster. Or you can use it later if things get dicey."

"Roger that. It seems it did lose its huge cannon after all, so I guess there's no need to put up the smoke, huh… What the heck is that?!"

Varga's sudden surprise was conveyed to everyone through the communication device.

Everyone in that place had a different reaction after watching that explosion, some of them thought that they already won and relaxed their guard, while some of them did not lower their guard thinking that it was still alive. Although there were differences, all of them thought that they already had the upper hand and they could just take it easy from there.

But a sudden turn of events that was out of their imagination suddenly happened in front of them. The Tank Tarantula's abdomen that was already crushed, suddenly cracked open and vomited hundreds of small Tank Tarantulas.

The tiny spiders quickly crawled out and flooded the area. Although they were tiny, it was only in comparison with the big Tank Tarantula. In reality, some of those so-called tiny spiders were even 2 meters long. Those tiny Tank Tarantula used the caterpillar track and wheels equipped under them to run toward Akira and the other Hunters.

The small cannon fixed on their backs moved and aimed at Akira before firing a warhead at him. It landed somewhere near Akira's vehicle and exploded. Although they were way weaker than the big Tank Tarantula, even a durable vehicle for exploring the wasteland would not be able to take that many shots from those tiny Tank Tarantulas.

Alpha quickly mustered the vehicle back on. The countless tiny Tank Tarantulas released another barrage that landed behind Akira's vehicle. When that happened, Togami started screaming.

While standing on top of the rocking vehicle, Akira aimed his CWH anti-material rifle and pulled the trigger. The released CWH special bullet hit one of the tiny Tank Tarantula and blew it to small pieces.

Akira’s face turned grim.

“It seems that CWH special ammo works on these monsters! So is it like their body is weaker than the big one?! But there is just too many of them!”

Their number was just too large, destroying a few dozens of them would not change the situation much.

Alpha’s face also looked grim as she said.

“But even so, you’ll at least need to shave its number. Aim for the next target, quickly!”

“I know!”

Akira quickly took an aim at another Tank Tarantula and pulled the trigger, the CWH special ammo pierced through that Tank Tarantula and blew it to small pieces.

The other Tank Tarantulas just trampled over its dead brethren’s pieces as they pushed forward while shooting at Akira, but Alpha was able to evade those barrages easily thanks to her advanced driving skill.

The explosions from the warhead propagated through the air and reached Akira’s skin. He just gritted his teeth and said to Alpha.

“You won’t let them hit us, right?”

“Of course, don’t worry.”

“I see.”

“If it’s only that much, we can at least take some shots and still be safe, you know.”

“You’re talking about the vehicle, right? Then how about me?!!”

“If you don’t want to get hit, then do your best in reducing their number. The chance of you getting hit falls by a lot even if you are only able to take out a few dozen of them.”

“Okay okay!! I just need to keep shooting at them, right?!!”

Akira got a bit irritated there, but he tried to keep himself calm as he took his aim. He focused his concentration, compressed his time perception, and aimed as best as he could before pulling the trigger. With Alpha’s support added to his aiming, he was able to hit his shot without wasting even a single bullet.

But even so, his situation was still dire. While he was taking out the tiny Tank Tarantulas, some of them were able to get closer to him and their shots were getting more and more accurate. As a matter of fact, his situation was getting worse with time.

While the Hunters were having a hard time fighting the Tank Tarantulas, Shikarabe barked his order through the communication device.

“Just leave the monsters that are running away alone!! It’s not like you get any bounty money from destroying them! If they’re protecting the big Tank Tarantula, they might scatter off if we defeat the big Tank Tarantula!! So just focus your firepower on the big Tank Tarantula!! Number 2! How’s the marking going?!”

“This is number 2!! I was able to stick some guiding devices on its body, but the smaller Tank Tarantulas are destroying the guiding devices… Wait for a sec?! I spot one of the smaller Tank Tarantula carrying the guiding device away!! And it’s going in your direction with the guiding device!! If we shoot the rocket launcher without changing the target setting, some rockets will go in your direction!!”

rocket launcher in 1 minute! Keep your eyes on the counter in the communication device for the timing!!”

The sound in the communication device changed.

“59, 58, 57…”

The same count down was broadcasted to all the Hunters through the communication device. Although all the Hunters heard that, they were too preoccupied with something else to prepare their rocket launchers.

Akira’s face turned grim while shooting at the monsters around him. He gritted his teeth hard so that he would not inadvertently say something and bite his own tongue. He was in a situation where it would not help no matter how he cursed or screamed as a swarm of small Tank Tarantulas were trying to board his rocking vehicle controlled by Alpha.

Using the advantage of the telepathy that allowed him to talk even in the middle of such a fierce fight, Akira questioned Alpha about the current situation that he thought to be so unfair.

“Alpha!! Why are they aiming for me?!”

“That’s because Shikarabe is the commander in this operation, right?!! He’s also riding a big and strong vehicle that looks intimidating, so no wonder why it’s sticking out in this situation! It even has that machine-gun equipped too!! While my vehicle is not that different from the others! So why is it only me?!”

At first, the smaller Tank Tarantulas that poured out from the big Tank Tarantula seemed to be expanding in all directions and tried to attack anything that they could find. But after they spread out a bit, they started to focus their attention and attack on Shikarabe and Akira.

Of course, the other Hunters were also getting attacked too. But it was rather obvious that most of the smaller Tank Tarantulas focused on Akira and Shikarabe.

Alpha just smiled bitterly and said.

“Well, it might be because they first thought that both of you were somewhat easy to attack. But after a short time, it’s rather obvious that both of you can easily take out the small Tank Tarantulas without sustaining much damage. So the algorithm inside them might have set you and Shikarabe as strong enemies to defeat first. You can just think of it as bad luck.”

Akira got a bit annoyed and said smiling.

“Is it because of my bad luck?! Well, if you say so, then we can’t do anything about it, right?!”

Akira himself knew that he had bad luck. So if Alpha said that it was because of his bad luck, he could not do anything else except hoping that her support would be able to handle his bad luck.

On top of that rocking and swaying vehicle, Akira used his augmented suit to absorb the swaying and placed his leg against the vehicle’s frame to reduce the kickback from the CWH anti-material rifle as he kept on shooting at the smaller Tank Tarantulas closest to him. In that extremely dangerous situation where a slight shift of his centre of gravity would easily throw him off the vehicle, Akira kept on shooting as if he was possessed by a berserker.

Although the area around that place was already filled with Tank Tarantulas that was turned into scraps, their attacks did not slow down at all.

“Alpha!! No matter how you slice it, there are just too many of them?!! I already killed a whole lot of them, you know?!! The other Hunters are also fighting back and Shikarabe’s machine gun should’ve killed a whole lot of them too!! Why aren’t they slowing down at all although we’ve killed so many of them?!!”

Akira, Shikarabe and the other Hunters had killed a lot of small Tank Tarantulas. But it did not seem that the pressure from the small Tank Tarantulas was dying down at all.

“Even if the stomach of that big Tank Tarantula is filled with these small Tank Tarantulas, there should be a limit on how many of them can fit there!! This number doesn’t make sense at all!! I know that I have bad luck, but no matter how bad my luck is, it’s not like they’re replicating themselves, right?! And even if that big Tank Tarantula is producing these small Tank Tarantulas from the metals that it ate just now, it still doesn’t make sense, you know?!!”

Alpha seemed to be hesitating as she said.

“About that though, I have bad news.”

“What is it?! Are they really replicating themselves?!!”

“That’s not it, these small Tank Tarantulas are also coming out from somewhere else other than the big Tank Tarantula. They’re gathering here from around the area too. If that big Tank Tarantula is like a queen ant, then it might have produced all these small Tank Tarantulas and spread them around this area. And so it might be calling all the small Tank Tarantulas in the area back to protect their nest.”

“Would spiders normally do something like that?!”

“No idea. But again, normal spiders won’t have big cannons or caterpillar tracks growing out from their body. So they might be basically 2 different things.”

Akira frowned.

“S-so, we have no other choice but to take out all of them? If that’s the case, how many of them are left?”

The seemingly endless swarm shaved on Akira’s physical and psychical stamina. He could feel the creeping death coming closer, but he tried to brush that off by shredding the Tank Tarantulas to pieces using the CWH special ammo.

But that only worked assuming that the enemy number is limited. And since the situation there did not support that assumption, it greatly discouraged Akira.

“I have no answer for that. If Shikarabe’s guess is correct, they’ll scatter once we defeat the big Tank Tarantula. But let’s keep fighting assuming that you need to kill all of them. After all, even if Shikarabe’s guess is wrong, everything will be fine if you just kill them all.”

The countdown for the rocket launcher could be heard from the communication device.

“…6, 5, 4…”

Akira prepared his rocket launcher in panic. There was no need to take an aim, he just needed to pull the trigger and the targeting setting would take care of the rest. He then waited for the signal from the timer and pulled the trigger.

“…1, 0.”

Including the rockets launched from Akira’s rocket launcher, about 10 rockets soared to the sky before they changed their direction and flew toward the big Tank Tarantula.

All the small Tank Tarantulas focused their cannons at the rockets, in the end, only 6 rockets reached the big Tank Tarantula. Unlike the first barrage where they used guiding devices, this time they were not using any guiding device, thus the rockets hit the big Tank Tarantula not at the same time and in different places. But even so, the big Tank Tarantula once again was swallowed in explosions.

Unfortunately, the big Tank Tarantula survived that too. Or at least, the small Tank Tarantulas still stayed there to protect the big Tank Tarantula.

The countdown started again from the communication device.

“59, 58, 57…”

Akira twitched.

“That’s one hell of a monster, no wonder it gets a bounty on its head. But well, I bet we can kill it if we can execute the same barrage as that first barrage.”

“And in order to do that, you need to kill the small Tank Tarantulas that prevents you from doing so. You also need to note that not everyone will be able to participate in the next barrage since they have their hands tied dealing with the small Tank Tarantula.”

It was an extremely difficult thing to participate in the barrage while fighting back the small Tank Tarantulas. Thus there were only a small number of Hunters who could participate in the next barrage.

“So basically, we need to clean up the small Tank Tarantulas, huh?”

There was no other way. Akira decided to believe that was the only way to get out of that situation as he continued fighting desperately.

The more monsters Akira took out, the more they would set him as a dangerous target and the more they focused on him. As more and more Tank Tarantulas swarmed him, Akira would defeat them which caused more monsters to focus on him. Though, Akira himself did not realize that cycle.

Although Alpha knew about that cycle, she decided not to tell Akira since she thought that there was no meaning in telling him.

Now, the reason as to why the monsters focused more on Akira was because of how good his aim was while he was moving on his vehicle. He would snipe a monster far away from him even before Varga told him to do so, and that attracted the attention of the small Tank Tarantulas which saw that. Because of that, albeit only slightly, the monsters in that area focused more on Akira compared to the other Hunters.

If Akira did not do that, his threat level would be evaluated as the same compared to the other Hunters; a fact that even Alpha did not know about.

It was all Akira's bad luck. That was all there was to it just like what Alpha declared.

Togami was clinging for his life, due to the violent driving. He desperately grabbed on anything that he could find to make sure that he would not get thrown off-board from that violently swaying vehicle while trying to shoot at the small Tank Tarantulas around him.

But unfortunately, he could not do that. It was extremely difficult to shoot from a violently shaking vehicle, not to mention that the spiders were moving around rapidly. Thus he decided to shift from taking precise aim to just shooting randomly. But in the end, it only served to hold back the small Tank Tarantulas. Of course, some of the bullets hit the monsters, but it only killed a few dozen small Tank Tarantulas.

He also was not able to participate in the rocket barrage. He could not say anything since he might bite his own tongue. Although he joined the hunt hoping to prove his skill, he could not do much there.

[…Dammit!! This is pathetic!! So pathetic!!]

Togami kept on cursing on his own patheticness while shooting at the small Tank Tarantulas.

Some of the small Tank Tarantulas rushed toward Akira's vehicle. It might be because they had run out of cannon ammo, they did not shoot at all while rushing toward Akira.

Akira kept on shooting at the Tank Tarantulas starting from the one closest to him. Even if they did not shoot their cannons, his vehicle would still get damaged if they collided their body with his vehicle with their momentum. And it would be extremely dangerous if his vehicle stopped in that situation.

Then here Akira made a mistake in his priority. Up until now, he prioritized the monsters nearest to him based only on their distances, but he should have considered the length of their bodies too.

While he was focused on a 1-metre long spider, a 2-metre long spider suddenly rushed toward him. But before it could crash its body onto Akira's vehicle, Akira quickly shot and destroyed its legs.

In the next moment, it detached its stomach from which thousands of smaller Tank Tarantulas poured out.

A few dozen Tank Tarantula flew toward Akira's direction. By pure reaction, he punched some of them back. But of course, he could not punch all of them, some of the small spiders got onto his vehicle.

Akira looked at those Tank Tarantulas in panic.

"What the heck are they?! There are even more of them?!"

Alpha quickly gave Akira an order.

"Akira! Get the Tank Tarantulas off the vehicle, quickly!! Otherwise, they're going to eat your vehicle!!"

Akira shifted his focus in a panic towards the Tank Tarantulas on his vehicle. They had already started munching on the vehicle's armour plating and seat. Alpha enhanced Akira's vision and showed the priority number on those monsters.

It would be the end if the spiders ate the vehicle's control device. Akira gathered all his focus, compressed his time perception as much as possible, pushed his augmented suit to the limit, and took out the small Tank Tarantulas as quickly as possible.

He kicked the tarantula eating the seat, pulled the one munching on the control wheel and threw it off-board. He then aimed his CWH anti-material rifle at the one eating on the bonnet, but he switched to AAH assault rifle in panic and shot the Tank Tarantula. If he used his CWH anti-material rifle special ammo there, it would have been extremely bad. He carefully aimed his AAH assault rifle in an angle that would blow the Tank Tarantula off his vehicle.

There were still many Tank Tarantulas on his vehicle, Akira tried to knock them off as fast as he could with his AAH assault rifle. There was no need to kill them, his main aim for now was to get them off his vehicle.

Akira was taken aback when he caught Togami aiming a high calibre rifle at the Tank Tarantula on his vehicle.

“Don’t!!!”

Akira inadvertently shouted at him and quickly kicked the Tank Tarantula that Togami was aiming at off his vehicle.

“What the hell are you doing?! Don’t shoot the vehicle with that rifle!! You’ll destroy my vehicle!!”

Togami flusteredly replied back.

“We don’t have the time for that now!! Like hell a wasteland vehicle is going to get destroyed because of that!!”

“It’s my vehicle, you know!?”

In reality, Togami was correct there. But Akira thought that Togami was using the same powerful ammo as his CWH anti-material special ammo, that was why he shouted at Togami when he saw Togami aiming at his own vehicle.

While they were debating there, the Tank Tarantulas did not stop munching on Akira’s vehicle.

Alpha then gave Akira another order.

“Akira, I’ll try to rock the vehicle and throw the Tank Tarantula off-board. Tell that boy not to get thrown off-board too.”

At first, Akira did not understand why Alpha said that, but the moment he did, he immediately shouted to Togami.

“Get a hold on something!!”

But Togami was so surprised when Akira shouted at him that he could not follow Akira’s order.

Alpha suddenly made a sharp U-turn. The inertia threw the small Tarantulas that were latching on Akira’s vehicle off-board together with Togami. Akira extended his hand to Togami who was flying in the air, but he could not reach Togami.

Togami flew and landed hard on the ground. His augmented suit was able to protect his body, but Akira’s vehicle did not slow down as it left Togami behind without any weapons.

“What the fu…!!”

Even before he could finish his sentence, his face froze. A 2-metre long Tank Tarantula suddenly leapt at him. It was not clear whether it was because that Tank Tarantula ran out of ammo or because it needed food, but that Tank Tarantula was trying to eat him.

Although it was not official or anything, Togami was someone hailed as a skilled Hunter among the anti-Katsuya faction. He quickly used the full power of his augmented suit to deliver a kick towards the Tank Tarantula and push it away from him. But that attack was only enough to stagger and slow down that Tank Tarantula for a few seconds.

The thought of death accelerated Togami’s mind as time seemed to be running slowly around him. The scene of a Tank Tarantula approaching him in slow motion was reflected into Togami’s eyes. In that slow-motion world, Togami was trying to scream.

But at the next moment, Akira suddenly appeared in his field of view, he drove a diving kick with both of his legs straight at the small Tank Tarantula that was approaching Togami. That powerful dive slammed that Tank Tarantula to the ground and drove its huge body into the ground.

In front of Togami, who was dumbfounded by that sudden turn of event, Akira stood and aimed his CWH anti-material rifle at the monster that was lying under his feet and pulled the trigger. The CWH special ammo made short work of that Tank Tarantula as it ripped through its torso and shredded it to small pieces.

But Akira did not stop there, he immediately started shooting at the other Tank Tarantulas surrounding him with his CWH anti-material rifle. The small Tank Tarantulas that were trying to attack him quickly turned to scraps.

Akira's vehicle made another sharp U-turn to pick-up Akira back. Akira grabbed Togami and jumped into his vehicle with perfect timing before the small Tank Tarantulas were able to swarm them.

Akira's vehicle then made another sharp U-turn and quickly left behind the Tank Tarantulas that were chasing Akira. He then just threw Togami in the back seat, it was obvious from his face that Togami could not process what just happened.

Alpha smiled bitterly.

"Akira, that was dangerous, you know?"

Akira's face looked grim as he answered back.

"It can't be helped, we can't afford to lose any fighting power in this situation!"

"But it doesn't seem like he can give you much support even if you have him on board, you know? Not to mention that he was even a bother."

"You're right about that, it leaves me with one option."

Akira lightly smiled.

“I’ll contact Shikarabe and throw him to Shikarabe’s APC.”

Just like Akira, Shikarabe’s APC was also getting swarmed by the Tank Tarantulas. And when he shot those Tank Tarantulas, even smaller Tank Tarantulas would pour out from the dead Tank Tarantula. Not to mention, the machine gun fixed on his APC could not shoot the Tank Tarantulas beside the APC.

Shikarabe noticed that the vehicle’s durability shown in the control device was slowly falling down, he then clicked his tongue and said.

“It can’t be helped, huh. I guess I have no other choice but to take care of it myself.”

Shikarabe turned on the autopilot and left the steering wheel. He opened the back door of that APC to shoot down the Tank Tarantulas that attached themselves on the APC, but he then noticed Akira’s vehicle heading his way.

When Akira got close enough to Shikarabe’s APC, he then grabbed Togami and threw him over to Shikarabe’s direction. Shikarabe caught Togami and pulled him inside his APC while Akira did not slow down at all as he left Shiakarabe’s APC behind.

Shikarabe laughed.

“That boy literally threw Togami to my vehicle. He really meant what he said, huh?”

Togami was still dumbfounded since Akira threw him, so Shikarabe lightly kicked him to get him back into reality.

“Welcome back. You came just at the right time. You can drive an APC right, Togami?”

But Togami still could not process what just happened. Shikarabe grabbed him and shook his head to force him back.

“Togami!! Can you drive? Or not? Give me an answer!”

“I-I can drive.”

“Take the wheel now. The auto-drive function is not that smart after all, call me if you find any troubles.”

After he said that, Shikarabe grabbed the ceiling, swung his body through the opened back door of the APC, and landed on the top of the APC. He then immediately shot down the Tank Tarantula latching on the side of the APC. The Tank Tarantula that Shikarabe shot would then landed and rolled over on the ground, shredded to small pieces.

Togami, who just came back to his senses, rushed to the steering wheel in panic.

Akira was surprised when he looked at Shikarabe.

“That’s amazing how he can do that. He’s on top of a vehicle, you know? Isn’t he afraid what would happen if he falls off from there?”

Alpha just smiled and replied.

“Don’t just look at him, you have your own job to do. The number of small Tank Tarantulas is slowly decreasing.”

“Ah, you’re right.”

“Since there’s no need to worry about that boy anymore, I’ll go even faster than before. Make sure to be careful, okay?”

“Wait for a sec, we’re going to go even faster?”

Akira’s vehicle suddenly sped up, Akira flusteredly tried to balance himself.

All the hard work by the Hunters there seemed to be bearing fruit, the situation slowly turned for the better for the Hunters. Akira leaked out some cursing as Alpha controlled the vehicle so haphazardly that it would not be strange if the control device was broken, but he did not stop shooting at the small Tank Tarantulas around him.

If it continued at that rate, it was only a matter of time before the Hunters won that fight. But that was unrealistic, after all, they would run out of ammo at that rate if they did not try to change the flow of the battle.

After hearing that explanation, Akira sounded doubtful as he asked Alpha.

“Are you sure? Are we seriously going to lose?”

“Yep, we’ll lose at this rate. If we can do another barrage just like the first one, I believe we can end the fight though. I’m sure Shikarabe also did not see this coming at all.”

“Then why are we not pulling back at all? If we don’t have any chance to win, we’ll only spend more ammo the longer we drag this fight.”

“That’s because it’s not like we have no chance to win. Moreover, if only the other Tank Tarantulas did not come, or if only there were not as many Tank Tarantulas, we would have won by now. That sense of so close from winning must have caused them to delay the withdrawal. I’m sure they’ve also used the ammo reserved for the next bounty monster in this fight, that must be also what prevented them from calling the hunt off. Assuming that we’ll win this fight in the end, I think it’s the correct choice to continue the fight.”

“But we’ll lose at this rate, right? So what’s the big plan?”

“I think Shikarabe will tell you the next plan soon.”

Alpha’s guess was correct, Shikarabe quickly gave a new order through the communication device.

“Everyone, listen!! The next barrage will be the last barrage. If we can’t defeat the bounty monster with the next barrage, we’ll pull back from here! Change the setting on the rocket launcher, set the air-time to max before you shoot the rockets. Use all the rockets that you have for the next barrage. Once you shoot the rockets, focus on destroying the spiders that are trying to shoot down the rockets. Next one is the last one!! So put your back on it! If we can't kill the bounty monster here, you guys won't get any money!!"

Akira lightly laughed and let out a big sigh, his face turned serious.

"Alright then, whatever happens, the next one is the last barrage. If it's possible, I want to win this. I'll give my best shot."

Alpha smiled.

"It seems that you have calmed down now. That's a good thing."

"Well, I'm more or less used to this kind of thing already. The only problem is whether I can get money in the end or not. After all, I don't want to get used to achieving losses."

"I'll also provide my best support. Well now, let's prepare for the final attack… Or at least that's what I want to say here. Someone is approaching."

Akira tilted his head and proceeded to look around, he found a vehicle approaching him while shooting the Tank Tarantulas that were swarming that vehicle. It was Nergo's vehicle and Nergo was inside it.

Nergo drove to Akira's side and said to him.

"Yo, I'm Nergo. Is it okay if we go together? I've already used most of the rockets that were given to me, you see."

Beside Akira's own share of rocket launcher, Togami's share of rocket launcher was also still left in Akira's vehicle. And since Togami could not join the barrage from before, his share of rocket launcher was still mostly unused.

"Well, that would help me a lot. So sure, I don't really mind."

"Thanks."

Nergo then jumped over to Akira's vehicle. Nergo's vehicle was barely disturbed when he jumped off and he also barely made any sounds when he landed on Akira's vehicle with his leftover rocket launcher.

Akira was surprised when he saw that. Nergo then said to Akira.

"What's wrong?"

"Ah, no, it's just that you did that so casually that it surprised me for a bit."

"I spent quite a lot of money on this body, you see. Ah, right, we're in the middle of a battle here, I need to get back to my job."

Nergo then started shooting at the monsters around him, Akira flusteredly followed suit.

"By the way, you're Akira, right?"

"Yep."

"I saw you fight. You're really skilled. As you can see, I'm a cyborg. So like, by any chance, are you a cyborg too?"

"No, mine is a normal human body. I'm just putting an augmented suit on top of it."

"I see, so you're an augmented suit user, huh?"

Nergo took a good look at Akira while still shooting the monsters around the area without having much trouble. In contrast to that, Akira was having a hard time answering his question in that situation.

"W-what?"

"It's nothing, sorry for staring at you. That's just a how I am, you see. I can't help but to get interested in strong people like you. But still, even though there's your augmented suit, it's still amazing that you can do those moves with a normal human body. Did you ever get an organ upgrade or something similar? Or maybe it's out of a hard training regime?"

“I’m not using nanomachines to enhance my body. As for training… Well, I do but I train myself. So if I have to say which one, I guess it’s because of my training.”

“I see, that’s pretty amazing.”

Akira frowned, he seemed to be weirded out.

“W-what’s with this guy? Alpha, do you know anything about him?”

“Just like you can see, he’s a cyborg. And judging from his move just now, it seems that it’s a pretty high-quality cyborg body. I guess that’s all. While as for why he’s interested in you, well, you’re doing pretty well although you’re just a boy. So it’s normal if he’s a bit interested in you.”

“I-I see.”

Akira still felt a bit weirded out there, but he decided to just drop it and focus more on the enemies in front of him. He was in the middle of the battlefield and right before they would launch the last coordinated attack, so it was not like he had a lot of leeways there.

Nergo did not say anything in particular after that and continued shooting accurately at the monsters around them.

Suddenly, Shiakarabe’s voice could be heard from the communication device together with the countdown.

“Get ready, it’s the time!! Keep shooting until I give an order to pull back!! If you don’t participate until the very end, I’ll judge that you didn’t contribute at all in this battle!! So don’t expect to get any money even if you can return back alive!!”

“5, 4, 3…”

Akira and Nergo readied their rocket launchers. Akira used both of his hands to carry one rocket launcher, while Nergo used each of his 4 arms to carry 4 rocket launchers. Akira was a bit intimidated when he saw Nergo like that.

“…2, 1, 0!”

Together with the countdown, Akira and Nergo released a barrage of rockets. There were basically 5 rocket launchers spewing rockets on top of that one vehicle. The other Hunters also tried their best to participate in that barrage after Shikarabe threatened them. In the next moment, the rockets crowded the sky in that area.

Akira put down his rocket launcher and was about to reload but Nergo suddenly stopped him.

“I’ll do the rockets, I have more arms after all. You should focus on the small Tank Tarantulas.”

“O-Okay.”

Akira picked up his CWH anti-material rifle and started shooting at the spiders that were trying to shoot down the rockets. Thanks to Alpha’s support, he barely wasted any ammo.

Behind him, Nergo did not stop shooting rockets to the sky while looking closely at Akira’s movement.

Countless rockets soared to the sky. After flying upward for some time, they reoriented themselves toward their target. The small Tank Tarantulas tried to shoot them down, but thanks to Shikarabe and the other Hunters there, most of them could not shoot down the rockets. The rockets then hit the huge Tank Tarantula almost simultaneously and created a bigger explosion than the first barrage.

Akira frowned.

“If this doesn’t work, we really have no chance to win.”

Alpha smiled.

“That’s true, but it seems there’s no need to worry about that. Look at that.”

The big Tank Tarantula exploded to small pieces and the other small Tank Tarantulas around it suddenly stopped moving. Some of them that were running crashed to each other as if they lost control of their bodies.

“It seems that the control device on the big Tank Tarantula is destroyed, so the smaller Tank Tarantulas have stopped working. It’s alright now.”

“We won, right?”

Akira let out a big sigh. Rather than the excitement of the victory, it was more out of relief.

Nergo sounded casual as he said to Akira.

“It seems that we have successfully defeated the big Tank Tarantula. That’s good. I’ll excuse myself then. We’ll see each other again if we’re fated to meet again.”

He then jumped back to his own vehicle and left Akira.

Akira sounded unenthusiastic as he asked Alpha.

“So, in the end, just who exactly is that guy?”

“No idea. Well, it has nothing to do with us anyway.”

“Well, that’s kind of true… Ahhh, I’m so tired.”

Akira looked super tired as he dragged himself back to the driver seat. Alpha smiled and tried to cheer him.

“You did great there, Akira.”

With this, the 800,000,000 Aurum bounty monster was defeated by Shikarabe’s team.

The other Hunters also stayed there after they defeated the bounty monster. Unlike when you killed a normal monster, there were a lot of things to take care of after you defeated a bounty monster.

Shikarabe contacted the Hunter Office to inform them that he killed the bounty monster. He had made some arrangements beforehand so that he could use the powerful communication device in his APC to hook up with Drankam's communication line to reach the Hunter Office.

In order to confirm the kill, the Hunter Office would send some people to check the leftover wreckage or the dead body of the bounty monster. They would then handover the reward there or check the member of the team that defeated that bounty monsters, basically, there were a lot of things to do.

The ownership of the dead body or the leftover wreckage of the bounty monster would be transferred to the Hunter Office. It was in order to dissect the monsters that were set as bounty monsters. If it was a biological monster, it might be the result of some kind of mutation. And if it was a mechanical monster, it might have some rare materials or metals or machines. All of them would be carried to the lab for more inspections and research.

Of course, it was not like they would not pay anything if there was no corpse or leftover wreckage. Hunter Office knew well that telling the Hunters to gather the leftover after they turned the monster into small pieces would only cause a needless fight.

But there were cases where the Hunters who defeated the bounty monster refused to give away the ownership to the Hunter Office, which in that case, there would be some negotiations. Depending on the result, the Hunters might even not receive any bounty prizes at all. Sometimes, there were Hunters who had no trouble with money at all, they hunted bounty monsters just for the sake of fame. These Hunters sometimes did not receive any bounty prize, and instead, they would preserve the bounty monster to decorate their homes.

Shikarabe and the other Hunters stayed there in order to take care of those things. But not all of them were resting. Shikarabe gave orders to some particular Hunters who were barely useful in the previous battle, mostly, they were Hunters who joined the hunt in order to pay for their debts.

Shikarabe told those Hunters to gather the pieces of the big Tank Tarantula in one place, that included its cannon, legs and armour plating. It was not like they were doing that because they had to, after all, if they left those pieces alone, the Hunter Office would gather those pieces themselves.

But even so, Shikarabe still told them to do that. It was for the sake of speeding up the administration process in the Hunter Office. With the Tank Tarantula down, there were still 3 bounty monsters. Most of the Hunters there thought that it was the end, but Shikarabe thought that he was just getting started.

Akira was resting while having his lunch. Since he took his breakfast early in the morning that day, it was rather late for lunch. He leaned on his vehicle in a relaxed manner as he savoured his portable Hunter food.

Alpha was sitting in front of Akira while also enjoying her food. Of course, it was all just images. It was only to fit the mood.

Akira was eating the sandwich in his hand while watching the sandwich that Alpha was eating.

“…For some reason, that sandwich looks pretty delicious.”

“Want to have a bite? Say ahhhh…”

Alpha smiled when she said that as she offered her sandwich to Akira. The soft-looking bread, fresh looking vegetables, sauce-covered meat, everything about that sandwich looked delicious. There was a bite mark left by Alpha too.

Akira frowned.

“Can you stop teasing me like this?”

That extremely delicious-looking sandwich was not real. Even if Akira extended his hand, he would not be able to even touch that sandwich, and of course, it was impossible for him to taste it.

In front of the smiling Alpha, Akira returned back to eating his sandwich while pouting. Although it was the same sandwich that he had this morning, he somehow felt that it was lacking this time.

“Alright then, that’s it. I’ll eat something delicious once I return from this hunt. Let’s just forget about the price and treat me with something delicious.”

Alpha who listened to Akira’s statement smiled and said to him.

“That sounds like a good idea. You need to at least get a taste of that level of luxury. It seems that it was worth showing that to you.”

“What lies. You were just poking fun at me, weren’t you?”

“Oh my, I’ll never lie to you, you know. Not now, not ever.”

Alpha seemed to be having so much fun there. Akira just went back to eating his sandwich without saying anything back.

Shikarabe and his friends were also taking a break near Shikarabe’s APC. Togami was also with them. The Hunter Office was collecting the names of who defeated the bounty monster, and it was 4 names–Shikarabe, Yamanobe, Varga and Togami.

Shikarabe sounded annoyed as he mumbled.

“They’re late. How much longer until the people from the Hunter Office are here?”

Shikarabe wanted to hunt the next bounty monster as soon as possible. But he could not afford to move away from that place until he dealt with the aftermath of the hunt with the Hunter Office’s staff.

Yamanobe tried to calm Shikarabe down as he gleefully said.

“Calm down. We got our minimum target. We can take our time hunting the rest.”

Varga joined in.

“At least we got the first bounty monster, there’s no news about someone else taking out the other bounty monsters. Just think of it as a small break so we can hunt the next monster in our tip-top shape. Leaving us aside, even if we go now, I’m sure the others are tired that they won’t be much of help, you know?”

After hearing the other’s opinion, Shikarabe finally calmed down.

“…You’re right, I guess I’m too impatient, huh. That’s so not like me at all.”

Shikarabe might have gotten too excited after killing a bounty monster, that was what he thought as he took a breath to calm himself down.

Yamanobe laughed and said.

“But still, that Tank Tarantula was really strong. The 800,000,000 Aurum prize is a scam. That one should have at least 1,200,000,000 Aurum prize money.”

Varga laughed.

“No no no, I want at least 1,400,000,000 Aurum. It has been quite a while since I had such a difficult fight. Not to mention that we got some dead Hunters too. How many got killed in that fight?”

“5 Hunters. All are debt-ridden Hunters and I heard one of them was killed since his observer shot him when he tried to run away.”

“So it’s basically 4 Hunters, huh. Well, considering that we fought a bounty monster, I think we did well.”

Yamanobe and Varga were in a good mood. But that was not the case for Shikarabe. Yamanobe, who noticed that decided to ask him.

“What’s wrong? You don’t seem that happy.”

“The bounty prize… It’s 800,000,000 Aurum, right?”

“Yep. It’s true that it’s rather unfortunate we can only get that much money after defeating such a powerful monster. But it’s not like we don’t get any profits either, right? Not to mention that none of us got injured too. Result-wise, I think it’s not that bad, you know?”

Shikarabe looked a bit annoyed thinking of what was coming and at the same time, a little worried as he said.

“We spent more ammo than we expected. So subtracting the ammo expense from the 800,000,000 Aurum and dividing the rest among the number of Hunters alive… I’m just wondering if Akira would be happy with that number. Unlike Nergo, Akira did not join the hunt just for connection or renown. It’s purely for money… Although we did agree on that contract, thinking about his share, I’m not sure if he’ll be happy about it.”

The unexpected ammo expense was also proof of just how hard that fight was. It was as well the very reason that would cause trouble for the incoming negotiation. The trouble caused by that unexpected ammo expense could have been avoided if there was enough money. Being a Hunter was not a cheap occupation after all.

Yamanobe and Varga looked at each other and smiled. Varga then said to Shikarabe.

“Well, negotiating with him is your job. So good luck with that.”

Although Shikarabe was the leader of the team that had defeated a bounty monster, he did not seem happy at all as he let out a sigh.

Togami was fiddling with his information terminal, he was trying to see Akira's Hunter record.

Akira said that his Hunter Rank was 21. After knowing that Akira's Rank was lower than his, Togami started mocking Akira. But now, he was hoping that it was actually just him making a bad joke there.

Togami had seen Akira in action up close and felt the difference in their skill. He experienced it firsthand and understood the fact that Akira was too strong for a Rank 21 Hunter. But that was not the biggest problem yet.

The biggest problem was how Akira was so casual about it. He did not show even a trace of pride, snub, or self-confidence in his own skill. Although he was strong, he was not prideful of his own skills at all.

[…Don't tell me that it's normal to be that strong for a Rank 21 Hunter, or is it? No, that can't be normal! He's definitely weird! He's abnormal!! So there's just no way…]

If it was normal for a Rank 21 Hunter to be as strong as Akira, then there would be no problem at all. But if that was the case, if Akira's strength was considered normal, then it would mean that Togami was weak according to that standard. For Togami, who always thought that he was a skilled Hunter and prided in that, it was a bitter pill that was too hard to swallow.

Togami tried to check Akira's Hunter Rank while half praying. But his expression showed that his prayer was not answered. According to the record from the Hunter Office, Akira was indeed a Rank 21 Hunter.

Togami was still in a shocked state as he asked Shikarabe.

"Uhmmm… There's something I want to ask."

Although Togami was a part of the anti-Katsuya faction, he was still a young Hunter. So in short, he was a type of Hunter that Shikarabe hated. Since Shikarabe had no particular impression on Togami yet, he still saw Togami as one of the young Hunters that he did not like.

Shikarabe sounded annoyed as he said.

"What?"

If it was the usual Togami, he would have lashed back when Shikarabe said that to him. But not this time, his face looked tense as he continued.

"About that Akira… Who exactly is he?"

"What do you mean by that? He's a Hunter that I paid to join the hunt. I know that he's not from Drankam. But I have no plans to listen to your complaints about taking in a Hunter who is not from our gang."

Togami flusteredly tried to correct Shikarabe who was misunderstanding him.

"That's not what I meant! That guy, I won't accept that someone like him is just Rank 21, you know?! It's definitely strange!!"

Shikarabe was a bit surprised but he quickly understood what Togami was talking about. He smiled mischievously for a few split seconds, then his face immediately returned back to normal.

“Hunter Rank is an indicator of how good a Hunter is in his job, but it doesn’t show how strong they are in a fight. If you have great stealth skill, you can avoid any monsters and return from an old-world ruin with a big load of relics. And if you can bring expensive relics back to the Hunter Office, you’ll be able to raise your Hunter Rank despite having no skill in fighting at all. And conversely, even if you have an amazing fighting skill but you have problems bringing back relics from the ruins, then your Hunter Rank will be low. But well, I bet it’s rare for you to find that kind of Hunter though. It’s unavoidable to encounter monsters when you go to the old-world ruins after all. So it’s important for them to learn how to fight. For those Hunters who are good at fighting but bad at exploring the ruins, they would increase their Hunter Rank through taking monster-hunting requests. That’s why it’s not fully wrong to decide the skill of a Hunter from his or her Hunter Rank.”

After Shikarabe said that, he smirked at Togami.

“But, uh, what can I say? Let’s say that there’s someone who thinks Hunter Rank is proportional to fighting skill. That guy has always been taking easy requests to increase his Hunter Rank, and when he finally works together with another skilled Hunter, he realizes that he’s actually slowing his partner down. Let’s say that person misunderstands his own skill since he has always been focusing only on increasing his Hunter Rank, I’m sure it’ll give him a shock when he sees how the skill of his partner is so different compared to what he was expecting. Even more so when his horrible personality made him not to doubt his skill but instead look down and mock his partner… Ah, I’m not saying that guy is you though, Togami. After all, it’s completely a matter of individual personality. But well, it’s not like I want to say bad things about the gang that I belong to, but the truth is that kind of Hunters have been increasing lately in Drankam and it’s true that people have started saying bad things about Drankam. Something like the Hunters from Drankam are nothing but incompetent Hunters with powerful equipment. But I don’t think you’re one of them, okay? After all, I invited you to join the hunt for the bounty monster. I have no idea what indicators they used when they picked you, but if the people in the upper echelon picked you, so maybe they're not mistaken, just maybe."

Togami did not say anything as he listened to Shikarabe. But his face turned pale as he said.

"…I'll go and get some fresh air for a bit."

Togami only said that before he left Shikarabe, he seemed a bit wobbly as he left that place.

"Just come back before the Hunter Office staff is here."

Shikarabe said that and saw Togami off.

After Togami left, Varga who had been holding back, exploded in laughter.

"Shikarabe, you do have a bad personality, you know. No matter how you think about it, Akira is the one who is abnormal. That kid is right, it's weird for someone as strong as him to be just Rank 21. There's no way a Rank 21 Hunter can be worth more than 100,000,000 Aurum, you know?"

Shikarabe just laughed and replied.

"Don't be rude. I wasn't lying, you know? And I did say that it was not the case for Togami, right? So I'm not responsible for how he takes that, alright? If he takes my words the way I meant it, then there should be no problem."

Yamanobe smiled and joined in.

"But he's a part of the anti-Katsuya faction, right? Aren't you supposed to be liking that guy?"

"It's fine. He just doesn't like the fact that Katsuya has girls surrounding him. Not to mention that it's true he's getting advantage from that young Hunter preferential treatment program, and he indeed got ahead of himself back then. People like him will change the moment Katsuya recognizes his skill or praises him. I can guarantee that. So from that point of view, he might as well be a part of the Katsuya faction."

"Ahhh, you're right about that. That's a totally possible outcome."

It seemed that Shikarabe's anger on the Drankam's young Hunters had subsided as he and his friends laughed together.

Varga then returned back to his serious mood as he asked Shikarabe.

"Shikarabe, I want to confirm what's our plan after this. Are we going to hunt for the next bounty monster?"

"I haven't really decided yet. It depends on how our situation will turn out. Although we used most of our reserve ammo, we might be able to procure a refill depending on the route that we take. It also depends on whether we will hunt the next bounty monster alone or we will join the other team."

"What will we do about the other team members if we join the other Hunter team? We hired them without the Hunter Office's approval, they might cause trouble if we bring them when joining another team, you know?"

"To be honest, I want to hunt for the next bounty monster only by ourselves. But if we join another team, we won't be bringing the others. As Varga said, it'll only cause more trouble after all. So I'll be just bringing Hunters from Drankam, which basically means the three of us plus Togami. Not to mention that the record in the Hunter Office also only has our names as the people who defeated the Tank Tarantula."

Yamanobe sounded disappointed as he said.

"I see, to be honest, I hope we can at least bring Akira and Nergo, you know. Those two contributed more than I thought they would in the last fight."

It was all thanks to Shikarabe, Akira and Nergo taking all the heat from the Tank Tarantula that Yamanobe and Varga were able to approach the Tank Tarantula without any troubles. Originally, they had put an extra gimmick to force the other Hunters to get close to the Tank Tarantula in case they refused to during that fight.

The vehicles used by the other Hunters were prepared by Shikarabe and his friends. They rigged those vehicles so they could control those vehicles from Shikarabe's APC. Of course, they installed that gimmick to force the other Hunters to be the decoys. Although in the end, they did not resort to it, they did make preparation for such a thing.

Yamanobe thought of something and voiced out his idea.

"How about bringing the other Hunters together with us by hiring them through a formal request?"

Shikarabe instantly replied back.

"That sounds like a bad idea that would cause a lot of trouble during the negotiation. So if you're going to do that, make sure to take care of the aftermath too, okay? I won't help you though."

"Me neither. I guess that's indeed a bad idea, huh?"

Yamanobe quickly stepped down without much resistance. In terms of its reward and difficulty, hunting a bounty monster was a very sensitive subject. So if Yamanobe brought along Hunters who were not from Drankam, it meant that he would have to negotiate with the other factions too. Even Yamanobe would not want to have to face that.

The Hunter Office's staff arrived not too long after that.

Shikarabe and his friends finished the administration work and loaded the leftover wreckage from the Tank Tarantula that they had gathered beforehand into the Hunter Office's truck.

After they finished their business with the Hunter Office, they still had to take care of some administration stuff in Drankam. Shikarabe used his information terminal to contact someone from Drankam but sounded unhappy as the conversation went on.

“… I see… Alright then, I’ll send you the meeting coordinate… Yeah, I’ll take over the Hunters from that side too, we’ll go once we’re ready… I get it, okay!! Don’t give the leader position to those people! Just don’t!!”

Shikarabe then cut his call with Arabe. Varga looked at Shikarabe and asked him.

“So, what was that?”

“As for the last one, they said that we need to group up with the rest of the Drankam teams to hunt for the last bounty monster—the Big Walker. Retrieve the rest of the equipment that we distributed to the other Hunters.”

Yamanobe tilted his head and asked Shikarabe.

“Sure, so then, why are you upset? The Katsuya faction splurged a lot of money for Katsuya to hunt the overgrown snake, so even you also expected that they’ll be able to take out that bounty monster, right?”

Shikarabe sounded really annoyed as he replied back.

“According to how we are going to form the new team and how big it is going to be, Katsuya might be the leader of the new team, you know!? The upper echelons are having a debate about that right now. The Big Walker’s bounty prize is 3,000,000,000 Aurum! So the leader of the team that takes out that 3,000,000,000 Aurum bounty monster will earn a lot of prestige, you know!! I would rather die than working under that boy!!”

Both Yamanobe and Varga nodded in agreement. Both of them knew well just how Shikarabe hated Katsuya.

__*__*__*__

Both Elena and Sara looked exhausted as they were traversing through the wasteland. They were sitting on the driver seat and the driver's assistant seat in their vehicle respectively.

Not too far from them, there was the corpse of a big snake that Katsuya's team just defeated. It looked like the same snake that Elena and Sara met in Yonozuka station the other day except that it was even worse.

Its mouth was so huge that it looked like it could swallow a whole powered suit or a vehicle in one go. Its width was more or less as big as a small building and it was as long as a few dozen trailers.

That huge snake was a mix-match of all the monsters that it had eaten. A part of its scale was covered by fur from a biological monster, while other parts were covered by armour plating from a mechanical monster. There was even a tire too, it might have been from one of the Hunter vehicles that it had eaten.

The Hunter Office staffs were trying to move the big snake's carcass using heavy equipment. A group of young Hunters gathered not too far from them, they looked thrilled for being able to defeat the snake. But some of them looked sad since their close friends got injured or even killed in the previous fight.

A Hunter Office staff was talking with Katsuya on the spot, he must have a lot of things to talk about as the leader of the team that defeated the bounty monster. Behind him, Mizuha, the woman who supported the Katsuya faction, was standing while listening to their conversation.

Elena and Sara were not a part of Drankam, they used that excuse to take a rest in a different place not too far from Katsuya and his team. But actually, that was also an order from Mizuha.

Sara looked at Elena who was sitting in the driver seat, she sounded really tired as she asked.

"…Elena, is it okay if I whine a bit?"

Elena also sounded equally tired.

“…Sure, go ahead, although, I feel like I know what you want to whine about.”

“…Is that so? Well, I’ll take that offer then…”

Sara took a long breath and started whining.

“To be honest, the job this time isn’t worth all that hard work at all…”

“I can’t agree more with you… That was my mistake… I’ll have to be more careful about the contract term next time…”

“It’s fine… It’s not your fault…”

“Thanks… I’m glad that you’re my partner…”

Both Elena and Sara still looked super tired while they were showing their appreciation to each other.

Elena and Sara had exhausted their physical and psychical stamina. Of course, they had spent their stamina during their fight against the bounty monster. To be more precise, it was because the fight placed too much burden on Elena and Sara.

The nervousness when they hunted for the bounty monster, the fear when they encountered the bounty monster, and the chaos that ensued after that because of their lack of experience, it was almost impossible for the young Hunters to work as a team in such a battle.

Katsuya’s order was cut mid-way multiple times, it was because he always went to help his team members when the bounty monster smashed their vehicles.

There were even some young Hunters who kept shooting at the bounty monster up close although Elena and Sara warned them that they were too close and they needed to pull back. Those young Hunters refuted Elena and Sara by saying that it was not an order from the leader of the team, Katsuya.

While it was correct for them to only follow the orders of the leader, they ended up having to sustain heavy injuries because they fought the bounty monster up close.

It was Elena and Sara's job to make sure that as many young Hunters as possible return back alive. Thus they worked extremely hard to pick up those young Hunters and carry them to a safe place.

Elena and Sara tried their best to help out in that fight as they circled around the bounty monster. They were actually gathering information about the bounty monster as well as helping out the other Hunters. Although it looked like a dull job, it was actually a very important job.

But to some of the other young Hunters, it seemed like Elena and Sara were just going around doing nothing.

It was true that the ones who defeated the bounty monster were Katsuya's team, they were also the ones who shot a lot of rockets at that snake. So at a glance, it seemed that they were the ones that contributed the most during that battle. It was as if they would be able to defeat the bounty monster even without having Sara and Elena around. That was of course if their rockets could hit the bounty monster without the guided targeting provided by Elena.

But in reality, that was also possible. Katsuya and his team actually carried a huge amount of rocket launchers, enough to compensate the low accuracy with sheer numbers. And without Elena and Sara, that accuracy would drop even lower, which meant that they would have taken more time to defeat the bounty monster, thus they would have sustained more losses in that battle.

But not everyone present there thought so. Especially those people who wanted to boost a particular person's achievement and renown.

Both Elena and Sara seemed to be extremely tired.

"Elena… What's the plan after this again?"

“…For now, we just need to standby here until they finish their talk with the Hunter Office about the bounty monster. After that… Well, it depends on the situation.”

“…I see.”

“…Want to use some medicines?”

“I’m already using medicines…”

“I see…”

Even if the medicine could help recover some of their physical stamina, it could not recover their psychical stamina. They still could quickly react if they suddenly got thrown into a fight, but as long as there were no monsters around, they wanted to get a good rest there.

They then saw Katsuya and his friends approaching them, they also could see Mizuha with them.

The moment Elena saw Mizuha, she quickly straightened up the seat that she had set as flat as possible. After all, it was her job to handle the negotiation. While on the other hand, Sara who was in the driver’s assistant seat still had her seat stretched back, that was just how tired she was.

As Mizuha saw Sara still lying on her seat although Sara knew that she was coming, she looked slightly offended. But then she spoke to Elena without showing it.

“Elena-san. I want to talk about the request though, is it a good time now?”

“Sure.”

Elena was actually tired, but when she replied she wrung together all the focus that still remained within her. She could not afford to negotiate while being half-dazed for the sake of Sara too.

Mizuha then explained to Elena about the aftermath of defeating the bounty monster, then she shifted to discussing the reward money based on the survival rate from that bounty hunting. She conveyed that the survival rate was lower than she had expected.

Mizuha then asked Elena a question.

“So, about this survival rate, do you have any excuse?”

“No, just subtract the reward as we’ve agreed beforehand.”

Elena’s expression did not change as she said that, Mizuha’s expression turned slightly stern.

“…Is that all?”

“…Yeah, but if you want me to say something, then about the survival rate, what’s your explanation for that?”

“What do you mean?”

“It’s exactly like I asked you. It’s not like you asked me the same question without knowing the meaning behind that question, right?”

Elena and Mizuha stared at each other without saying anything.

Elena thought that she and Sara properly did their duty. She believed that both of them did their best to help defeat the bounty monster. They did not think that they caused needless loss because of their incompetence. That was exactly why Elena refused to apologize for the low survival rate.

So she discreetly returned the question to Mizuha, to know if Mizuha thought that the low survival rate was caused by Drankam’s incompetency.

Mizuha then answered Elena’s question.

“Explanation, huh. Nothing.”

Mizuha had prepared a huge amount of money for that bounty monster hunt. She bought expensive equipment and gathered the people who would use that equipment. Although some of them had a rather low Hunter Rank to join such a hunt, she prepared enough equipment and vehicles to compensate for the lack of experience and skill.

So if the survival rate was worse than she expected, she thought that it should not be because of her lack of preparation. Basically, it must be because of something else.

“I see.”

Elena only replied with that short sentence and returned back to staring at each other without saying anything. Although they did not communicate through words, both of them at least knew what the other person was thinking about.

Elena believed that the horrendous survival rate was because Drankam sent inexperienced Hunters for hunting a bounty monster. While Mizuha thought that it was because Elena and Sara did not do their job properly. Both of them at least understood very well that they were blaming each other.

Looking at both of the people, who he always looked up to, staring at each other without saying anything, Katsuya felt a bit uncomfortable. Thus, as the leader of his team, he interrupted.

“U-uhm, we’re here to talk about what to do from here on, is that okay?”

Both Elena and Mizuha turned to Katsuya. Katsuya flinched when the stare that they were giving to each other just now shifted to him.

“W-well, uh, we’ll be ready to move out soon, so I thought this is a good place to decide that…”

Elena realized that her tiredness caused her to be short-tempered there, thus she took a breath to calm herself down. Mizuha also decided to hold back her displeasure to show respect to the leader of the team that just killed a bounty monster.

Mizuha smiled to Katsuya.

“You’re right. Well then, Katsuya, please explain it to them.”

Elena waited for Katsuya’s explanation with a calm expression. Katsuya felt relieved as he started his explanation.

There was only one bounty monster left. In order to hunt for that bounty monster, they would group up with the rest of the Drankam teams. They still did not know who would be the leader of the new team. Since they would be moving to the meeting ground soon, he wanted Elena and Sara to come along with him again, but depending on the result, someone else might be the leader for the new team.

“So that’s basically the gist of it. Elena-san and Sara-san, please come with us for the next hunt too.”

Elena listened to Katsuya’s explanation without saying anything. After she understood the situation, she thought of all the possibilities inside her mind and came to a conclusion.

She then asked Mizuha.

“Mizuha-san, is what he said correct?”

“Yes, all Drankam teams will group up and hunt for the last bounty monster, the Big Walker. Since it seems that the other Hunter teams are also pooling up their fighting power to hunt for the Big Walker, we’re in a hurry here.”

Elena took a deep breath and said.

“I see. In that case, as we agreed beforehand, we’ll take our leave here.”

Katsuya was surprised hearing Elena’s answer, Mizuha was also making a similar face.

He then flusteredly asked.

“Elena-san!? Wait for a second, are you going to leave?”

Mizuha tried to hide her displeasure and calmly asked Elena.

“Can you tell me your reason?”

Elena calmly replied.

“Our contract is that we’ll accompany and provide support to Katsuya’s team while hunting for the bounty monster. In case if the situation changes, then we’ll have to negotiate a new deal. And if it happens during a fight, we’ll provide support until the fight ends before negotiating a new deal. Now that the team is going to be reorganized to the point that the leader might even change, not to mention that grouping up with the other teams means that there might be infighting which might evolve to a real fight, I believe that this is enough reason to see that the situation has significantly changed and there’s a need to negotiate for a new deal. So with that laid out, I decided that we’re going to take our leave here as stated in our original contract.”

“Don’t you think that we have the right to negotiate too?”

“Of course. If you want to make an offer after I’ve made that decision, you’re welcome to try. That is, if Drankam thinks that it is worth spending time negotiation with us.”

Elena and Mizuha lightly smiled at each other. From afar, they looked like they were getting along, but looking up close, unless you were a dense person, it was obvious that they were showing hostility toward each other.

Having Elena and Sara leave his team here means that the fighting power of his team would diminish. Both personally and as the leader of his team, Katsuya really wanted to avoid that.

Katsuya made a begging face as he asked Elena.

“Elena-san, do you really have to leave no matter what?”

Elena looked apologetic.

“I’m sorry, but yes. I think you can clearly see it, we’re exhausted. We’re not in a state that we can provide meaningful support. We might even just slow you down. So according to our principle as Hunters, it’s not right to accept a request under this state.”

“I see…”

Katsuya looked very disappointed.

Mizuha also confirmed that there was no room for negotiation there, thus she gave up on bringing Elena and Sara along. Her expression then returned back to formal as she smiled and said to Elena.

“I understand. Although it’s a bit abnormal, our request ends here. We hope that you’ll be working with us again the next time we need your help. And please don’t forget to return the equipment that we lent you.”

“We’ve already returned all the equipment that we received from you including the unused ammo… Sara, we’re going home, so at least say your goodbye.”

Elena shook Sara to wake her up, Sara then slowly fixed her posture.

Although she was not planning to sleep there, she was so tired that her mind was a bit hazy, she could actually quickly fall asleep if she wanted to. She then reconfirmed what she heard.

“…We’re going home?”

“…Okay.”

Elena smiled at Katsuya.

“So then, we’ll be parting ways here. Katsuya, I know that it’s not easy to be the leader of a team, so make sure to keep calm and give your best out there.”

Sara also smiled at Katsuya, she still looked very tired.

“…Katsuya, good luck. And also, be careful. Returning back alive is the biggest victory for a Hunter.”

Katsuya just smiled back and said.

“Yes. Elena-san and Sara-san too, please be careful on your way back. We’re in the middle of the wasteland after all.”

As Elena turned on her vehicle, suddenly someone shouted at her as if to stop her.

“You have no right to say that!!”

Everyone in that place focused their attention on to the source of that shout. It was Lilina. Lilina, who was behind Katsuya, pushed aside the people in front of her until she came right in front of Elena.

Sara sounded annoyed as she looked at Elena and asked her.

“Elena, did I say anything strange?”

“It might be just me. But I don’t think either of us said anything strange though.”

Elena also did not even try to hide her displeasure when she answered Sara’s question.

Lilina vented her anger and shouted as if she was close to exploding.

“Both of you!!”

Both Sara and Elena looked back at Lilina, who was glaring at both of them.

“I know it, you know!! Your duty was to protect us!! And your reward depends on how many of us survived that fight!! If only both of you properly did your job, there’s no need for them to die back then!!”

“About the details of our contract, due to non-disclosure agreement, I can’t really tell you though…”

Elena glanced at Mizuha when she said that, so Mizuha replied to Lilina in Elena’s place.

“They’re hired to increase the survival rate of the whole team and it’s true that in their contract, their reward depends on the resulting survival rate compared to the expected survival rate.”

“That means that I got it right, am I not?!”

After listening to Mizuha’s explanation, Lilina shouted at Elena again.

“Leaving aside why you even interpreted that, as your escort, we did our best to increase your survival rate during the fight, you know?”

“Save the bullshit! 8 people died in that fight! But even so, you are saying you did your best back there?! And now you’re saying that you’re going to leave the team midway?! What exactly is going on inside your heads?!”

Elena could feel a slight headache, as she tried to understand what Lilina meant. As she dug deeper into Lilina’s way of thinking, her headache got even worse before she finally drew a conclusion and checked it with Lilina.

“So in short, you who believe that being able to return back alive is the most important thing as a Hunter, think that we abandoned our duty or at least not taking our duty seriously since we prioritized our survivability, huh? And you want to say that if only we followed Katsuya’s orders and did our job better, then no one would have died in that fight, right?”

“That’s right!! So how are you going to take responsibility for that?!”

Lilina shouted even louder than before.

Elena and Sara looked so exhausted as they let out a big sigh. Elena then replied as the representative of her team.

“If you want to complain, direct that to the people who hired us. I’m sure they’ll at least give you some answers. See you then.”

Elena only said that before she accelerated her vehicle.

Lilina saw them off as she shouted at them.

“Wait!! Are you running away now?!”

Elena did not slow down at all, in fact, she even paced her vehicle faster.

Lilina then went to Mizuha. Her expression was showing her anger and sadness for losing her friends.

“Mizuha-san!! Why would you even hire those people?!”

Mizuha looked apologetic as she said to Lilina.

“We hired them since Katsuya vouched for them. He said that they’re skilled Hunters, but it seems that I put too much trust in them. I’ll properly take care of the rest, so just calm down, okay?”

Mizuha tried to calm Lilina down with a gentle voice. Lilina somehow calmed down thanks to that, but she still sounded displeased as she said.

“…Alright, I’ll trust you on this.”

Lilina slightly bowed and returned back to preparing to leave that place.

Katsuya looked conflicted as he saw Elena and Sara off. He was so surprised that he missed his chance to say anything before Elena and Sara left.

Mizuha looked at his expression and frowned. Katsuya’s conflicted expression showed what he was feeling deep inside his heart, and that included a lingering affection toward Elena and Sara.

Mizuha tried to smile and spoke to Katsuya.

“Katsuya, you should finish your preparation to leave this place too.”

“…Understood.”

When Mizuha spoke to him, Katsuya remembered that he was the leader of his team. Although a lot of things were going through his mind right now, he still had to do his duty as the team leader at the moment.

Katsuya turned and started walking back to his team.

__*__*__*__

Elena and Sara were traversing through the wasteland in their vehicle.

Elena had set the vehicle on auto-pilot heading back to Kugamayama city. Since she left the driving to the control device, the vehicle was shaking more than before. If Elena was taking the wheel, she would have been able to adjust the acceleration and pick a better route, but Sara knew that Elena was also tired, thus she had no plans to blame her.

Elena and Sara were slouching on their seats. Since no one else was there, there was no need to keep up their appearances. It also showed just how exhausted they were. But they were at least rested enough to have a normal conversation.

Sara mumbled.

“Seriously though, that wasn’t easy at all.”

Elena couldn’t agree more with that.

“Yeah, you can say that again. That was really tiring in all sense.”

“Lilina, was it again? At first, she said that they don’t need us, then after that, she said we didn’t work hard enough. If they really could do that themselves, there was no need for our help, right? Do they even have any idea of how much you worked just to cover them?”

It was rare for Sara to sound so angry. It seemed that she did not like the fact that Elena was overburdened during the last fight.

Elena smiled bitterly.

“Looking at that, I feel like she’ll still have something to complain about even if we sacrifice ourselves to protect Katsuya’s team. Something like ‘these Hunters are pathetic to get killed by something like this’.”

Maybe it was because she was tired that Elena said something so mean that did not fit her character at all.

Sara just smiled bitterly to that rare side of Elena.

“I can see her doing something like that. Although she complained a lot about us being their escort, in the first place, she should realize the fact that they’re so weak to the point that they needed escorts in that battle. Or at least, the people in the upper echelon think that they’re not strong enough to go alone without an escort. It’s such a huge luxury to go hunting a bounty monster with escorts, you know? I wonder if she’s some kind of a rich lady who always has escort everywhere she goes since she was little, that might be why she thinks it’s normal to have escorts.”

As Elena listened to Sara’s mean joke, she remembered about a certain rumour within Drankam. It was about a rumour that there was a real rich lady in Drankam.

Up until now, Elena never took that rumour seriously, and even if it was true, it had nothing to do with her. That was why she did not care much about that rumour.

“Elena, what’s wrong?”

“Hm? It’s nothing. If it’s true that there’s a real rich lady in that gang, then the young Hunter preferential treatment program might have been created for that rich lady.”

“Ahhh, that does make sense. It might cause a problem if that rich lady alone got preferential treatment, that’s why they use that program as an excuse. That’s an interesting way of thinking, but… Isn’t that too much work to do just for the sake of one person?”

“I know, that’s just something that passed through my mind.”

Sara thought that Elena was joking as she lightly laughed, Elena also replied with a laugh.

Elena then continued.

“If this mysterious rich family is not supporting Drankam’s young Hunters, then all of those expensive equipment for the young Hunters would have to be paid by Drankam, you know. I don’t think that those young Hunters would do enough work to pay for those expensive equipment, which means that the more veteran Hunters would have to pay for them… I heard that there’s a gap growing between the young Hunters and the veteran Hunters, I guess I now know where’s that coming from.”

“Moreover, there are young Hunters who behave like that. It’s rather expected that a gap would grow.”

“The most important thing is not that there are young Hunters who behave like Lilina. With that many young Hunters in the gang, it’s to be expected to find at least one of them like her. The real problem is the fact that no one even tried to stop them. All of them agreed with her, although they didn’t express it, they at least agreed with what she said back there. I’m sure all of them back then at least agree with that girl to some degree, including that Drankam officer.”

“That basically means that most of the young Hunters in Drankam think like her, right?”

“Well, I at least don’t think that all of them think like her though.”

Both Elena and Sara thought of the same thing and took a deep breath. Sara then mumbled.

“I really really understand now why Shikarabe would complain about it.”

“Yeah, I totally agree.”

Elena just smiled bitterly when she said that.

The Hunter Office staff finished checking the dead corpse of the overgrown snake. It was also for the sake of transporting the snake, after all, it was hard to transport that snake without knowing its weight.

The staff looked a bit confused when he saw the result of his scanner. A fellow staff who noticed that asked him a question.

“What’s wrong?”

“About this though, look at this cross-section view of the inner part.”

“This is… Empty… Huh?”

There was a big long hollow cavity inside the snake. Both of the staff looked confused.

“It doesn’t seem like its digestive tract, nor does it seem like someone gouged it out. What is this, was there something inside that cavity before?”

“No idea, but one thing for sure, this is not a leftover body from moulting.”

The other staff replied to that joke with a laugh as he said.

“So you’re saying that this whole thing is just skin? That’s just impossible. Moreover, it has ‘snake’ in its name because it looks like a snake, it’s not like it’s really a snake, you know.”

“Yeah, if I’m not mistaken, it’s one of those monsters that evolve depending on what they eat, right? Well, anyways the real examination will be done by those researchers after we take this huge thing to the lab.”

They then laughed together as they continued their job.

Akira was heading back to Kugamayama city.

The request for hunting the bounty monsters from Shikarabe ended after that fight against the Tank Tarantula. Although Akira did prepare himself to head out for the next hunt, Shikarabe decided to decline the offer because of his circumstances. So then Akira returned all the equipment that he received from Shikarabe and quickly headed back home.

As for the other Drankam Hunters, they quickly proceeded to the meeting ground. Nergo also accompanied Shikarabe and the other 2 Hunters from Drankam to the meeting ground, it seemed that he negotiated with them and made a deal so that he could go along as one of the Drankam's Hunters.

As for the rest of the Hunters, they had left the place. Akira did not know whether they also headed back to the city through a different route or they went to finish another request somewhere, but for now, he was heading back to the city alone.

Akira was listening to Alpha's commentary about his previous fight against the Tank Tarantula.

“So, as I’ve explained to you, that was the gist of that fight. The Hunters fought as planned and then won as planned. Although it’s as simple as that, it was rather impressive that they could turn their plan into reality like that.”

“After listening to your explanation, it sounds as if Shikarabe, Yamanobe and Varga could have won by themselves if they got lucky.”

“To be honest, their chance of victory was not zero. One thing for sure, if the Tank Tarantula does not call for reinforcement like back there, they have a good chance to defeat it all by themselves. I bet the reason why they hired you and the other Hunters is simply to get a better chance at victory as well as to increase the safety and reduce the time needed to defeat that Tank Tarantula. Although it seems that something a bit complicated is going on inside Drankam, he also made preparations to quickly move to the next bounty monster which means that it’s already within his original plan. So I’m sure the real reason was to shorten the time needed to defeat the bounty monster.”

Akira felt both amazement and admiration after hearing that.

“So, if they’re not hard-pressed with time, they would have hired fewer people or they might have even hunted the bounty monster alone, huh… Those bounty monsters are really strong and it’s amazing how Hunters would still hunt for them. I guess that’s why those Hunters get renown from hunting bounty monsters, huh?”

That would explain why so many Hunters went out to the wasteland hunting for the bounty monster, and it seemed that Shikarabe and his friends’ skills were on a different level compared to those Hunters.

“If I have to be extremely picky, I would say that the only bad thing about that hunt was that it expended too much money. They prepared a lot of one-time-use equipment, so I’m sure they’ve spent quite a sum of money to prepare them. It’s true that they’ll still get some profit since we did take down the bounty monster, but if we had failed, it would have caused a huge loss.”

Akira remembered that the contract was that the equipment expense would be subtracted from the reward before it was distributed. He felt a bit worried.

“… Did we… Use that many ammo?”

Alpha smiled.

“We did. For example, those sticky devices that Yamanobe shot at the Tank Tarantula, those are not only guiding devices, those are also mini information-gathering devices. They must have used those devices for both guiding the rockets as well as to analyze the Tank Tarantula to find its weak points or parts of its body that are more brittle than the rest of its body. I’m pretty sure those devices are more expensive than the mini information-gathering device that Elena used in Yonozuka Station Ruin. I bet they analyzed those information using the analyzer installed in their APC and then used the analysed information to adjust the rocket targeting system in order to increase its firepower. Not to mention the rockets, they must be pretty expensive. And if they got the other equipment from renting, then it must have been pretty expensive too.”

Akira then remembered his short conversation with Elena. If he remembered it right, Elena’s mini information-gathering device was about 10,000 Aurum per canister, while the sticky device that Yamanobe used should cost more than that. Since those sticky devices would have been destroyed when the rockets hit the bounty monster, they were indeed only one-time use equipment.

“In order for all of those rockets to hit their target at the same time, the rocket warheads must have been equipped with an advanced guiding device. Of course, they’re way more expensive than the warheads without a guiding device. Then that firepower too, that must not be cheap. And yet, they’ve used a lot of those rockets in the last fight.”

Akira remembered when the Hunters initiated a coordinated rocket barrage at the Tank Tarantula. It was true that they were pretty powerful rockets. It was rather obvious that one rocket would have taken a whole lot more money than just one cheap rifle bullet.

“If we were to consider the possibility of them buying an automatic reloading device fixed on their bikes especially for this hunt, it means that they would have spent even more money, you know?”

“Wait for a sec, that thing is not included in the equipment expense, right? Just like the other newly bought equipment right before the hunt?”

Alpha just smiled at Akira who was looking for an excuse to suppress the equipment expense.

“Akira, there are a lot of ways of selling things in this world. For example, when you sell a huge amount of consumables, you can sell the tool that you need to use those consumables together with it for cheap. And even if the customer gets that equipment for free, the cost of that equipment is well covered by the amount of profit you gain from selling the consumables. In our previous hunt, they were using special grenade launcher rather than usual cannon, so that might also increase the equipment expense.”

Akira hung his head low, it seemed that the equipment expense was way more than he had expected.

“I wonder how much the total is, and how much of the bounty prize will be left after subtracting it. Remember that it’ll still get divided for multiple heads after that, you know? So you can look forward to the final reward that you’ll receive.”

Alpha’s beautiful face was beaming with a teasing smile when she said that.

The bounty prize was 800,000,000 Aurum. Even if it was distributed to multiple people, it should give a huge sum of money. That was what Akira unconsciously thought, but after listening to Alpha’s explanation, Akira hung his head low in dejection.

Alpha thought informing Akira about that would reduce the chance of conflict between him and Shikarabe in case the reward money from Shikarabe was lower than what he was expecting.

Akira tried to find a reason to point out that his reward might still be higher than that.

“It’s not like it has been confirmed that the equipment expense would be that big, right? If it really takes that much money to defeat that bounty monster which is only worth 800,000,000 Aurum, then no one would have even tried to hunt for that bounty monster in the first place. So like, isn’t that guess just too pessimistic?”

“The bounty prize doesn’t always fit the strength of the bounty monster, you see. It’s hard to judge how difficult it would be to defeat a bounty monster unless you try to fight it yourself. That 800,000,000 Aurum bounty on that Tank Tarantula is based on the size and the approximated fighting strength of the other Hunter teams that failed to hunt it. If back then Shikarabe decided to pull back, it would have meant that his team had also failed hunting that bounty monster, and I bet it would have increased the bounty prize even more. If I have to make a guess, it could have gone up somewhere to 1,200,000,000 Aurum.”

Akira made an annoyed face.

“So in short, that would mean we were desperately trying to defeat a bounty monster that was severely underestimated and so we can only get that heavily undervalued bounty prize…”

“That might be exactly the case. And if that’s true, well, tough luck, right?”

Akira obviously twitched as he let out a big sigh.

“…I’m not bothered at all. I just need to go out to the wasteland to hunt for relics to earn money. Once all the bounty monsters are gone, I can once again safely go to the old-world ruins. That battle is basically for that goal in mind. Shikarabe and his friends also paid for the equipment and ammo expenses too. So it doesn’t bother me all that much.”

Although it was obvious that it was bothering him, Akira said those words to cheer himself up.

Akira checked the bounty monster information in the info bulletin of the Hunter Office site through his information terminal. The bulletin had been updated to announce the bounty monsters that had been defeated. It was Tank Tarantula, Multi-turrets Maimai and Overgrown Snake. There were pictures of the bounty monsters when they were still kicking and alive put right beside the picture of their corpses or leftover wreckages. It also included the Tank Tarantula that Akira had defeated.

“So there’s only 1 bounty monster left, and according to Shikarabe, Drankam pooled all its Hunter team to hunt for that last bounty monster. I guess all the bounty monsters will be defeated today. So let’s head back home, get a good rest, and get ready for exploring old-world ruins starting from tomorrow.”

Suddenly Alpha accelerated Akira’s vehicle. Akira let out a shriek of surprise as his body was pushed against the seat.

“Alpha!? What’s wrong?”

“Shhh!!”

Alpha looked grim when she said that. The moment Akira noticed that, he quickly raised his guard. Alpha would only make that face when something really bad happened, he might even be in a life-threatening situation right now.

Alpha kept pacing Akira’s vehicle to its top speed. After about 10 seconds keeping Akira’s vehicle on its top speed, she eventually said something still with a grim expression.

Alpha slowly decelerated the vehicle. Akira looked at Alpha with a serious face.

“Akira, calm down and look behind you. I’ll handle the steering, so no need to worry.”

Akira slowly turned his head. There was something long and thin far far away from his vehicle and that thing was chasing him. Although it looked small, it was because of the distance between them. In reality, it was actually ginormous.

Akira reached out to his binoculars and took another look. He could see a familiar monster in the direction he was looking. It was a monster that he saw not too long ago.

Akira's face turned grim. The monster looked similar to the one that he had met in the Yonozuka station ruin's entrance as well as one of the pictures in the Hunter Office bulletin, and that monster was chasing him right now.

It was the overgrown snake.

Akira immediately rechecked his information terminal. The overgrown snake was indeed included among the bounty monsters that had been defeated, there was even a picture of its dead corpse in the Hunter Office bulletin. He then looked at that monster one more time through his binoculars. Although it looked smaller, it looked like nothing but the bounty monster overgrown snake.

Akira then asked Alpha.

"T-the bulletin said that they've defeated that monster though?! What the hell is going on here?!"

"There are many possibilities, it might be another monster of the same type, or the bounty monster might have cloned itself, or it might even be one of its children. Judging from its size, it might be one of the overgrown snake's children. After all, it looks smaller compared to the original bounty monster."

Akira looked at the overgrown snake's picture in his information terminal one more time to compare it with the snake that was chasing him. It was as Alpha said, the snake chasing him was smaller compared to the bounty monster. But with that being said, it was still way larger than his vehicle. Thus Akira could not take that monster lightly.

“Akira, unfortunately, it’ll catch up with us at this rate.”

“Can’t we break away from it? If that snake is really of the same species, it might as well qualify as a bounty monster if we’re not lucky, right? Do I have a winning chance if we fight it?”

“If we keep running until this vehicle runs out of energy, it might give up on chasing us. Do you want to try and do that?”

Akira’s face still looked grim as he moved to the back seat of his vehicle. It was true that the snake might give up, but if that was not the case, once his vehicle ran out of energy and could no longer move, that snake would eat his vehicle along with him in it. Not to mention, he knew he had bad luck.

Akira smiled bitterly and said to Alpha.

“I guess I have no choice but to fight, huh… Back then when I refilled my supply, I did buy extra ammo just to be safe if I encountered a bounty monster in the wasteland, but why in the world would I really get to meet a bounty monster now?”

Akira had indeed filled his vehicle with ammo, he bought a lot of CWH anti-material special ammo and DVTS minigun extended magazine. It would give him an advantage when he fought a strong monster, but using those ammo against normal monsters would only cause him to lose money. And to be honest, just for today, he really did not want to end up in the red.

Alpha smiled and said to him.

“There’s nothing to worry about if you’re prepared. It was a correct decision to restock your ammo back then.”

Seeing how Alpha was smiling like usual, Akira regained some of his calm and composure. He then smiled bitterly and replied to her.

“I really hope that it’s just a needless fear sometimes, you know. When I have a bad feeling, I’m more than happy to have that bad feeling completely miss its mark. After all, most of my good guesses always miss, so I hope sometime it would happen when I have a bad feeling too, you know.”

Alpha smiled back and asked Akira.

“So this time, what’s your intuition saying?”

Akira smiled confidently.

“It depends on you.”

Alpha smiled back invincibly.

“Yep, that’s the correct answer. If you know that, then just leave the rest to me. I’ll show you that my support can offset your bad luck, just like always.”

Akira and Alpha smiled at each other full of confidence. Akira had made his resolve there.

He then aimed his CWH anti-material rifle toward the overgrown snake. He supported his CWH anti-material rifle with both his hands while aiming at that overgrown snake through the aiming device on top of a shaking vehicle. He then concentrated his focus as much as possible to the point that it felt as if he could accurately recognize the pattern in which his vehicle was swaying.

To top it off, his aiming was augmented with Alpha’s support. When he pulled the trigger, the CWH special ammo which flew out through the muzzle went straight toward the overgrown snake. Although it was so far that its huge body looked like just a small dot from Akira’s point of view, the bullet ripped through the air and hit the snake’s head.

But the moment that happened, the snake’s scale easily repelled the bullet as it left a dent on that particular scale.

Akira reconfirmed what just happened through the aiming device.

“I got a hit there… right?”

“It did hit. It was at least enough to annoy that snake.”

“That’s all the damage that I can inflict using a CWH special ammo, huh? Those bounty monsters do have really hard bodies, don’t they? What should I do then?”

“We have no other choice but to increase the firepower. Akira, get your resolve ready.”

Akira smiled lightly.

“If resolving myself can get my shots stronger, I’ll do it as much as you want. Resolve is my responsibility after all. I thought I’ve made my resolve though, was it not enough?”

Alpha smiled invincibly and said to him.

“That will be enough if what we are going to do next won’t faze you. Alright then, let’s do it.”

Alpha suddenly hit the brake, while on the other hand, the snake increased its speed as it was closing in on Akira.

If the distance to the enemy lowered the firepower, then they just needed to reduce that distance. It was simple logic. The closer the enemy got, the easier it would be to kill that enemy. That applied both to Akira and that snake.

Akira gritted his teeth and was somehow smiling in that situation, he was not fazed at all.

The monster which was only a small dot in his binoculars now had become big enough to be seen with naked eyes. The overgrown snake did not move like a snake, it was more like a long connected vehicle. If Akira took a better look at it, he would notice that it had countless wheels and caterpillar tracks under it. It looked as if it forced its separate compartments to move forward together although they had different speeds and shapes. Due to that, its huge body seemed to be wiggling up and down just like a snake.

Akira took another aim at the overgrown snake. This time his shot hit the snake's weak point and peeled off its scale. But compared to its huge body, it was nothing but a scratch.

Alpha slowed down the vehicle even more. The overgrown snake was close enough for Akira to hit it even if he just shot randomly at it. He took another shot at the snake. This time, the CWH special ammo peeled off its scale and ripped off a small portion of its flesh, but it was far away from a fatal wound as it did not even slow the snake down.

Akira frowned.

"It's not working even if it's this close, huh! Is it that thing?! Is it that it has some kind of force field armour?!"

"That's not it. It's simply because it has a very hard scale. It didn't produce any light when you hit it, right? So it's not a force field armour."

"Seriously, just how hard its scale can be!?"

"It won't cause any meaningful damage unless you get even closer. This is it Akira, this is where you really need to steel yourself."

Seeing how Alpha was smiling like usual in that situation, Akira got a bit annoyed.

"So my resolve is still not enough, huh?! Alright alright!! I get it already, let's do this!!"

Akira guessed that the snake would not slow down and it would keep closing into him. His guess was correct, or to be more precise, it was 200% correct.

Alpha suddenly accelerated the vehicle to make a 180 turn and she sped up the vehicle even more as it was heading straight to the overgrown snake.

Akira thought that Alpha would slow down the car to let the snake get closer, but instead, they were heading straight toward the snake at a high speed.

He grabbed the frame of his vehicle so that he would not get thrown off. Although Alpha controlled his augmented suit to prepare him for that beforehand, it was so sudden that he was still surprised by it.

Now that both Akira and the overgrown snake were heading towards each other, they quickly closed the distance between them.

“Akira, get your DVTS minigun ready.”

Akira shifted his hand from grabbing the frame of his vehicle to get the DVTS minigun attached to his vehicle. The overgrown snake was already right in front of his eyes, it opened its huge mouth filled with sharp teeth as it was going to swallow Akira and his vehicle whole, while on the other hand, Akira gritted his teeth tight.

The overgrown snake made a slight change on its move to add extra momentum in order to leap on Akira. Alpha was able to precisely catch that slight move through the information-gathering device.

Alpha then used her advanced driving capability to swerve the vehicle to the side and barely avoided the overgrown snake’s teeth. The vehicle did not slow down as it passed beside the snake’s head and just continued going forward beside the snake’s body.

When the snake opened its huge mouth right in front of him and he swerved to the right and barely avoided it, Akira got a good long look of its intimidating mouth up close in a slowed-down world which caused him to make a grim face.

Inside that slow-moving world due to Akira’s concentration and high tension, Alpha was the only one that was moving around normally. She then smiled at Akira and said.

“Shoot!”

In order to not get thrown off the vehicle, Akira fixed his position and tightly grabbed his DVTS minigun. In that situation where his vehicle was severely tilted to the side, Akira looked desperate as he pulled the trigger.

The DVTS minigun spewed countless bullets at the sides of the snake in a close distance. Akira did not let go of the trigger. In order to make the minigun portable, it was equipped with an extended magazine that could house way more bullets than it looked. As long as that magazine still had ammo inside it, the revolving muzzle would not stop spewing powerful bullets that could easily turn a normal monster into minced meat in one cycle.

Akira was close to the snake, so close that he might be able to kick the snake from his vehicle. In such a close range, the countless bullets from the DVTS minigun ripped through the snake's abdomen and threw pieces of its flesh to the air. Akira left a trail of flesh and metallic wreckages behind him. Those parts were the result of all the things that the snake had eaten until now. The DVTS minigun basically drilled through its body and threw pieces of the snake's huge body around the area.

Due to Alpha's advanced driving skill, Akira was able to maintain his distance beside the snake's huge body. The snake passed beside Akira at such a high speed as he left a long straight wound-mark on the snake's side after releasing a huge amount of bullets at its body.

Akira did not let go of the trigger right until the very end of the snake's body. Then after that, the vehicle still moved forward due to inertia and made another 180-degree turn before stopping. The magazine in the DVTS minigun was already completely empty.

"Akira, reload a new magazine!"

Akira was still a little bit dumbfounded when he pulled the trigger on his DVTS minigun, but when Alpha gave him his next order, he quickly returned back to reality. He immediately loaded a new magazine to his DVTS minigun and asked Alpha.

"T-that wasn't enough to kill that snake?"

"It did some damage, but it's not enough to kill it. We'll do it one more time."

“J-just how many times do I need to do that again?”

“As many times as it takes to kill it. So let’s keep giving our best until we can kill that snake. It’s better than letting yourself get killed by that snake, right?”

Akira was put off when he saw Alpha smile as she said that.

He finished loading a new DVTS minigun extended magazine. The overgrown snake was trying to make a turn, at least, it did not seem like it was going to run away anytime soon.

Akira got desperate and shouted.

“Alright alright, I just need to do it, right?!!”

Alpha immediately drove the vehicle again, and Akira tightly grabbed his DVTS minigun. He was planning to do the same thing again and again until the snake died.

Every time Akira passed beside the overgrown snake, the ammo that he brought with him was greatly reduced. But even after exhausting that much ammo, it was still not enough to kill that snake. As his ammo reserve started looking dangerously low, Akira, who had made his resolve looked a bit worried.

“Alpha! We’ll run out of ammo soon!!

“This snake is really strong. Is it not running away since it knows that this won’t be enough to kill it? If only it has some kind of a weak point.”

Akira smiled bitterly.

“‘I’ve already used this much ammo on that snake, if it really has a weak point, I’m sure as hell that I hit it at least once, you know? Or is it that I didn’t get that lucky hit at all? Is it because of my bad luck? I even shot that many bullets to its head!”

“In that case, we can just destroy it to the point that luck doesn’t matter at all. It’s coming, one more time!”

“Roger that!”

Akira knew his situation would not change no matter how much he complained. Although he had inflicted that much damage, the overgrown snake still did not show any signs of retreating.

Akira knew well that such behaviour was normal for a monster. But since it looked like a big snake from outside, he wondered if it would feel fear and run away like a usual snake. Unfortunately, his wish did not come true, at least that was the case until now, and that wish will probably never come true.

He prepared himself for the next barrage, which was also his final barrage.

Alpha mustered the vehicle’s engine one more time. And just like last time, she planned to swerve past beside the snake. Their surrounding area was already filled with leftover wreckages of that overgrown snake.

The overgrown snake had eaten Hunters’ vehicles which included the ammo inside those vehicles. Those explosives were absorbed into the snake’s body and each of Akira’s barrage caused those explosives to spread around on the ground of that area. Unfortunately, some of those explosives started exploding for some reason.

The explosion itself was not that big, at least, it was not enough to cause any damage to both the snake and Akira’s vehicle. But it was enough to deflect the vehicle’s direction even with Alpha’s advanced driving capability. And due to Akira’s bad luck, one of those explosions happened right before the snake leapt at him.

The shockwave from the explosion caused the vehicle to shake for a few split seconds, leaving it impossible to control. The overgrown snake easily swallowed Akira’s vehicle with Akira still on it in that split seconds.

Since the snake had closed its mouth, no light was able to reach its insides. Akira was still standing on the back-side of his vehicle that was almost flipped over after the snake swallowed it. He could only hear the strange sounds which were produced as some kind of liquid touched the body or the wheel of his vehicle.

Akira's vision was totally pitch black. A similar thing had happened when he entered a certain basement in the Higaraka Residence Ruin. At that time, he entered a room with no light source at all, it was also pitch black. But back then, even inside that pitch-black room, he could still see Alpha clearly. Her figure was the only thing glowing with colours back then, but that was not the case this time.

"Alpha!"

Akira tried to call for Alpha. But there was no reply, his vision was still filled with darkness.

He noticed and understood his situation, he had lost all of Alpha's support there.

She once explained to him that there were places in the old-world ruin where her support could not reach him. Akira was always connected to her through his ability as someone who was connected to the old-world domain, so he bet that there must be something in the old-world ruin that blocked his ability to connect to the old-world domain. He thought that must be the case right now too.

A part of the snake body must be blocking Alpha from connecting to him.

Akira could not see anything inside that total darkness if he relied solely on naked eyes. He no longer had the support to maximize the power of his augmented suit and no one was giving instruction to him that would provide him with an advantage in such a dangerous situation.

He was all alone inside the snake's body. He no longer had the support that allowed him, an untrained slum boy with minimum equipment, to win against a fully armed veteran Hunter. He no longer had the miracle that allowed him, a Rank 21 Hunter, to be worth more than 100,000,000 Aurum.

Akira started hearing banging sounds, it seemed that the snake had started crushing his vehicle from its sides. He no longer had the driving support that would help him get out of that dangerous situation. As the strange liquid dripped onto his augmented suit, it made a sizzling sound. It was the liquid produced by monsters to digest vehicles and mechanical monsters. It was only a matter of time before it melted his augmented suit too. In case if his augmented suit's control device got melted, the augmented suit would start moving on its own and that would spell doom for Akira.

He understood the reason why he was inside the overgrown snake's body right now. It was not because Alpha made a mistake, it was simply because of his bad luck. To be more precise, it happened because Alpha's support could not win against his bad luck.

Akira had spent his lifetime-worth of his luck when he met Alpha and he had been relying on Alpha's support to overcome his bad luck up until now. But to be honest, somewhere inside his mind, he knew that one day he would not be able to rely on that. He always thought when that happened i.e when he lost Alpha's support, that would be the moment he died. And now he was facing that very moment.

In the midst of that dangerous situation, Akira compressed his time perception as much as possible. It had been just a few seconds since the snake swallowed him. Because he could not see anything inside that total darkness, there was nothing that could help him gauge just how slow his time perception was right now. He did not notice that everything around him was already running in an extremely slow time.

Inside that pitch-black world, Akira laughed.

"So my resolve to charge straight to this snake is not enough, huh! Alright alright! I get it! Steeling my resolve is my responsibility, yeah?!!"

Akira screamed on top of his lung and laughed as hard as he could. He was mockingly laughing at his bad luck that caused this predicament.

The voice that he produced while in that extremely time-compressed state was severely distorted, he might not be able to properly listen to sounds in such a state. But it was not a problem, his outburst was just a statement, or to be more precise, it was a declaration of war against his bad luck that caused this unfortunate situation.

He was there screaming all alone and he was the only person there to listen to his screams. But that was okay, it was a statement to ridicule, resist and fight back against his own bad luck.

Akira probed around for his DVTS minigun's handle. When he found it, he gripped it tightly and pulled the trigger.

The loud sound of gunshots reverberated through the snake's insides. The muzzle flash illuminated Akira's surroundings as he released bullets indiscriminately through the inner walls of the snake's insides. The already grotesque insides of the snake were turned even more grotesque as the countless bullets ripped through its flesh and fanned out meat and blood in Akira's surroundings. As the pressure vanished, his vehicle returned back to its original shape.

Akira quickly grabbed a tube-type medicine and emptied its content on top of his head. With this, it would buy some time until his head got digested, after all, unlike his limbs, his head was not covered by his augmented suit. The medicine paste that covered Akira's head made a hissing sound as it made contact with the snake's digestive liquid.

He then swallowed a handful of medicine pills as if he did not care about their side-effects. It was in order to help prolong his body's durability under that constant stress. He forced his body to move past its own limit inside that world where time was extremely compressed. The nanomachine inside his body immediately kicked to action as he forcefully moved his body with the help of his augmented suit way above the capability of a human.

Akira reached to the driver seat and set the vehicle to auto-drive mode through the vehicle's control device. His vehicle received a simple order as it spun its 4 wheels as fast as it could to drive forward. Since there was no way back, there was no other choice but to move forward.

Akira was grinning in that situation, but he did not let go of his finger from his DVTS minigun's trigger. There was no need to take an aim, his bullets would hit the snake no matter where he aimed. He kept on spewing bullets in all directions as he drove through the inside of the snake while cackling.

Unlike the exterior part of the snake's body, its inner part was way weaker. The flying bullets wreaked havoc inside its body as if they tried to push the outer scales inside-out.

The overgrown snake screamed and wriggled in agony. Although it was wriggling up and down, Akira who was inside its body could not feel it since he did not even know which way was up.

But even so, Akira did not stop coursing through the snake's body. The kickback from the DVTS minigun pushed his vehicle downward, thus exerting pressure and preventing the wheel from spinning. But with that being said, his vehicle still forcefully pushed forward while being under such pressure. The violent shaking that caused its body to collide with the snake's inner wall and the digestive liquid that was dripping from the snake's inner wall shaved the durability of the vehicle.

Even on top of that violently shaking vehicle, Akira did not let go of the trigger and laughed like a mad lad. He had exchanged the empty magazine for a new one many times as he fired ammo randomly inside the snake's body.

The overgrown snake that was wriggling violently eventually fell down and stopped moving. But even so, bullets were still flying out from the inside of its body. And then, from a weakened side of its huge body, a vehicle flew out with Akira in it.

As it flew out with a lot of momentum, the vehicle landed on its side and flipped over, throwing Akira off-board. He then landed and rolled over on the ground.

"…I'm out?"

Akira was lying on the ground facing upward, the big blue sky was presented in front of him, he finally realized that he was outside.

“Akira! Are you alright?!”

Alpha looked at Akira with an extremely worried face. He stared at her, dumbfounded. The image of Alpha in his vision was slightly blurred. After she called his name a few times, her image finally returned back to normal.

“… Uhhh, welcome back, Alpha.”

“I-I’m back?”

To that strange reaction from Akira, Alpha could not help but give that awkward answer.

“Alpha, can you check if that snake is dead for good?”

“Eh? Ah, sure, wait for a sec… It’s alright, it’s dead for good.”

Akira laughed a bit.

“That’s good news. If even that didn’t work, then nothing would have worked.”

It was rare for Alpha to look so confused, she then asked Akira a question.

“Akira, what exactly just happened?”

Alpha did not know what happened during the time when her connection to Akira was cut. Although it seemed that Akira survived the fight, it was important for her to get the gist of what had happened when she lost her connection to him as soon as possible.

“…Sorry but, can you put that for later? And also, can you check if there are any monsters in the area?”

“Alright, make sure to tell me all the details later.”

“Ahh, and also, you did say that we just need to destroy its body to the point that I won’t need to rely on luck, right? I’ve done it for you, but I’m super tired right now because of that.”

Akira smiled confidently when he said that. He then relaxed his body as he was still lying on the ground while looking at Alpha’s face. It was really rare for Alpha to look as confused as she was now.

According to her calculation based on the situation right before she lost connection to Akira, there was a 100% chance that he would be killed. He should not have been able to return alive from that situation without her support.

But even so, Akira managed to return alive. He once again overturned her calculation.

Akira, who was under her grasp, had started to change. She kept on recalculating whether his growth that exceeded her expectation was a good thing or not. She focused all of her processing power on the recalculation to the point that she neglected to control her expression.

The Hunter Office sent some staffs to where Akira was. It was because Akira had reported to the Hunter Office that he found a monster that looked like the bounty monster, which should have been defeated, still roaming in the wasteland. That was enough of a reason for the Hunter Office to at least check it.

The staff that the Hunter Office sent was Kibayashi. The moment he heard that a strange report reached the Hunter Office and it was from Akira, he quickly jumped in.

After Kibayashi reached Akira, he listened to Akira's explanation and more or less understood what had happened. He then laughed hard. He tried to suppress his laughter before he said to Akira.

"So you killed it? This snake? All by yourself? After it ate you? Y-You, b-blasted your way out from its inside…"

Kibayashi could not hold back his laughter, it seemed that he found what he just said himself really funny.

The adrenalin that was coursing through Akira's body during that fight had already calmed down. What was left after that fight was only the tiredness and worry for all the ammo expense that he had incurred in that battle. Not to mention that he had lost his vehicle too.

Akira looked annoyed as he replied.

"…Yeah, you have a problem with that?"

It seemed that somehow Akira's reaction amused Kibayashi even more. Kibayashi could not stop laughing for a while, he eventually stopped and amusedly said to Akira.

"It's all good that you're as reckless as ever. You're just so interesting."

"Is that so? Well, thanks."

Akira pointed his finger at the overgrown snake.

"So then, what's the result after you checked it? Is that thing a bounty monster or just a normal monster?"

"Well, unfortunately, that thing is not a bounty monster. We have no idea if it's just a mutated monster of the same species or maybe one of the children of the bounty monster, but the conclusion is the same, it's not the bounty monster. I know that you worked super hard to kill it and I'm sorry to say this, but the Hunter Office would not categorize a monster that you can defeat alone as a bounty monster. But well, we'll at least pay you some reward money for killing it though. Ah, right, you didn't take the bounty hunting request, huh. But don't worry, we'll treat you as if you had taken the bounty request, I can at least do that much for you."

"Well, thanks."

From the other's point of view, it was a monster that could be killed by a Rank 21 Hunter if that Hunter tried hard enough. Akira could understand that fact, but it still annoyed him.

Kibayashi looked at the annoyed Akira, he then smiled and said to Akira.

“You looked pretty displeased. But well, I guess that’s to be expected huh? Since you worked so hard to kill a monster that looked like a bounty monster but still you wouldn’t get that much money out from it.”

“Yeah, I used quite a lot of my ammo in that fight, you know. I’m getting a huge loss out of this. Not to mention that my vehicle is totally wrecked. I just bought that vehicle recently.”

“In that case, we can reimburse some of your money. If you sell that pseudo overgrown snake’s dead body to me, I’ll negotiate with the Hunter Office to at least reimburse your ammo expense.”

“Then how about my vehicle!?”

Akira suddenly reacted to that promise, but Kibayashi shook his head.

“I’m sorry, but no matter how you slice it, there’s no way we can reimburse your vehicle.”

“…I see. Well, it already helps me a lot if you would pay me my ammo expense though… So then, can I go back home now? To be honest, I’m super tired right now.”

Akira looked super duper tired when he said that, but suddenly his face twitched.

“Ah, right!! I have no vehicle now!! Dammit!!”

Akira shouted loudly, Kibayashi then tried to calm him down.

“Calm down. I’ll at least give you a ride back to the city. You do look so tired after all. You can take a nap there, I’ll wake you up when we arrive.”

“…Is that so? Thanks… Haaah.”

“Don’t mention it, I can at least do that much for you.”

Even after he calmed down, Akira looked completely opposite of Kibayashi who seemed to be having fun there.

Kibayashi decided to head back to the city with Akira while the other Hunter Office staffs stayed behind to analyze the snake's corpse.

Akira was sleeping like a log in the backseat of Kibayashi's vehicle. Another Hunter Office staff member was sitting in the driver's assistant seat next to Kibayashi. That particular staff suddenly asked Kibayashi a question.

"Are you sure it's okay to make that promise to this boy? Looking at that dead corpse, he must have used quite a lot of ammo, you know. Although you did say that you'll add some bonus, I don't think you can reimburse his ammo expense just from the reward of monster hunting requests though?"

Kibayashi laughed merrily.

"It's fine. I got to see an interesting battle record after all. So you don't need to worry about it."

"Haaah, I see."

There was an air of superiority from the way Kibayashi laughed. The Hunter Office staff found that weird, but since he knew about Kibayashi's bad reputation, he just decided to forget about it.

In reality, the overgrown snake that Katsuya's team defeated and the overgrown snake that Akira defeated were one and the same. The overgrown snake was actually a snake inside a bigger body. The relatively smaller snake was the real body, it used everything that it ate to construct its outer body. It was analogous to a human inside a powered suit.

The one that Katsuya's team defeated was that powered suit. While the real body detached from its outer body and escaped. And to cover its escape, it set the outer body to rampage around.

While the one that Akira defeated was the snake's real body. Although to be more precise, it actually had an even smaller body inside it, but Akira killed it before it could detach and escape since he scattered all of those bullets from inside the snake's body.

Kibayashi actually knew that the one who actually defeated the overgrown snake was Akira and not Katsuya's team.

He also knew that Akira did not know about that. That was the reason why he was really amused by that situation.

Kibayashi had no plans to report that to the Hunter Office since he knew that it would be useless. The Hunter Office had already broadcasted the news that the overgrown snake had been killed. Retracting that statement and announcing that another Hunter actually defeated the bounty monster would definitely cause a dispute, it would be a huge problem since Drankam was also involved.

While on the other hand, it was true that Katsuya's team defeated a powerful monster that might as well be considered as a bounty monster. So it was not worth the trouble making a correction to that announcement.

[Well, I'll at least reimburse your ammo, that way, I'll be able to enjoy your reckless act again.]

Kibayashi was already interested in Akira, and with what happened this time, he got even more interested. He smiled as he was looking forward to the next time he would be able to see Akira do another crazy thing.

After returning back to his home, Akira took a dip inside his bath. He looked much more dazed than usual as if most of his soul was sucked by the warm bath.

The moment he arrived back home, he quickly fell asleep and only woke up in the middle of the night. But even so, he was still extremely tired. He was stuck in a situation where he was awake and sleepy but could not fall asleep. Thus he dragged his body out of the bed and went to the bathroom in a semi-conscious state.

Akira looked so tired that it would not be strange if he suddenly fell asleep anytime. So, Alpha who was inside the bath with him, just like always, warned him.

“Akira, be careful not to fall asleep here. It might even be a good idea if you get out of the bath. You might drown if you fall asleep here, you know.”

“That’s the medicine to heal wounds, right? Not the medicine that would help you breathe underwater. Moreover, when exactly did you take them?”

“…Back there… That time… Ahh, right, Alpha, you weren’t there.”

Akira was still completely in a daze when he said that. The effect from the medicines that he took when inside the snake had completely waned and he had completely forgotten that Alpha was not there when he took those medicines.

Alpha was smiling like usual, but she then carefully asked Akira a question.

“Ah, right, you promised me that you’ll tell all the details later, right? This might be a good time for that, what happened back there?”

“Well…”

Akira was about to say something, but he stopped. It was not like he did not want to explain it to Alpha, it was more because he did not have the communication ability to do that.

He gave up explaining what had happened with words, so instead, he sent the scene of what had happened straight to Alpha through telepathy. Akira chose that option since he could send visuals, line of thinking, and even feelings through telepathy.

But in the end, it was just a reconstruction of Akira’s memory. The accuracy of that information was very low since there was nothing but hazy pictures of the inner wall of the overgrown snake only illuminated by the flash muzzle from his DVTS minigun. Moreover, it was subjective information based on Akira’s point of view, not to mention, it did not contain the full information about his mental state at that time. It was a rather confusing scene, it was as if he was inside a dream-like state until the moment he broke out from inside the snake's body. It contained no more information than that.

Although it did not explain everything, that was all that Alpha could extract from him. In conclusion, she could not get the information that she was actually looking for from him, and Akira himself actually had no idea what kind of information she wanted from him.

"That must have been rough."

"Yeah, you can say that again."

Akira's expression relaxed as he said that.

"But well, I didn't expect to be able to do that, I was sure I'm going to die there. But again, since I had the time to think that I was definitely going to die, I guess it showed that I didn't instantly die after it ate me. So I might have actually not been in that much danger back then."

Alpha sounded apologetic as she said to Akira.

"It would have been really helpful if I was able to give you support, I'm really sorry."

But Akira replied casually as if it did not bother him at all.

"Things like that are bound to happen from time to time. I'm glad I trained myself to know what to do when I lose your support. It was really useful in that situation."

Alpha thought that Akira must have acquired some level of confidence after getting out of that situation with his own power. That in itself was not a problem, it was good news for her since it meant that he was getting stronger. But if that confidence lessened his dependency on her, then there was a need to remove that. She should do something about it before he thinks that he could go on his own without her support.

She smiled.

“I’ll give you my utmost support whenever I can, so you can keep on relying on me.”

Akira smiled in return.

“Of course, I’ll be counting on you.”

“In that case, there’s one thing that I can help you with right this second. There’s a call from Shikarabe. I’ll connect you, so you can just talk normally from here.”

After she said that, Akira could suddenly hear Shikarabe’s voice. He was connected to his information terminal through Alpha.

“It’s Shikarabe. I need to talk to you about the reward, do you have time now?”

“Sure.”

“If you have the time, do you want to talk in-person? I’m in that pub from last time.”

“I’m inside my bath right now, so let’s talk over this call. Or is it something that might cause trouble between us so you’d rather talk about it in-person with me?”

“It depends on you. Well, I’ll put it straight for you. Our original contract is that you get your share of reward from the bounty prize, subtracted by the equipment expense, and then divided by the number of the heads. But well, the equipment expense is higher than we expected. So in the end, to be honest, your share of reward does not fit your contribution in that battle.”

Akira’s expression turned stern.

“Are you contacting me to warn me that my share of reward might be pretty small?”

“Whoah there, there’s no need to get angry here. I’m recognizing your contribution in that battle, you know? But with that being said, I have no plans to give you a bonus either. I want to avoid having to readjust everyone's share after the request is done. Increasing or reducing the reward at this stage will only invite a dispute. It's a matter of money after all, so I hope you can understand."

Akira did not say anything. He got what Shikarabe was saying and he understood it well. But it was only enough to suppress his anger, not completely erasing it. Shikarabe also understood that fact from Akira's silence.

"But just like I said before, I recognize your contribution in that fight. I myself am not happy to just close this matter by giving you a small amount of money. So about that, is it okay if we pay you with something else other than money?"

"Something other than money?"

"Yeah, for example, how about a vehicle?"

"A vehicle?!"

"There are other things that we can offer you too. Drankam invested a lot of money in this bounty hunt. Thanks to that, we got a lot of new equipment like guns or new augmented suits. The gang also lost a lot of equipment in this hunt, so we're planning to buy their replacements in bulk. The gang is also planning to replace the lightly damaged vehicles which are still usable after a little bit of TLC. I can give you one of those slightly damaged vehicles as your reward. The document will say that you bought that vehicle on the same day we originally planned to pay your reward. We'll also include some money to repair and make some adjustments on that vehicle. You might be able to get a better vehicle if you use the same amount of money to buy a new one. So in short, I might not be able to give you extra money, but I can use my connection to get you something else on top of your reward money. But well, if you prefer money, I won't force you though…."

Akira suddenly sounded desperate as he said to Shikarabe.

“No, the vehicle is good!! I’ll take the vehicle!! Please make it a vehicle instead!!”

Shikarabe was a bit weirded out by that sudden change of character from Akira.

“I-I see. Alright then, I’ll start working on it. I’ll contact you again later about when and where I’ll hand it over to you.”

Shikarabe then closed the call. Akira looked really happy, Alpha smiled bitterly at him as she said.

“That was good news.”

“Yeah. This way, I don’t have to explain to Shizuka-san how I got my vehicle destroyed so quickly! I can also save money to buy a new vehicle later. This is great, really lucky!”

Akira thought that he would end up in red after that day’s bounty hunting. But with this, there was no need to worry that it might affect his Hunter work in the future. And now that there was no more problem to worry about, he loosened up and continued enjoying the bath in a good mood.

Shikarabe was drinking together with Varga and Yamanobe in the pub where he met up with Akira before. Among all the girls who were serving his table, some of them were the girls that he promised to call when he celebrated the bounty hunting. Shikarabe was a man of his words.

After he finished his call with Akira, Yamanobe smiled at him and asked.

“How was it? Does it seem that we don’t need to fight Akira?”

“Yeah, it was even somehow anticlimactic. It seems that he’s really in need of a vehicle.”

“Vehicle? But like, he already has one, right? Why does he want another one? Did his vehicle get damaged during that fight against the Tank Tarantula? But he just went back normally on his vehicle after that, right?”

“No idea, well, it doesn’t really matter. Now that we have nothing to worry about, let’s get another drink!”

Shikarabe just continued drinking and celebrating with his friends. Of course, he had no idea that Akira fought a pseudo overgrown snake after his hunt together with Shikarabe and lost his vehicle in that fight.

There was a marketplace for Hunter equipment in the lower district of the Kugamayama city. There were also different facilities in that area, like a repair shop to fix or readjust prosthetics, or a facility that looked like a combination of factory and hospital. A lot of Hunters with prosthetics gathered near the hospital while the cyborgs gathered near the factory, and in between those two, there was a shop that could help Hunters exchange normal organs for a battle oriented cyborg body.

Nergo was in that place. He rented an expensive individual room, where he could use the material that he brought himself, to fix the part of his body that got damaged during his fight against the bounty monster. Although from the outside his limbs looked just fine, sometimes sparks could be seen jumping out from his limbs. He was in the middle of fixing those parts.

Just then Nergo received a secret call. He answered that call through a device that would allow him to speak without making any sound.

A troubled voice, which seemed to be a male’s, returned from the other side.

“…Uhhh, what should I call you now, again?”

“So it’s Nergo this time, huh? It was Kein last time, wasn’t it?”

“That’s the name that the great cause gave me, while as for my original name, I’ve already given up that name to the great cause. As such, I have no name. There’s no name that refers to me and the great cause refers to us, therefore we’re brothers.”

That guy sighed exasperatedly.

“I don’t mind changing names all the time, but can you at least let me call you brother. That way I won’t get your name wrong, you know.”

“No, you’re lacking achievement and zeal to call me brother. Especially, your blunder in the Kuzusuhara ruin was fatal. Because of that Hunter, whom we mistook to be an agent from the city, we’ve failed to steal the relics from the Kuzusuhara underground ruin. If only you gave us more detailed information beforehand, we could have avoided that failure.”

That man quickly replied back to Nergo, in his voice, there was a trace of mockery toward the hard-headed person that he was talking with.

“You still call me brother but you won’t let me call you brother, huh? I don’t really understand your way of thinking. Just so you know, I work super hard both for my own and for the world’s sake. Not to mention that I also helped out to deal with the aftermath of that incident, right?”

“If only our plan proceeded without any problem, there was even no need to deal with the aftermath, you know. Helping out dealing with the aftermath does not erase your blunder.”

The other guy sighed, he then started speaking in a higher spirit to fix the mood.

“Well, putting that aside for now, so, how was it? Although I’ve given you the information that I gathered, you still went undercover and infiltrated Drankam to confirm it, right? Did it go well? I was the one who made that fake record, so there shouldn’t be any trouble.”

Nergo changed his mood.

“About that though, I finished confirming the subject. Today I met the subject by pure coincidence, the subject is not Katsuya. It’s another Hunter by the name of Akira. He’s a pretty strong Hunter, but he’s not a Hunter with a cyborg-boy body. The information that you gave me is correct, he’s not an agent from the city. That news about him was fake news to disguise the City Management’s blunder.”

“I told you so. There’s no harm in trusting me more, you know? Now that you’ve confirmed it, are you going to pull out from Drankam now?”

“No, I’ll continue infiltrating Drankam. When we planned to infiltrate Drankam, we also made a plan to make propaganda inside Drankam in order to convert the Hunters in here. After all, it would look strange if I suddenly distance myself after joining the bounty hunt with the excuse to make a connection with Drankam.”

“I see, well, it’s all good that everything is going well. Well then, I’ll go and gather data about Drankam. I’ll send it to you later once I’m done.”

“Wait, I have a question.”

The other guy replied in a good mood.

“What is it? You can go ahead and ask me anything. It’s important to talk and understand each other. It’s the thread that binds people together after all. So if you can’t do that, then you’re just the same as those monsters out there. After all, we can’t understand them and they can’t understand us.”

“Why are you looking for people who can connect to the old-world domain?”

“Why, you ask? Isn’t that obvious? It’s because they’re useful to have around, you know? That’s also the exact reason why the Corporate Government and the Nationalist are looking for them.”

“Let me change my question. Why are you looking for them in Kuzusuhara ruin? No wait, are you actually looking for someone you know was in Kuzusuhara ruin once?”

That man did not answer back, Nergo then continued.

“We know just how skilled you are and we know that the Corporate Government also knows about your skills. We know that the Corporate Government even sent you an offer hoping to get your skills on their side. If you just wanted to look for the people who are connected to the old-world domain, you can just climb the ladder in the Corporate Government and search the whole Eastern District. With your skills, I know you can get the right and the power to do that much, so why did you refuse their offer just to stay in Kugamayama city? What exactly makes you stay in this city?”

After a short silence, the other guy answered back in a fashion that sounded as if he was joking.

“It’s for the sake of people’s happiness. That’s also the reason that you, Nationalist, always use, right? You Nationalist think that it’s difficult to bring that happiness into reality under the rule of the Corporate Government, that’s why you’re supporting the forming of nations, right? So that’s also my reason and that’s exactly why I’m helping you. That’s all, later then.”

“I really hope that you’re not lying.”

The secret call ended. Although Nergo’s face was a cyborg part that rarely showed any emotion, he twitched a bit there.

Nergo was once called as Kein. And one day, he would also abandon that Nergo name. That nameless man there retraced his conversation just now.

[…It’s true that you’re skilled, but you don’t have a great cause to steer that skill, and that makes it pointless. That’s exactly why I won’t let you call me brother. To be honest, I do want him to convert, but I’m not really sure now.]

A woman near Nergo suddenly spoke to him.

“Nergo-san, how are you feeling?”

Nergo smiled at her.

“Thanks to you, I didn’t find any broken parts. I’m just doing fine-tuning right now. Mizuha-san, thank you so much for introducing this good repair shop to me.”

Mizuha smiled back to him.

“Don’t mention it. We’ll be working together from now on, it’s normal to help out a colleague.”

“I can’t thank you enough, I couldn’t really do any proper maintenance in the previous place that I frequented. Ah, talking about gratitude, I really need to say my thanks to that Katsuya too. If it wasn’t for him, I might have died by now. If it’s possible, I want to thank him directly, or is it like it’s not a good idea for a new member to do that?”

Nergo was saved from a dangerous situation by Katsuya during the fight against the Big Walker.

Mizuha was a bit surprised. Nergo joined the gang through Shikarabe, so she thought that he would share the same view as the other veteran Hunters in the gang.

Nergo was a skilled hunter and he had no disdain toward Katsuya, so it might be a good idea to bring him to her side. As Mizuha thought so, she smiled at him and said.

“Don’t worry, it’s okay. I’ll ask Katsuya to free up some of his time so I can introduce you to him.”

“Thank you so much.”

Nergo smiled when he said that.

It was true that Katsuya saved Nergo. But no one knew that Nergo actually intentionally put himself in danger in order to get closer to Katsuya’s faction.

In one of the tall buildings within the inner wall of the Kugamayama city, a man who just had a call with Nergo smiled.

“I do think that your zeal to your belief is pretty amazing, you know? But no, it’s not enough. You guys don’t have the power to put your idealism into reality. But you know, I have that power, if only I can go to that place one more time.”

That man was clenching something in his right hand. It was a black card with a big symbol on it.

“I have the key. I just need to walk through the door now. If only I have the means to do that, I’ll be able to go to that place one more time.”

That symbol was the national symbol of an old-world nation. The Kuzusuhara ruin was once the capital city of that nation and that card was something that man had gotten from deep inside the Kuzusuhara ruin. It was a highly valuable relic that he got by using the Corporate Government’s special force.

They baited the monsters inside the Kuzusuhara ruin to Kugamayama city and manipulated the City Guard to kill those monsters. After that incident, the danger level inside the Kuzusuhara ruin dropped temporarily, they used that chance to go into the ruin while also bringing weapons from the frontline. That card was something so valuable that he could only get after he put that much effort.

But there were not that many people who knew the real worth of that card, as in matter of fact, he might be the only person who understood the real worth of that card.

“It’s not like I’m looking for people who are connected to the old-world domain. I’m looking for the entity behind them. That one girl that prevented my dream from coming to reality, I’ll make sure that she won’t be able to do that again this time.”

His expression turned ominous.

“You’re looking for the next one, right? But those people who can see you, those people who can connect to the old-world domain, there are not that many of those people out there. Or maybe you already found one? But even if you did, it’s not easy to go there, so I should still have some time.”

That guy stared outside the window toward the Kuzusuhara ruin.

“Like hell I’ll let you get there before me.”

The man who was glaring through the window was Yanagisawa.

The hunt for the bounty monsters had brought different effects to different people. Some of those people had their lives turned over that day, while some people just continued their lives without much change. Some of them received profit while some of them incurred loss, but as long as they returned alive, they would have to face the upcoming days. Just like what they had always been doing, and just like what they would be doing from now on.

That day, all the bounty monsters were killed.

The next day, Akira went to the same entertainment district that he visited the other day.

Although it was a little too early before the usual prime time for the entertainment district, that place was already overflowing with customers. Akira thought that some of the shops in that place must be so popular that Hunters would go there no matter the time.

Akira went to the same pub where he met up with Shikarabe and the other Hunters. But this time, the one who called him there was the person who Colbert was working for, it was Tomejima.

Tomejima wanted to discuss with Akira about that incident where Akira was about to kill Kadol, a debt-ridden Hunter. Akira had heard everything from Colbert, to be honest, he could just ignore it, but Akira had a feeling that it would turn into something really troublesome if he did. So, although it was a pain in the neck, he decided to go to that pub to meet Tomejima.

In the middle of his way to that pub, Alpha suddenly asked Akira a question.

“Akira, it’s not like I’m against negotiating with them, but what’s your plan? Are you going to just accept some kind of compensation money and call it done?”

Akira looked unsure.

“…Hmmm, I really have no idea. To be honest, I don’t have any good plans. I’m sure it’s not like they’re willing to give me a lot of compensation money after all. But letting it go just because he pays me a small amount of money will only cause trouble in the future too.”

If he let go of the person who tried to kill him just because of a small amount of money, it would definitely pose a danger to his life in the future. After all, it meant that his life was only worth that much.

The most important thing for protecting himself was to make the other party think it was not worth the risk. Or at least, that was that Akira thought.

“It would be great if we can find a good middle ground though.”

“Well, they are the ones who came to strike a deal with you, so let’s just leave that part to them. And of course, we’ll remind them that they’ll regret it if they try to do anything funny.”

Unlike last time, Akira brought with him CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun just to be safe.

Akira did not trust Tomejima as much as he trusted Shikarabe and his colleagues. Moreover, he had confirmed from his last visit that the owner of the pub did not mind Hunters bringing in guns with them. Of course, he had no plans to cause a ruckus there, but that might not be the case for Tomejima. After all, that incident with Kadol happened once before.

Akira came a little bit too soon before the entertainment district showed its glamorous and sensual side that he once saw before. So he was looking around, observing the other side of the entertainment district, as he was walking toward the pub that he was heading to.

On the second floor of the pub, Tomejima, Colbert, and a young girl by the name of Viola were sitting on the same table, waiting for Akira.

Tomejima checked his watch, it was still 15 minutes before the meeting time. He had been checking his watch multiple times now. It showed how much he hated this period of wait. It was somehow obvious that he wanted to postpone the negotiation as much as he wanted to finish it at the earliest.

Looking at that, Viola tried to calm Tomejima down.

“You’re so restless. How about calming down for a bit? You won’t be able to do a proper negotiation if you don’t calm down.”

Tomejima looked at Viola, obviously annoyed.

“Just shut it, I know it already… I did let you sit on the same table but don’t say anything. If you do something that causes me more trouble, I’ll have you take responsibility.”

“I know. I won’t bother you. I just want to meet this Hunter Akira. Although I have no plans to help arbitrate between you two, I’ll at least help you calm him down in case if anything bad happens. You're okay with that, right?"

Viola smiled, she looked amused. That was a smile of someone who enjoyed conflict.

Viola was not Tomejima's co-worker, she was not working for the pub either, nor she had any connection with the brothel on the third floor. She was just someone who had some kind of connection with Tomejima and had him let her attend the negotiation too.

After Tomejima finished making a deal with Shikarabe, he immediately started gathering information about Akira. Viola was one of his information sources and all of the information about Akira that she gathered was all important information, none of them was useless.

Akira killed Sibea, a former Hunter who fell from grace, and all of the officers from his gang before taking over Sibea's gang in the slum city. He then let his lover be the leader of that gang and was controlling the gang through her. Then, when that gang got in some trouble with Shijima's gang, Akira killed the person that Shijima sent and dragged his dead body back to Shijima's base. Akira also got involved with some kind of trouble with the young Hunters from Drankam somewhere in the lower district's main road and they almost had a fight there.

Tomejima who received all of this information thought that Akira was an extremely dangerous person. He killed without hesitation without even thinking of the consequence, he was the epitome of your usual maniac. Although it seemed that he had enough common sense to avoid trouble with a big gang like Drankam, it seemed that he was barely able to do that.

The company that Tomejima was working in was not as big as Drankam. If Akira really planned to wage war against it, he had no idea how far Akira would go before he would stop.

Tomejima once heard what Yamanobe thought about Akira, someone who went crazy from killing too many people. Tomejima could not agree more with those words. That was why he wanted to make a deal with Akira first.

Depending on how Akira saw it, he might see the incident from last time as one of Tomejima men trying to kill him. Even Tomejima himself did not want to get roped into trouble with Akira just because of what Kadol did.

Tomejima had no idea why Viola wanted to attend that negotiation, but it was true that she knew a lot about the other side, the dark side, of the lower district. Thus in order for him to finish his negotiation with Akira peacefully, he let Viola attend that negotiation.

That was also the reason why he picked that pub to negotiate with Akira. After all, Akira at least stopped himself from killing Kadol the last time he was in that pub.

As for the reason why Colbert was also present, it was to help him contact Akira. Tomejima also thought that if Colbert, who was Akira's acquaintance, was also present, Akira would at least hold himself back from getting violent. Just to be safe, he also asked Shikarabe, but Shikarabe refused since he had a lot of things to take care regarding the bounty hunting.

Viola smiled bewitchingly at Colbert as she asked him.

"Say, won't you tell me more about this Akira boy?"

"I already told you what I know, didn't I? It's not like I'm that close to him. I've told you everything that I know about him. I'm sure you've also done some investigation about him anyway, right? So, isn't it like you know more about him than me?"

"I want to hear it straight from the person who knows him, you know. Even if I did some investigations about him, it's not like I hear or see him myself. That's also the case with the incident regarding Kadol. From what I gathered, it seems that Akira is a pretty strong Hunter. But if that's true, then why Kadol would try something that stupid? You were there when that happened, right? Do you know anything?"

"No idea. Isn't it because he's stupid? The reason why stupid people do stupid things is simply because they're stupid, right? There might be no deeper reason behind it, you know?“

“And I do want to know about the reason behind that. It might be true that the only reason a stupid person does stupid things is simply because that person is stupid. But it’s just to be safe, you know. So like, won’t you tell me anything?“

Seeing how Viola asked him with full curiosity, Colbert thought for a bit before replying.

“Let’s see. Kadol thought that Shikarabe only invited Akira to increase the number of heads and reduce Kadol’s share of the reward. That’s why he tried to kill Akira in order to increase his own share. And it’s true that Akira does look weak and full of openings… Wait, no, is it because he’s short-tempered? Even if he’s hard-pressed because of his debt, he would normally think through and at least pick somewhere else to do that…“

“At that time, Shikarabe was complaining about the situation in Drankam lately. He said that the gang has been accepting more and more incompetent young Hunters and giving them good equipment, so Kadol might have thought that Akira was one of those Hunters, huh? Wait, but I’m sure he knows well that it would bring more trouble than it’s worth if he kills a Drankam Hunter… Or is it because he’s stupid that he didn’t think that far, huh? But again…“

Colbert kept thinking about the reason why Kadol did something so stupid back then while making rounds retracting and creating new guesses.

Viola got the information that she wanted from the way Colbert reacted to her question. Akira looked weak, or at least, he looked weak enough to make Kadol not hesitate when he tried to kill him. While in reality, Akira was strong enough to easily kill a Hunter that Tomejima deemed skilled enough to join the bounty hunting.

Viola thought that this Akira must be a pretty interesting fellow as she smiled while waiting for Akira to arrive.

Just like last time, when Akira entered the pub, the master of the pub warned him with a serious face.

“You should’ve said that to the person who called this small kid here. That guy’s name is Tomejima, do you know where he is?”

Akira replied with the same answer as before. But this time, the master’s reaction was different.

“…Are you Akira then?”

His face turned stern, it seemed that Tomejima had told him about Akira beforehand.

“…Tomejima is on the second floor, the same seat as before. Just to remind you, don’t cause any trouble in my establishment.”

“I have no plans to start one.”

“I don’t really care about that, if any of you cause trouble here, that’s all the same to me. So yeah, don’t cause any trouble, you get it?”

“Got it.”

Just like last time, he then started grumbling, but unlike last time, his face looked grimmer.

“…Good grief. Calling a brat to a place like this, what the heck is he thinking?”

Akira did not know for sure there whether the master of that place said brat referring to his age or his action from last time.

Akira went to the table where Tomejima was waiting for him. The moment Tomejima saw Akira, he made a rather stiff smile at Akira. It was because Akira brought more weapons than last time.

Akira was carrying heavy rifles used for fighting monsters that normal humans would not be able to even lift without the help of an augmented suit. It was easy to forget the power of those weapons when one negotiated with a Hunter with a good personality. But when those weapons were carried by a dangerous person like Akira, it reminded Tomejima of how powerful they were. He understood why the Corporate Government would even spend a lot of money to improve the moral standard of the Hunters.

“Thanks for coming, have a seat.”

It would be bad to come off too strong and it would be fatal to come off too weak. Tomejima tried to regain his composure as he tried to poke for Akira’s reaction.

Akira looked around without taking the seat that Tomejima offered. He then spotted a chair without a backrest, so he dragged that chair to the table and sat on it. After all, it would be hard to sit on a chair with a backrest with his rifles on his back.

Although Tomejima tried his best to stay calm, he twitched a bit. Looking at how Akira was reluctant to let go of his rifles, Tomejima kept telling himself that it was at least harder to reach compared to if Akira put his rifles somewhere near his hand.

“Since you’re here, I guess it’s okay to assume that you plan to peacefully negotiate with me, right?”

Akira was obviously being careful with Tomejima. He stared at Tomejima and replied.

“I have no plans to cause trouble here. The master below also warned me not to cause any trouble after all.”

“I-I see.”

Tomejima thought that Akira was being honest. Or to be more precise, he wanted to believe that it was the case. It was unclear how much it guaranteed his safety, but at least, it reduced the chance of Akira suddenly shooting and killing him there.

Tomejima thought that he was really glad to have informed the master of that pub beforehand, he felt a sense of relief and regained some of his calm.

But even so, his smile was still stiff. Akira was not ready to let go of his rifles during a negotiation although it was some kind of common sense among the good Hunters to do that. But if he looked back, the first person who broke that common sense was the Hunter who accompanied him to that pub last time. And right now, he had to start negotiating with such a dangerous person who was sitting right in front of him.

“Well, at least, listen to what I have to say here. First and foremost, we have no wish to be hostile with you. This is the most important point. That’s why we want to resolve this incident peacefully if it’s possible. So, up until this point, you do agree with us, right?”

“That’s great, I’m glad to hear that.”

Tomejima carefully proceeded while looking closely at Akira’s reaction.

“…So then, about Kadol though. Ahh, he’s the guy who tried to attack you last time. So like, if it’s possible, I want you to let him go. Although he’s already carrying a lot of debt in the first place, as compensation for that incident, he was even made to pay for the equipment of the people that I sent to join Shikarabe’s bounty hunting, you see. So basically, if he dies, then we will have to shoulder more of his outstanding debt. It would be troublesome for us if he doesn’t stay alive and work hard to pay for his own debt… Well, that’s basically where we stand, Akira, what about you? What’s your plan with Kadol? Do you want to kill him no matter what?

Since you let him go last time, it’s not like you really want to kill him, right?”

Akira thought about it one more time. His opinion about Kadol was a little complicated, but in conclusion, he actually more or less did not care much about him. He did not think that it was worth the trouble looking for him just to kill him. But if he met him somewhere in the wasteland by pure chance, he might just go and kill him. That was all that he felt about Kadol.

If he met Kadol in the wasteland by pure chance and Kadol ran away from him as fast as he could, Akira had no plans to chase him. But if Kadol started to shoot at him, he might as well kill Kadol without a shred of hesitation.

But if he let Kadol off just because Tomejima asked him to do so, he felt that it might cause more trouble later down the road. Once he reached that conclusion, he then carefully asked Tomejima a question.

“If I let him go, what do you have to offer to me?”

“…That’s why we’re here. Do you have any demand?”

“Even if you ask me so, I have nothing particular in mind.”

Tomejima fell silent thinking that Akira actually had no plans to do any negotiation with him at all. Akira simply had nothing to demand from Tomejima as it was too much of a hassle for him to try to think of anything. But even so, if Tomejima asked him to be merciful and just let it go, Akira might throw the peaceful negotiation out of the window. Tomejima had a lot of experience in negotiating with Hunters, so he at least knew that much.

Akira then continued.

To be honest, Tomejima wanted to resolve the incident with money, but he could not afford to point that out to Akira. After all, it was something that involved Akira’s life.

If Tomejima offered a small sum, it might anger Akira. After all, no matter who it was, everyone wanted to put a high price on his or her own life, so it would be understandable if Akira did not want Tomejima to put a cheap price tag on his life. While on the other hand, even if he offered a lot of money to Akira, there was a limit on how much money he could pay Akira.

And even if he put that money on Kadol's tab. Kadol had already been carrying a lot of debt to the point that he was close to his limit. If he put more burden on Kadol's shoulder, Kadol might decide to run away instead. And if that happened, he bet that Kadol would try to run away to the neighbouring city just to get killed by the monsters midway. So in the end, Tomejima would not be able to gather any money from Kadol and he would have suffered a huge loss.

While on the other hand, in case if Akira demanded a huge amount of money from him, he would have to deal with it. Hypothetically speaking, if Akira asked for 10,000,000,000 Aurum and Kadol could not pay for that, and if Akira demanded Tomejima to pay in Kadol's stead, in that case, then Tomejima would have to resolve himself to fight against Akira.

Akira just sat silently waiting for Tomejima's reply. Tomejima did not know what to do there, should he suggest to solve the incident with money? Or should he somehow push Akira to ask for money? Or instead, should he suggest something else other than money?

That was when Viola interjected.

"In the credit company that Tomejima is working, in case if a debtor with a huge debt is killed by someone, then the company might demand that person to pay for the debt that the debtor has. And if that's impossible to do because of the strength difference, then the company might sell the debt bond at a cheap price to another company who can do that. It's one of the things that they do to compensate for their loss, you see."

Akira's gaze shifted from Tomejima to Viola as he asked her a very short question.

"So?"

“That’s all. I just want to let you know in case you didn’t know. If this negotiation doesn’t proceed at all, then both of you would be in trouble. And if I have to add something, it’s normal for creditor companies that usually deal with Hunters to have some soldiers to collect debts from those Hunters. And those soldiers have a reputation to uphold too. It would not be worth the trouble, you know?”

Akira did not change his expression as he asked Viola.

“To me, it sounds like you’re saying that if we don’t reach a compromise here, Tomejima will sell the credit bond to someone else cheaply and I’ll be forced to pay for Kadol’s debt. Since it’ll only cause trouble for both sides, you’re saying that I should let it go without any compensation, or at least be merciful during this negotiation, am I correct?”

Viola smiled and replied.

“I leave the interpretation to you.”

“I see.”

Akira’s gaze returned back to Tomejima. His gaze was a bit more intimidating than before, he kept staring at Tomejima without saying anything.

Tomejima tried to probe the real reason why Viola suddenly interjected as well as confirming how Akira reacted to it.

Viola did not say anything after that. She just sat there to witness how the negotiation would proceed.

After a short silence, Akira let out a big sigh. He then stood up from his chair.

Viola smiled at Akira and asked him.

“Oh, does this mean that both of you have a deal here?”

“No, we have no deal.”

Akira only said that to Viola and turned to Tomejima.

“Since you’re not saying anything, then you’re okay with that, right?”

Tomejima flusteredly said.

“Whoah, wait for a sec there!?”

It was true that Tomejima did not say anything, and what Viola said about his company was also correct. He was actually thinking about how to use that to lead his negotiation with Akira in a better direction. He was thinking of talking about the terms that both of them could agree on from now on, but he did not expect that Akira would just suddenly get up from his chair.

Viola was also a bit surprised, she then flusteredly said to Akira.

“You’re pretty short-tempered, aren’t you? It’s important to have patience while negotiating, you know?”

Akira did not reply as he prepared himself to leave the place. Tomejima did try to stop him, but Akira just ignored Tomejima as he headed to the stairs and left the pub.

After exiting the pub, Akira let out a big sigh. He himself knew that he was acting out of pure emotion back there.

Beside him, Alpha was smiling at Akira. There was a trace of exasperation on her usual smile. Akira looked at Alpha’s expression and tried to make an excuse.

“…It feels like they think I would take their offer with a little more push, I just don’t like that.”

“That’s true, I agree with you.”

“I feel like at that rate, they’ll just pay me a small amount of money to solve that incident, and I feel like it’s a really bad thing.”

“That’s true.”

“To be honest, I have no plans to look for that Kadol just to kill him. It just isn’t worth the hassle.”

“That’s true, it would only cause more trouble.”

“…Ahh, this actually might be a good chance for me to check how much other people are willing to pay me to avoid getting into trouble with me. But if I make a bad precedent here, I think that in itself is really no good.”

“That’s right, but those are just excuses, right?”

Akira fell silent. Alpha was smiling at him like usual, it might be just him over-thinking that she looked angry from his point of view. But even so, Akira could not help but feel a bit awkward as he walked through the entertainment district.

After a few steps, Alpha suddenly stood in front of Akira who seemed to be still bothered by what had happened.

“It’s not like I’m angry at you. I do respect your will, after all, I didn’t stop you back then, right? I’m not really bothered by the fact that you broke the negotiation there. Even if you had started a fight since there was something that you just couldn’t forgive or let go of back there, I still wouldn’t mind it. I would have given you my utmost support if that had happened. But again, if you decided to do that just to carefully probe for my reaction, you could have tried to be more careful back there, you know?”

“…Yes, I’ll be more careful.”

“Very well.”

Alpha smiled satisfied after hearing Akira’s reply. Akira who saw that was finally able to calm down.

She then made a suggestion to him.

“Since we’re already in the entertainment district, how about we grab something to eat here? You did say back then that you’ll treat yourself something delicious without worrying about the price, right?”

“Ah, you’re right. Alright then, let’s look for a shop with delicious food.”

“I can help you search through the network, what kind of food do you want?”

“In that case then, make it a sandwich. A real delicious one.”

Akira remembered the sandwich that Alpha ate the other day. It looked extremely delicious but there was no way he could eat that, after all, it was nothing but an image of a sandwich.

Alpha smiled.

“I don’t know if you can find that level of sandwich here, but I’ll at least give it a search.”

And so, Akira just forgot about his exchange with Tomejima and enjoyed strolling in the entertainment district. Finding a good shop was the second priority for him at the moment.

__*__*__*__

On the second floor of the pub, Tomejima was glaring at Viola.

“This is all because you went and said that unnecessary thing, you know!! What are you going to do with this now?!”

Viola kept up her calm demeanour as she said.

“How can I say it? He’s really a short-tempered boy, or more like, he has no patience at all. Even if he’s strong, it won’t take long before someone kills him.”

“I don’t care about that!! It’s all your fault!! Don’t you understand that!?”

“It’s not like you can afford to keep silent forever, right? I know it’s not like you can suggest to him to resolve it with money yourself, right? I know that you were also hoping Akira would break after listening to my explanation. Akira also did say that he thought you agreed since you didn’t say anything back there. If you had stopped me mid-way, I'm sure he would have not left like that, you know? Or am I mistaken?"

Tomejima was taken aback since Viola was absolutely correct.

Colbert, who was just listening to them until now, finally opened his mouth.

"So then, what's your plan now? Akira has gone back, so if you don't need anything else from me, I'm going back home too. Ahh, by the way, just to let you know, I don't care if you want to fight Akira, but I'll not lend you my hand, not even to help you contact him, and of course, I won't be Kadol's observer or bodyguard. I won't accept your request to be your bodyguard either. So if you need one, go look for someone else."

After Colbert said that as if it had nothing to do with him, Tomejima flusteredly said to him.

"Wait, leaving Kadol aside, how about me? I have nothing to do with that incident, you know?"

"It's up to you how you are going to put Kadol back on your leash, but what if he does something as stupid as trying to kill Akira again? And what if Akira mistook that aggression? Do you think he would not act because someone would suffer a loss with Kadol's death? I don't want to get roped into such things."

Tomejima's face turned grim, he then shouted at Viola again. This time he sounded even more dreaded than before.

"Viola!! It's all your fault!! I'll have you take responsibility for this!!"

Viola still kept her calm as she said.

"Don't worry, I understand. In that case, how about I buy Kadol's debt bond, that way, his problem will be shifted from you to me. Let's see, I'll buy it for 50% discount."

Tomejima was taken aback and lost his composure. He unconsciously considered Viola's suggestions and calculated its benefit.

“…Kadol is still alive and it’s not like we know for sure Akira is going to kill him, a 50% discount is too much.”

“Who exactly do you think is willing to buy the debt bond of someone chased after by a Hunter who even killed a bounty monster? If you were in my shoe, how much are you willing to pay for it? I bet you’re only willing to buy it for cheap, right? Or are you going to sell the bond to someone else without telling the situation? It would be really bad once it leaks out, you know. Or is it that you have the confidence you can find someone else who would properly control that stupid guy and takeover his bond? You know that you can’t, that’s why you’re panicking, right?”

Tomejima looked very desperate, all of Viola’s guesses were indeed correct.

Viola gave a fake pitying smile to Tomejima. She then gave him another push.

“I feel responsible for what happened too, you see. That’s why I’m offering to buy that bond for 50% since I’m sure no one would be willing to buy it. I’m willing to pay for your loss and take responsibility. As someone who is working with money a lot, I want you to at least understand my sincerity here. But just to let you know, I believe I already took responsibility by making this offer. It’s up to you if you’re not going to take this offer, but don’t expect me to make another offer, okay?”

Tomejima frowned, he was using all of his brainpower to calculate the loss and benefit from that offer.

“…But still, half price is too small. 60%, how about 60%?”

“Sure, I do plan to get along with you in the future too. So, I’ll take it at 60%.”

“…Dammit!!”

Although they had a deal there, Tomejima still looked unsatisfied. After all, although he was able to minimize his loss, he still lost money there.

Tomejima and Viola used their respective terminals to go through the documents and finalized their deal there.

“So then, I’ll take my leave here. I look forward to making more deals with you in the future.”

Viola smiled when she said that before leaving that place in a good mood. Tomejima still looked a bit annoyed as he saw her off.

He was still pouting as he operated the terminal on his table to order something to drink. It was obvious that he was going to drink his sorrow away.

Colbert then stood up from his chair.

“I’m going home too. I understand how you feel, but don’t drink too much, okay?”

“If you do, then you can at least accompany me drinking here. I’ll pay for you too.”

“No thanks, I have no plans to get roped in to drink away your sorrow. If you need company, just call someone from the first or the third floor. Later then.”

“…Tch!”

It seemed that he lost quite a lot of money that day, Tomejima did not try to hide his displeasure as he clicked his tongue.

When Colbert left the pub, Viola was waiting for him.

He did not say anything and just extended his right hand to Viola. She also did not say anything back as she handed over an envelope filled with money to him.

The reason why Colbert fanned Tomejima’s worry was because he had a deal with Viola beforehand. Colbert was hired by her.

Viola was smiling as she smugly said to him.

“It’s easier to pay through transfer, you know. Is it okay if I transfer your payment next time?”

But then Colbert said shamelessly.

“As an upright Hunter, I want to avoid transfer history from a suspicious source in my bank account, you see.”

Viola teasingly smiled at him and said.

“An upright Hunter, huh? Well, I know that different people interpret those words differently. So I have no plans to dig any deeper.”

Colbert checked the money inside his envelope before putting it inside his chest pocket. He then remembered something that bothered him and asked Viola about that.

“I’m just asking this out of curiosity, what are you planning to do with that bond that you just bought? Both trading bonds and lending money are not your real job, right? Just like you’ve explained to Tomejima, it would be near impossible to resell that bond, are you planning to keep the incident about Akira a secret and sell that bond to the other competitor companies?”

Viola smiled.

“I have a lot of plans with it. But I haven’t really decided what I’m going to do.”

Viola sometimes did arbitration between conflicting organizations, her skill was highly regarded for that. But Colbert knew that sometimes she would sow the seed of fire herself, fan those flames, put gasoline on them, and then extract money out from both parties. She would go around manipulating everyone as if it was not her responsibility.

Colbert decided that he should refrain from taking requests from Viola for the time being. No one could tell for sure if she would use that bond that she bought from Tomejima to cause more trouble or not. But he bet that she was going to cause more trouble and he had no plans to get roped into trouble that involved Akira.

Colbert reminded himself to be very careful since he knew that getting roped into such a thing would definitely not be worth it.

Akira found himself in a white world. Although it was hazy, he quickly noticed that it was a dream and he knew that he would forget what happened there once he woke up.

Not too far from him, there was Alpha, and just like last time, it did not seem that she had noticed him. But there was something different compared to last time.

Akira noticed that there were multiple Alphas present. To be more precise there were 2 Alpha, both of them did not seem to have noticed him.

Then, in that place, there was also another boy. Both Alphas did not seem to have noticed that boy either. Both Akira and that boy noticed each other, but since it was hazy, they could not tell who the other person was. But both of them thought of the same thing, the other person somehow looked familiar.

The Alpha near that boy spoke first.

“Just to be safe, we’ve agreed beforehand that we’ll operate as separate units to encourage different bias and that we’ll temporarily stop communicating with each other. So I’m sure you have a good reason as to why you broke our original agreement.”

The Alpha closer to Akira replied.

“But of course. To be more precise, the load on your side interfered with my calculation ability, thanks to that, the subject under my care almost got killed.”

“I see, according to the log, that’s precisely when the subject under my care took a very dangerous action. At that time, the subject under my care was trying to save a certain cyborg that he just met for the first time, and in order to do that, I had to use more calculation power. I believe that is the cause.”

“I want to suggest that the resource divided between us be fixed. So that it would not suddenly change and something like that would not happen again in the future.”

The other Alpha looked a bit surprised at what Akira’s Alpha just said.

“Is that really necessary? It’s true that it’ll reduce the chance of interfering with each other, but it’ll definitely reduce our calculation ability. Moreover, the subject under your care is still alive, right? So basically, although he went through some dangerous situation, it was still under your estimation, right? So, why do you still have anything to complain about?”

After the other Alpha asked that question, Akira’s Alpha just shook her head and said.

“According to my calculation, he should have been dead there. When my connection to the subject was cut, something must have happened and he got lucky so that he was able to survive.”

“Unlike the subject under my care, I heard that the subject under your care is not that skilled. Luck, or anything that happens out of pure chance, you know well that those things can’t overturn our calculation, right?”

For some reason, Akira’s Alpha sounded a bit annoyed as she said.

The other Alpha shook her head.

“I can’t accept that suggestion. Although he’s skilled, he tends to get himself into difficult situations and it’s really hard to control him. It might be because of his special characteristic, he is always surrounded by a lot of people which makes it harder to encourage him to pick individualistic action. Not to mention, he has a very merciful nature; if I bring him there now, there’s a good chance that the same thing would happen as the 480th trial. It’s unfair to use the subject under your care who is already a lone-wolf with a twisted personality as a standard. I have a lot of things I need to deal with, you see.”

Both of them were staring at each other without saying anything, that silence was created by their favouritism toward the subject under their respective care.

The other Alpha then said.

“I approve your suggestion about the resource distribution. Is there anything else you want to talk about then?”

“Nothing, by the way, the subject under your care is garnering a lot of attention though, are you okay with that?”

“Is that so? Well, good luck, until next time.”

“I’ll contact you again if something comes up.”

They then finished their discussion there.

Akira’s consciousness started to blur, the world around him suddenly turned pitch black and he woke up from that dream.

After Akira woke up, Alpha quickly greeted him.

“Akira, good morning!”

Akira did not reply to Alpha, he just stared back at her. Alpha found that weird.

“What’s wrong?”

Akira did not remember anything from his dream. But he felt that something was bothering him for some reason.

“Nah, it’s nothing. I feel like I just had a strange dream. Inside that dream, I feel like you were there… Or maybe not…?”

Akira tilted his head when he said that, to which, Alpha teasingly smiled and said.

“Oh my, you think of me so much that you dream of me, huh? I’m happy to hear that. I don’t know what kind of dress I was wearing in your dream, but if you like it that much that you dreamt of it, you can just tell me and I'll be happy to change into that dress, you know?"

Akira decided to drop that subject there before it turned into something more complicated.

"Nah, it must be just my imagination. That's it then, this subject ends here."

"That's just too bad, you don't need to try to run away, you know? It's normal for your desire to surface within a dream…"

"We're heading to the wasteland starting from today. So stop with the stupid talk and let's get ourselves ready to head out."

Akira forcefully changed the subject as he hopped off from his bed. He had completely forgotten about the feeling that something was bothering him.

Akira drove his new vehicle to the wasteland. It was a vehicle designed for traversing the wasteland. It was the bonus that Akira got from Shikarabe on top of the prize money for helping him hunt the bounty monster.

After he received that vehicle from Shikarabe, Akira went to the repair garage that Shizuka recommended to give a full check and readjustment for that vehicle. And with a special control device installed on it, just like last time, Alpha could access the vehicle and control it.

When Akira asked Shizuka for a repair garage that she would recommend, she was a bit surprised. She thought that Akira must have done something that damaged his newly bought vehicle to the point that he had to take it to a repair garage. She worried about Akira and decided to ask about the vehicle's condition from the repair garage where Akira fixed his vehicle. She was much relieved when she heard from the repair garage that it was nothing but light damage and there was nothing to worry about with a little bit of TLC and readjustment. She did not realize that Akira's previous vehicle was badly damaged and that he had already changed to a new vehicle.

Akira had recovered from his fatigue after fighting the bounty monster, he also had replenished his ammo, and with no bounty monster roaming the wasteland any longer, he returned back to searching for undiscovered ruin.

“Alpha, how far is the next place?”

“Still about an hour from here.”

Akira was watching the navigator in his vehicle’s control device and mumbled.

Akira’s destination was another place recorded in the Lion Steel corporation’s information terminal. Learning from the last time, he took a detour this time before heading to his destination. But because of that, he took more time to reach the location.

“You’re right about that. We should have taken a detour only after knowing for sure that the place we’re heading to has an unexplored ruin, or at least, after finding good evidence pointing the existence of an unexplored ruin there. After all, it would only be a waste of energy if the indicator that we’re chasing is pointing at an empty space.”

“That’s true, let’s do that next time. And I’m sure no one is tailing us after we took that much detour.”

“I’ve also expanded my searching range compared to last time, so there’s nothing to worry. I’ve also rewritten the software of the control device, so I’m sure that there’s no pre-installed tracking program in it.”

“You didn’t have to go that far, but well, it’s good to be careful.”

Akira changed the direction of his vehicle to head straight to his destination. So now he should be able to cut the time by quite a lot. After that, he remembered something that was bothering him.

“By the way, Alpha, why does that dress have so many gaps and holes?”

Just like usual, Alpha was wearing a very revealing but charming and sexy dress. She was wearing a bodysuit that was divided into pieces, each piece was connected to the other pieces by a small connector or a small piece of cloth. Moreover, there were also holes with unknown use on that bodysuit. Her skin was exposed in between those openings, her undies were even peeking through one of those gaps.

“This? This is a bodysuit designed so that you can freely replace its part to conform to your body shape. It’s made especially for those with a cyborg body that can freely exchange their body parts.”

“Then what about that hole on your back?”

“This is to connect to external equipment. There are many extension parts such as external parts for a humanoid weapon, or propulsion device that can propel you to the sky, or maybe big portable cannons, or other types of heavy weapons.”

Akira imagined all kinds of things from Alpha’s explanation. At first, he only imagined a humanoid weapon, but eventually, his imagination resulted in something that was an amalgamation of humans with different types of weapons, he then decided to stop there.

“That bodysuit and the talk just now, they’re about the old-world stuff, right? As I thought, the old-world is just really weird. It’s not something that you can easily try to imagine.”

Alpha smiled at Akira and said.

“You should be able to imagine it from the old-world stuff that you can find around you, you know? You should be able to find something similar if you look in the old-world ruins.”

Inside Akira’s mind, he imagined Alpha with a huge weapon on her back, so huge that it did not fit her size at all. He imagined a lot of different things connected to those holes to justify the existence of those holes.

Akira both felt surprised and exasperated at the same time.

“…I see, so those kinds of things were normal in the old-world, huh?”

“I think you can find them even in the current era too. Someone might find those kinds of stuff in the old-world ruin and use them. Then some companies would see that and try to produce an imitation of those devices, so it might be normal for those Hunters in the frontline of the eastern district to be using those kinds of devices, you know?”

There were a lot of things from the old-world that existed in the current era, many of which were things they could never imagine. So it would not be strange to find things that someone could actually imagine because the technology of the old-world would have allowed them to create those things.

“…I guess there are still a lot of things out there that I don’t know, huh?”

Although Akira mumbled those words, he also said to himself there must be a limit on how weird it could be.

Not too long after that, Akira reached his destination. At the first glance, it was only a huge grassland; the indicator, which was based on the information extracted from the Lion Steel corp, was pointing under that grassland.

Akira looked at that indicator with the help of his enhanced vision and mumbled.

“Another underground facility, huh? Compared to Yonozuka station ruin, this one is even deeper. Alright then, let’s return back here some other time.”

Akira quickly gave up on searching the underground ruin. After all, if he found another unexplored ruin like Yonozuka station ruin, it might cause him another round of trouble. So he refused to make the same mistake for the second time.

Alpha, who understood what Akira was thinking, just smiled at him and said.

“I’m okay with that. Until you have the ability to get out of the underground ruin with your own power and no support from me, it might be a good idea to refrain from exploring underground ruins. We still have other places to check out too, so there’s no need to take an unnecessary risk.”

“In that case, it’ll mean I won’t be going to explore any underground ruins for the time being.”

“About that, there’s nothing we can do but to look forward to your growth. Now then, for the next place though, the nearest place from here is actually pointing at a ruin that is already explored. Do you want to check it out? Or do you want to go to the next place instead?”

Akira took some time thinking before he made a decision.

“Let’s go there. This is a good chance since I want to take a look at the other ruins too. After all, in terms of already discovered ruins, I’ve never gone to the other ruins except Kusuzuhara city ruin and Higaraka residence ruin. So then, what is the next ruin?”

Akira quickly prepared himself to go to Mihazono city ruin, but he did not go straight from there to Mihazono ruin. Instead, he headed back to Kugamayama city first. This was until he could get some connection to the city. It was in order for him to take regular monster-hunting requests from the Hunter Office. After all, he could not access the Hunter Office website unless he got some connection signal from the Kugamayama city.

After he entered the Kugamayama city’s connection range, Akira took out his information terminal and finished his registration for the regular monster-hunting request. Up until now, he had been leaving that part to Alpha, but the current Akira started to be able to do it by himself.

While he was doing that, a question popped up inside his mind and he asked Alpha about it.

“Say, Alpha. Why does the Hunter Office have this regular monster-hunting request?”

“Why, you ask? It’s because the Hunter Office keep issuing it, of course.”

“Aahh, that’s not what I meant. I do understand why they are issuing that request for patrolling around the city. For that request, basically, the people in the inner wall are paying money to protect the city and make sure that the city is safe. And when they place requirements to bring back the monster’s corpse, no matter whether it’s from a biological monster or a mechanical monster, they can extract materials from those corpses and exchange it for money. I do understand that part. But then, for Hunters who kill monsters in a faraway place that has nothing to do with the city safety and those Hunters also don’t have to bring the corpses of the monsters that they defeat back to the city, who would pay for their reward? Well, this didn’t bother me the last time I took the regular monster-hunting request, but now that I think about it, I just wonder about its profitability, you see.”

When Akira curiously asked that question, Alpha was actually a bit surprised by that, but she then laughed amusedly.

“…What?”

“It’s nothing, I just realised that you’ve started thinking about something like that, it shows the result of my education. So I’m really happy to find out how much you have improved.”

Seeing how Alpha was laughing, Akira felt both embarrassed and a bit annoyed at the same time.

“Well, thanks for that.”

“Don’t pout, I’m actually praising you, you know? And it’s not like I know the exact insider information about the Corporate Government, so whatever I say would be basically just a guess from me. Are you okay with that?”

“Yeah, I’m okay with that.”

“Very well. If I have to put it simply, the Corporate Government is paying for that reward for the sake of the whole Eastern district.”

Starting with those words, Alpha began her explanation of her guess to Akira.

The regular monster-hunting request did not designate a particular monster or number as its target. The place, time, type, or the number of the monsters were not particularly determined in that request. And even if the Hunters returned back without encountering any monsters, they would still get paid the minimal sum as a reward.

There were all kinds of monsters roaming in the Eastern district. The Hunters who took that regular monster-hunting request from the Hunter Office could get rewarded only by handing over information about where and when they encountered those monsters. The Hunter Office would then analyze all the information that it gathered from the Hunters into something that could bring profits.

The result from analyzing that information could be used for so many things like constructing threat level maps depending on the monsters roaming in certain areas, mapping out the safe trading route between cities, or maybe adjusting the Eastern district reclamation plan. All of them were very important agenda.

While on the other hand, it also worked to cull the monsters that seemed to be multiplying endlessly no matter how many the Hunters killed. For every single monster killed out there, the safety of the wasteland would improve and people would be able to carry stuff across the wasteland safer.

Akira listened to Alpha with full interest.

“Those people in the Hunter Office do think about a lot of things, huh?”

“There are also many other ways to use that information. As an example, they can use it to look for new unexplored ruins, like the Yonozuka station ruin that you discovered the other day. A lot of monsters are flowing out through it, so the monster encounter rate around the entrance to that ruin must be pretty high. If the City Management decides to check that place, they should be able to find the entrance into the ruin."

"And if the City Management discovers a new undiscovered ruin first, they'll be able to gain a lot of profit from it. Then they can sell the relics found there in the nearby cities and use that money to pay the Hunters, that way the city would prosper, I see now…"

Compared to when he was living in the slum city, the current Akira started to notice things that were going on in the background. He was honestly amazed by it as he nodded deeply. It was also the result of Alpha's education that he started to grow not only as a better fighter.

Alpha smiled as she noticed how far Akira had grown. While at the same time, she always calculated whether that growth would give her trouble or not. She tried to suppress the possibility of Akira turning hostile in the future as much as possible.

As Akira was heading to Mihazono city ruin, a signal suddenly popped out in the detection range. When he checked that signal, it was not a monster but another vehicle. It was a big sized wasteland bus. That bus was equipped with a lot of machine guns on top of it and it seemed that it was filled with Hunters, there was Hunter Office symbol on the sides of that bus.

"They're heading the same way with us, huh?"

"It seems that it's a transportation bus from the Hunter Office. I think it runs between the Kugamayama city and Mihazono ruin."

"Those people in it, are they Hunters? There are quite a lot of them."

"It shows that there are still some unclaimed relics in Mihazono ruin which attracts that many Hunters. Let's bring back any good relics if we get to find any."

Akira kept staring at the Hunters inside that bus, it seemed that he was thinking about something.

“Akira, what’s wrong?”

“Say, Alpha, there are many Hunters exploring the old-world ruin to collect relics, right? And they’ve been doing this for years… Maybe even for a few hundred years, huh?”

“The precise number is uncertain and it’s different for each area, but the most recent record shows that it has been going on for at least 200 years.”

“Although Hunters have been carrying out old-world relics for that long, why are there still old-world relics left unclaimed out there? Aren’t there just too many of them no matter how you think about it?”

Including Akira, there were a lot of Hunters in the Kugamayama city. Although compared to the total population in the Eastern district, maybe only a small portion of them were Hunters, but there were enough of those Hunters out there to the point that the whole economy in the Eastern district was constructed around them. And those Hunters regularly carried a lot of old-world relics out from the old-world ruins back to the city. So Akira just thought that it was weird how there were still old-world relics left in the old-world ruins.

But Alpha just casually replied.

“They do get exhausted. If you look at the current Higaraka Residence Ruin, Hunters have already taken all of the expensive relics from that ruin and so that ruin is left with nothing but cheap relics right now. And this is true everywhere you go. Even for the western area of the Eastern district, which borders the territory owned by the Allied Nations, I heard that there are even hardly any cheap relics left in that region. That’s why the Corporate Government keeps pushing further and further to the east seeking new ruins and new relics even though the monsters are getting stronger and stronger the further they go east. But of course, as the risk increases, the number and the quality of the relics are also getting better and better, that’s why it seems that it worth the risk.”

“I-I see.”

Akira’s expression turned slightly stiff. If the relics in the Eastern district was exhausted, it would definitely change Hunter’s line of work, he vaguely felt worried about that.

Looking at that, Alpha just smiled at him and said.

“Don’t worry, although it’s just my guess, I believe that the old-world relics around this area will not get depleted anytime soon, at least, they won’t be depleted in your lifetime. Of course, they’ll eventually get depleted if the Hunters keep carrying them out from the ruins, but there’s a reason why it won’t get depleted anytime soon.”

“And why is that?”

“I don’t think there’s any need to explain it, but carrying out relics while fighting the monsters roaming in the wasteland is not an easy thing to do. Because of that, it’s close to impossible to carry a huge amount of relics out from the ruin in one go.”

“Well, that’s true. And that’s exactly why we have people working as Hunters, right?”

“Moreover, among all the old-world ruins, some of them have self-repairing function. It’ll fix damaged buildings and maintain everything inside those buildings, this also includes replenishing equipment and any other objects that the Hunters take out from those ruins. There were even times when it constructed a new ruin in the middle of the wasteland, you know. It seems that the large-scale maintenance equipment of the old-world era is still functioning well.”

“Oohh!! That’s amazing!! But if there are ruins that can replenish the relics inside it, won’t the Hunters and the soldiers from the Corporate Government flood those ruins?”

“Most of the time, the self-repair function of those ruins also fix the security facilities and the factories in those ruins. Those factories would then endlessly produce security equipment to chase away any intruders. Some people also say that it’s the real reason why the number of monsters in the wasteland won’t get reduced no matter how many monsters the Hunters kill, after all, the mechanical monsters are basically the security equipment produced by those factories. So of course, they would normally attack people too. Seeing from the other perspective, they are basically security measures to prevent people from intruding and stealing things from the area that they are guarding, so that means that they are functioning as intended.”

“Well, if you put it that way, that’s kinda true. From their point of view, Hunters are basically robbers.”

Akira mumbled those words as if he just realized something profound. He did feel a bit of an unpleasant feeling, but he then continued in order to expel that unpleasant feeling.

“But it’s not like I can stop working as a Hunter, I guess it can’t be helped, huh. The people who owned those facilities are already long gone. So as long as they don’t come back to haunt me, they won’t be able to complain. So it should be okay, right?

Although Alpha was smiling, there was a trace of confliction in her smile that caused her smile to turn a bit stiff. She inadvertently showed that expression to Akira who was already trying to move on from that subject. But she quickly returned her face to her usual expression before he could notice it.

Just like Kuzusuhara ruin, Mihazono ruin was a ruin of a city. To be more precise, the whole ruin and the area surrounding it were referred to as Mihazono ruin.

Although it was a pretty big ruin, it was not as big as Kusuzuhara ruin, and the monsters inside it were not as strong as the monsters inside the inner part of Kusuzuhara ruin. With enough equipment and skill, it was a rather safe ruin for Hunters to explore.

When Akira arrived there, he was surprised to find something which he did not expect at all.

“A parking lot… Wait for a sec, is it still operational?”

The parking lot was a simple lot with a roof. Its walls were decorated with the Hunter Office symbol. It seemed that the Hunter Office owned that parking lot.

Akira stopped his vehicle as he was looking at that parking lot, a guard noticed him and shouted at him.

“Hey, don’t park there. You’re blocking the way!!”

“Ah, I’m sorry.”

Akira obediently apologized and turned his vehicle back on, the guard who saw that then asked Akira.

“Is this your first time coming here?”

“Yes, this is my first time here.”

“I see. If you’re going to park your vehicle around this place, use the parking lot. A lot of Hunter Office vehicles are using this road, so it would disrupt the flow if you park your vehicle around this area. If you don’t want to pay for the parking lot, then you should park your vehicle somewhere further away from this area. At least as far as that building over there.”

That guy then pointed at a building not too far from their location. Akira tilted his head and asked that guy.

“…Is that really far enough? If it’s only that far, people won’t pay for the pa- Ah, but I see there are quite a lot of vehicles parking there, huh?”

The parking lot was already filled with vehicles. Only about 40% of the parking lot was used, so there was still quite a lot of open space there. But compared to its size, that parking lot was already pretty filled.

That guy then answered Akira’s question.

“It has a roof and it’s not that expensive. You can find Hunters and staff in the Hunter Office nearby and some merchants are also using that place. Moreover, there are a lot of people around here, we’re technically still in the wasteland, you see. I know it’s rather concerning to say this myself, but there are people who are up for no good out here. But even so, I’m sure they know better not to try to steal the vehicles parked in the parking lot owned by the Hunter Office. Furthermore, there are guards and security cameras in the parking lot. Well, there are times when some stupid people tried to mess with the vehicles in the parking lot, but all of them ended up pretty tragically. So that’s basically why a lot of people decide to use the parking lot. If you want to use the parking lot too, the counter is over there.”

That guy then pointed his finger toward a reception counter near the parking lot and went back to his station.

Akira thought for a bit and turned to Alpha.

“Let’s try using it once, I guess.”

“Yep, let’s do that. The Hunter Office made that parking lot for the Hunters who come to this ruin, so let’s use it.”

Akira headed to the reception counter, he then finished the administration work and parked his vehicle inside the parking lot. For the Hunters with a bank account, the parking fee was automatically debited from the bank account. It might be a means to avoid the Hunters postponing their parking fee payment.

The person at the counter warned Akira that even if he forgets to inform the Hunter Office before leaving the parking lot, the parking fare would still be automatically deducted from his bank account.

Akira unloaded his stuff from his vehicle, he also took his CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun with him. After he finished his preparation to head out, he then went to the area near the Hunter Office just outside the parking lot.

There was an Exchange Centre in that area. Akira saw some Hunters exchanging their relics. Inside that Exchange Centre, he also saw some Hunters loading leftover wreckage of mechanical monsters onto a cart. It would be too much of a hassle bringing them all the way back to the Kugamayama city, but it would not be that much trouble to bring them to that Exchange Centre.

Even the mechanical monsters were also considered as the old-world relics. They were filled with old-world technologies that could not be reproduced by the current world's technology. If the Hunter brought its leftover wreckage back, it might be worth more than bringing back cheap relics.

Around that place, there were also merchants with selling stands and rentable carts. Hunters would usually use those carts to transport dead mechanical monsters. They might be the merchants who came all the way to this place using the Hunter Office's bus to open their shops there.

A Hunter Office's bus arrived and stopped near the Hunter Office, Akira then saw Hunters boarding off from that bus. Including Akira, all Hunters in that place were focused on a group of 3 Hunters.

The reason as to why that group was gathering so much attention was because of their appearances. One of them was a young girl that looked more or less of the same age as Akira. She was wearing an augmented suit while carrying a big rucksack and multiple rifles. It was not a rare sight in the old-world ruin. Her silky and well-maintained hair was also something normal to be found for women Hunters who were doing well in her job. Although her beauty was above average, it was not enough of a reason to grab other Hunters' attention.

The ones standing out were the other two girls. One of them was carrying a huge long sword aside from her rifle. While the other one was carrying a small pistol-like gun and a big power glove as if it was originally a part of a powered suit. There were not that many Hunters out there who prefered to fight monsters close range. That was why it was rare to find those types of weapons. Moreover, those two girls were beautiful and had some kind of unique charm of their own. It was to be expected for those weapons to attract some attention, but it was still not enough of a reason for them to attract that much attention there.

The real reason why those two attracted so much attention was because both of them were wearing maid outfits. And to top it off, from a glance, it seemed that those maid outfits were made of high-class fabric that gave off a luxurious vibe.

Those girls were really sticking out in that place. If it was back in the Kugamayama lower district, they would only gather some attention and that would be the end of it. But they were outside the city, they were in the wasteland. The Hunters in that place saw them with suspicion rather than pure curiosity since they seemed to be out of place.

That group of 3 were Reina and her battle maids.

Reina and her maids knew that they were attracting people's attention. The differences in their expressions showed how they felt about it. Shiori prioritized her master and her duty over other people's gazes, Kanae was smiling as she did not even give a care at all, while Reina looked slightly annoyed.

Reina looked at the other Hunters' reactions to Shiori and Kanae and sighed.

"…As I thought, we're attracting a lot of attention."

The other day when they were walking through Kugamayama city lower district, they were also garnering attention. Though Kanae was the only person in a maid outfit at that time. So it was totally understandable that they were gathering a lot more attention with both Shiori and Kanae in maid outfits in the middle of an old-world ruin.

Shiori tried to cheer Reina up.

"We will attract less attention once we go into the ruin, so just bear with it for now."

Shiori understood that they were attracting a lot of attention because of their maid outfits and she understood that she was putting Reina in more unnecessary stress. But there was a reason why she kept her maid uniform on, after all, it was not like she could just take off her outfit just because it was attracting some attention.

Kanae smiled and said to Reina.

“We just need to get used to this. After all, once Milady becomes a famous Hunter, Milady will attract a lot of attention no matter what outfit Milady uses. So, like, this is a good chance to get used to it, right? Of course, that is if Milady doesn’t plan to be just one of those ordinary Hunters.”

Shiori glared at Kanae, so Kanae averted her gaze.

“Hm?”

When Kanae averted her gaze somewhere else, she caught a familiar face.

Most of the Hunters in that place looked at Reina and her maids with suspicion. Akira, who noticed that, understood that his common sense was correct the previous time and spoke to Alpha in a good mood.

“Alpha, I knew I was right. It seems that walking around in maid outfits in the middle of the wasteland is not normal even for the Hunters, you know.”

“That seems to be the case indeed. Well, common sense is indeed important, but it’s also important not to be held back by common sense. Sometimes you need to doubt common sense and be more open to different things. After all, you can expect weird things from the old-world culture.”

“I know… Wait, what were we talking about, again?”

Akira felt like Alpha just diverted the subject as he tilted his head. But she just ignored that and continued.

“You’re right about that.”

Akira did feel for sure that Alpha was changing the subject, but he just decided to forget that and head to the ruin.

At that time when Akira was about to turn and was still looking in Reina's direction, Kanae's gaze met with his gaze.

Kanae smiled, she looked really excited as she suddenly called Akira with a loud voice.

"Yo there!! We meet again!!"

Reina and Shiori quickly noticed Akira too. Akira, who was about to leave that place, stopped. Kanae then approached him, half-running.

"Are you here to hunt for relics too? What a coincidence!! Ah, I'm Kanae by the way!"

Akira was a bit surprised since Kanae came at him with such a high spirit.

"…I'm Akira."

"I see!! Akira-shounen!! Nice to meet you!!"

Akira was actually a bit overwhelmed by that overly excited reaction from Kanae.

Reina and Shiori also came to Akira. Since Kanae noticed him, it was not like they could just ignore it and go somewhere else.

Shiori carefully spoke to Akira.

"…Akira-sama, it has been quite a while."

Reina also followed up by nervously giving her greeting to him.

"…Uhm, long time no see."

Akira was a bit flustered as he awkwardly replied.

“Y-yeah, it has been quite a while since the last time.”

With what happened in the past, Akira, Reina and Shiori, all 3 of them were not sure on how to interact with each other.

But then Kanae said to him with her still high-spirited attitude as if she could not read the mood at all.

“No, this is also my first time.”

“I see!! What a coincidence!!”

Kanae replied back in such a high-spirit, she was sticking out so much as if she was in the wrong place.

Although at first, Akira was not really sure how to interact with Reina’s group including Kanae, after seeing how Kanae was behaving, he stopped worrying about it.

Akira lightly sighed. He then turned and spoke to Shiori, who might be the most worried person in that place.

“Back then, I was not expecting that you would believe what I said and help me out. So I’m already thankful enough that both of you decided to stay neutral. So well, yeah, you have my gratitude.”

“Thank you for your understanding.”

Shiori bowed deeply to Akira. For now, she was able to confirm that he had no grudge against Reina or her.

Although Shiori originally regretted the fact that she was caught completely off guard when Kanae suddenly called Akira, and that she could not stop Kanae back then, she started to think that it might be a good thing that Kanae did that.

Shiori took another close look at Akira. He was carrying better equipment compared to the ones that he was carrying in Kuzusuhara underground city.

She unconsciously assessed his fighting power. If she and Kanae fought Akira in a 2 vs 1 fight, there was no mistaking that they would be able to kill him. Although either she or Kanae would also get killed in that fight. But if Reina also joined in, it would be extremely difficult to win against Akira since she had to protect Reina. And honestly speaking, Shiori did not think he would let that weak point slip off when it came to that.

Thus Shiori concluded that it was not wise to be hostile against Akira.

Akira then casually asked a question.

“So then, what business do you have with me? If it’s just saying hello to an acquaintance, then I’ll head to the ruin now.”

“I understand, please be careful out there.”

Shiori was about to end their conversation there and let Akira go, but Kanae suddenly interjected.

“This must be some kind of fate to meet here!! So why don’t we go together?”

Reina and Shiori looked at Kanae in panic. Shiori was about to scold Kanae, but before she could do that, Akira quickly replied back.

“No, thank you.”

Reina looked a bit down since Akira replied almost instantly without any hesitation. She turned into the self-deprecating mode as she wondered if it was because she would only slow Akira down and it was something that could not be overturned even with the help from Shiori and Kanae.

Kanae giggled mischievously and said to Akira.

“Geez, you’re so cold. To think that you would refuse such an offer from a group of beautiful girls, don’t tell me that you’re already sick of girls in your age.”

Akira seemed obviously exasperated.

“I just don’t want to stick out by walking together with people in those outfits. Moreover, it’s a hassle to fight over where to go and how to divide the money. Honestly, why are you even wearing that maid outfit here in the first place? You do know that you’ll attract people’s attention, right? Or is it that you have that kind of hobby?”

“It’s my master’s hobby, you see!!”

Kanae said that without any hesitation. Thanks to that, she sounded very convincing.

Akira glanced at Reina and looked obviously weirded out.

“…I-I see.”

Reina, who was down, quickly refuted in panic when she realized that Akira was misunderstanding the subject.

“That’s not true!! It’s not my hobby!!”

“Ah, right, of course.”

It was obvious that Akira did not believe her.

Shiori smiled bitterly and explained to Akira to correct his misunderstanding.

“To be more precise, it’s the hobby of our master, Milady’s father. We’re officially working for him. These maid outfits are practically the best armours that we have. Actually, when we requested equipment, the upper echelons sent us this maid outfits and rifles. We understood that we gathered a lot of attention with these outfits. But considering its quality as an armour and how it’ll help us protect Milady, I think it’s better to keep using this outfit although it attracts people’s attention.”

“By the way, we’re also using augmented suit under it.”

Kanae then lifted her skirt with her left hand and pointed at the black tight-looking augmented suit under her skirt with her right hand. There was a good chance that Shiori and Reina were also using similar augmented suits. As Akira thought so, he did not question it at all.

“So as we explained, this is not out of Milady’s hobby. I hope you can understand that.”

Shiori tried to confirm that Akira understood that point as she slapped Kanae’s hand that the latter was using to lift her skirt.

Akira’s expression suddenly changed as if he realized something.

“Ahh, I see. So that maid outfit must be an old-world relic, huh. I heard that old-world fabrics are so strong that they are often used in place of armour. And then you complement it by using an augmented suit under it, right?”

Akira used all of his knowledge to come up with a plausible explanation. After all, normally, it was unthinkable that a maid outfit could withstand a fight against monsters. But if it was an old-world relic, then it would be completely possible. That was what Akira thought.

But then Shiori rectified his answer.

“No, this is not an old-world relic. I heard that it’s specially ordered from a corporation that normally works on Hunter armour.”

There was a short silence before Akira asked another question.

“Do tell me if I’m mistaken… Honestly speaking, why would you need a maid outfit that can withstand fighting monsters? Maids are those people, right? They usually work to take care of a house, right? So why would you even need such a strong maid outfit? When you said it’s out of a hobby, does it mean that it’s that kind of hobby, like, putting maid outfits on Hunters?”

“No, I heard that every maid working in the main house is using the same type of maid outfit. This outfit might be a leftover from the main house.”

Akira frowned, he tried to make sense of all the information that he just received.

“…You’re talking about the guards, right? They’re just people trained in combat wearing maid outfits, right?”

“No, it’s true that some of them are guards, but the maids who mainly work on taking care of the house also get the same set of equipment. Moreover, all the maids in the main house are required to be able to fight, they even have to go through a specialized lesson for that.”

Shiori was a serious person in the first place, thus she answered Akira’s question sincerely without trying to lie nor to trick him. But that only caused him to question it even more.

Akira was confused as to why maids needed to be trained in fighting. They were in the inner wall of the city, so in his mind, that place should be a relatively safe place protected behind the wall.

Akira did not know if he was mistaken there, the inner wall might be not as safe as he thought to the point that the maids there had to learn how to fight, or it was just that his assumption about maids was completely wrong.

After hearing something that was the opposite of what he thought as normal, Akira mumbled.

“Is it my fault? Is it because my common sense is just wrong…?”

Kanae laughed and then said to him.

“It’s pointless to worry over such a thing. This world is a big place, that’s all there is to it.”

Akira looked at Kanae, she nodded deeply as if she tried to convince him.

Akira quickly decided to just forget about it and gave up thinking any further about that subject. Even if it was because his common sense was wrong, it was not like it affected him at all. He was going to explore the dangerous ruin from now on, it was not the time to worry himself about useless things.

Akira sighed, he decided to move on as he said to Reina.

“Well, that aside, I have no plans to work together with you. Putting aside your outfits and the problem about how we are going to divide the money if we work together, I don’t feel like joining a group consisting of 2 bodyguards for that one person in that group. I don’t really mind if you ask me to come with you as your bodyguard, but since I didn’t receive such a request, I have no plans to join you. So yeah, later then.”

After he said that, Akira just waved and left that place.

Reina, Shiori and Kanae just stood there and watched Akira leave. Once he was out of their views, Shiori immediately scolded Kanae since she was interrupted back then when she was about to send Akira off.

“Kanae, why did you do that?”

Kanae played fool as she said.

“What do you mean by that?”

“Why did you call him? What would you do if something bad happened?”

“Well, nothing happened and it’s good to hear that he’s not angry at us. So like, there’s no need for you to be angry, right?”

“I’m asking you why you did that. You remember what happened back then, right? So why did you do something so dangerous?”

Shiori had a very serious expression, an intimidating air was even exuding out from her. It was as if she was saying that she was willing to dispose of Kanae if Kanae kept exposing Reina to unnecessary dangers.

Kanae did not show any fear at all as she smiled and said.

“That’s exactly the reason, we eventually have to confirm whether he’s angry at us or not. Assuming that he’s still angry enough that he would kill us the moment he sees us, it was the perfect chance to ask him since there are a lot of Hunters in this place and we’re right next to the Hunter Office. And even if he did try to attack us, we would have the upper hand in this place.”

“…If that’s really the case, fine then.”

Shiori decided not to pursue that subject any further. It was because she knew it was a very good excuse as well as that it was only an excuse since she understood that Kanae loved fighting and she did that fully expecting that Akira would cause a fight there.

But with that being said, it was not like Shiori could just kick Kanae off the group. As long as she could not protect Reina on her own, Shiori could not afford to lose any fighting power.

It was unclear whether Kanae knew what Shiori thought or not, but she then casually said.

“Sure. Well then, Milady, let’s head to the ruin, shall we? Or do you want to take a break for a bit? It seems that there’s a cafeteria inside the Hunter Office.”

Since Kanae sent that question to Reina, Reina finally spoke up.

“Roger that.”

“Understood.”

Then they also went to the ruin a few minutes after Akira.

Akira was exploring the Mihazono ruin’s city area. He was able to see his destination since it was indicated by a pointer in his enhanced vision. To be more precise, it was pointing at a floor in a high storey building visible from afar. It was pointing at the locations where Akira should be able to find the Lion Steel corp's terminal.

"Why is it in such a place?"

"I have no real answer why. It might be because the views from up there are pretty good?"

"Well, I bet the views from up there are indeed amazing. But unless the stairs in that building are still intact, there's no way I can go to that floor. Just so you know, I refuse climbing up the outer wall, okay?"

The pointer was pointing at a floor that was indeed so high, in case if Akira fell from that height, there was no mistaking it that he would be dead.

"Judging from the outer appearance of the building, it seems that the facilities inside it are still working, it would be great if we can find an elevator inside it."

"Even if we find one, do you think that it will still be functional? If we're unlucky, it might be an elevator from hundreds of years ago, you know."

"The possibility is not zero. The lighting inside the Yonozuka station ruin was still working too, remember? Although it depends on which era it was built, if it still has a fully operational self-repairing function, then there should be no problem with that."

"Is there any other possible problem then?"

"Even if it's still functional, there's no guarantee that we can use it. There's also the building's security to deal with and in the first place…"

Alpha then pointed her finger forward.

"We're not welcome in this ruin. So I wonder if we would be able to use the facilities inside that building."

Akira noticed mechanical monsters coming from the front of him. Or to be more precise, the monsters noticed Akira as its legs and hands extended out from their square bodies and they started moving toward his direction.

Akira lightly smiled and aimed his CWH anti-material rifle.

He then pulled the trigger, the piercing ammo easily pierced through the monster’s torso and destroyed the machines inside it.

The security guards that were patrolling the city area of Mihazono ruin would attack any intruders that they could find even now. It might be out of mercy and ethical design concept that those monsters would not grow rifles on their bodies and start shooting at the people.

Akira was solely relying on his skill as he explored the city area of Mihazono ruin. He was also using his augmented suit with his own skill only. The current him was not receiving any support from Alpha.

Moving his body and his augmented suit in-sync would allow him to lower the burden on his body even in the case when he solely used the power of his augmented suit to forcefully move his body and give him a superhuman strength for a split second. Akira was moving carefully to train his body while not lowering his vigilance. It was a training so that he would still be able to move around even when he lost support from Alpha.

The city area of the ruin was littered with wreckage and crumbled buildings, it reduced the width of the road and transformed the city into a labyrinth. But Akira sometimes could see new buildings right beside the crumbled buildings or strangely clean area beside piled wreckage, it was completely different compared to the outskirts of the Kuzusuhara ruin.

Akira saw such scenes and he indeed found it weird.

“Alpha, why are some areas so clean while others so dirty? For some reason, the difference between those two areas somehow looks too unnatural.”

“Maybe it’s based on the difference of the security and maintenance facilities handling those areas. So for those dirty areas, it might be because the security and the maintenance drones tend to go to those areas and Hunters tend to fight there.”

“So basically the clean areas are relatively safer, huh?”

“But don’t drop your guard just because you’re in a clean area. Those places might be clean because the self-repair drones are working hard in those areas, so it doesn’t mean that there is less fighting in those areas. While for the dirty areas, it might be because it’s abandoned for years since the self-repair drones in that areas are inactive.”

“Well, at least for searching relics, it might be better to go to the clean areas.”

“That’s true, want to have a go?”

Akira thought for a bit before answering back.

“I guess not this time. After all, it seems like we can find better relics in that high building we’re heading to. And even if we’re going to have a look, let’s do that on our way back instead. We might be able to find a lot of relics in our destination after all, and that’s exactly why we’re heading there in the first place.”

“You have a point there. Don’t drop your guard and carefully move forward. Let’s only hunt for relics if something happens and you decide to stop going to that building.”

Alpha agreed with Akira’s idea. If they got unlucky, they might be retreating while running away from the monsters, so it was unwise to increase his luggage since it might be fatal when that happened. At the moment, that decision was not a mistake, it would only become clear whether it was the correct decision or not later.

Akira checked the contour around his destination and confirmed the location of the monsters using his information-gathering device. From there, he picked a relatively safe route using the wreckage and rubbles around him. Every time he picked a wrong route, Alpha would immediately point it out and correct him.

“Alpha, what is my mistake this time?”

Akira did not understand the reason why Alpha picked a different route than the one that he picked, so he decided to ask her. When he did that, she enhanced his vision to help him temporarily see everything around him.

“The red areas are dangerous areas. The thicker the red, the more dangerous it is. The route that you picked passes through one of those very dangerous areas, you see? It’s better to avoid that place.”

“I see. So then, how exactly can I accurately identify such an area without your support?”

“Well, you have no other choice but to somehow see it.”

That vague answer from Alpha caused him to frown in confusion as he looked in her direction.

“Somehow? Like, how exactly?”

Alpha seemed to be confused as well.

“Hmm, I can’t really say anything other than that. You somehow need to be able to correctly judge the danger of an area only by the limited information that you get after checking out that area. Like the buildings located in the direction that’s not covered by the wreckages or the rubbles in an area, the condition of the walls on those buildings that are facing to your direction, the existence of windows in those walls, the possibility of finding monsters inside those buildings and if those monsters would try to shoot you from those directions, the accuracy of those monsters. There are a lot of details that you need to factor in. It’s difficult to explain everything only using words, if I have to do that, it might take a whole day and I won’t even be close to finishing. And even if I just show you through visuals since it’s the fastest way to let you know, it’s still not an efficient way to do it, you see.

It’s still difficult to convey the reasons why an area is dangerous even if I do that. Of course, I can add oral explanation too, but you’re already past that level. You can already identify and make decisions based on all the information that I can add through an oral explanation.”

With Alpha’s support online, Akira could get notified if he was in a dangerous situation and she could take control of his augmented suit to evade an ambush. But when he did not have that support, then he would have to do something about it using his own power. He had to detect dangers and avoid it using his own skill.

But at the same time, that remark also showed how much Akira had grown. He was already able to detect and react to dangers that could be easily explained through an oral explanation.

“So basically, I just need to get enough experience so that I can intuitively detect dangers and deal with it, right?”

“Yep, that’s correct. There’s no other way but to gather enough experience and sharpen your intuition. Of course, I will give you my help to effectively gather that much-needed experience. As you can see, I’m enhancing your vision like this to let you know which area is dangerous.”

“Intuition, huh. Well, I’m good at sensing troubles, so I guess I have no other choice but to rely on that gift.”

Akira once again checked his surroundings with the help of that vision which allowed him to see the danger level of the areas around him. Although he did not realize it, his guessing skill was actually getting better just by looking around using that enhanced vision. He then picked the safest route based on that vision as he continued moving forward.

Akira was moving slowly and carefully through the Mihazono ruin. Although he was relatively slow, he was doing way better compared to when he took 1 hour just to move forward 100 meters back in the Kuzusuhara ruin. He kept on pushing forward with Alpha sometimes giving him some pointers.

Most of the monsters that Akira met in that ruin were mechanical monsters. Although some of them had the appearance of biological monsters, they scattered out machines when Akira's bullet pierced through their bodies. He sometimes also encountered monsters that looked like normal big dogs, but they would run straight to him with a speed that obviously would not be possible for a dog. And when he shot at them, they would again scatter metallic parts and their dead wreckage would reveal the machines inside them.

Akira looked at them and tilted his head.

"So it's a robot dog, huh? This place is filled with nothing but mechanical monsters"

"It might be because there's nothing around this place that can be used as a food source for the biological monsters. Either that or the maintenance drones make sure that this place is clear of those biological monsters. By the way, those trees beside the roads are made of metal, you see. And since it's made of those nanomaterials, the biological monsters cannot use them as a food source."

Akira looked at the trees on the roadside. According to Alpha, the green leaves on those trees were made of metal, while to him, they looked completely like natural leaves. But there were cyborg humans and animals out there, so if it was using the old-world technology, it might be completely possible to create mechanical plants. Akira kept staring at those roadside trees that would never wither.

"It's fully understandable for biological monsters to be multiplying somewhere, but how about the mechanical monsters? Where are they coming from?"

"I believe it's from the factories. This place is a city area, after all. So once the Hunters destroy enough drones, it might send a signal to the factories to produce replacement drones."

"If that's the case, then once we take control of the factories, this place will be a safe ruin, right? So why don't they do that already?"

“I can’t really answer why. It might be because the security is too strong that they can’t take control of those factories. They might even intentionally leave the factories alone since the mechanical monsters are one of the sources for material. I don’t really know the answer to that question, but someone from the City Management or the Hunter Office should be able to give you a better answer.”

“Well, I guess they have their reasons, huh?”

If it was possible and if it was an important thing, they would have done that by now. And it was not like they would explain the reason why they did not do that to a common Hunter. Akira bet that he would be able to know that reason once he got to a higher position and had enough influence. But for the time being, it was something that was impossible for him as much as it was something that was not important to him. As Akira thought so, he decided to just forget about that subject and move on with the exploration.

A small flying drone just flew over Akira's head. But it did not try to attack him, either because it could not see Akira, or because it did not have any weapon to shoot him with, or maybe it was just a reconnaissance drone that sent his location to the other mechanical monsters.

Alpha suddenly stopped Akira.

"Akira, stop and get inside that building. It might be a bit dangerous if you keep going forward."

"Roger that."

Inside the room that he was passing through, Akira noticed that there were tables and stationeries that, unnaturally enough, were neatly organized. He tilted his head in confusion.

"Those things look pretty well maintained, I might be able to get a lot of money if I bring them back, right?"

But Alpha shook her head.

“They might be left here because the current technology has no problem reproducing them. I think you can easily buy similar stuff from the stands in the city.”

“So basically, no one would risk their lives just to bring them back home since you can easily buy them with a small amount of money, huh?”

“I bet you can get a lot of money from bringing back the autonomous maintenance system in this building, but it’s very hard to bring that system back. Not to mention that system might even be embedded into this building. If you can seize the building, you might be able to get a building that automatically maintains itself, but with all the mechanical monsters roaming around this building, it might be not worth the hassle. But if we’re talking about the area near the Hunter Office, that might not be the case. As in matter of fact, the Hunter Office might have already seized some of the buildings in that area.”

Akira made a ‘Hmmm’ sound, he then thought of something.

“But like, isn’t it a good idea to seize some of these buildings and use them as resting places for the Hunters? The Mihazono ruin is a very big ruin, so it would be great if we have some resting points inside this ruin.”

“The security drones might react differently to some Hunters who only stay inside a building for a short time compared to a group of Hunters trying to take control of a building. After all, it’s to be expected that they would use a different level of strength to just chase off some intruders compared to when they fight people who try to capture a building.”

“So that’s also a no, huh. Well, if it was possible and if it was worth all the hassle, they would have already done that by now.”

Akira once again looked around the room. Although the well-organized interior somehow gave off a safe feeling, in reality, that place was more dangerous than the back alley of the slum city. He thought that it would be a very difficult task to return back alive from that place without Alpha's help. Thus he recomposed himself before starting to move forward again.

Once Akira reached the 14th floor, he looked outside through one of the windows to confirm the area around his destination building. It was a pretty tall building that could be seen from anywhere inside the Mihazono ruin and it was located in the middle of a big clearing. Although the buildings in the Mihazono ruin city area were densely packed in blocks, for some reason, there was no building in that clearing.

When Akira peeked through the aiming device on his rifle, he could see a few dozens of mechanical monsters roaming around that area as if they were guarding that place. They looked different compared to the other mechanical monsters inside that ruin. Some of them were autonomous monsters that looked like a vehicle equipped with big-sized missile launchers, while some of them looked like big cannons with legs. All of them were patrolling around that one building that Akira was aiming for as if they were guarding it.

After Akira confirmed what he saw, his face turned stern.

"So those monsters are the reason why you said it'll be dangerous if I continued moving forward, huh. They are on a different level compared to the small mechanical monsters that I fought on my way here. And it's obvious that they're guarding that building."

"I bet the other mechanical monsters that you fought are the security drones stationed in the city area. While those mechanical monsters are specialized for protecting that building. Their weapons and command protocols are completely different compared to the other mechanical monsters."

"So is it like someone intentionally stationed them to protect that particular building?"

"It might be that they are just following the orders that they received from years ago. But it's also perfectly possible that they're under the control of a still-active artificial intelligence that's managing that building. Or maybe it's just simply because those monsters are under a separate security system compared to the other mechanical monsters. There are many possible explanations."

"It's a really interesting subject, but how exactly is that related to me?"

Akira actually did not really care about the difference between the systems controlling the mechanical monsters there. He was only interested if it would cause him more trouble or not, or if they would try to kill him or not.

But Alpha denied that.

"It actually has some effects on you, you know? If they're really under the control of a separate system, it's likely that they don't share the same information as the other mechanical monsters, and that would affect the action that you need to take. Akira!! Get away from there!!"

Akira moved quickly following Alpha's order, he did not even have to ask why since he could see the reason through his aiming device. The missile pod monsters suddenly launched missiles in his direction.

The missiles were also equipped with a homing device. They flew chasing after Akira who was running through the rooms inside the building. The first wave of missiles destroyed the wall where Akira was taking cover and opened a path for the following missiles to go right into that building. As they raced through the insides of that building, seeking for Akira, they destroyed walls and any other obstacles on their path and forcefully carved a way to find Akira. And eventually, they found Akira when he was running through a long hallway.

"Shoot them down!"

"Roger that!!"

Akira made a 180-degree turn as he grabbed and aimed his DVTS minigun, he quickly fixed his footing, confirmed the missiles heading in his direction, gathered his focus, compressed his time perception, and finally pulled the trigger.

With the help from Alpha’s support, the bullets spewed out from the DVTS minigun’s muzzles accurately shot down the missiles in front of him. The missiles that were shot either immediately exploded in the middle of their flight or ricocheted and crashed into the inner wall of that building before exploding. Either way, they released a blinding light together with a loud banging sound and a lot of smoke when they exploded.

Although Akira was able to evade a direct hit, the explosion blew his body. He crashed really hard into the wall behind him, so hard that he made a crater and left huge cracks on that wall. Akira’s augmented suit could not fully absorb the impact as it propagated into his body. He then fell to the ground. Although he was able to stop himself from falling flat on his face with his hand, he immediately coughed out blood after that.

Akira could feel sharp stinging pain running through his body, but his consciousness was still completely intact. He quickly tried to reach out for his medicines. Although due to the impact of that crash, his body was moving way slower than his brain was telling it too, the augmented suit was still able to operate normally. Thanks to that, he was able to take the medicine without trouble.

Akira forced the medicines down his throat although they tasted like nothing but blood. The expensive medicines showed its worth as the pain inside Akira’s body quickly subsided. It might be just because of the painkiller, but it would not take that long before his wounds were healed.

Akira pushed himself to stand up and smiled bitterly. He was able to see the outside of the building through the small gaps between the smokescreen in front of him, it showed just how hard those missiles were chasing for him.

“That was close!!”

“We need to move quickly. I’m not sure if they’ll do that again, but it’s better to be safe than sorry.”

“Roger that.”

Akira blazed through the rooms to leave that place. He frowned when he saw just how bad the rooms had turned into.

He took a rest inside a floor that was not damaged from the previous missile barrage. There was no following barrage after that and he was able to safely evacuate from that place.

The medicines that he took a few minutes ago were already working. He was resting there until he could return back to tiptop shape, or at least, that was what Alpha told him to do and he had no objection at all. He took a rest there while vaguely feeling the nanomachine fixing his body.

Akira suddenly said.

“But still, for the security drones of the ruin to do something like that. If they’re really security drones for this ruin, I really hope they don’t try to destroy the ruin that they’re protecting. It’s not like I was bringing a tank in their direction, you know? So why exactly did they go that far just to kill one Hunter? It really isn’t worth the expense, right?”

Alpha then answered Akira’s question.

“As I said before, it might be because they’re under the control of a different security system. The mechanical monsters that attacked you just now are protecting that one building and not the whole Mihazono ruin. That’s why they don’t hesitate to destroy other buildings.”

“Wait, now that you mention it, is that clearing because those monsters destroyed any buildings around the building that they’re protecting? Ah, but I didn’t see any rubbles there though…”

“The other maintenance drones might have cleaned the leftover rubbles from that area, you know. And of course, they could not rebuild the destroyed buildings. Or maybe the other buildings were built in that place only on a fixed regular interval, and when they were built, the Hunters used them as covers so those monsters destroyed them during their fights. So the reason as to why this building is still intact, it might be because it’s barely outside their active area.”

“Wait, does that mean that they extended their active area back there? Is it because they found someone aiming at them? Is that why they shot missiles at me? And then the reason why they didn’t try to pursue me is because they think I’m dead so they returned back to their usual active area?”

“That’s a plausible explanation.”

Akira let out a big sigh. The other day, although only at the very end, he was able to get out of a dangerous situation using his own power, that was why he started to feel confident in himself. But now he felt like he received a painful punch in the gut saying that he was nowhere strong enough to challenge those autonomous weapons.

Alpha then looked at him with a serious expression.

“Akira, I’ll ask you this while I still have the chance, what are you planning to do? Are you still going to try and get to that building? Or are you planning to retreat?”

Akira was about to answer that he was thinking of retreating, but he suddenly realized something and looked at her with a confused face.

That missile barrage just now almost killed him. He thought that it would not be strange if Alpha suggested him to retreat and strongly told him not to continue. But even so, that question just now sounded as if she was telling him that it was also okay to continue.

Akira looked at Alpha with a serious face as he asked her a question.

“What will you do if I say I want to continue? You will not stop me?”

“If you want to continue, I will not stop you. But of course, other than my support, you’ll need some more preparation and resolve before trying to challenge that place.”

“That barrage just now almost killed me, you know.”

“That one was sort of an ambush after all. But thanks to my support, you didn’t get any fatal injuries, right? So there’s no problem. You said it before yourself, remember? Since you didn't get killed instantaneously and had enough leeway to say that it was really dangerous, it means that you're not in that much danger in the first place. So by that standard, that one just now was not that dangerous."

Looking at how Alpha was smiling like usual, Akira hesitated and still looked a bit confused as he said to her.

"Well, uhh, it's true that I did say that. But still, when you say I need to resolve myself, how much resolve do you mean? If it's the same amount of resolve that I had when I fought that pseudo bounty monster, I would rather choose to retreat for now."

"You don't need to go that far. Compared to back then, you just need to put in a little more effort than usual, that's all you need. And like I said before, that barrage just now caught you off-guard, it was like an ambush. So if we properly make a plan, prepare ourselves well, and with my support to top it off, we would be able to handle that kind of barrage just fine. Of course, I won't say that you would be able to kill those mechanical monsters easily. And there's no mistaking it that you would use more bullets and medicines than usual. So that's the level of resolve that you'll need."

Akira stared at Alpha's smiling face while thinking that there was no need to call a retreat right now and he must have enough winning chance. As long as he did not slow Alpha down, he should be able to win using the predicted amount of ammo and medicine.

The rest depended on Akira's decision. It was not a mistake to avoid a fight that he might lose. While on the other hand, it was also not a mistake to take the risk to challenge a fight that was winnable to continue with his exploration.

But Akira knew he had to become stronger, he had to eventually do that request that Alpha asked of him. He had to take responsibility for the advance payment that he was already receiving from her. He had to return all the debt that he had piled up from Alpha, or at least, he had to make the effort to do so.

Moreover, if he hesitated in risking his life there, then what would be of his Hunter work?

Akira made his decision.

“We’ll continue. If I decide to run away from enemies that I have a good chance to defeat, then I would need to stop working as a Hunter.”

Alpha smiled full of confidence.

“Are you sure? Like I said before, you’ll need to resolve yourself, you know.”

“Resolve is my responsibility. So let’s do this.”

Alpha smiled even more.

“Very well, let’s go then. I couldn’t give you my support last time, so I’ll show you again how great it is to have my support.”

Akira prepared himself for the upcoming fight. He followed Alpha’s instruction to return to the first floor before climbing that building from bottom to top. Every time he visited a new floor, he would check the area with his information-gathering device before moving to the next floor. And it was not like he checked the whole floor, he only checked the side of that building which was facing the skyscraper.

After reaching the top floor of that building, the 27th floor, Akira finalized his preparation. He attached the extended magazine on his DVTS minigun, exchanged the piercing ammo inside his CWH anti-material rifle into CWH special ammo, he also took extra medicine beforehand to make sure that he would still be able to move his body even if he broke his bones doing some crazy manoeuvre, and to top it off, he put some medicines inside his mouth so he could just swallow it anytime.

He had his CWH anti-material rifle in his right hand and DVTS minigun in his left. He only carried extra magazines with him and left his other rifles and his rucksack on the rooftop so that they would not hinder his movement. He carried as little as possible without sacrificing his firepower.

Akira stood on top of that building which was facing the skyscraper that he was aiming for, he was standing at the edge of the exact opposite side that was facing that skyscraper. He took some deep breaths to prepare himself.

Alpha smiled at him before confirming for the last time.

“Akira, are you ready?”

Akira made a serious face as he said.

“Yeah, let’s do this.”

Alpha smiled back full of confidence before telling him to start.

“In that case then, let’s go.”

The battle had started.

Akira ran straight to the very end of the rooftop as fast as he could and jumped off.

While still falling, Akira aimed his DVTS minigun at the autonomous weapons around the skyscraper and pulled the trigger. The extended magazine allowed him to continue pulling down on the trigger for a long time without the need for reloading. The loud banging sounds coming from the bullets flowing out from Akira’s DVTS minigun echoed through the wasteland as they flew straight at the autonomous weapons that he was aiming at.

The kickback from his DVTS minigun pushed Akira toward the building’s wall. He then used both of his legs to propagate the kickback against the building’s wall. The continuous shots pushed his body toward the wall to the point that he was able to stand flat on it. He then did not let go of the trigger as he ran down the building’s wall just like that.

Countless bullets rained down on the autonomous weapons near the skyscraper. The bullets rained down on the mechanical monsters' super hard body as if they were trying to drill a hole on those bodies. But due to the loss of momentum because of the distance those bullets travelled and the force field armour that ricocheted them off the monsters' bodies, none of them was able to cause any serious damage to monsters' inner parts. But it was at least enough to make those monsters notice Akira as their enemy.

The cannons on their bodies immediately turned toward Akira who was running down the wall. Then in order to shoot their cannons, they temporarily lowered their force field armours.

The moment they did that, CWH special bullets immediately slipped in and hit them right before they could shoot their cannons, it caused the gunpowder inside their bodies to explode prematurely and took out their cannons from the inside. Akira shot those bullets beforehand by following Alpha's instruction. Those bullets hit the cannons with unrivalled accuracy although those cannons were not even directed at Akira when he released those shots.

When their cannons were destroyed, the control unit inside the monsters' bodies recognized it as a fatal damage and it also recognized that they had lost their means to fight back. As such, the other autonomous weapons that were still untouched diverted their force field armours to the badly damaged autonomous weapons, thus temporarily reducing the power of their force field armours.

During that split second when their force field armours were weakened, the CWH special bullets that Akira had shot beforehand hit them in succession. The first hit opened a hole in their armour while the second bullet went straight for their control units. The autonomous weapons that had lost their control units immediately stopped working without being able to react at all.

Once Akira destroyed some of the autonomous weapons, the rest of the autonomous weapons quickly recognized him as a threat. They immediately started to make their moves to deal with that threat.

Countless missiles launched from the missile pods aimed at Akira. While the ones with cannons immediately aimed their cannons and released shots at him. The countless missiles flew straight up for a few seconds to gather momentum before readjusting its trajectory to head straight for Akira, while the warheads released by the cannons just went ahead first and flew in a straight line to him.

Akira used the kickback from his rifles to push against the wall and gain traction to run down the wall. He then used the different contours of the wall to jump to the side or even jump straight down to avoid those missiles and warheads. So instead, they hit the building's wall, turning it into rubbles and filled the area where they landed with smokes.

Akira was desperately running down the building's wall, he could feel the shockwave from the explosions coming from all directions as he said to Alpha.

"Please please please, make sure that I won't get hit, okay? If I get blown away off the wall, there's no mistaking that I'll die, you know?!"

It was his first time running down along a wall. Because of that, he really relied on Alpha's control through his augmented suit to be able to do that. Although he was able to see the predicted trajectories of the missiles and warheads coming at him with his enhanced vision, he did not have the leeway to react to them and decide which route was the safest. It took everything that he had to just follow Alpha's instruction.

Alpha was sliding sideway parallel to the building as she smiled and replied.

"It's true that it's extremely dangerous if you lose your footings. That's why you need to keep running to spread the incoming missiles and warheads over a wide area. And also, don't stop shooting. It would be impossible to move quickly around the wall without help from the kickback. So just resolve yourself and keep running."

"Didn't you say that I don't need that much resolve for this fight back then?!!"

“That’s relative compared to when you fought the pseudo bounty monster. I did say that you’ll need some more resolve than usual, remember? But compared to when you had to get out from inside a monster with your own power after it ate you, it’s not that big of a resolve, right? Or is it that it was not that much of a difficult thing to get out from inside that monster?”

Alpha smiled amusedly. Akira looked at that smile and believed that he was not in as much danger as he thought as he flusteredly replied back.

“That there!! You’re comparing it to the wrong occasion!!!”

“Stop playing around and start shooting.”

“Okay okay!!”

Akira aimed his DVTS minigun at the missiles coming at him while still running on the wall and pulled the trigger. The countless bullets rained down on those missiles and made them explode in the middle of their flight, the shockwave from those explosions then threw the other missiles off-flight and disrupted their targeting.

Some of those missiles flew way off and hit the other buildings, some of them collided with the other missiles and exploded, while some other missiles landed away from Akira and left a big hole on the building’s wall.

While at the same time, Akira aimed his CWH anti-material rifle toward those autonomous weapons. Since Alpha did all the aiming, he just had to point it in the general direction of his target and hold the kickback from it. But since he was holding it with one arm, he could not fully take the kickback and each shot put his body in extra burden.

Thanks to the medicines that he took beforehand, Akira did not feel much pain. But since he was pushing his body past its limit with the help of his augmented suit and withstanding all the shockwave from the missiles that exploded near him, his bones were grinding against each other and micro-wounds were tearing his muscles. Those injuries were healed almost instantaneously only to be formed again right after that. That cycle continued until either the medicines ran out of its effect or the battle ended.

Akira could feel the strange feeling of his body going through that cycle while experiencing his first battle where he was running down a wall while fighting, he went through all of that inside his compressed time perception. To be honest, he wished that it was his first and his last time going through something like that. He was currently somewhere around the 18th floor. If he was free-falling, he would have been way closer to the ground by now.

The autonomous weapons spread their missile pods and launched countless small-sized missiles to the sky. Those missiles went up in a straight line before readjusting its course to head towards Akira. By fanning out their missile in a big arc, they targeted the whole area around Akira while reducing the possibility of him shooting them down and suppressing the loss from secondary explosions.

Akira saw the missiles fanned out in front of him.

“Alpha!! Is it possible to shoot them down?!!”

“Nope, that will be impossible. They’re too spread out. But it’s alright.”

“Well, that’s good to hear!!”

Akira forced himself to make a smile as he continued shooting. If Alpha said that it would be alright, he had no other choice but to believe that and continue fighting. And of course, he trusted Alpha. After all, if he did not trust her, he would not be doing something like this in the first place.

Akira kept on running down along the wall while moving around to just barely evade the incoming warheads from the autonomous cannons. While at the same time, he kept sniping the autonomous weapons’ weak points using his CWH anti-material rifle. The autonomous weapons that got shot on their engines, or their weapons, or their control units turned into just a pile of wreckage that posed no threat whatsoever. Akira destroyed those powerful autonomous weapons with utmost efficiency as if it was those autonomous weapons that were trying to match with Akira’s action.

But due to their firepower, even if only one of them were left, it would be enough to kill a normal Hunter. The autonomous weapons would not retreat, as long as Akira did not destroy every single one of them, they would keep on trying to kill him.

As those countless missiles headed towards Akira, he aimed his CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun and pulled the trigger. The kickback from his shot and the shockwave from the missile that he shot blew him right into one of the windows on that building.

All the missiles collided with the wall where Akira was just a few seconds ago. They exploded almost synchronously as they released a loud bang. But since their explosions were more spread out than before, their firepower was greatly reduced compared to when they were focused on one small area. The building that was created with the superior old-world technology was left only with cracks after that amazing explosion.

Alpha quickly gave Akira her next instruction. Akira had already checked all the floors in that building beforehand. So Alpha used that information to move him into the safest location on that floor.

Akira, who was barely avoiding those missiles, was running through inside that building. In the middle of that, Alpha said to him.

“Akira, swallow the medicine that you already have inside your mouth.”

“Roger that, is the effect from the ones that I took beforehand already waning?”

“You might not notice it since you don’t feel any pain, but your body is already in pretty bad shape. If you don’t want your limbs torn off in the middle of the fight, make sure to take your medicines.”

Akira swallowed the medicine inside his mouth and loaded new magazines into his rifles. He then followed Alpha’s instruction and jumped out of another window. He was already on the 10th floor, the ground was not too far away down, and the enemies left were also not that many.

Alpha knew the enemies’ location. When Akira jumped out of the window, he immediately started shooting again. The CWH special ammo easily pierced through the autonomous weapon’s hard armour and destroyed its weak point. That was one more monster around the building turned into scrap.

Akira only had 10 floors left. He kept on running down the building while shooting at the autonomous weapons. After a few shots, he finally reached the ground. The moment he landed on the ground, he quickly fixed the aim of his CWH anti-material rifle.

“That is the last one!!”

As he heard those words from Alpha, Akira spotted his last target, adjusted his aim, and pulled the trigger. The CWH special ammo flew in a straight line toward that autonomous weapon and almost immediately followed by a blinding light of the force field armour released right where the bullet landed on the autonomous weapon’s body.

Akira had showered that autonomous weapon with bullets using his DVTS minigun when he was running down the wall, thus its force field armour was already considerably weakened. The CWH special ammo pierced through the armour and bore a hole right into the autonomous weapon’s control unit and shred it to pieces.

As that autonomous weapon made the last squeaking sound, the area was finally shrouded in silence. All the monsters present were already dead.

Akira did not move as he was still monitoring his surroundings. As silence returned to that place, he finally stood up.

Alpha who was floating next to Akira smiled and reported their victory.

“Akira, that’s the end, we won.”

Akira’s first reaction to his victory was a long and big sigh. He then looked up at the building that he jumped off from and smiled bitterly. After that, he turned to Alpha who was smiling smugly.

“So how was that? Did you get just how great my support is?”

Akira smiled bitterly at her.

“Yeah, I got a good feel of it. So, since I already got a good feel of how great your support is, I would prefer not to go through something like this again.”

Alpha smiled mischievously at him.

“Oh, there’s no need to be reserved, you know? I’ve promised you to give you my utmost support as an advance payment, moreover, you know that I’m your ally, right?”

“If it’s possible, with that support that you’re so proud of, can you make it so that I don’t need to go through something like this again?”

Seeing Akira, who looked rather displeased, Alpha tilted her head and said.

“To be honest, I did consider a lot of things before I gave you my support, you know? After all, if you die it would be a huge issue for me too. So before I made that suggestion, I already ran all the calculations for your safety and I even confirmed and respected your wish too. But you know? If you keep counting special rare occasions in your calculation for your safety, it would be impossible for you to go out to the wasteland.”

Akira tried his best to replace his displeased expression with a bitter smile. He knew that he had terrible luck, and it was true if he assumed that he would be swarmed by monsters the moment he stepped out of the city, then he would not be able to go out to the wasteland. What he needed was not the ability to evade bad luck, but the ability to stomp that bad luck down.

“…Alright, I got it. I hope that you’ll keep providing your support so I can deal with a situation like this easily.”

“Of course. Just leave it to me. Now then, let’s go and get the stuff that you left on the rooftop so that you can get a better advantage if anything happens after this.”

Alpha smiled and pointed her finger up. Akira had left his rucksack filled with ammo and other equipment on the rooftop together with the other rifles that he did not use in that battle.

Akira looked up. Now that he looked at it, the 27 storey building was indeed a very tall building. And now he had to climb the stairs back to the rooftop.

“…Stairs again, huh?”

“Yep. But don’t worry, you can go down through stairs this time, or is it that you want to jump off again?”

Alpha smiled teasingly. Akira instantly refused.

“No thanks!”

Alpha just giggled amusedly seeing how Akira got a bit annoyed there.

Akira was standing at the front gate of a tall building. The name of that building was written on a huge metal nameplate near it.

“So this building is Seranthal building, huh?”

“Let’s go then. It would be great if we can find a lot of old-world relics there, I’m in a deep red right now.”

Akira had not found anything that could bring him money that day yet. If he could not find anything to cover for his ammo expense, he would have risked his life for nothing and end up with a loss.

Akira tried to calm his worry by telling himself that since he had to take out all of those powerful autonomous weapons just to get there, there must be expensive relics inside that building.

Alpha suddenly made a suggestion to him.

“You should be able to get some money if you submit the record for that general monster-hunting request. So, do you want to do that?”

“No. If I do that, I would need to submit a full battle record too, right? If I give that battle record to the Hunter Office, it would be troublesome if they start sending difficult requests to me.”

It might be just him overthinking it, but he remembered that he might have tried too hard when he helped out the Hunters in the Kuzusuhara underground ruin which ended up getting him sent into the Yarata Scorpion nest in the underground city.

No one could tell what kind of difficult request would get sent to him if the Hunter Office judged his skill based on that fight against the autonomous weapons. He had no wish to jump over a high building and run on its wall while shooting at the enemies again for the second time. Or at least, he had no wish to do that again unless it was really necessary.

Alpha smiled teasingly.

“Is that so? Honestly speaking, if you give it to that Kibayashi guy, I’m sure he’ll get a good laugh out of it and you can get an extra bonus on top of your reward.”

“No thanks!”

Akira reacted almost immediately, it was not like he was working as a Hunter just to amuse Kibayashi.

“Let’s just go in and head to the 57th floor for now. There might be some mechanical monsters inside but I’m sure they’re not as powerful as the ones that we fought outside.”

Akira changed gear and headed inside the building.

⎯⎯⎯*⎯

Reina and her 2 maids were hunting for monsters in the Mihazono ruin. Due to Shiori’s suggestion, they focused more on hunting monsters rather than hunting relics in order to familiarize themselves with the danger level of Mihazono ruin.

As long as they stayed near the Hunter Office branch, they would be able to almost immediately send an emergency request in case anything bad happened. Due to Shiori's suggestion, they were being careful while doing their best hunting for monsters instead of relics.

But to be more precise, Reina was the only one who was trying really hard there. Shiori was only there to accompany Reina, so she was there to match Reina's movements. So in short, she was holding back. She actually could just quickly dispose of all of the monsters and explore the area but avoided doing so. Shiori's goal was to help Reina overcome her self-contempt, and realize that she was not a useless burden.

As for Kanae, she did not even contribute to the fight. She just stood there next to Reina, looking bored.

Reina fixed her aim to ball-like mechanical monsters with legs and arms. Although it was just a maintenance drone that was cleaning up the city area from rubbles and wreckage, it would still attack Hunters when it spotted them. Thus, their kind were still considered as mechanical monsters. There were occasions where they even used the rifles that the Hunters dropped, they were pretty bothersome mechanical monsters.

Reina pulled the trigger. She used piercing bullets to destroy the monsters' limbs first before aiming for its torsos and proceeded to finish it off. It was a rather safe way to fight. Shiori then evaluated her performance.

Reina smiled, there was a shred of bitterness in her smile.

"That was a good shot."

"…Yeah, thank you."

Reina knew well that it was not just empty lip service from Shiori. But since she was in self-deprecating mode, when someone as strong as Shiori complimented her, it sounded as if she was so weak to the point that doing something like that was enough to make Shiori compliment her.

In reality, if Reina's skill was indeed that low, there was no way Shiori would bring her to Mihazono ruin in the first place. After all, Mihazono ruin was a rather dangerous ruin filled with mechanical monsters. Reina was actually stronger than most of the other Hunters of the same Hunter Rank, she was basically stronger than common Hunters.

But not only was she surrounded by powerful people like Shiori and Kanae, who received proper training, the scene when Akira, who was more or less of the same age as her, fought evenly against Shiori was still on her mind. Because of that, Reina could not help but be disappointed in her own skills.

Looking at Reina, Shiori felt a pang of pain. She realized that her compliment was counter-effective, so she stopped herself there.

Reina then moved the leftover wreckage of the monsters that she defeated to a cart with help from Shiori. Kanae did not even offer her help. Reina looked a bit annoyed as she said to Kanae.

"You really won't give me any help, huh?"

Even when Reina was glaring at her, Kanae did not seem to care much as she smiled and replied.

"Milady, like I said so many times before. My duty is to ensure your safety, not helping out when hunting monsters or carrying monsters. To be honest, Ane-san is also not obligated to do that, you know?"

"…Well, that's true, but still…"

"My duty is to get Milady away from danger in case anything bad happens. So, I hope you won't count me to always help you in all fights. And I also won't help to carry the dead mechanical monsters. I have my hands full with guarding you so I don't have any leeway to do something like that."

Reina understood Kanae’s argument although she was not fully convinced by it. She directed a bit of that anger onto herself, for not being able to do her Hunter work without bodyguards. She made a conflicted face as she looked at Kanae. Kanae just lightly smiled while looking back at her.

Shiori suppressed her desire to defend Reina, instead, she expressed her opinion about Kanae.

“Milady, Kanae is someone skilled enough to be sent as Milady’s bodyguard. Think of her as a shield or a lifeline in a dangerous situation. And just because that shield or lifeline is a very reassuring one, that does not mean that we can put Milady in needless danger. When she looks like she has nothing to do like that, it also means that we’re in a rather safe situation where she can just relax.”

“That’s so cruel. I’ll properly do my duty for which I’m paid for, you know?”

Shiori looked at Kanae with a serious face.

“Of course, if you’re not, I would dice you to small pieces after all.”

Shiori grabbed the sword that she was carrying, it seemed that she was being serious there.

But even so, Kanae was still smiling like usual. It was because she knew Shiori would not actually pull out her sword there, and even if she did, that in itself would be interesting too. Moreover, the possibility of the latter one was pretty high.

Shiori sighed exasperatedly, her expression returned back to normal as she turned to Reina.

“Milady. The cart is almost full. Let’s head back to the Hunter Office first.”

“Alright… Hm?”

Reina saw a cloud of smoke rising from afar. It originated from a tall building in the deeper part of Mihazono ruin.

Shiori also noticed smoke from watching Reina's reaction. She quickly pulled out her information terminal and checked the area that she guessed around where she saw that smoke. If it was some kind of dangerous anomaly, she would need to evacuate Reina from there as soon as possible. After all, anything could happen in an old-world ruin.

Shiori finished confirming the information and explained it to Reina.

"It's from an area near the Seranthal building. I bet there are some Hunters trying to seize that building. It should be alright as long as we steer clear from that area."

"It seems that they're having a pretty big fight there. Is the inner part of this ruin really that dangerous?"

"No, it seems that the monsters near the Seranthal building are much stronger compared to the other monsters in the ruin. They might be a part of the security system dedicated to protecting that building. Since the monsters guarding that building will always get replenished after some time, there are not that many Hunters who can challenge that area. There are also rumours saying that we can find a lot of expensive relics inside that building."

After hearing Shiori's explanation, Kanae just smiled amusedly as she tried to provoke Reina.

"That sounds interesting, If the Hunters win, there won't be any monsters left around that area, and even if they lose, they would have inflicted a lot of damage on those monsters too. So no matter which one it is, it should be easy to go to that building right now. Milady, how about we take a look there later?"

Shiori glared at Kanae.

"Kanae, just shut up. Milady, even if there are no monsters left around that building, I can't recommend going there."

Shiori stopped Reina while making a serious face. Reina felt that there was another reason other than her lack of skill as to why Shiori said that. So she curiously asked Shiori a question.

“Well, if you say that, I don’t mind not going there. But why? If there are a lot of expensive relics there and there are no monsters around it, it should at least be worth a check, right?”

“Milady, have you ever heard about the old-world ghost?

“It’s about that story of ghosts that roam the old-world ruin, right? They say that they only roam around famous ruins. There are a lot of different patterns about its story though. Some say that they’re ghosts of the Hunters who died in the ruin and they would attack other Hunters. Or that they control monsters in the ruins to kill other Hunters. Or that they would guide Hunters who get lost inside a ruin to an exit. I heard that there’s one in the Kuzusuhara ruin too, the beguiling ghost, was it again? If I’m not mistaken, it would lure Hunters into a dangerous area by baiting them with information of a secret place filled with relics just to get those Hunters killed, right…?”

Shiori then added to that.

“That’s correct. Sometimes it causes a big ruckus that prevents the Hunters from exploring the ruins, there are even times when the Hunter Office dispatched a formal investigation. Most of the investigation results were made public, some of them said that it’s just the Hunters trying to kill each other over relics, or it’s caused by the still-active facilities inside a building. Basically, it’s not a big mystery once the cause has been made clear.”

“Well, that kind of story is not rare. So, what’s with it?”

“There’s a similar ghost story in this Mihazono ruin, and that story centres around that Seranthal building. Putting the cause aside, it’s true that there are a lot of Hunters who died around that place and no explanation has been found even right now. As such, it still stays as a ghost story. We can’t afford to let Milady go to such a dangerous place.”

Reina started to get scared and curious at the same time, she then asked Shiori.

“Okay, let’s not go there then. So, about that ghost story though, what kind of story is it?”

Shiori then started explaining about that ghost story to Reina with a serious face. Reina, who listened to that story, looked slightly scared.

Akira, who was standing on the first floor, looked surprised when he took a quick look around the first floor of the Seranthal building. There was a receptionist counter and the interior of that building looked clean. It was obvious that it was properly maintained, there was not even a speck of dust on its floor as it perfectly reflected the light that was shining on it. He also spotted some undamaged chairs, which might be put there for guests.

When Akira looked at that receptionist counter, he thought that it must have been owned by a giant corporation. He had the same impression when he entered that big building sticking to the inner wall of the Kugamayama city, but at the same time, he felt that it was strange for him to feel like that in such a place. Akira scanned the big atrium while having such a conflicted feeling.

“This place is pretty clean.”

Akira was a bit overwhelmed by that contrast between the interior of that building and the area outside. Alpha then warned him to keep his wit.

“It seems that this building is still functioning well, so I bet the maintenance robots regularly clean this place. There might be some security robots too, so be careful.”

“Understood.”

Suddenly Akira spotted a girl, he quickly reacted by pointing his rifle at that girl. Although he did not instantly shoot, he had his finger ready on the trigger.

Akira’s expression looked stern. He spotted that girl standing in a place that he had already checked beforehand. His information-gathering device also did not detect her at all, there should be no one over there.

Even when Akira pointed his rifle at that girl, she only smiled at him. She was wearing an old-world dress that might have been used to welcome guests as a receptionist, one thing for sure, it was not for battle.

But it was normal for old-world dresses to have completely different qualities compared to their outlooks. It was really dangerous to judge based only on their appearances. Thus although that girl was unarmed, Akira did not lower his guard at all.

Alpha then explained to Akira.

“Akira, that’s just a hologram. It’s not real.”

Akira looked a bit surprised as he asked Alpha.

“It’s not real? So like, she’s the same as you? Wait, is it closer to that hologram from the Higaraka residence ruin, huh?”

“My image is created by information projected into your vision, so I’m closer to augmented reality and not the same as that hologram. That hologram is projecting its image on a fixed space. So a normal human should be able to see her just fine. But even if people can see her, she’s not real. Even if the information-gathering device detected her, it’s nothing but optical data.”

Akira rechecked the signal from his information-gathering device. There was a contrast between the optical sensor and the heat and vibration sensor. Thus, the display on his information-gathering device was telling him to be careful interpreting that data.

“I see. So it’s basically produced by old-world technology, right?”

If it was not real, then there was no meaning pointing his rifle at it, and of course, it was not like it could hurt him. Thus Akira lowered his rifle.

That girl then walked toward Akira, she then greeted him and said.

“Dear customer. The building is closed at the moment, so we can’t allow anyone without the proper authorization to enter. So please leave the building.”

Akira could hear her words clearly. He was surprised by that and asked Alpha.

“Alpha, I can hear her though, she’s definitely not real, right?”

“She only sounds like she’s talking to you up close, the sound itself is not originated from her. It came from somewhere else and generated through a complex calculation to make it sound as if she’s close to you.”

Akira could see a big difference between the optical sensor and the sound sensor data in his information-gathering device. Although it looked like that girl was talking to him, it seemed that was not exactly the case there.

Since that girl spoke to Akira, he thought that it might be possible to talk with her. So he tried to say something to her.

“Uhhh, I’m actually heading to the 57th floor, you see…”

“Please allow me to repeat myself. The building is closed at the moment. Only the first floor is opened for the other customers who already made an appointment beforehand. Normally, the whole building is closed including all the floors, so please leave the building.”

It seemed that he could indeed talk to her and it also seemed that she really wanted Akira to leave.

“How do I make an appointment?”

“During the time when the building is closed, each floor has its designated contact person who accepts appointment applications. We on the first floor don’t accept a direct application. So please leave the building.”

Akira tried to ask a lot of things to that hologram even after that, but all ended the same. To put it simply, there was nothing he could do there and that he should leave the building. He could not get any meaningful information out of it.

Alpha then told him to stop that meaningless negotiation.

“Akira, let’s just ignore her and continue. She’s only acting as a receptionist of this building. There’s nothing you can accomplish by asking her. Or is it that you want to leave the building?”

Akira just ignored that hologram and decided to go deeper into the building. As he peeked into the other hallways and was about to leave that place, that girl suddenly warned him.

“Warning! The facility is guarded by security allowed to kill in case of illegal intruders. So please leave this place.”

Akira stopped. He then turned to that girl and said with a stern face.

“If that’s the case, you should’ve said that before those monsters outside the building attacked me, you know?”

That girl did not say anything back, she just vanished.

Akira twitched, he understood that he was at fault there. He was the one who forced his way into that building. But this was a part of his job as a Hunter. It’s all already in the past, he just shook it off and continued exploring the building.

Akira was humming in front of an elevator. Although he found one, he could not use it. Nothing happened even after he pressed the buttons on the panel nearby.

Although Akira hardly ever saw any elevators around the place where he lived, he understood how it worked. To be more precise, he experienced using one when Shiori invited him for a meal in the high-class restaurant. That restaurant was located in a high building where he got an amazing view from inside of that restaurant.

Akira pouted for a bit as he said to Alpha.

“Is it broken? Or is it that it won’t let me use it? Which one do you think it is?”

“Maybe the latter one. Even if you can use it, I don’t think it’s a good idea to use it. After all, it might just shut you inside to die after you enter, you know? And it seems that it’s not an easy thing to pry the door open even with your augmented suit.”

“Yeah, I wouldn’t want that to happen. It can’t be helped then, I guess there’s no other choice but to go with stairs.”

Akira gave up and headed to the stairs, he already knew where it was after glancing at the map of the first floor.

Akira hoped that he could just go climb the building through the stairs. But it did not work out well for him. After a few floors up, he found himself blocked by a reinforced door. He might be able to force it open using his augmented suit or tear down the door using CWH special ammo. But forcing his way up like that would cause him to spend more time and energy. So he just gave up that idea and searched the floor for another staircase that he could use.

He did find another staircase on that floor, but just like last time, after a few floors up, he was greeted by another reinforced door. Every time that happened, Akira would look for another staircase to climb the building.

Each floor had a different look. Some of the floors were left ransacked as if Hunters had taken any and every relics out from that floor, while some of the floors looked brand new as if it was just opened recently. Akira’s eyes sparkled when he saw the many relics in the well-maintained floors. Every shop on those floors was filled with old-world relics.

“Lucky!! It was really worth all the hassle coming to this building! Alright then!! Let’s take them home!!”

Akira happily started working, he pulled out another rucksack from the one he had on his back. He then happily stuffed all the relics on the shops’ displays into that rucksack.

From the other’s point of view, he looked like a robber robbing a shop. And from the old-world point of view, there was no mistaking that Akira was an armed robber. So it was only to be expected that the security drones would come and try to kill him.

Akira just smiled bitterly as he said.

“Well, it’s true that I’m just digging out and gathering relics to take them out from this ruin. But this does feel like I’m robbing a shop.”

Alpha giggled.

“Well, you did force yourself in by destroying those autonomous weapons guarding this building, so you’re actually already robbing here. But let’s just swear not to rob any shops that are still in business and just think of this as putting all of these products that no one would ever come to buy into good use.”

“That in itself is an amazing excuse though. But I guess there are a lot of Hunters who gather old-world relics with that excuse, so I can understand why they stationed those autonomous weapons to guard the relics.”

Akira, who was smiling bitterly when he said that, suddenly turned quiet. His smile had vanished from his face and his hands that were putting relics into his rucksack suddenly stopped. He then asked Alpha.

“Alpha, there’s something I want to ask. It’s about the mechanical monsters that we’ve defeated outside. Though I was able to defeat them thanks to your support, they're actually strong monsters, right? Or at least, that's what I thought about them. After that first barrage, I even thought of pulling back, they're at least that strong from my point of view."

"Yep, they're powerful autonomous monsters. You have no winning chance against them without my support. After all, although you did win, it was a rather fierce fight. You do understand that too, right?"

"Yeah, I got that very well. So like, why did you judge that I should be able to defeat those strong monsters? Well, it's true that it did put me in more burden and I used more ammo than usual, but you predicted that, and we won as you predicted too. Or at least that's the vibe that I got back there. So against such strong monsters, how did you judge and under what basis did you decide it was possible to win against them?"

"Oh my, that's quite a question there. Do you have anything you want to complain about my support? You can just say it and I'll readjust."

"No, that's not what I meant. There's nothing that I want to complain about. It's just that… What can I say… You were smiling like usual during that fight, it feels like you know even if I did that 100 times, I'll still win 100 times. So like, I just want to know on what basis, or at least the reason, why you can be so sure."

Akira seemed a bit hesitant when he said that, but he looked serious.

Alpha did not say anything for a while, she then smiled and asked him.

"You really want to know, don't you?"

It was her usual smile, but for some reason, Akira felt there was something else behind that smile.

"Yeah, I want to know."

"It'll take a very long time to explain it orally, you know…"

"In that case, make it short and you don't need to tell me everything, just tell me enough to at least convince me."

Alpha confirmed Akira's expression and answer. She then said.

"Very well, if I have to shorten my answer, it's because they are mechanical monsters. If they were biological monsters, I would have definitely stopped you."

"Is it really that different, mechanical and biological monsters?"

"Yep, or at least, that's the case for my support. Moreover, those autonomous weapons were simple machines, they were made in accordance with their blueprints and they moved precisely as their original program. There were no abnormalities in their bodies or behaviours, unlike those biological monsters which continuously mutate their bodies and change their judgement logic. Thanks to that, it's easy to predict their moves. Because there's no randomness in their patterns, I can easily make an accurate prediction just from a few observations. And without randomness and arbitrary action that tends to happen with the biological monsters, the calculation becomes very easy. That's why, even if it seemed very dangerous in your point of view, it was a very safe situation and that fight was totally winnable from my point of view."

Alpha then continued her explanation. Due to his limited knowledge, Akira actually had some problems understanding her explanation. But he at least more or less understood her reasoning.

As long as Alpha knew the original blueprint and the behaviour program of those monsters, she could get a highly accurate result by running simulations based on those information, and she would be able to accurately follow that simulation by controlling Akira's augmented suit. By splitting up the whole battle into smaller ones of highly accurate 2-player zero-sum game simulation, Alpha could map out the best decision to take during that fight.

Although it seemed that Akira fought that battle desperately, from Alpha's point of view, it was more like following an already finished script.

It would be extremely difficult to do the same against biological monsters. Due to the randomness of the biological monsters' behaviours, Alpha could only make inaccurate predictions.

Akira tried to understand something outside that explanation as he asked Alpha.

“Uhhh, so basically, since you know the enemy’s weak point and behaviour well enough, it’s an easy thing to defeat them, huh?”

“More or less, yes.”

Akira seemed to be thinking about something else, so Alpha paused there before she asked him again.

“Was that explanation not enough? Do you want me to explain in more detail?”

Akira shook his head.

“No, that’s good enough. At least now I understand that you didn’t judge I could win that fight out of some vague reasons.”

“Oh my, how rude. There’s no way I would guarantee your safety out of some vague reasons, you know.”

“My bad. I got to understand a lot of things since I started taking your lesson. Just think of it as the result of my growth, you have my thanks.”

“Is that so? Well, I’m glad to hear that. If you question my instruction, it would be troublesome during a dangerous situation, you see.”

“Yeah, I know. I just got a little bit curious there. Well, compared to this mountain of old-world relics, it doesn’t really matter though. Although it was dangerous, it was worth the risk.”

“That’s true, let’s carry back as much as we can.”

“Yeah.”

Akira returned to his job stuffing old-world relics into his rucksack.

Akira’s question was not fully answered yet. To be more precise, although his last question was answered, it only led to more questions that were still unanswered. He understood the basis of Alpha’s judgement, but he still had no idea why she used those as the basis of her judgement.

The old-world factories that were considered as old-world relics were still producing autonomous weapons even right now. Normally, the blueprints used to produce those monsters and the program installed inside their control units should be a secret. There should not be that many people who had access to them even during the time when those factories were built, and of course, there should be even fewer people who knew those secrets now.

But for some reason, Alpha knew about them. Akira thought that he should be able to know the reason if he just asked her, but he decided to hold himself back from asking that question. It was because he felt that Alpha would not want him to ask that question.

Alpha did ask him for confirmation back then. That was because she actually did not want Akira to ask that.

Alpha was actually under a leash. There were things that she could not do without Akira’s permission, so it was only to be expected that she had other limitations too. That might also be the reason why she could not say no when Akira asked her that question, she might only be able to give a vague answer to point out that he would regret knowing the answer to his question.

That was why Akira did not pursue any further. He felt like if he asked that question, Alpha might turn hostile against him, that’s why he decided to just shelf that question.

All the questions that welled up thanks to his curiosity were starting to leak out. Nonetheless, Akira continued to suppress them. After all, compared to the usefulness of Alpha’s support, those questions were worth nothing to him. Or at least, that was the case for now.

The real reason as to why Alpha told Akira to fight those autonomous monsters was simply to give Akira a good feel of how great her support was, it was to strengthen that impression on him. Though, Akira did not realize that at all.

Akira filled his relic rucksack up to the brim, he then once again headed to the Lion Steel Corp branch office on 57th floor. This time, since he was carrying a rucksack filled with relics, it was hard for him to walk through the small hallway with that rucksack on his back.

On his way there, he saw all kinds of things; some of the floors were properly maintained while some of the floors seemed abandoned. Akira seemed to be a bit bothered by those scenes and he asked Alpha.

“Alpha, why aren’t all of them in the same condition?”

“I think it’s because of the cleaning drone, or to be more precise, because it depends on whether the maintenance drone is still active or not.”

“So basically, the floors are decrepit because the maintenance drones in those floors are inactive, huh. But there were some shops that looked clean yet there were no relics inside though. I guess that means the drones won’t go as far as to replenish the relics. But then again, some shops are still filled with relics, so why is that?”

“Those shops might have a self-replenish function.”

“And who would replenish those relics?”

“I bet some drones carry them from a still-active factory somewhere.”

“No no no, if there’s a factory nearby, someone would have discovered it by now, right? It would definitely cause a big ruckus when the companies or the Hunters flood that place…”

“That factory might be located somewhere very far away, even somewhere near the frontline and no one has found it yet. Either that, or it’s located somewhere near but the security is so powerful that they can’t seize that place. There are many possible explanations.”

“Hmmm. If that’s the case, I bet the Hunters would attack those drones on their way here though.”

“They might be guarded by some special escorts. Or they might be using the underground train to carry the relics. Or might even be flying through the sky.”

“Underground train, huh. That sounds plausible. The Hunters would not be able to attack them in the underground tunnel after all.”

Excluding some special transportations, the main transportation used in the Eastern district was all above ground. That’s why Akira naturally thought that they would have used above-ground transportation. After all, even Katsuragi frequented the frontline using his trailer. But those drones should be able to use other types of transportation with the help of the old-world technology, as such, Akira did not further question that possibility.

As Akira was spending time talking with Alpha while climbing the stairs, he was once again greeted by a reinforced door leading to the 26th floor. So just like last time, he went to look for another stair on the 25th floor. But this time, there was something different.

“Akira, be careful. Someone is here.”

Alpha pointed her finger toward the hallway, Akira's goggle that was showing the information from his information-gathering device also indicated that it detected something over there.

As Akira moved forward carefully, that person finally noticed Akira too. It was not rare to meet another Hunter inside the old-world ruin, but the real problem was whether that Hunter was friendly or not.

If that Hunter decided to steer clear and kept his or her distance, then there was no need to get bothered by that. But as Akira thought so, that Hunter was instead coming toward him.

The 25th floor was a pretty decrepit floor, there were wreckages and rubbles scattered around the place and someone was using those rubbles to hide themselves while approaching Akira. When Akira pointed his rifle at that person, that person suddenly spoke from behind the rubble.

"I have no wish to fight you. My name is Carol, I'm a Hunter. I'm not a monster, so don't shoot, okay?"

Akira was receiving Alpha's support at that moment, so he thought that there was no need to be overly cautious since it might cause them to quickly become enemies. So, he slowly lowered his rifle.

"Alright."

Right after Akira said that, a girl who introduced herself as Carol came out from behind a pile of rubble.

She was wearing a bodysuit customised for women. A huge hand-held cannon was dangling on her holster, she was not carrying anything in both of her hands at the moment, not even a knife.

Compared to Akira, who was carrying CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun, Carol was very lightly armed and looked rather careless about her own safety.

Looking at Carol’s behaviour, it could be inferred that she was either so strong that she could be casual or that she was just a careless fool. Akira thought that she was the former. After all, she was inside a building that had given him a hard time just to get in. Akira had no plans to underestimate her, but looking at how she approached him empty-handed, Akira also lowered his guard.

Carol smiled as she walked toward Akira. She then scanned Akira’s equipment from his augmented suit, CWH anti-material rifle, and his whole appearance before returning her gaze back to his face.

“I’ve given my name, so like, can you at least tell me yours?”

“It’s Akira. So then, why are you talking to me?”

“Well, there’s no particular reason. I’m just here to say hello to another Hunter inside the same building and on the same floor. After all, you don’t want either of us to shoot at each other thinking that the other person is a monster, right?”

Akira agreed with that opinion and it was the right answer for those who wanted to avoid fighting. He unconsciously lowered his guard further. Carol noticed that and took another step closer to him.

“Well, since we’ve met here, how about we talk for a bit? I want to do some information exchange too after all.”

Carol smiled at Akira as she made that suggestion.

Akira and Carol then did a light introduction to each other. It seemed that Carol was a Hunter who frequented the Mihazono ruin and she had visited this building a couple of times before.

Akira then asked about the hologram girl that he met on the first floor. If Carol had really explored that building for numerous times, she might know something that he did not know.

But Carol just casually said.

“Oh, you’re talking about Seranthal, huh? You can just ignore her. Although she says a lot of things to you, she can’t do anything else than that.”

“Seranthal? Isn’t that the name of this building…?”

“She’s an artificial intelligence in charge of this building. She will warn you to get out of the building, but in the end, she’s just a hologram, so she won’t be able to hurt you at all. The most she could do is just stopping the elevator.”

“Wait, so it’s her fault that I can’t use the elevator?”

“Maybe, yep. Although, honestly, it would be a huge help to explore this building with still-active facilities if we can use that elevator. But since it doesn’t seem that Seranthal would accept any negotiations, that would be impossible. Well, it’s true that from her point of view, we are nothing but robbers, so I guess it can’t be helped.”

Carol then smiled, Akira smiled bitterly back at her.

“You’re right about that. By the way, how did you get in here? The entrance of this building is guarded by those bothersome powerful monsters, so like, you shouldn’t be able to get in here without defeating them first, right?”

Akira thought that there might be another safer route that he could take to avoid fighting those monsters, or it might be just because of his usual bad luck.

Carol made a rather smug expression, she then smiled at Akira as if she was teasing him and said.

“Since you asked me that question, it means that you defeated those monsters, right? You’re pretty good, aren’t you? You’re quite strong, and I do like strong Hunters.”

“Well, thanks. So then, how did you get in here?”

“This building actually has a backdoor, you see. And I used that to get in here, do you want to know?”

Carol smiled mischievously at Akira.

Akira was relieved to know that he did not waste his ammo only because of his bad luck. He then said.

“Yeah, if you would tell me.”

Carol smiled bewitchingly.

“It won’t be free, you know. Let’s see, how about 5,000,000 Aurum? I think it’s pretty cheap for a piece of information that would let you get in here without fighting those powerful monsters, right?”

Akira thought for a bit, it was true that it was a cheap price considering that he would not have to fight those powerful monsters every time he wanted to visit that building.

But Akira might not be visiting that building ever again. After all, the only reason why he came there was for the Lion Steel Corporation’s information terminal and not for gathering relics.

In the first place, if he had trouble getting to that place, it simply meant that he was not ready to go there, that was all there was to it. Thus he refused that offer.

“Thank you for the offer, but no.”

Carol’s smile did not vanish.

“Oh my, you don’t like the price? Or you can’t trust me?”

“At least, I don’t think it’s the amount of money that you would normally pay to a Hunter whom you just met in an old-world ruin.”

“That’s true. But I won’t give you any information unless you pay me. After all, there are people who try to run away after getting information out from me, you see.”

“Yeah, I bet there are people who would do that.”

Every person had a different way of judging the price of a piece of information. And there were a lot of factors that decided whether 2 people could make a deal or not, the trust between each other was one of them.

If that information from Carol could really help Akira getting inside the Seranthal building without fighting the powerful autonomous weapons, 5,000,000 Aurum was actually not a huge sum of money. But there were chances that Carol was lying or the backdoor was too small for him to carry relics out from that building.

Moreover, Akira had no reason to trust Carol nor to make a deal with her.

It was obvious to Carol too that Akira had no plans to accept that offer. She kept her smile up as she said to him.

“But I guess that applies to me too, huh. I can understand that you’re hesitating to pay me money. So, in order to deepen our trust for each other, how about we make another deal before talking about buying that information again?”

“Another deal? If it’s about relics, I’m gathering them myself, so I won’t buy any from you. I’ve also properly explored the other floors, so I won’t buy any information about hidden rooms too.”

Carol smiled bewitchingly.

“That’s not it, I did say that it’s to deepen our trust, right?

She then grabbed her bodysuit’s fastener, which ran from under her neck down to her stomach, and lowered it down while smiling at Akira.

“I’m selling myself, what do you think? This must be some kind of fate to meet here, so I’ll only ask a cheap price.”

Akira could see Carol’s skin through a small opening in her bodysuit that wrapped her whole body, She was showing her skin to Akira while smiling at him, trying to seduce him.

Akira was a bit surprised by that sudden unexpected turn of events, but that was all. He did not get embarrassed nor flustered. He just casually refused Carol’s offer.

“No thanks. That aside, it won’t be strange to find a monster somewhere near, you know? Are you really okay in the head?”

“If that’s what you’re worried about, it’s alright. There won’t be any monsters here normally. Either it’s because this place is outside the mechanical monsters’ patrol area or that they already abandoned this building, as for the biological monsters, the mechanical monsters out there guarding this place would kill them before they can get in here. There’s no way I would do something like this in the first place if that’s not the case, you know.”

“Even if you say so, we’re still in the middle of an old-world ruin. There might be another Hunter around.”

Carol, who already unfastened the fastener on her bodysuit all the way down, sat on a table near her and tried to seduce Akira.

“There are people who get more excited about doing it in places like this. I myself don’t really mind, but if you’re bothered by it, we can go to a small room somewhere. Moreover, if we become comfortable with each other, it might help me loosen my mouth, you know. And if you’re seriously thinking of actually buying that information, I might give you a taste for free.”

Since Carol kept putting out better and better offers, Akira actually started to get suspicious of her.

“You seem to be pretty motivated doing this. If my intention is to deceive you and not buy that information, you would lose quite a lot, you know?”

“I did tell you, remember? I like strong Hunters. So I’ll at least do this much to invite a Hunter who can defeat those powerful monsters outside all by himself.”

“Why do you assume I did that alone? I might have done that with the help of other Hunters.”

“That’s just my guess. It’s highly unlikely for you to explore this ruin that you don’t know much all alone. If you came here with someone else, although it might not be as strong as those monsters guarding outside, you should’ve been exploring this ruin with the assumption that there are powerful monsters inside this building, right? But even so, you’re here alone, that’s why I assume that you’ve defeated those monsters outside alone too, was I mistaken? Is it that you actually came here with a team of 10 Hunters or so and the leader told you to go ahead and explore this building, that’s why you’re here although you don’t want to be? If that’s the case, then it won’t be free. After all, that would mean that you’re not a strong Hunter. So, what is your answer?”

Carol was smiling while waiting for Akira’s answer. Akira thought that it would be pointless trying to lie.

“No, I came here alone.”

“I knew it. I have confidence in my deduction skill, you see. So, if you’re still bothered by me offering myself for free, you don’t need to worry about that. Once you have a taste, I’m sure you’ll be back for more. And don’t worry, I’ll help you squeeze out a lot of things from you for a long time.”

Carol smiled seductively when she said that.

Akira more or less understood her reasoning, but for some reason, there was something that was still bothering him. So he turned to Alpha.

“Alpha, what do you think?”

Alpha was surprised.

“What do you mean by that? Akira, are you seriously thinking of taking her offer?”

According to Alpha’s calculation, Akira would definitely refuse. But since he said something that sounded as if he would accept it, Alpha immediately put up her guard.

But in reality, Akira’s reaction there was still under Alpha’s prediction.

“That’s not what I meant. You did say before that you can tell if someone is lying, right? So I’m just asking that from your point of view, do you think that she’s lying? For example, is she actually planning to bring me somewhere and kill me or something?”

Something like that was common even in the dangerous areas outside the city and since they were in the middle of ruin, it would be an easy thing to just throw the corpse somewhere. If that was the case, then Akira would need to carefully watch his back when he left that place.

“Ahhh, so that’s what you meant.”

Alpha was relieved now that she understood why Akira asked that question. Akira was still as distorted and paranoid as usual to the point that he was suspecting an unknown girl, who was inviting him, was actually planning to kill him.

Alpha’s face turned to her usually calm face.

“I’ll put this out first, I do that by watching the slight change in people’s faces, so it’s not like I can really read their minds. It’s true that she seems to be scheming something. She said that she’s offering herself to you for free because she wants to get you addicted to her and leech off your money though.”

Akira took a look at Carol again. Carol was a young girl with a good body and beautiful face, then to top it off, she was smiling with confidence to seduce him. Looking from his point of view, it was understandable to find former Hunters who got addicted to her and spent all of their money on her.

“Whatever it is, it won’t be much trouble as long as I don’t take her offer.”

“That’s true.”

Akira once again refused Carol’s offer.

“I’m sorry, but I’ll have to refuse.”

Carol looked obviously surprised. It was rare for someone to refuse her offer after she went that far.

“Geez, you’re no fun. Or is it that you actually hate something like this? Although you’re not adult yet, you’re not that young to be so innocent, right?”

“I’m at an age where I still prefer food over women. Moreover, a lot of things happened to me in the ruins and I’ve been living a rather cowardly life until now. That’s why I have no plans to let go of my rifles or to take off my augmented suit here.”

Carol immediately gave up seducing Akira, she understood that there were Hunters out there who got hurt so badly in the ruins that it made them paranoid to the point they would never let go of their rifles. It was extremely dangerous to force those Hunters to let go of their rifles.

“Is that so? That’s just too bad. We Hunters can die anytime and since you’re my type, I just thought to give you a good time, that’s all.”

Carol was being honest when she said that, but the things that she could not say out loud were kept inside her heart as she smiled bitterly at Akira. She then pulled back the fastener on her bodysuit all the way up while looking at Akira, it did not seem that he showed any regret at all.

[…If it’s a boy of his age, it should be easy to bait him using his desire but… Is it that he’s actually younger than he looks?]

Carol looked at Akira with curiosity. But she could not see that someone with a more voluptuous body and in a sexier suit was standing next to that Akira.

It was rather vague whether Akira refused because of the anti-honeytrap training from Alpha, or it was because of his originally distorted personality.

Akira then decided to leave Carol and head to his original objective, the 57th floor.

“I need to get back exploring the building, later then.”

“Is that so? I’ll be staying around here for the time being, so if you change your mind, just look for me. I’ll be waiting for you.”

Carol just said that and lightly waved at Akira.

After Akira left Carol, he went back to searching a staircase on the 25th floor. Now that he remembered it, he should have asked Carol if she knew where he could find the staircase on the 25th floor, but he decided not to turn back to look for her. After all, it would be a hassle if she misunderstood and thought that he had changed his mind.

It did not take long before Akira found a stair, but it only went up until the 30th floor. The door to the 31st floor was shut close.

Akira sighed.

“Again, huh? What a pain in the neck.”

“It can’t be helped. Let’s look for another stair.”

Akira then started exploring the 30th floor. He did not spot any monsters at all. Carol might have said the truth when she told Akira that there was no monster inside that building. Akira lowered his guard as he was exploring that floor.

Alpha suddenly told Akira with a stern face.

“Akira, move over there and stop.”

Alpha was pointing at a location not too far from him. He glanced at Alpha's expression and moved forward carefully to the location that she was pointing at.

"Alpha, is it more enemies? According to Carol, there shouldn't be any monsters inside…"

"It's not monsters, but don't lower your guard."

Akira followed Alpha's instruction, he kept his guard up as he moved carefully. He did not feel any abnormality, he did not see anything strange, and there was nothing detected in his information-gathering device. But he did not lower his guard, he thought that there must be something that caused Alpha to tell him to be careful.

Alpha's face turned serious. Akira understood that it meant he was in a dangerous situation.

"…As I thought, the accuracy of your information-gathering device is bad, and it keeps falling down even right now. Is this from the colourless mist?"

Akira frowned the moment he heard something from Alpha that he could not just let slip.

"Alpha, is it the colourless mist?"

"The accuracy of your information-gathering device has been falling for a while now. I thought that it's to be expected to have some disruptions due to the building's structure or the relics inside this building, that's why I've been ignoring it. But it's already falling so bad that such an explanation won't work anymore. If it's really just because of where you're standing, there should be some change after you move to a different place, but that didn't work. That's why it must be because of something else and I guess that's because of the colourless mist. The colourless mist must have suddenly gotten thicker, that's the only guess that I can come up with."

Although Akira still looked stern, he asked a question to Alpha as if he was trying to calm himself down.

“Something like that is completely expected to happen inside an old-world ruin. Moreover, it’s not like it’s fatal, right?”

“At the moment, yes. But it’ll be really bad if the accuracy keeps on falling like this.”

Akira calmly replied with that.

Alpha, who once saw how Akira got so flustered when he knew that the colourless mist around him was suddenly getting thick, just smiled and said to him.

“Oh my, you’re pretty calm, aren’t you? I thought that it might cause you to panic if I delay it for too long, that’s why I decided to tell you sooner than usual, but it seems that it was not needed, huh?”

“It’s not like the situation will get better if I panic here, you know. I just need to move carefully so I won’t get killed. Thank you for telling me sooner than usual, thanks to that, I can handle the situation much calmer.”

“I see, that’s good to hear. You’ve really grown stronger, I’m really happy to see that.”

For some reason, Alpha sounded like she was actually teasing Akira, so he just replied back casually to her. But in reality, Alpha knew that he forced himself to reply casually to hide his embarrassment.

__*__*__*__

When Akira was on the 10th floor, there were other Hunters gathered near the Seranthal building.

Akira’s battle with autonomous weapons was a rather big fight. Because of that, most of the Hunters in the Mihazono ruin noticed that fight.

When Hunters defeated the powerful monsters guarding the Seranthal building, there were basically 2 types of Hunters who entered that building.

The first type was those Hunters who worked together to defeat the powerful autonomous weapons, they would send some Hunters from their team into the Seranthal building after their battle. While that small group of Hunters was gathering relics inside the building, the rest of the Hunters would stand guard on the building's entrance to prevent any other Hunters from entering.

It was in order to avoid having to fight against other Hunters over the relics as well as to prevent other Hunters from leeching off their hard work of defeating the guardian monsters. After all, there were many Hunters who were thinking of taking some relics out from the Seranthal building without helping to defeat the powerful monsters guarding that place.

Ammo expense, medical expense, wage cost, it basically took a lot of money to defeat those powerful autonomous weapons. So in order to end up with a profit after the battle, they could not afford to let other Hunters leeching off relics from them.

Those Hunters who could defeat the powerful autonomous weapons were basically strong Hunters, so if they guarded the entrance to the Seranthal building, the other Hunters could not get in. And when they left that building, the powerful monsters would be back guarding that building again in no time.

While the second type of Hunters who would get into that building showed themselves when there was a small opening left by those Hunters who were guarding the building. At the exact moment when the small group of Hunters that was previously sent to scavenge the building returned back to the entrance, these second type of Hunters would focus their firepower to open a hole in the security net to let their own group of Hunters slip through. It was the preferred way of sending Hunters into that building for those groups which were confident in their concentrated firepower.

Whichever it was, it was difficult to send Hunters into the building except for the original group who defeated the powerful monsters guarding it. But if someone successfully did that, they would be able to get back rewards worth of all that hard work.

There were also Hunters who tried to negotiate with the Hunters guarding the entrance. There were also Hunters who used the smallest opening that they could find to charge head-on. While on the other hand, there were also Hunters who sneaked around to carry the wreckages of the autonomous weapons in secret.

Although it was rare, there were Hunters who exhausted their resources to defeat the powerful autonomous weapons and headed back home right after that. The reason was unclear, it might be just out of a whim, or they might be just venting their stress on those monsters, or it might be just those Hunters testing the new weapons developed by some corporations.

But all of those reasons were of no importance to the other Hunters. The most important thing was that the other Hunters would have a good chance to enter that Seranthal building after someone defeated the guardian monsters. The other Hunters in Mihazono ruin hoped that would be the case when they noticed that big battle between Akira and the mechanical monsters. That was why a lot of Hunters came to the Seranthal building to check.

One of the scout Hunters who was sent ahead checked the front entrance of the Seranthal building. He then confirmed the wreckages of the autonomous weapons and checked if there were any other Hunters guarding that place. After he finished, he contacted his other friends with a big smile.

“It’s me!! Tell the others too, quickly!! The monsters guarding the Seranthal building are dead! And there’s no Hunter guarding the entrance! We can get the relics from the building or carry the wreckage, either way, it’ll bring us a lot of money!! …Ah, and also! Come here, quickly!! Before the other Hunters come here first!! I saw some of the other Hunters scouting this place too!! Hurry up!”

Just like him, there were other Hunters calling their friends to hurry over. That place was quickly filled with Hunters in no time. Some of them were carrying the wreckages of the dead autonomous weapons that Akira defeated while some of them went inside the building hunting for relics. In short, all the Hunters in that place were busy.

When some of those Hunters just went ahead to explore the building, there were some who just waited on the first floor for their other friends to arrive. Seranthal, the holographic girl, kept giving warning to those Hunters.

"…Dear customer. The building is closed at the moment, so we can't allow anyone without the proper authorization to enter. So please leave the building… Warning. The facility is guarded by security allowed to kill in case of illegal intruders. So please leave this place…"

For those Hunters who already knew about Seranthal building and that holographic girl, they just ignored that warning.

But there were Hunters who could not ignore her. One of those Hunters was waiting on the first floor for his friends to arrive, but since his friends were taking too long, he started to get more and more irritated. Although at first, he was ignoring Seranthal, the repeated warning from her drove that Hunter mad and he eventually blew.

"Good grief!! Just shut up!!"

"Warning, the building is…"

"Shut up!!!"

He then pointed his rifle at Seranthal. Although he knew well there was no meaning in doing that to a hologram, he still pulled the trigger. He was basically that irritated.

The bullet flew through that hologram and hit the wall behind her. Fortunately enough, there was nobody there, so no one got hurt.

But releasing a shot in that place was a serious matter. The other Hunters around him immediately pointed their rifles at him, he panicked and raised both of his hands.

“I-I’m sorry! She’s just so noisy that I couldn’t hold it back! That was all!! I’m sorry, okay!”

“…You’re a dead man the next time you do that.”

The other Hunters looked at him full of killing intent. Of course, he wanted to avoid any needless conflict too. It was a rare chance to be able to get into that building, so he had no plans to waste an opportunity to strike it rich without much struggle. Thanks to that, he was barely able to get out alive from that situation. If that shot had hit someone, he would have been dead by now.

“O-Okay, I understand. I’m sorry.”

He just kept on apologizing. The other Hunters around him then clicked their tongue and lowered their rifles. He finally could let out a sigh of relief.

Because of that incident, no one was paying any attention to Seranthal’s warning. Even when Seranthal changed her warning, no one there noticed it.

“Confirmed multiple intruders. Confirmed the intruders trying to kill the employees and staff of the building. Confirmed the destruction of the building. Changing to protocol D. Die you scum!”

After Seranthal said something that was unthinkable to be said to a customer, she quickly vanished. Not too long after she vanished, some Hunters in that area noticed that Seranthal had gone. But no one was bothered by that at all.

Silavin: Wow! Seriously? The author is really good at playing out a realistic situation. But like… when can my boy Akira finally get a break?

When Akira was talking with Carol on the 25th floor, a small change started to happen around the Seranthal building. Or to be more precise, a change had already started and the Hunters in that area had noticed it.

Some of the Hunters there chose to carry the leftover wreckages of the dead autonomous weapons. Rather than risking having to fight the other Hunters over the relics inside that building, these Hunters chose to harvest the leftover wreckages of the autonomous weapons that Akira had defeated.

They had no idea who defeated those monsters, but since that person just left them there, they assumed these wreckages must be trash for said person. Those Hunters thought that person must have ignored those wreckages aiming for the relics inside the Seranthal building.

Those Hunters were guarding their prized loots while waiting for the arrival of the truck to carry the wreckages. They kept checking their information-gathering device and killed any small fry mechanical monsters that approached them. They were planning to carry those wreckages, so they could not let other mechanical monsters consume their prized find.

At first, they looked relaxed, but their expression suddenly changed, a look of astonishment flashed on their faces. There were quite a lot of mechanical monsters heading their way, and the number just kept increasing endlessly.

One of them then said.

“Hey, something is strange, don’t you think? Why are so many of them coming here?”

“I heard that those powerful monsters guarding the Seranthal building will always be back not too long after you kill them. So the mechanical monsters might be swarming here to gather the wreckages to rebuild these guardian monsters. I guess, if we take into consideration the size of the guardian monsters, it’s to be expected that they would need to bring a lot of those small mechanical monsters to carry these huge wreckages.”

“I see, that does make sense.”

“These wreckages might contain something valuable that they’re trying to retrieve it, so I’m sure these wreckages will fetch a lot of money.”

As they imagined the amount of money that they might earn, those Hunters started to smile.

The Hunter who was worrying also smiled after hearing what his friend said. The mechanical monsters coming to their direction were all weak monsters, so he thought that he must have been overthinking it. When that guy thought so, suddenly a loud bang echoed from afar. It was immediately followed by repeated gunshots. It was the sound of Hunters fighting monsters.

The source of that sound was moving closer and closer to those Hunters waiting for the truck. They eventually could see some Hunters running toward their direction.

The guy who was so worried just now was utterly dumbfounded as he said.

“A-aren’t there too many of them?”

There was a swarm of monsters following behind those Hunters, who were running toward the Seranthal building. The Hunters who were desperately fighting those monsters were swallowed one by one by that swarm. Distorted by the fear, the Hunters used grenades and explosives at a close range, close enough to even injure themselves. Those explosions would take out a bunch of monsters and open a hole in that swarm, but it did not take long for that hole to be covered by monsters again.

The Hunters around Seranthal building started shouting at each other.

“R-run away!!”

That guy shouted as if he was saying to everyone in that area.

“R-run away? To where exactly?”

The mechanical monsters were swarming the Seranthal building from all directions, there was no opening where the Hunters could run to. All of the Hunters in that area were running toward the only location where they might have any survival chance, it was the only location where they might be able to defend themselves, it was the Seranthal building.

All the Hunters who were still alive outside the Seranthal building quickly gathered inside the building, they were able to temporarily push back the swarm. The entrance to the Seranthal building turned into a bottleneck, the Hunters focused their fires there to repel the monsters that were trying to enter the building.

But suddenly, the mechanical monsters made a huge push, as if they gathered their numbers first before delivering the push. They kept pushing forward no matter how many of their fellow mechanical monsters were killed in front of them. As the monster swarm kept pushing their way into that building, they shoved the wreckages of their dead brethren aside to open up a road or just trampled them into small pieces and slowly closed the distance between them and the Hunters.

A Hunter suddenly shouted.

“Hey!! Someone, just anyone, relay the situation to the other Hunters upstairs!! It’s not the time to be looking for relics!!”

“We’ve already been doing that!! But we can’t get any contact at all!! Is it the colourless mist?!!”

“Hah?!! Why now of all time?!!”

“Hell if I know!! I can’t do anything about it, I just can’t contact them!!”

Without the help of the Hunters who were looking for relics upstairs, the Hunters in the first floor had no chance of winning. But since they could not get any contact, they could not call for help.

“…It can’t be helped, I’ll go and call them back.”

One of the Hunters said that and left the other Hunters.

“I-I’ll go too!”

“Me too!!”

Some of the Hunters followed suit and left that place.

The first guy really went to call the other Hunters to get back, but that was not the case for the other Hunters who followed him. They were just running away from that place, thinking that it was too dangerous to stay there. They wanted to get into safety since it was safer to join the rest of the Hunters who were hunting for relics upstairs.

Then, some of the Hunters who noticed that also followed behind them with the same excuse rather than trying to stop them. Although it was only a portion of the Hunters there that went upstairs, it was enough to make the frontline crumble.

The monsters that were held back until now quickly flooded into the building. They used their cannons, guns, and their powerful mechanical bodies to kill the Hunters. The Hunters who could not stand the situation started running away out of fear and the ones who were trying to hold the monsters on the first floor were overwhelmed as they slowly retreated to the second floor.

It only took a few seconds for the monsters to completely seize the first floor.

＿＿＿*＿

Akira was searching the 30th floor. Since his information-gathering device was getting less and less sensitive, he continued his search carefully to make sure that he would not get ambushed. Alpha was guiding him to take the safest route while looking for a stair to go up.

“Akira, it’s about the sensitivity of your information-gathering device… It seems that it’s not because of the colourless mist.”

Akira looked happy, but his expression quickly turned into one of confusion.

“That’s good to hear… Right? Wait, it’s not like the sensitivity returned back to normal either, huh?”

“Yes, the sensitivity is falling down even now. I think it’s because of this building.”

“This building? But didn’t you say just now that it has nothing to do with this building?”

“What I meant back then is the layout of the rooms and the hallways inside this building. It’s not limited to the old-world ruin alone; when the government or big corporations negotiate about some secret stuff, they would use a special room that prevents any information from leaking out in any forms to the outside of that room. And we’re in a similar situation to that, it’s highly difficult to even scan your surroundings using your information-gathering device at the moment. If my guess is correct, this building might have some kind of feature that blocks signals.”

“So you mean that signal blocking function suddenly turned on, huh. But why so suddenly?”

“I have no answer to that question.”

Akira stopped and thought. He then asked Alpha with a serious expression.

“Should we pull back for now? Although we can’t get to our main goal, I’ve already gathered quite a lot of old-world relics today.”

Alpha thought for a bit before answering that question with a big smile.

“If you think so, then let’s retreat. I guess it’s better to cut it short before your bad luck goes off again.”

“Roger that.”

Akira smiled bitterly and turned around, just when he was about to swing his leg forward, Alpha suddenly signalled him to stop.

“What’s wrong?”

“Someone is coming. That person is running in this direction, it seems that he’s in a hurry. At this rate, he will reach here soon.”

Akira pointed his gun in the direction where Alpha told him that person was coming from. It was to be safe just in case if it was an ambush.

But that person was Carol. As she was running through the hallway, she spotted Akira and shouted at him while still running.

“Akira!! Help me!! Do something about them!!”

As Akira peeked behind Carol, he could see small mechanical monsters with half-destroyed bodies chasing her. He found that weird, but he decided to at least give Carol a help.

“Are you out of ammo? Get out from my shooting line.”

Carol quickly ran out of Akira's line of sight. Akira then aimed at those monsters using his A2D rifle and shot them. As the piercing bullets hit the monsters' half-destroyed bodies, it turned them to scraps and blew them to pieces.

Akira could only consider those monsters as weak and started to ponder. [If they were this weak, Carol should be able to defeat them without my help, there was no need to ask for my help.]

He found that weird as he mumbled. "If it's only that much, she should have done something about them herself-"

But before he could even finish his sentence. A swarm of monsters suddenly gushed in from the hallway where Carol came from.

Akira quickly pulled out his DVTS minigun and showered those monsters with bullets. Although it was able to make quick work for the smaller mechanical monsters with weak armour, the monsters with thicker armours kept pushing forward against the raining bullets.

When Akira was about to change to his CWH anti-material rifle, Carol who had already stood beside him shot them first. The bullet that she shot pierced the monster's thick armour and sent it flying back. It only took one shot to kill that thick armoured monster. Although she was using nothing but a hand cannon, it might have the same firepower as a CWH anti-material rifle. But she could not use it for continuous shooting, thus it was not a suitable gun to fight a swarm.

"We need to run away!"

After Carol said that, she immediately started running again, leaving Akira behind.

Akira quickly followed Carol, Alpha was floating beside him while smiling bitterly.

"It seems that we're too late. Akira, your bad luck is really fast."

“You can say that again!!”

Akira was chasing Carol with an irritated face.

Unlike Akira, who came to the Seranthal building for the first time, Carol had come there numerous times in the past, thus she was able to keep running without getting lost.

Although the situation inside that building was completely different from what Carol had known, Carol placed her bet that the layout of the building did not change as she kept running forward without checking whether there were monsters in front of her or not. The monsters were coming from below, so as long as the layout of the building did not change, the monsters should not be able to circle their way around Akira and Carol.

Akira was still running behind Carol when he asked her a question.

“Carol, what’s going on here? What happened downstairs?”

“Is it that the other monsters from outside are coming inside this building since I killed the monsters guarding this building?”

“I don’t know. Well, I guess that’s the case for the Hunters, but… I actually thought you used an opening in the monsters guarding this place to kill some of them and sneaked into this building, but judging from what you said just now, you killed all of them, right? And you did that alone on top of that. You’re a really interesting fellow, how did you kill those guardian monsters?”

Carol seemed to be honestly interested when she asked that question, Akira’s face turned stern as he said.

“I can’t tell you. It’s my secret trump card after all.”

And even if Akira told Carol the truth, it would only end up with Carol questioning his sanity or suspecting that he was just simply lying. So he decided to deflect that question, he did not tell any lie there.

It seemed that Carol was not expecting Akira would tell her anyway, so she just smiled as she said.

“Is that so? If we’re not in this situation, I would love to spend more time to loosen your lips, but it’s not the time for that. And also, even if someone destroyed all the autonomous weapons outside, it won’t cause the other mechanical monsters roaming the ruin to flood this building.”

After that, Carol’s expression turned cloudy.

“…Or at least, that should not cause something like this. The mechanical monsters inside the Mihazono ruin are security drones with fixed patrol areas that they’re protecting, there’s no way they would go outside their designated area. That’s why, in Mihazono ruin, you sometimes can save yourself by entering a nearby building when you encounter powerful monsters. Thanks to that, this ruin is a relatively safe ruin for the Hunters to explore. That’s the real reason why so many Hunters frequent this ruin, enough for the Hunter Office to build their branch in this ruin.”

Akira frowned and asked a question.

“Then why is this happening right now?”

Carol twitched a bit and then screamed.

“Like hell if I know!! That’s how it has always been up until now!! I’ve never found monsters inside this building and the monsters outside have never tried to enter the building!!! Even if those Hunters ran to this building from a group of monsters, those monsters would not even try to enter this building to chase those Hunters!! So if there’s any reason why this is happening, I want to know that reason too!!”

Although there was no way for Akira and the other two to know it, the reason was actually very simple. It was simply because the manager of that building, Seranthal, had given permission for those monsters to enter that building. And at the same time, she also requested for reinforcements to take out the intruders. Because of that, all the monsters in that ruin answered that request and quickly gathered there to kill all the Hunters inside.

Akira was still running as he said.

“As I thought, old-world ruin is really scary. No one can say for sure what will happen.”

As Carol looked at Akira who was still calm, she regained some of her calmness. She then smiled bitterly and said to him.

“…You’re right about that, I put too much trust on my experience coming to this place.”

Akira then asked another question.

“By the way, I understand that we can’t head downstairs, so where exactly are we heading now? It’s not like we can find a way to escape if we keep going upstairs, right? Are you planning to make a stand somewhere? Or are you just running randomly from those monsters?”

“Nope, I did tell you before, right? I know a backdoor, we’re going to use that backdoor to escape.”

Akira was so surprised when he heard that unexpected answer, he then asked another question.

“…So the backdoor that would allow us to escape this building is located upstairs?”

“Well, I won’t tell you to trust me. It’s completely up to you if you believe me or not… Of course, I won’t tell you to not follow me in this situation, after all, I’m sure that it’s meaningless even if I tell you so… Haah…”

Carol exasperatedly sighed.

If Akira kept following her, obviously, she would end up guiding him to the location that she could sell for 5,000,000 Aurum. But she had no plans to tell him not to follow her even if he did not pay her. In that situation where she was being chased by a swarm of monsters, it would be bad if Akira turned hostile too.

As Carol was cursing her bad luck since she would be losing a piece of information that she could have sold for a huge amount of money, Akira suddenly said something that she did not expect at all.

“If you tell me not to follow you, I’ll go somewhere else though. Should I do that?”

Carol suddenly stopped out of surprise. Because of that, Akira could not stop in time and ran past her. He then stopped in panic and looked back at her in surprise.

“Don’t stop now. We need to run, right? Or is this where the backdoor is?”

Carol looked at Akira with a face saying that she was both surprised and suspicious. She then asked Akira a question with a dead-serious tone.

“…Are you being serious?”

“Yeah. I have no plans to create more enemies in this situation. You look pretty strong after all.”

Carol stared at Akira. She was trying to judge if he was lying from his tone and expression. Then according to her experience, she found that Akira was being serious there.

Carol was quite surprised. Although she was in a rather precarious situation, she ended up standing still in that place for a few seconds.

Akira more or less had the same thought as Carol. He had no time to deal with her in case she turned hostile in that situation. But there, rather than thinking that they had no other choice but to work together, Akira’s line of thinking was so twisted that he chose to keep his distance away from others in case they started trying to kill each other for some reason.

“…I’m not really sure what’s going on in your head, but if you’re going to stay here, I’ll go ahead and leave you.”

After he said that, Akira immediately turned around and was about to leave. If they stayed there, it was only a matter of time before they would be swallowed by the incoming swarm. So they had no other choice but to keep running at the moment.

Seeing Akira start running ahead, leaving her behind, Carol snapped back to reality. She then smiled and chased Akira. Once she caught up with him, she smiled at him and said in a good mood.

“This way.”

Akira then said to her, just to make sure that she understood.

“I won’t pay you any money, you know?”

Even when Akira said those words that did not show any wish to compromise, Carol kept smiling.

“I know, that’s why, how about we make a deal instead? If you escort me out alive, I’ll not ask any payment for sharing the information about the backdoor, what do you think?”

“So you would give away that 5,000,000 Aurum information just for that? You’re being rather generous here.”

“Well, it’s not like I can bring any money to the afterlife after all. That’s why I don’t plan to be stingy about it, I’ll also pay for your ammo expense.”

It was a good thing if Carol would help to escape that building, and Akira had nothing to complain about that deal. Thus he immediately replied.

“Alright.”

Carol smiled.

“We have a deal then. I’ll be counting on you, be sure to properly protect me, okay?”

Although it was a sudden request, it did not change the fact that it was still a request. So Akira answered back firmly.

“You don’t even need to tell me. Since I’ve accepted that request, I’ll be sure to do it properly.”

“That sounds so reassuring.”

They then continued running inside that building with Carol guiding the way smiling.

As someone who had already explored that building several times in the past, Carol was able to navigate inside that building which had a complex layout without getting lost. As for the monsters that were closing up from behind, it was Akira’s job to deal with them.

It was obvious from a look that the mechanical monsters were designed for killing purposes rather than being equipped for apprehending people. These monsters were equipped with wheels on their legs to ride over rubbles, which allowed them to quickly close their distance to Akira. Considering that there were a lot of obstacles scattered inside that building, they were traversing the building at a relatively high speed.

Akira aimed and shot those legs before starting to run again. After losing their mobility, those monsters were turned into extra obstacles blocking the hallway. Akira accurately shot those monsters down one by one, and thanks to Alpha’s detection support, there was no need for him to look back to take a careful aim. When he released his shot, he just turned back without losing much momentum, released a shot, and then ran again to catch up with Carol.

Carol saw Akira’s skill and smiled.

[As expected of someone who can kill all the guardian monsters alone, he’s indeed strong. It’s rather amazing for someone his age. Well, that’s of course if he’s as young as he looks.]

There were many Hunters whose age couldn’t be determined with a look. Their body was the main tool for the Hunters, thus it was not rare for Hunters to take anti-ageing treatment to maintain their bodies in tip-top shape. The medicines that they consumed might also have effects on their cells. Sometimes, it accelerated their ageing, and sometimes, it had the opposite effect. Of course, they could reverse that through treatment, but there were Hunters who intentionally did not take that treatment.

There were also Hunters with full cyborg bodies, these Hunters had a completely different look compared to their ages. After all, cyborgs could switch their bodies as many times as they wanted, it was impossible to judge a cyborg’s age solely from the looks. Because of those reasons, there were many Hunters who had completely different ages compared to their outer appearances.

As Carol was helping Akira shoot back at the monsters chasing them, she asked him a question.

“Say, Akira, how old are you?”

“No idea.”

Carol thought that Akira simply did not want to answer that question.

“I see, well, if you don’t want to tell me, I won’t force you though. After all, I’m also keeping my age a secret. I sometimes gave a random answer when other people asked about my age.”

But Akira casually replied.

“That’s not it, I really have no idea. I don’t know my own age, after all, I’ve spent quite a large portion of my life not even knowing the current date. And no one ever told me when I was born and how old I’m right now. That’s why I don’t know my own age.”

“…I see.”

After hearing that, Carol decided not to pursue any further. It was a common thing among the Hunters who originated from the slum city to not know their own age. And some of those Hunters did not like it when people inquired.

Carol did not think that Akira was lying. Although it sounded as if he just casually answered back, it might be just him putting up a front. Whichever the case, it was not worth antagonizing him just to pursue that question, thus she asked a different question.

“By the way, have you been doing Hunter jobs for a long time? It’s up to you to decide the starting line.”

There were many Hunters who only started actively doing Hunter jobs years after they received their Hunter ID. There were also those who had been doing Hunter jobs for a long time before actually getting formally registered as Hunters. Then there were those who did not include the time when they were below Rank 10 in their history as Hunters.

Because of that, many Hunters had different time spans when they started doing Hunter jobs for real compared to how long they registered themselves as Hunters. Some of those Hunters were sensitive when asked about the period when they started working as Hunters. Because of that, Carol left it up to Akira to decide.

Akira hesitated for a bit before replying back.

“…Not that long. Pretty short, that’s all I can say.”

“Is that so? Then you’re a fresh Hunter, huh. It’s amazing for a fresh Hunter to be as skilled as you.”

“I just got lucky.”

To be more precise, it was all thanks to Alpha. Akira thought that he did not lie there since he did get lucky for meeting Alpha.

Carol thought that Akira was trying to be humble, so she teasingly said to him.

“Oh my, luck is also a skill, you know? Especially for us who might get killed anytime.”

Akira smiled bitterly.

“Is that so? Then it means that my skill has really gotten worse, huh.”

“It’s not a problem as long as you get to return back alive. You have no plans to die here too, right?”

“Of course.”

Akira and Carol hurried up to escape the situation that they were in before they ran out of luck.

Thanks to Carol guiding him, Akira was able to quickly find the stairs to go up. But just like last time, he encountered a lot of locked doors preventing him from going further, and every time that happened, they had no other choice but to look for another stair in that floor.

Akira annoyedly mumbled.

“Why are there so many locked doors? Is it that someone is bullying us or something?”

Carol giggled.

“If it’s really someone bullying us, that would be Seranthal then. According to her, as the manager of this building, this building is actually closed after all. So I bet that originally all of these doors were actually closed, the ones that are open must have been opened forcefully by someone in the past.”

“Ohhh, I see.”

It was not an easy feat to open a locked old-world door. Whether they opened it through brute force or through hacking, either way, both required a ton of effort. There were Hunters who set the doors so that only they could open those doors, and there were Hunters who decided to just tear those doors.

The doors that Carol and Akira were passing through were doors that were left open either because they were torn down or because their control panels were toasted. Of course, there were no Hunters who would spare their resources to fix those doors.

“Wait, does that mean that most of the doors on this floor are locked?”

Carol confirmed Akira’s guess.

“Unfortunately, that’s indeed the case. We’re aiming for 45th floor, but once we reach the 40th floor, we’ll have to change stairs every single floor up.”

“I don’t know who exactly opened these doors, but, did they do that intentionally to make it more difficult climbing this building? What a pain in the neck, what exactly were they thinking?”

“They might intentionally do that so they can sell the map of the layout at a high price.”

“That sounds plausible.”

The more difficult and confusing an area was, the higher the price of the map of that area. After hearing Carol’s explanation, Akira thought that it did make sense as he sighed.

Akira and Carol were shooting back at the mechanical monsters chasing them while running. Thanks to Carol’s precise guide, they were able to get to their destination in the shortest time and the monsters who tried to encircle them could not get ahead of them. It caused Akira and Carol to start assuming that the only monsters in that building were all behind them.

Although it was only for a few seconds, Akira lowered his watch to whatever that was in front of him. With all the monsters coming from behind him, he had no leeway of focusing his guard on what was in front of him. So, it would be unfair to consider that as carelessness.

But it did not change the fact that they did not put much attention to what was in front of them. It was then, something happened.

Akira was climbing the stairs past the 40th floor behind Carol who was right in front of him. When Carol saw that the door to the 41st floor was locked, she quickly turned to the door leading to the 40th floor.

The moment she stepped into the 40th floor, Carol immediately froze. Akira who came from behind her was also the same. There were already multiple mechanical monsters there waiting for them.

Those mechanical monsters had a long body, legs and arms extended out from those bodies, and there were rifles perched on their backs. Then to top it off, multiple monsters were watching that door where Carol and Akira just came out from.

The shock caused Carol to freeze up. There should not be any other way to reach the 40th floor except for this particular stairway that she and Akira just passed through, so Carol did not expect to find any monsters on that floor.

Akira was also surprised by that, he could not help but to freeze up too, although only for a few split seconds.

Everything happened in slow motion. When Carol saw the rifles of the monsters in front of her pointing at her, she realised that she had no chance in evading them. Strangely enough, she did not have the time to feel fear as she calmly assessed her situation.

Then in the next moment, Akira suddenly jumped into Carol’s field of vision. He stood in front of Carol with his back facing the monsters as if he was covering her. And almost at the same time, she could hear gunshots coming from the monsters behind Akira.

Bullets showered Akira’s back, his augmented suit went to full power to take in the impact of those bullets. Then, while still facing his back against the monsters and receiving the bullets, Akira turned his arm, which held his rifle, a bit past the limit of his joints and started shooting back at those monsters.

Akira was shooting back in a difficult position, normally, none of his shots would hit. But due to Alpha’s support, Akira defied that logic and accurately shot the rifles perching on those monsters.

Carol immediately moved to help Akira. She used him as a shield and grabbed her hand cannon that was more or less as strong as CWH anti-material rifle and started shooting at the monsters in front of her.

It did not even take 10 seconds for them to make short work of those monsters. When the shooting stopped, all the monsters were dead. Thanks to Akira covering her, Carol was unharmed. But then, Akira coughed out blood and fell to the ground.

After confirming that all the monsters were dead, Carol hurriedly checked on Akira.

Although the bullets could not pierce through Akira’s augmented suit, his augmented suit could hardly dampen all the impact from those bullets. As a result, his inner organs were injured and blood was dripping out from his mouth.

Akira pushed himself away from the ground and spitted out all the blood that was left inside his mouth. He then put down his rucksack, pulled out his medicines, and quickly swallowed them. As expected of expensive medicines, they immediately went to action and showed their results.

Akira’s face distorted in pain as he mumbled.

“M-my…”

He looked completely devastated.

“My relics…”

The relics that he was carrying on his back had served as his shield when he was showered by the bullets, and now they turned into scraps scattered on the floor.

As Akira watched the scene laid in front of him, he hung his head low. All the relics that he had collected had turned worthless. The rucksack that he had used to carry the relics had also turned unusable. There was no point in carrying them around any longer.

“Although I did my best collecting them and carrying them with me all the way here…”

Carol looked shocked when she asked Akira a question.

“Uhh, Akira, are you okay?”

Akira turned surprised, he could not believe what he just heard.

“A-are you seriously asking me if I’m okay after seeing this?!!!”

“I mean, are you injured?”

“Ahh, that, huh. No, I’m alright. I coughed out some blood, but this much is nothing and I still have enough medicines with me.”

Akira was saying that he was injured but it was nothing serious. Carol sighed in relief after confirming that he was alright. But at the same time, she was also a bit surprised by how he was taking in their situation as she thanked him.

“Uhhh, by the way, thank you for saving me. Thanks to you, I was able to get out alive from that.”

“Don’t mention it, I’ve accepted that request after all… But still, I worked super hard to be able to get in here, you know…”

Akira even had to run on a building’s wall to be able to defeat the autonomous weapons guarding that building, and the result of that hard work was now scattered in pieces right in front of him. The shock was pretty devastating for him.

Seeing Akira like this, Carol could not help but smile. The current Akira did not look like a Hunter who could immediately react to that sudden turn of events and jump in front of her to protect her. That young boy, who ignored the fact that he just coughed out blood as he immediately swallowed medicines, appeared so meek and devastated now while looking at his relics that were shredded into pieces.

As Carol thought that it was just the nature of being a Hunter, she could not help but let out a giggle. Akira who noticed that glared at her.

“This is not funny at all. All my hard work just to get in this building is now all in vain, you know?!!”

Carol apologized while still giggling.

“I’m sorry, I really am sorry. As my thanks, I’ll pay for the relics that you lost. Let’s say, how about 40,000,000 Aurum? I’ll transfer the money once we’re out of this place.”

Akira looked dumbfounded.

“A-are you sure?”

“Of course, you lost those relics for protecting me after all. So it would be really bad if you blame that on me and abandon me.”

Akira still could not believe it, so he asked the same question again.

“A-are you really sure you’re okay with that?”

Carol smiled and replied.

“Yeah. If you’re not satisfied with that number, we can negotiate after we get out from here. But I think those relics should be worth around that much. Since I’ve brought back relics from this building a few times before, I more or less know the worth of the relics in this building. So, even if you say that they should worth more, I won’t easily offer you more money, you know.”

Akira looked perplexed as he said.

“Ah, no, that’s not it, I’m okay with that number. Uhhh, thank you.”

“Don’t mention it… Or at least that’s what I wanted to say, but it’s too soon for that. If you want me to pay you that money, make sure to protect me until we escape this building, okay?”

Akira answered back with a serious expression.

“Of course. Since I’ve accepted your request, I’ll properly protect you regardless of that deal.”

Carol smiled happily at Akira.

“I’m counting on you. So then, let’s go… Do tell me if it hurts to move your body around.”

“It’s okay. I used expensive medicines back there after all. I don’t feel any pain right now. Although, to be honest, I want to take a break until the medicines completely heal my injuries, but it’s not the time for that, so let’s hurry up.”

They could not afford to stay in that place for too long. The longer they stayed there, the closer the swarm would be. Akira and Carol immediately started running again.

While he was running through the 40th floor, Akira asked Alpha.

“Alpha, thank you back there.”

Akira’s move back then was mostly thanks to Alpha’s control. He actually could not react in time, and even if he did, he was not sure if he could have protected Carol.

“Don’t mention it. It’s my job to provide you with my support. That aside, are you really okay?”

“It’s true that I don’t feel any pain. It still feels weird when I move my body though, but it’s not the time to worry about that now. More importantly, is my augmented suit okay after taking that barrage? That’s more important, right?”

“It’s okay. Although it did temporarily boost the energy consumption, your augmented suit should be functioning normally right now.”

“I see, that’s good to hear.”

“But still, it’s great that she would pay for the relics that were destroyed.”

“You can say that again… By the way, was that the only way out?”

Had Alpha detected those monsters beforehand, Akira might not have lost his relics back there. He thought so as he threw that question to Alpha.

Alpha just smiled and said.

“The layout of the floors in this building is blocking my detection. If you’re okay with taking those bullets head-on instead of using the relics as your shield, and if you’re also okay with me forcing your body to move even if you’re badly injured just like that time when you fought the relic thieves, then the answer is no.”

Akira twitched and said.

“Well, I wouldn’t want you to do that though.”

Now that Alpha confirmed that Akira had nothing to complain about her support even after losing his relics, she smiled and said.

“You only got light injuries and someone is offering to pay for the relics that you lost, so you just need to return back alive now.”

“Yeah, but then again, what do you think about this back door on the upper floor?”

“I don’t know the answer to that question. Since she asked for 5,000,000 Aurum, I bet there’s really a backdoor. So for now, let’s just place our trust in her.”

“You’re right. It’s not like I can go downstairs anyway, the way upward is the only way forward. Let’s just put our bet on her and continue.”

Although Alpha’s ability to detect enemies was reduced, it was not that bad in detecting enemies on the same floor as them. So, even though they encountered more monsters after that, Akira was able to detect them first and snipe them before they could attack the duo.

Carol was shooting at the monsters in front of her when she voiced out her question.

“But still, where are all of these monsters coming from? They shouldn’t be inside this building though…”

Akira who was shooting at the same targets then answered.

“They’re here now, so it doesn’t matter. Let’s just kill them and move on. One thing for sure, we have quite a lot of monsters chasing us from behind.”

“Well, you’re right about that…”

There was an elevator door not too far from them. For the sake of moving people and stuff around that building, the elevator door there was pretty big. Except for those people with the right permission, no one could use the elevator. That was why Akira and Carol were forced to climb that building using stairs.

But then that elevator door suddenly opened without making any sounds. Akira quickly reacted to that by pointing his rifle in that direction. Carol also did the same although a bit late. Both of them pulled the trigger almost simultaneously and started shooting at the rifles peeking out from the inside of that elevator.

Although both of them were surprised, their expression stayed stern. Akira's face then turned grim as he said.

"Now we know how they got here first. So this is the reason, huh."

What was left behind that elevator door was nothing but the dead wreckages of the monsters that the duo just killed. These monsters were using elevators to get ahead of Akira and Carol.

"What's going on here!? So the manager of this building is letting these monsters use the elevator?!"

"That seems to be the case."

"To think that the manager of this building has also turned hostile… Nah, I guess it's too late to be surprised about that by now, huh?"

All the Hunters inside that building were basically intruders, so that was to be expected.

Akira saw Carol's grim expression, he then asked her a question.

"Does this have anything to do with the backdoor that we're heading to?"

"None. To be more precise, they might have predicted where we're heading and sending monsters ahead of us, but it should be still alright."

“Is that so? In that case, we should hurry up then, at this rate, they’ll surround us.”

“You’re right, let’s go. But seriously, from one thing to another, we’re really unlucky today. Today is really a bad day… Akira, what’s wrong? Are you hurt somewhere?”

Carol noticed Akira’s weird reaction and asked him if he was okay. Akira, who just slightly twitched, returned his face to normal.

Carol was a bit bothered by Akira’s strange reaction, but it was not the time for that as she quickly returned back to guiding the way forward.

Alpha, who had a good guess of what Akira was thinking, just smiled at him.

“It’s alright, it’s all going to be fine as long as you can return back alive. So let’s just head back home and have a good laugh at what happened today.”

Even if it was true that Carol was roped into Akira’s bad luck, there should not be any problems as long as they could return back alive. They knew that being a Hunter was a dangerous occupation. Once they returned back alive from that place, everything that happened that day would be an amusing story that they could laugh off in the future.

Luck was also a part of Hunter’s skill. So those who could fight back against their bad luck were indeed skilled Hunters.

Akira and Carol continued running inside the Seranthal building, heading to the backdoor that Carol told Akira about. Now that they knew there were monsters ahead, they did not get caught off guard again as they carved their way forward through the monsters blocking their way. It was all good and fine up until that point, but the further they went forward, the grimmer their expression became.

Akira looked at the cause of that and said.

“There’s no end to these monsters. Looking at this situation, I guess the Hunters downstairs are all dead, huh…”

The mechanical monsters that were chasing Akira and Carol from behind had increased in number, enough to even fully block the whole hallway. These monsters must have passed through the Hunters downstairs, and now they came upstairs to kill Carol and Akira, who were still alive inside the building. There might be some Hunters making their stand in some small rooms, but they were the minority among all the Hunters who came inside that building.

Akira was holding back the monsters behind them using his CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun while Carol was clearing the way forward. As the wreckages of the dead monsters in the front of the swarms blocked the hallway, all the monsters behind them slowly pushed their way through those wreckages and crept closer and closer to Akira and Carol.

Akira and Carol somehow reached the 45th floor, they finally reached their destination. The stairs that they took to get there were already filled with wreckages, there was no way to go downstairs now.

“Carol, how far until we reach the backdoor? This is already the 45th floor, so it should be somewhere on this floor, right?”

Carol had a grim expression as she said.

Akira peeked toward that direction. Countless monsters were already waiting inside that hallway. And right when Akira peeked at them, the elevator door near those monsters opened and delivered extra reinforcements. The duo looked totally disheartened.

Akira sighed and said with a serious face.

“It can’t be helped, we need to break through them.”

Carol was so surprised. She thought that it was impossible to break through that blockade.

“…Breakthrough them? Right there? With that many monsters?”

“If we take too long shaving their number, this floor will be flooded with monsters before we can move forward. Not to mention, I don’t have much ammo left. If we don’t break through them in one go, our fates would be sealed as the time passes… Look there, they got even more reinforcement.”

The elevator door opened again and delivered even more monsters inside that hallway. Akira believed that they would not stop sending monsters there anytime soon.

Carol looked at that and made her resolve.

“…Alright.”

“I’ll go in first then you help me from behind.”

“Since I’m your bodyguard, it’s not like I can take cover behind you, right?”

Looking at Akira, who said that so flatly as if he was only stating a fact without a trace of anger or hatred, Carol smiled happily and said.

“…You’re right, I’ll be counting on you.”

Akira swallowed some medicines beforehand and put some ready inside his mouth, he then reloaded new magazines into his rifles. He stood in the middle of the hallway with his CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun ready on his hands. He was ready to go.

“Alpha.”

“Ready when you are.”

Seeing Alpha who was smiling like usual, a question popped out inside Akira’s head.

“You said that it’s easy to fight against mechanical monsters back there, so I can put my hopes up, right?”

“Of course. But you better get your resolve ready, Akira.”

Akira forced himself to make a confident smile. Right after that, he jumped out into the hallway where those monsters were waiting for him. He gathered his focus and compressed his time perception, inside that slow-motion world, Akira made his resolve, aimed the rifles on both of his hands toward the monsters in front of him, and pulled the trigger.

The special ammo of his CWH anti-material rifle easily pierced through the monsters’ thick armours and blew the inside of their bodies, it then went further and pierced right through the monsters behind them too. While the shower of bullets coming out from Akira’s DVTS minigun only had enough power to dent their armours, it was strong enough to destroy their limbs and guns. The monsters that were thrown back blocked the other monsters from aiming at Akira, the dead monsters blocked their way forward, and the destroyed guns blew up and took out the monsters near their vicinity.

Alpha used all the information that she got from Akira’s information-gathering device, she then analyzed it, processed it, and used it to confirm the position of all the enemies and their lines of sight. Since they were on the same floor as Akira and pretty close to him, even with the reduced sensitivity, Alpha was able to detect even the slightest move that these monsters made.

Alpha took control of Akira’s augmented suit, enhanced his vision, and corrected his aim to take out the first monsters with the highest possibility of inflicting serious injury to Akira. While at the same time, she maximized the effectiveness of the DVTS barrage to lower the monsters’ firepower. As the explosions of their guns took out the monsters around where those explosions happened, the dead monsters turned into obstacles that slowed down the other monsters' movements. Alpha fully grasped the situation of every single second of that battle as she kept Akira and Carol from the monsters aim and guided Akira to make the best possible sequence of action.

Akira was running forward in that situation where even the smallest slip up could cause the enemies' shots to concentrate on him and immediately kill him. His augmented suit forced his body to move to its utmost limit to the point that it was almost enough to kill him. His muscles and bones could not take the burden as they were screaming in pain. The moment the medicines that he had taken in beforehand healed those injuries, the augmented suit would place even more burden on his body again.

Akira was pushing forward inside that slow-motion world, bullets were flying from behind and in front of him, he could hear the sounds of those flying bullets and he could feel the wind pressure grazing his skin as those bullets flew past near him. In the middle of that, Akira focused to feel the movement of his augmented suit and tried his best to match his body movement with his augmented suit, so as not to slow down Alpha's control over his augmented suit.

Thanks to his enhanced vision, Akira could see the next location he needed to position himself, the next action he needed to take, and the next target that he needed to take out first. He tried his best to follow Alpha's guidance that was produced through processing a huge amount of information and after a huge amount of complex calculations.

Inside his enhanced vision, Akira also could see the predicted trajectory line of the monsters' aims. Alpha sometimes gave him order to pass through positions where he would get hit by bullets. But even after knowing that, Akira would still push forward and take that route without hesitating. Then, as expected, he would grit his teeth and take in the bullet while making sure that it would not break his balance as he focused himself to follow the next order.

It was of course impossible to evade all the enemies' shots. As such, Akira just brushed that off as he understood very well he needed to take some of those bullets and make sure that they did not cause any fatal injuries in order to return back alive from that place.

Alpha's orders were important, even if they were directing him to soak up those bullets. Akira placed his trust in Alpha as he kept on fighting. He stepped over the dead monsters in front of him and continued pushing forward.

Thanks to Alpha's support, Akira kept on shooting at the monsters in front of him with the utmost efficiency while at the same time reducing the efficiency of the monsters in front of him with his barrage.

Carol, was following behind Akira while giving as much support as she could, she kept telling her body to keep moving since it kept stopping out of astonishment from the scene happening in front of her.

Carol did not expect that Akira was that strong.

[…So strong!! I knew all along that he's strong enough to kill the monsters guarding this building alone, but I never thought that he's this strong!! Amazing!! Really amazing!!]

Carol did not know about Alpha. Thus, she thought that it was purely out of Akira's skill alone. Although it was out of Carol's wrong evaluation, in her eyes, Akira looked like a very attractively strong Hunter.

Carol unconsciously smiled. It was a rare smile different from the attractive smile that she usually used on someone who she wanted to seduce.

After pushing through that fierce fight, Akira and Carol stood in front of the door that they were aiming for. Although the battle only lasted for 5 minutes, for both of them, it felt like forever. Akira himself was already low on ammo and medicines.

Akira faced his back toward that door and fought the monster chasing him while Carol rushed toward that door and opened it. After she checked everything, she shouted at Akira.

Akira quickly went inside that door and the door almost immediately shut. The monsters on the other side of that door released a barrage of bullets, Akira could hear those bullets hitting the thick door from the other side. It was a close call.

After escaping that dangerous situation, Akira finally had the leeway to relax and reassess his situation. As he scanned his surroundings, he was taken aback and said.

“We’re outside?”

Akira was already outside. Some of the floors in the Seranthal building had platforms and those platforms were actually landing platforms, Akira was standing on one of those platforms.

Akira flusteredly asked Carol a question.

“Is this the backdoor?”

“Yes, did that surprise you?”

“Wait for a sec, how exactly are we going to escape from this place? I can’t fly, and of course, I don’t want to jump down from this height.”

Even for Akira, who was experienced in jumping down a tall building, he did not want to jump from that height. And putting height aside, Akira had no plans to jump from a tall building two times in a day.

Carol, who saw Akira get a bit worked up, found it amusing as she giggled and said.

“I can’t fly too and I have no plans to kill myself by jumping from this height. It’ll start to move soon, so let’s just keep that door closed.”

Carol then moved a pile of wreckage and put it right next to the door, preventing it from getting opened. It was a pretty heavy pile of wreckage and it was positioned to get stuck on the door. Thus, it would be really hard to open the door from the other side. And even if the door was destroyed, that wreckage would then be turned into a blockade.

Carol then said to Akira.

“Come over here.”

Akira followed Carol into the landing platform. It was pretty huge for a landing platform on top of a building.

Although Akira never saw it for himself, he was wondering if there was this so-called airplane in that place and that Carol was planning to escape from that building using it. But as he scanned the platform, he did not see anything that might be that so-called airplane.

As Akira started to feel uneasy, he then asked Carol with a worried face.

“Carol, can you tell me now where are we heading to? And how are you planning to escape from this building?”

“We’ll be there soon. It’s faster if you see it for yourself. Even if I explain it to you now, I don’t think that you would believe me anyway.”

“What do you mean by that?”

“You’ll get it when you see it. Ah, there it is, it’s that thing over there.”

Carol then pointed her finger. But Akira could not see anything in the direction she was pointing, there was nothing but the runway there.

“…I don’t see anything though?”

“It’s foggy so it’s hard to see. Look closely, don’t you see a shadow in the middle of that runway?”

Akira stared closely in that direction, it was true that he saw some kind of silhouette, but it did not resemble anything that he knew of. He then tilted his head.

As Akira was wondering what was there, Carol already walked ahead toward that thing. When she did that, suddenly, the image around her started to get distorted.

Akira looked at that in confusion. The rift then widened, when he peeked into that rift, he finally realized that it was some kind of door. As he peeked deeper into what was behind that door, he could see that it led to another place. Or at least, the place behind that door was not another landing platform.

Alpha smiled and explained to Akira who was completely surprised by that.

“To think that you wouldn’t be able to see it unless you get this close, this is a pretty high-grade optical camouflage. Akira, this is a delivery drone. I bet this is from the old-world. The reason why you can’t see it is because of its optical camouflage. It’s also equipped with other camouflaging devices, even your information-gathering device would not be able to detect it unless you get close enough to it.”

It was an old-world delivery drone. From Akira’s point of view, it looked like the interior of that delivery drone was floating in the air. But when he approached it while already knowing that there was a delivery drone there, Akira started to recognize the outline of that delivery drone.

The door of that delivery drone was completely open and it led into a platform, connected to a storage room inside of it.

Carol stepped into that storage room and called Akira.

Akira snapped back to reality and followed Carol into that storage room. The door was still open even after he went in, but not too long after that, it closed on its own.

The storage room inside the delivery drone was pretty spacious, but there was nothing other than Akira and Carol inside it. Seeing Carol relaxed there, Akira also lowered his guard.

He then asked Carol who was already resting.

“Carol, explain to me what’s going on here. First of all, is this thing safe?”

“Maybe yes.”

“Maybe?”

“The fact there are monsters inside the Seranthal building alone is not normal. That’s why I can’t say for sure if this thing is safe or not. But if this won’t work, then nothing will and we’ll have no other choice but to climb down the building’s wall.”

“…I see, I understand. So then, what will happen next?”

“Once the time comes, this thing will start flying on its own… Just wait for a bit.”

Carol then opened her information terminal and checked something.

“15 minutes. We have no other choice but to wait for 15 more minutes. Ah, and also, don’t get too close to the door, it might open the door if you do that.”

“Okay. So basically, this delivery drone is that backdoor, right?”

“Yep. It seems that it regularly visits multiple buildings, and this Seranthal building is just one of them. If it follows the usual schedule, the next stop will be a landing platform in the Mihazono ruin factory district. So we’ll get off there and… Well, will you escort me back all the way to the Hunter Office? I would be really happy if you would do that for me.”

“Sure, I’m planning to head that way too anyway. So I can at least escort you back to the Hunter Office.”

“Thank you.”

Carol smiled at Akira, he felt there was something else bothering him in that smile. But it was not anything ominous, it simply felt different compared to the smile that she had when they spoke to each other inside the Seranthal building, that was all there was to it. So he just decided to ignore it.

While waiting for that 15 minutes to pass by, Akira reloaded new magazines into his rifles. He no longer had that much ammo left. He still had some reserve ammo left in his vehicle, but he left his vehicle in the parking lot not too far from the Hunter Office. He could not replenish his ammo until he could get back to his vehicle, so until then, there was no way he could face another swarm of monsters like before.

Akira hoped that nothing bad would happen from here on out as he swallowed more medicines. The only thing that he could do right now was to get himself well prepared in case anything bad happened while hoping that it would be unnecessary.

After all, whether something bad would happen or not, was something Akira had no control over.

After 10 minutes, there was another turn of events. The monsters that were chasing Akira and Carol broke through the door and the wreckage blocking the door. They were quickly flooding the landing platform.

Akira was looking outside through a small window in that storage room. It was because he was keeping eyes on the situation outside and he wanted to see the view outside when the delivery drone took off.

Seeing those mechanical monsters gushing out into the landing platform, Akira's face twitched as he mumbled.

"…Give me a break."

Carol who noticed that also peeked outside. Her face turned pale the moment she saw the monsters flooding the landing platform.

"…It's alright… They shouldn't be able to see us from the outside… Moreover, this delivery drone is using an optical camouflage in the first place… And it's time to take off soon… It should be alright…"

All the words that Carol mumbled were all her wishes, Akira could understand that after seeing her expression. Although she was trying to stay calm there, her smile was crooked and cold sweat was running down her face, she was also slightly shaking, showing what she was actually feeling uneasy.

If the mechanical monsters got close enough to the delivery drone, its door might open. They might even be able to see the delivery drone too. Moreover, in the first place, the delivery drone might not take off if there was something blocking it. There were so many uncertainties.

Akira tried to reorganize his mind, he took a deep breath and let out a long sigh before asking Alpha.

“Alpha, what will happen if those monsters get into this storage room?”

Alpha kept smiling like usual.

“When that happens, I’ll have you ready to re-experience what you did today.”

After hearing the answer that he had completely expected, Akira’s face distorted. It seemed that he really hated that idea.

“…Thought so. Well, I guess I should be thankful that I, at least, still have a way to get out from this place alive.”

Depending on the situation, Akira might have to run down a building’s wall again. The only difference between riding off and just simply jumping down the wall was that the former had a better chance of survival. After all, he had no wish to get himself killed. Of course, he did not want to do that again if it could be helped, but the monsters chasing him did not care about that.

Carol looked at Akira. He seemed to be very annoyed and exasperated as well as a little nervous. From what she could see, Akira did not seem to have given up, he did not even seem scared at all.

“…Akira?”

Carol herself had no idea why she called Akira’s name.

Akira, who was watching the door that was leading outside, turned to Carol and casually replied.

“Yes? Ah, if the monsters come here, we’ll have to get out of here. So you get yourself ready in case that happens.”

“Eh, ah, okay, sure.”

Carol was so dumbfounded that she was barely able to reply back. Akira returned his gaze back to the door. She kept staring at him for some time even after that, but weirdly enough, she then started to smile.

Akira, who noticed that change in Carol, frowned and asked.

“…What?”

“It’s nothing. It seems that you haven’t given up at all.”

“Of course. You too, right? “

Carol who already regained her composure confidently smiled and replied.

“Obviously.”

Carol reloaded her gun while smiling, she then stood next to Akira in case he needed her support.

[…He’s still calm even in this situation. He seems to be still planning to fight back. And to top it off, he’s skilled, he’s really my type.]

Akira and Carol just stood there in silence. The sound of the monsters outside the delivery drone was starting to get louder and louder as they approached and surrounded that delivery drone.

Akira and Carol could clearly hear the sounds that those mechanical monsters were making outside the delivery drone. Normally, hearing those sounds would shave the spirit of the people who were listening to them. A normal Hunter might start screaming right about now. But even so, Carol and Akira just stood there in silence while listening to those sounds.

Not too long after that, the delivery drone suddenly started moving. It was time for it to take off. The sounds that it was making drowned the sound coming from the mechanical monsters outside. After the delivery drone took off from the landing platform, it headed to the Mihazono ruin's factory district.

Akira quietly watched the situation outside through the small window. He could see the monsters that swarmed the Seranthal building. Their images kept getting smaller and smaller to the point that he could not see them any longer.

Once they realized that they were saved, they sighed in relief at the same time as if they had planned that beforehand. Then the next moment, Carol jumped and hugged Akira.

"We did it!! We're saved!! We're saved!!"

Carol seemed to be delighted. Because of their height difference, Akira's head was pushed right into Carol's chest.

Akira dropped his rifle and tried to push her away.

"Okay okay!! I got it already!! So just let me go!!"

"It's fine, right? Let's celebrate together!!"

"Just let go of me! I don't know whether it's your augmented suit or that you have an augmented body, but hugging me with that much power is hurting me, you know!!"

Akira was really in pain. Just like Sara, Carol also had an augmented body, thanks to that, she was able to handle the kickback of a powerful gun without any trouble. While the armour that she was using was a reactive armour that would harden in response to an external force. So having those hard layers in the shape of breast pushed against his face, caused Akira to feel pain.

“Whoops, sorry.”

Carol realized that Akira was really in pain and quickly let him go.

Akira coughed after getting released from that pain. He thought that Carol let him go since she had regained her composure, but that was not the case. It was true that Carol regained some of her composure, but compared to her usual state, she was still in a high mood.

Carol quickly pulled down the fastener in front of her down to her stomach. She then used that opening when Akira was surprised to hug him again. But this time, Akira’s face was buried into her well-endowed breasts.

Carol smiled happily as she said.

“This won’t hurt you now, right?”

It seemed that Carol was still high after escaping that life-threatening situation. Akira did not seem to try to pull himself away from her, and since it seemed that it would be pointless to say anything to her in this situation, he just gave up and let her do whatever she wanted.

Alpha smiled teasingly at Akira and said.

“Hmmm, as I thought, you react differently when it’s something that you can actually touch.”

Akira casually replied to Alpha just like usual.

“Shut up.”

Carol, who did not know about that short exchange between Akira and Alpha, kept on hugging Akira happily.

A few minutes had passed since the transport drone had left the landing platform of the Seranthal building. Carol had already calmed down after she got too excited when she finally realized she had gotten out of that dangerous situation alive. Since Akira felt like Carol would keep hugging him if he just left her be, he quickly pulled himself away a bit forcefully when her hug relaxed a little.

Carol peeked at Akira's expression. He did not seem to be angry, as a matter of fact, it looked like he was in a rather good mood. But for someone who just got his face buried in between a beautiful girl's wonderful breasts, he did not seem too delighted.

As her side job, other than being a Hunter, Carol had slept with a lot of other Hunters. For the sake of her main job and her side-job, she enhanced her body with nanomachines and spent a large sum of money that could be used to buy multiple augmented suits just to enhance her beauty.

Carol had absolute confidence in her own beauty, after all, there were Hunters who went crazy after experiencing her beautiful body. But even so,

Akira was not that interested in her body. She understood that very well after peeking at Akira's face and she felt a sense of defeat.

Carol smiled as to not show that in her face as she said to Akira.

"Geez, you're no fun. There's nothing wrong with enjoying it a bit more, isn't it? I don't mind if you want to do it later too, you know. And as I said, it's free of charge."

"No thank you. Moreover, you were the one who hugged me in the first place, not me. And I'm still in the middle of a job too. You're paying me to be your bodyguard, remember? So don't get in my way when you're the one who gave me that request."

"You're so earnest, aren't you?"

"Do you prefer to have someone not earnest escorting you instead?"

"You have a point there. Alright, I won't bother you again."

Since it seemed that Akira would only get annoyed if she continued, Carol decided to back off there.

After getting himself away from Carol, Akira returned back looking outside from a small window. For him, the view from a flying drone was entertaining enough.

Carol kept looking at him. Akira, who was looking outside with sparkling eyes, looked like a small boy from her point of view. He did not seem like he was that powerful Hunter who showed such amazing skill inside the Seranthal building.

[When I look at him like this, he looks like nothing but just a young boy. But even so, he's not that young that he has no interest in girls, right?]

Carol still had her fastener pulled down, showing her bountiful breasts. Unless she was told otherwise, she kept her fastener down hoping that Akira would change his mind. Normally, her beautiful skin and valley peeking out from that opening would gather the attention of any healthy young boys.

But even so, Akira kept his eyes fixed on the views outside. It seemed that the views outside were way more interesting for Akira.

Carol who got hit by another sense of defeat then made a bit of a sharp remark.

“Is the view outside that amusing?”

“It is.”

Akira answered back casually and instantly, there was no trace of hesitation at all.

Carol replied back, she sounded even more annoyed than before.

“…I see.”

Akira felt the faint pressure coming from Carol and realized that he gave a wrong answer just now. He then looked at Alpha who was smiling at him. So he decided to throw a different subject to change the mood there.

“We’re heading to the landing platform in Mihazono ruin’s factory district, right? How long until we get there?”

“It should be around 15 minutes.”

“…That’s pretty long. This is an old-world transport drone, right? So like, I think it should have been able to fly faster though.”

“That would be scary and dangerous, even if it’s possible, I hope that it won’t go that fast.”

Akira, who felt that reply from Carol was rather weird, returned his gaze back at her and asked.

“Why is that? We can get there faster, you know?”

Carol thought that reaction was a bit unexpected, but she quickly realized the reason.

“Ahh, I see, you don’t know about it, huh. By the way, what comes in your mind when I say Hunter’s transport vehicles?”

“A car or maybe a tank. And if I remember it correctly, there are Hunters with powered suits if we go further to the east, right?”

“All of them are ground transportations, right? Didn’t you ever think that it’s weird they don’t use combat drones or combat helicopters? Or why other than the Hunters, even the city defence squad and the corporate militaries don’t use them too? The cities also use trucks to trade and transport materials between them. Don’t you think it’s weird that they don’t use flying drones? Why do you think that is?”

“…Now that you mention it, that’s kind of weird. Why is that?”

Akira could not come up with any answers.

Carol then smiled smugly and explained.

“It’s because the monsters would attack them. The higher and the faster you go, the more powerful the monsters that would attack you.”

Carol did not realize it herself that she was actually feeling happy that Akira was looking back at her again as she explained to him why people did not use airplanes in the eastern district.

There were all kinds of monsters living in all kinds of places in the eastern district, and according to the area where they lived, they posed different levels of danger. But they roughly had 2 common features.

First of all, their strength depended on whether they lived further to the west or to the east. In most cases, the closer they lived to the frontline bordering the unexplored area in the far east, the more powerful they were. And the closer they were to the western area bordering the Federation of Nations’ central district, the weaker they were.

The other indicator would be the height where they usually roamed. Of course, there were monsters who roamed the sky, and the higher they were, usually, the stronger they were.

There were many factors that affected the encounter rate with the monsters, the usual indicators were the bigger, faster, and higher you go, the higher the chance for you to meet monsters.

So in short, the faster they flew in the eastern district's sky, the higher the chance for them to meet such powerful monsters, which would be fatal. There were also cases where it might even attract stronger monsters that would not usually roam in a particular area. Because of that, it was prohibited to use any kind of flying vehicles around the city. And if there was anyone who did that without proper authorization, the defence squad would take them down without warning, suspecting that they were trying to attract strong monsters to attack the city. As a matter of fact, such a thing had actually happened a few times in the past.

Because of this, the main means of transportation in the eastern district were land transportations although, technology-wise, the eastern district had no problem building airplanes. And back when the Corporate Government had a huge war against the nationalist, they were normally using airplanes.

Akira, who was listening closely to Carol's explanation, then applied that newly received information to the flying drone that they were riding.

"Wait? Doesn't that mean this thing is dangerous?"

"That's why it's equipped with sophisticated camouflaging features and is moving at a slow speed. As you said, it can fly way faster so that we can reach our destination way quicker, but its speed is mainly determined by an ignorable chance to meet any powerful monsters."

"So that's why, huh."

Akira nodded.

Carol was completely cheered up after seeing Akira listening closely to her explanation. And in order so that he would not start looking outside again, she tried to come up with a more interesting subject.

“By the way, Akira, do you know that the old-world ruins are not only located on or below the ground? You can also find old-world ruins in the sky too, you know?”

“In the sky? Like, a floating ruin?”

“There are many types though, like a floating fortress or just a flying ship. It’s from those stories where Hunters sometimes notice that there’s a huge shadow cast on the ground but they can’t see anything in the sky when they look up, that might be because of the camouflaging features. There are also theories saying that the ever-present colourless mist in the eastern district is hiding all the floating structures that are already there since the old-world era. Other theory says that when the colourless mist suddenly thickens, that’s because a floating object is passing through.”

“…I see. It sounds like we can find some amazing relics if we can somehow get to one of those floating ruins.”

“It seems that there are a lot of Hunters who are looking for floating ruins, you know. I heard that even the Corporate Government is sponsoring those Hunters. Moreover, it’s on a whole different level of difficulty and a lot of high ranking Hunters are actually doing exactly that… As I thought, it has some kind of romanticism in it.”

Carol was talking, filled with interest. Among the Hunters that she had slept with, one of them told her that he dreamt of finding a floating ruin. The last time she heard from that Hunter was when he was talking happily to her that he got recruited into the search squad through his connection. She never met that Hunter again since then, that Hunter might as well already be dead by now.

Although Akira was interested in that story of floating ruins, he still analyzed that information realistically.

“Romanticism, huh? Honestly, I don’t really get it. It’s not like I’m out in the ruin chasing renown after all.”

“You’ll understand once you’re older.”

“Is that so?”

“Yep.”

Akira tilted his head, Carol smiled at him.

As Akira and Carol were talking about Hunter stuff, they eventually arrived on a landing platform. After packing their stuff up, they then stood in front of the door of the storage room and the door automatically opened.

Carol remembered that she had not pulled up her fastener yet, so she pulled it back all the way up to her neck before stepping off the transport drone, Akira followed suit afterwards.

Once they boarded off, the door closed automatically. It then turned invisible again unless you got close enough. If anyone saw them, it would look like Akira and Carol just appeared out of nowhere.

The Mihazono ruin’s factory district was filled with factories and warehouses. Although most of them had already turned into rubble, some of them were still in operation. It was a dangerous area filled with security drones.

Basically, the landing platform where Akira and Carol were was clean of anything. There were only some cracks in the platform, nothing more. There might be other transport drones there too, but those were invisible to Akira and Carol.

Carol stretched out her body once and said.

“Well then, can you escort me to the Hunter Office, now?”

“Sure… Which way is the Hunter Office?”

It was Akira’s first time coming there, so he had no idea which way to go. Fortunately enough, the landing platform was located in between the ruin and the wasteland, so if they followed that boundary, they should be able to find the Hunter Office sooner or later.

“This way.”

Carol smiled as she guided the way.

As Akira was walking the boundary between the ruin and the wasteland with Carol guiding him, Carol suddenly asked him a question.

“Akira, what are your plans after this? Are you going to hunt for relics again?”

“No, I’m planning to stop for today and get a good rest. I’m too tired after going through all that, so I have no power left to hunt for relics. So, don’t ask me to extend the escort, okay?”

“Don’t worry. I’m also planning to wrap up for today. So, basically, you’re free after this, right?”

“…Well, yeah, but I want to get a good rest. I’m really tired, you know.”

“Want to take a rest with me?”

Carol smiled mischievously at Akira. Even for someone as dense as Akira, he understood that she was inviting him.

“No. I want to rest.”

“Don’t be that uptight, we both went through that dangerous situation together after all, right? Although you’re under my request to escort me, it’s true that you did save my life. So I want to repay it.”

“You’ve already paid me for escorting you, and you said you would also pay for the relics that I lost, so I have no plans to ask you for any more reward. Well, if you’re still bothered by it, you can buy me some meals. But I won’t accept a cheap meal, okay?”

There was a trace of irritation and frustration in Carol's bitter smile, she then became a bit obstinate as she said.

"If you think that would be enough to reward someone who saved my life, it would hurt my pride."

"Then treat me to a meal expensive enough so that it won't hurt your pride. For example, I don't mind going to one of those 1,000,000 Aurum per meal restaurants. Although I have no plans to eat there myself, I would be more than happy to go there if someone would pay for it. I did tell you, remember? I'm at the age where food is much more interesting than girls."

Carol seemed a bit cheered up as she smiled.

"…Geez. It can't be helped then. If it's in one of those facilities near the Hunter Office branch, I don't mind treating you to a meal."

"Are you sure? Well, I'm glad I asked you to treat me."

"I want to return my debt as soon as possible and I don't want to wait until you're interested in girls."

"Alright then, we have a deal here. So let's hurry up and get back."

"I don't mind if you want to pick up the pace, but make sure to properly escort me, okay?"

"Of course."

Akira then happily swung his legs toward the Mihazono ruin's Hunter Office branch.

Carol just giggled and followed behind him when she saw him showing his child-like side befitting of his age to her.

There were restaurants built near the Hunter Office branch located on the outskirts of the Mihazono ruin. Hunters were allowed to bring in their heavy weapons inside those restaurants when they ate their meals, so as to be expected, those were not high-class restaurants.

But as if to betray their outer appearance, some of those restaurants were actually selling high-class meals. A full course meal in those restaurants could cost above 100,000 Aurum. Although those meals were pretty delicious, in the end, it was the wasteland price, so its price was rather swollen compared to if they were served in the city. It was understandable to be that pricey since they would have spent money to manage the place and transport the ingredients all the way there, but still, expensive things were expensive.

The restaurants in that place were roughly divided into 3 areas, then the customers who went to those restaurants were assigned to different seats depending on the price they pay for their meals. They were roughly categorized to the Hunters who paid 1,000 Aurum, 10,000 Aurum, and 100,000 Aurum for their meals. It was not like there was a strict ruling about it, so it was not compulsory, but if they took a different seat, they would feel a bit out of place and might feel uncomfortable, except for those people with steel-nerves.

It was an easy thing to identify the skill and the success of a Hunter depending on how much that Hunter would spend on his or her meal. Because of that, grouping Hunters' seats like this would allow them to be seated together with the other Hunters with more or less the same skill level. So, it was not rare for the regulars of a restaurant to recognize the faces of the Hunters around them, although they did not know each others' names. It was also common for them to strike a conversation with the other Hunters eating near them, and if they got along well, they might even form a team later.

But then, because of that, when someone new came in and ate in a seat for expensive meals, it would garner a lot of attention from the other Hunters. And that day, the new face was Akira.

Akira was sitting in front of an expensive-looking table and meals befitting for that table were lined up in front of him. That scene made Akira beam up as he gobbled up those meals while occasionally voicing out his amazement, he was in a really good mood there.

Carol was sitting across Akira. Although it was less than what was in front of Akira, her meal was worth about the same price as his.

Carol rested her palms on her cheeks as she smiled and asked Akira.

“Is it tasty?”

“Yeah, it’s delicious.”

Akira happily nodded, after confirming which Carol smiled satisfied.

“That’s good to hear, it seems that my pride is safely salvaged.”

Carol, who was looking at Akira eating his meal for a few minutes, eventually started eating her own meal.

[But still, Akira looks like just a normal boy during times like this. He doesn’t seem like a strong Hunter at all.]

Carol’s evaluation was correct. In all reality, Akira was not that strong of a Hunter in the first place. It was all thanks to Alpha’s support. If he relied on his own skill, it would still take a few years of training and hard work before he could sit on that seat.

“But still, you eat quite a lot, don’t you? I don’t mind paying for all of it, but don’t leave anything behind, okay?”

“Don’t worry, my appetite is growing bigger and bigger lately. So I won’t have any trouble finishing all of this food.”

Akira just answered back casually. But after Carol pointed that out, a question popped up in his mind.

“Now that I think about it, I actually really start eating more and more lately.”

Alpha interjected.

“It might be because your body is trying to compensate for the nutrition that you didn’t get when you were in your accelerated growth period.”

“What do you mean?”

“You’ve been living in the slum city for years, so you’re in a constant malnutrition state. Because of that, you must have been stuck in a slowed growth rate for quite a long time. So in order to compensate for that, your body might be demanding a lot of food right now.”

“Is that really something that you can solve simply by eating a lot of food?”

“I think you’ve gone through a special treatment so that you can solve that problem just by eating a lot of food. You have gone through that 60,000,000 Aurum treatment before, remember? They might have identified your impeded growth was due to an unhealthy environment, and so they might have done something to your body which allows you to get you back to your optimal state just by eating a lot of food, though they might have also done that so that they can charge you more money too.”

Akira suddenly stopped eating his meal.

“Well, it’s true that you’re getting back to your healthier body state, so it’s alright. Moreover, wounds and fatigue won’t get properly recovered or healed unless you eat food and get ample rest. After all, there’s a limit on how far the medicines can help you. Since it was a treatment to get you back to health, so it shouldn’t have any bad side-effects. As long as you earn enough money to satiate your hunger, you should be fine.”

“I see, well, I guess it’s alright then. I also got that after going through an expensive treatment, so I guess it should be fine, huh?”

Akira then continued eating without worrying about it anymore. Carol, who saw Akira pause momentarily, found it weird.

“Akira, what’s wrong?”

“No, it’s nothing.”

“Is that so? By the way, there’s something I want to ask you, I don’t mind if you want to keep eating while answering my question. Is that okay?”

“What is it? I don’t mind as long as it’s not a request in which you’ll refuse to pay for my meal if I don’t accept it.”

Carol giggled lightly.

“Don’t worry. Well, it’s indeed a request but I’ll still pay for this meal even if you refuse it.”

Akira stopped eating. He could feel that it was something serious from the way Carol asked him, he then stared at her with a serious face.

“So, what is it?”

“I don’t mind if you want to continue eating, you know?”

“I’ll hear you first and if it’s something not that important, then I’ll continue eating. So, go on, what do you want to ask of me?”

Strictly speaking, Akira still seemed to be in a good mood, but there was a trace of cautiousness in his face. It was obvious that he was being paranoid. He looked at Carol with distrust, as if he was suspecting that she was going to bring more trouble to his plate. Although it was just a hunch, there was no mistaking it.

Carol had no idea if it was simply because there was a flicker in Akira’s feeling and it was expressed in his eyes, or it was because Akira was actually suppressing his feeling and it was leaking out.

[…This situation… It’s dangerous if I say anything wrong here.]

Carol intentionally changed into a more serious face before continuing.

“I’ll say this straight. Akira, will you work together with me?”

Akira did not reply immediately, he was just silently staring at her. He was trying to guess any possible meanings behind those words. Carol understood that very well when she looked back at him.

After a short silence, Akira finally opened his mouth.

“…Let me get this straight, do you mean working together with you as a team of Hunters?”

“Yes.”

“Sorry, but no thanks.”

Akira only said that and immediately returned back to eating. His tense aura was gone in a snap and the mood quickly returned to normal.

Carol sighed in relief when she noticed that Akira had lowered his guard, although she also regretted the fact that he refused her offer.

“Is that so? That’s really unfortunate. Well, it’ll only cause trouble down the road if I force it, so I’ll just give it up here. Would you at least please tell me the reason?”

“It’s simply because I’m more comfortable moving alone. I am used to moving around out of whim or based on situational decisions. Now that I think about it, I can be a bit random most of the time. I won’t be able to do that if I work together with another Hunter, you see. Even for today, I only decided to go to Mihazono ruin just this morning and it’s simply because I thought about it when I was visiting another place. So like, you know, I won’t fit to work together in a team, right?”

Most of the Hunters decided beforehand where to go and properly prepared themselves before actually heading there. And if Akira was in a team, then he should think about how to divide the reward and the profit too. Not to mention, when one of the team members was not feeling well, there was a chance that the expedition had to be cancelled too.

Akira always turned to Alpha and asked for her opinion before making any decision, and of course, he could not use that reason if he had to explain his decision to other people. If he worked with someone for a long time, it was almost completely guaranteed that he would be treated as a troublesome team member who always made sudden random decisions on his own.

Carol tried to guess Akira's way of thinking from his answer.

[Akira is the type of Hunter who focuses more on the downsides of working together in a team rather than the advantages that he can get from doing that. He's one of those who get suspicious of people who stay together with them for long rather than feeling safe. Back then in the Seranthal building, he also seriously thought of moving separately from me; given that I know the layout of the building well, and that we were in such a dangerous situation. He might be thinking that I'm planning to kill him since he knows about the backdoor now. But, on the other hand, if it's out of a request, he would even shield me using his own body… This boy is broken… Or more like, seriously, what kind of moral value is this boy following?]

Carol had experienced spending a night together with some Hunters with distorted personalities. Because of that, she knew how to handle these kinds of people very well. But the Akira in front of her was unlike any other Hunters that she had dealt with. So, in order to look for the right way to handle Akira, she made a friendly smile and asked him a question.

"So you're that kind of Hunter, huh? Well, I tend to work alone too, so I can understand your argument. But like, were you always working alone until now?"

"Not really. It's just that I never really worked together as a team. I've explored ruins together with other Hunters too, I also accept requests that need me to work in a team. Is that not the case for you too?"

"Me? Well, I did a lot of stuff in the past. I've formed a team together with the other Hunters, there were also times when I joined an already established team of Hunters. But at the moment, I'm working alone. There were a few things that happened with my last team which caused the team to break down, you see."

Carol said it as if it was none of her business. But in reality, the reason why that team broke up was because of her. The guys, who got roped into her side job, did a lot of bad stuff in order to get the money to buy her.

Some of them even sacrificed their equipment and ammo budget and became nothing but a burden to the team, some of them would cause a fight when dividing the reward money. Eventually, the mood in that team became so bad that they broke up in the middle of exploring a ruin.

It was not like Carol intentionally did that, but she also did not try to stop the situation from getting worse. She thought that it was all their own responsibilities.

“Even if I want to make another team, it’s not like I can do that with just any Hunters. After all, there are Hunters who are only interested in forming a team because of my side job, that in itself is fine though, the real problem is when they demand a discount or even demand it for free just because we’re on the same team. I just don’t want to work together with those kinds of people neither for my real job nor for my side job.”

“That sounds rough. Oh, this one is also really tasty.”

Akira was at least properly listening to Carol’s story, but his attention was more focused on the food in front of him.

Carol was indirectly saying that she was interested in forming a team with Akira because she evaluated his skill highly. But since his attention was all on his tongue and stomach, it was rather vague whether Akira got it or not.

Carol smiled in resignation as she mumbled.

“…He’s really just a little boy.”

Akira, who was still gobbling the food in a good mood, flatly replied.

“Hm? Isn’t it obvious that I’m just a boy? Oh, this one is not bad at all…”

“…Well, you’re not wrong about that.”

Carol regretfully mumbled as she thought that if only Akira was more of an adult and his interest in food was shifted towards girls, he might have given a different answer there.

Carol had already finished her meal, she was only sitting there sipping her after-meal tea. While on the other hand, Akira was still enjoying the meal in front of him, it was simply because he took his time to enjoy each and every meal that he ordered and he did order quite a lot of meals.

Carol had also already transferred the 40,000,000 Aurum compensation money that she had promised for the relics that Akira had lost. Akira then casually confirmed it, said his thanks and returned back to eating.

Normally, the amount of money that a Hunter earned regularly was proportional to his or her skill. So it was not strange that it did not faze Akira when he received that amount of money since he was strong enough to kill the automatic weapons. But compared to that, it was completely different from when Akira was lamenting over the relics that he lost when he shielded Carol.

Carol had no idea how in the world Akira killed the autonomous weapons. The more she thought about it, the more she was confused, and the more she was interested in the young boy in front of her.

Alpha then said to Akira.

“Akira, you got a message from the Hunter Office.”

“A message?”

Akira pulled out his information terminal and checked the notification message from the Hunter Office. It was an emergency SOS request from the Drankam, to be more precise, it was a request to join the rescue team sent to rescue the Hunters trapped in the Seranthal building.

The situation inside the restaurant started to get agitated. When Akira glanced at Carol, she was also focusing on her own information terminal. And it was not only Carol, but all the Hunters inside that restaurant were also checking their own information terminals. It seemed that the notification message was sent to all the Hunters in the area.

Akira could hear some Hunters around him talking.

“They’re asking me to go inside that ghoul building? It’s that building that would eat anything that goes inside it no matter whether it’s a Hunter or monster, you know? I have no plans to go there myself.”

“Is that so? I don’t mind taking it though.”

Hearing what their friend said, the other Hunter snorted and said.

“Whoah there, what are you talking about? It’s the Seranthal building, you know? It’s one of the 7 great mystery of Mihazono ruin. It’s exactly because Drankam knows that they can’t challenge that building even after they prepare themselves, that’s why they’re issuing this request. And looking at the details of the request, the corpses of the monsters will be owned by the Drankam, the ammo expense is paid by ourselves, and the basic reward is small. So, is there any reason why we have to take this request? I bet that SOS request was sent by one of those Hunters through the insurance company contracted with Drankam, and I’m sure even Drankam only sends their Hunters although they don’t want to because they’re in a contract with that insurance company. Some of those insurance companies usually have contracts with private security companies or Hunter gangs to make sure that they would definitely take the SOS request issued by that insurance company. After all, normally, no one would want to take on such a dangerous request. Like seriously, who would want to take this dangerous request with such small reward?”

The other Hunter just smiled and shook his head before replying.

“Well, it’s true that it’s not a profitable request. But let’s think carefully here, if we look at it as a request from Drankam that would give us a boost in our Hunter Rank, it’s actually not that bad. After all, nothing bad can come from raising our Hunter Rank. Moreover, we can get this SOS request participation written in our Hunter Record. I heard that you get a big Hunter Rank boost if you take an emergency request issued by the Hunter Office due to the Hunter ethics improvement program from the Corporate Government. I also heard that some corporations, which is mindful of its public standing, tend to choose Hunters who participated in such emergency requests. And to top it off, although it’s not like it’s my aim, for those Hunters who want to form a connection with Drankam, this might be a good chance for them.”

After hearing his friend’s opinion, the other Hunter then interjected.

“Hmmm, Drankam, huh? It has grown into a rather big gang and I heard that it has a good standing with the City Management at the moment after completing those bounty requests. So, I guess it’s understandable that some Hunters want to join that gang. But I heard that it focuses only on accepting young Hunters lately and it rejects application by most of the common veterans. Ahh, I see, so those Hunters who got rejected might take this request as a chance to prove their skill, huh.”

“It seems that Drankam is deepening their relationship with the Kugamayama City Management and the Hunter Office. So for those who want to hop on the bandwagon, this might be a good chance. Drankam itself has its reputation to uphold, so I’m sure they’ll also properly prepare their Hunters for this request. It’s indeed as you said, for Hunters who want to improve their track record and get a boost in their Hunter Rank, this is actually a perfect chance to do just that.”

“Hmmm, so you’re planning to take this request, huh?

“It’s as you said, it’s a dangerous place that it has even become an urban legend… So if only someone would accompany me there.”

That Hunter then smiled bitterly at what his friend said.

“…Alright alright, I get it, but you’ll pay for the ammo, okay?”

“I’m glad that I have a partner who would understand.”

After those Hunters finished their meals, they took a short rest there before leaving the restaurant. They were close enough for Akira to hear their conversation, so basically, they were paying more or less the same expensive meal as Akira, which meant that they were powerful Hunters able to afford such a luxury.

After listening to those Hunters, Akira said with interest.

“It seems that people react differently to this kind of request, huh?”

Alpha at least tried to confirm it with Akira.

“It seems that I need to educate you about that too. So then, what’s your plan? Are you planning to take that request?”

Akira then answered back with the exact answer that Alpha had predicted.

“No. I’m done for today. I’ve gathered enough money for the day and I’m already tired right now.”

Akira then returned back to his information terminal to refuse the request.

Carol suddenly asked Akira a question.

“It seems that you got that message too. I’m refusing that request though, how about you, Akira?”

“I’m refusing it too.”

Carol smiled since Akira gave the same answer as her.

“Thought so. I have no plans to go anywhere near that building for the time being.”

As Akira placed his information terminal aside and was about to take another bite of the meal in front of him, suddenly a notification reached his information terminal, it was a call from Shiori.

“Akira here. I’m sorry but I’m in the middle of eating right now. If it’s not an emergency, can you call me again later?”

“I’m really sorry, this is an emergency. I’ll keep it short, so can you please give me some of your time?”

“Alright, what is it?”

“Akira-sama, I want to make a request to you to escort Milady. As for the period of the request, if it’s possible, I want you to start from right now and it’ll be until we can guarantee Milady’s safety. At most, it’ll take the whole day today. And since we don’t have much time right now, if it’s possible, I wish you’re okay with postponing the negotiation about the reward to later. But please don’t worry, I swear on my loyalty for Milady that I would definitely pay you with a suitable reward.”

“…This has something to do with that emergency request to the Seranthal building, doesn’t it?”

“It seems that you’ve heard it as well. Yes, Milady decided to accept that emergency request. So I want to ask you to protect Milady during that request-“

Akira immediately interjected.

“I’m sorry, but I can’t take that request.”

Shiori went silent for a few seconds.

“…Is it okay if I ask why? If it’s because we don’t agree on the reward beforehand, we can quickly decide on the advance payment and I’ll immediately transfer it right now. And if it’s hard for you to meet up with us right now, I don’t mind if you meet up with us later. If it’s something that we can help with, we’re willing to make compromises.”

“The answer is still a ‘no’. I won’t take that request and I don’t plan to negotiate about it.”

Akira could feel that Shiori was a bit surprised and bewildered on the other end of the call as he continued.

“Ahhh, it’s not like I refuse because I don’t like you or anything. The reason why I won’t take that request is simple, it’s because I don’t want to go anywhere close to that Seranthal building, I don’t want to die after all. So, sorry about that.”

Shiori sounded very serious as she carefully asked Akira a question.

“…Is the Seranthal building so dangerous even Akira-sama would say something like that?”

“Well, it’s at least dangerous enough for me to refuse any request that doesn’t promise me enough money. Of course, it might be just me being a coward though. I can’t tell you the details, but something happened that causes me to hesitate to go anywhere near that building. That’s why I won’t accept that request. I’m sure you have your own reason as to why you need to go there, which in that case, make sure to be extra careful. It’s in the middle of an old-world ruin after all, so anything can happen. For example, your information-gathering device might lose sensitivity inside that building and you might suddenly not be able to use your information terminal there. Or if you’re not careful enough, you might get surrounded by mechanical monsters without you realizing it or you might even find the monsters using the facilities inside that building. So yeah, I won’t accept it, later then.”

Akira only said that and ended the call. He then put his information terminal aside one more time before returning back to eating again.

Carol was curious about what that call was for. But it might annoy him if she needlessly butted into his business there, so she was putting on a smile indicating that she was not bothered at all.

After Akira cut the call, Shiori looked at her information terminal with a grim face. Kanae approached her and asked a question.

“We’re ready to go. Ane-san, how is it? You’re trying to invite that young boy Akira, right?”

“I got rejected.”

“That’s really unfortunate. I actually wanted to see that boy’s skill from up close. So then, what is with that face? You look grimmer than usual for someone who just got her request rejected.”

“The real problem is the reason why he rejected it. He rejected it without giving me any chance to negotiate saying that he doesn’t want to die so he would refuse to get anywhere close the Seranthal building.”

Unlike Shiori, who looked really concerned, Kanae was smiling amusedly.

“I don’t know why exactly Akira would say that, but if someone as strong as Ane-san would even go that far to say something like that about that place, then it seems that this will be interesting.”

Shiori glared at Kanae.

“…I’ll at least go and recommend Milady not to take the request. As for you, go and recheck our equipment… No, redo the preparation. Make sure that we have enough equipment to survive a ruin exploration in a ruin with zero survivors.”

Kanae smiled and said.

“Roger that. But isn’t it impossible to change Milady’s mind at this point? This request is basically a compulsory request, if Milady won’t participate, she might get kicked out of the gang. After all, some people from the Katsuya faction hate Milady since they think Milady abandoned Katsuya back then. That’s also exactly the reason why Milady could not participate in the bounty hunting too, remember? But well, I guess that was a good thing from Ane-san and Milady's point of view though."

Among the young Hunters in Drankam, Reina was actually keeping herself in a delicate neutral position in between the Katsuya faction and the anti-Katsuya faction. That was also the reason she came to Mihazono ruin only with Kanae and Shiori. The Katsuya faction treated her as if she was from the anti-Katsuya faction while the anti-Katsuya faction treated her as if she was from Katsuya faction. Because of that, she was having trouble making friends in Drankam.

"One of the requirements for Milady to be allowed to work as a Hunter is that she must be a member of Drankam. So Milady might take it as telling her to stop working as a Hunter if Ane-san tries telling Milady to change her mind, right?"

Kanae said those words as if it was none of her business. Shiori was still glaring at Kanae as she said to her.

"…I know. But I'll still recommend Milady not to go there. It'll at least let Milady know that we're going to a very dangerous location."

"Alright then. I'll go and redo the preparation. I'll reorganize the prepared equipment with the assumption that we'll end up in the red this time… It has been quite a while since the last time I fought without worrying about the expense, I can't help but look forward to this."

Kanae smiled happily when she said that.

Reina was about to head over to a location that would even make Akira refuse Shiori's request without further discussion. While on the other hand, Kanae seemed to be looking forward to it. Shiori was fed up with Kanae.

Shiori instantly grabbed the sword dangling on her hip and Kanae quickly reacted to that by keeping her distance from Shiori. Shiori killed the emotion inside her and was exuding an ominous aura. She then said in a low voice while oozing out the anger within her heart.

Kanae kept smiling.

“It’s so like you not to pull out that sword here you know, Ane-san. Ah, that’s a compliment by the way. It’s good that you stay calm. That’s why they trust Milady to you and that’s also why Milady really trusts you.”

Kanae stared back at Shiori while smiling. If Shiori really pulled out her blade and tried to kill Kanae there, it would lower their fighting power for protecting Reina. But Shiori knew well that Kanae was smiling at her not because of that.

Kanae was actually smiling because she did not mind either way whether Shiori would pull out her blade and try to kill Kanae there, or that she would not pull out her blade there which meant that she would get to go and fight monsters later. Kanae would not make any provocation if the latter were to happen. It was because it was her principle and courtesy toward the people who employed her, it was her attitude toward her own job. But if that came from Shiori, then she would be happy to respond.

Shiori let go of her blade and said to Kanae.

“…Go.”

“Roger that.”

Kanae just smiled and went to reorganize their equipment.

Shiori took a few deep breaths, reminding her of her loyalty to Reina, and finally regained her composure. She made sure that she could put on her usual smile to her master before going to try convincing Reina.

Akira returned all the way back to the Kugamayama city together with Carol. Due to Carol’s request, he dropped her near the red light district of the lower district.

Carol, who just stepped off from Akira’s vehicle, invited him.

“Since this is a good chance, how about coming with me to get some drinks?”

Akira shook his head and said.

“Sorry but no thanks. I keep myself away from alcohols since they lower my decision making skill and reaction speed.”

After all, there were many occasions where drunk people came into the slum city and ended up as dead corpses. Akira had seen something like that happen in front of his eyes numerous times before, so he had no wish to put in even a drop of alcohol inside his body. And now, after knowing that a disruption in his consciousness would also affect Alpha’s support in controlling his augmented suit, he was actively avoiding alcohol even more.

Although there was a type of drug sold in the eastern district which would instantaneously snap someone out from a drunken state, Akira had no plans to drink any alcohol to the point that he would need that kind of drug.

Alcohol and women, these two things were the gate to ruin a man, and Carol was really familiar with both of them, but both gates were shut closed in case of Akira. Carol could not help but to smile bitterly and said.

“…So you don’t drink alcohol and don’t play with girls, huh. That’s a pretty healthy lifestyle you’re having.”

Akira looked slightly irritated as he said.

“A Hunter’s biggest asset is their body, so it’s a good thing to have a healthy body.”

But then Carol smiled seductively and said.

“I don’t think it’s wise to abandon worldly leisure though. If you change your mind, you can give me a call anytime. I’ll be waiting for you, I don’t mind if it’s about my main job or my side job, see you then.”

After saying that, Carol went and vanished into the red light district.

Akira realized that Alpha was watching him with a big smile, so he awkwardly said to her.

“…What?”

Alpha kept her big smile.

“…Seriously, what is it?”

“Do you want to know? Do you really want to know?”

Akira hesitated, but this time, it sounded like Alpha was teasing him and that she actually wanted him to ask her. So he went and said.

“Yeah, I really want to know.”

Alpha smiled happily and answered Akira’s question.

“I’m happy that it seems my anti-honey trap training works really well. Even with a beautiful girl tempting you with her body right in front of you, you barely gave any reaction at all. But actually, that might be a problem in itself though.”

“…I see.”

Akira only gave that short reaction and turned his vehicle back on. But he was not heading back to his home.

“Oh, are we not going back home?”

“I want to replenish my ammo and medicines first, I did use quite a lot of them today after all.”

First, Akira went to Katsuragi’s trailer, and in order to reach it, he had to go out to the wasteland again.

In the middle of traversing the wasteland, Alpha was still smiling at him. Akira was bothered by it, so he decided to ask her again.

“What now? Is there anything more you want to say?”

“Do you want to know?”

“Yes, I do want to know.”

Akira thought that it must be another unimportant thing. Alpha then said with still a big smile on her face.

“Today, you really expressed your trust in me with your body.”

Akira was so surprised that it interrupted his driving.

“I’m really happy, you know. After all, there’s no way you can jump off a building and run on its wall if you don’t trust me.”

As Akira somehow regained control of his vehicle, Alpha continued.

“It’s not like I doubted you when you said that you trust me, but still, it really gives a strong impression when you actually show it with your body. After all, there are a lot of people out there who, although they don’t lie when they speak, would lose their bravado when they have to prove it with real action.”

Akira stopped his vehicle to check if his vehicle was okay.

“It’s great that we deepen our trust for each other, it would allow me to provide you with more support. So yes, let’s keep working hard together from here and on. I’ll be in your care, Akira.”

Akira restarted his vehicle and slowly drove it forward. He then kept her eyes forward as he said to Alpha who was smiling happily next to him.

“…I see.”

“As I thought, it was the right choice to talk about this when Carol is not around.”

As Alpha was still smiling next to him, Akira snapped at her as if he was trying to hide his embarrassment.

“…Yeah, you can say that again!!”

Akira replied loudly to hide his embarrassment and he kept doing that in the middle of his ride to Katsuragi’s trailer.

After he finished buying medicines from Katsuragi, Akira headed next to Shizuka’s shop to replenish his ammo. In the middle of his way, Akira remembered what Katsuragi said to him.

“Destructive force, huh…”

Akira bought quite a lot of expensive medicines, it showed that he was wounded badly enough for him to use that much medicine. Since it would be bad for Katsuragi if he lost one of his regulars, he suggested to Akira a set of equipment with high destructive power.

Kill before getting killed. That was the basics of fighting monsters. Katsuragi told Akira that what he currently lacked was the destructive power to do that.

Akira’s main firepower was his CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun. Although he was able to defeat the autonomous weapons with those guns, it was true that he had some problems fighting the mechanical monsters inside and outside the Seranthal building.

Akira was heading to Shizuka’s shop while thinking of asking for Shizuka’s opinion about it. Moreover, it seemed that Akira also had no plans to pay Katsuragi more money although he was the one who made that suggestion to Akira in the first place. It was just simply a matter of trust.

When Akira arrived at Shizuka’s shop, it was right when Shizuka was about to close her shop. The sky had already darkened, save for the shops that were only open at night, normal shops would already be closed at that time.

Akira stopped his vehicle in front of Shizuka's shop.

"Shizuka-san, are you already done for the day?"

"Akira, well, yes, but it's fine, come in."

"Is it really okay?"

Shizuka smiled at Akira and said.

"Of course. After all, I want to increase the chance of you getting promoted from being a regular candidate to a real regular to my shop."

"Thank you very much."

Akira parked his vehicle in the shop's parking lot and went inside the shop. After he went in, Shizuka flipped the signboard of the front door and went inside too. Because the sun had already set, she could not notice that Akira brought a different vehicle than the one that he bought from her shop just the other day.

After listening to the ammo that Akira ordered, Shizuka then asked a question.

"Akira, you're ordering nothing but extended magazines though? Are you sure about this? It might get a little expensive, you know?"

"It's okay. Even it might get a bit expensive, I want to carry more extended magazines."

For Hunters who often fought powerful monsters, running out of ammo in the middle of a fight was fatal. And there was a limit on how much ammo they could bring with them when they were exploring a ruin far away from the city. So in order to solve this issue, there were all kinds of extended magazines sold in the eastern district.

One of them was a magazine filled with hair-sized bullets that would change into a normal size bullet when shot. These kinds of bullets, which were created by using technology extracted from analyzing old-world technology, allowed Hunters to pack way more bullets into a single round. And thanks to the old-world technology, this kind of modification did not lower the firepower of those bullets. This technology was often used for guns that consumed a lot of bullets, like a minigun.

And of course, that kind of magazine was more expensive than the usual magazine. Some of them cost 2 to 3 times more than a usual magazine and depending on its quality, some of them even cost 10 times more. So if they had no plans to go somewhere dangerous where they had to use those kinds of extended magazines, it would be much more profitable to buy normal magazines.

Shizuka stared at Akira. There was no mistaking that Akira had a reason as to why he would pick extended magazines in place of normal magazines even if it would need him to spend more money.

Shizuka smiled at him, she was putting extra pressure on Akira with that smile as she asked.

“So then, what kind of dangerous stuff did you do through this time?”

Akira got flustered a bit.

“Well, it’s not exactly like I did something dangerous intentionally. It’s just that I encountered a lot of monsters, so I had to run away and used a lot of ammo to get away from them. I could get my reserve ammo if I was in my vehicle, but I was inside a building at that time. So… Yes… This is an insurance, it’s just to be safe.”

Akira was somehow able to say his excuse and it was not like he made any lies there.

According to Shizuka’s intuition, Akira was actually carefully picking his words so as not to make her worry. But she also knew that he did not lie at all. So basically, Akira did meet powerful monsters that he could not defeat or he ventured to a dangerous place that he could not handle, and when that happened, he properly did his best to run away instead of fighting back.

Shizuka's expression loosened as she gently smiled at him.

"I see. Well, it's fine then if that's the case. It's better to abandon your relics and save your own life rather than dying with relics on your back. As long as you return back alive, you'll get another chance. So I'm glad that you're okay."

Akira made an invisible sigh. It seemed that he did not have to explain the fact that he did crazy things like jumping off a tall building and running on its wall. And of course, even Shizuka's sharp intuition could not notice that far.

Akira then decided to change the subject while he had the chance.

"Shizuka-san, do you think that I'm lacking destructive power?"

Shizuka looked surprised.

"Destructive power? What do you mean by that?"

"Well, it's just that one of my acquaintances told me that I'm lacking firepower. Fighting monsters is basically boiled down to killing those monsters before getting killed. And it seems that if I have trouble fighting monsters, that means I lack sufficient firepower. Honestly speaking, since I'm carrying 2 guns that I won't be able to use without the help of my augmented suit, I thought that these 2 guns would be enough. But am I really lacking firepower?"

After hearing what Akira said, Shizuka thought for a bit before answering back.

"…Let's see, I think it depends on your line of thinking. It's true that if you fight a swarm of monsters, you would need more firepower no matter how much firepower you already have. There are also cases where areas that were originally relatively safe suddenly get filled with powerful monsters.

But of course, it’s not like you need to prepare yourself for something like that all the time. After all, it might hurt your wallet if you do that… If it’s okay for me to say something for my own benefit, I would say that you indeed lack of firepower and I would suggest you buy more equipment from me though.”

Shizuka smiled mischievously.

Akira thought about it seriously and made his decision.

“Alright, I understand. I’ll buy more equipment.”

Shizuka was surprised, she then looked a bit troubled.

“…Uhmmm, there’s no need to force yourself, you know?”

“I don’t mind, after all, I’m buying new equipment so that I won’t have a hard time fighting monsters. Well, it’s true that I don’t have so much money that I can carelessly spend, but rather than putting my life in danger, I would rather put my wallet in danger. So, I’ll take a gun that you would recommend me.”

Now that Akira had gone and said it, it was not like Shizuka could back out and not recommend him anything. So in order to answer his trust, she smiled and said.

“Alright. Let’s see, if it’s for the current you… Wait here for a bit.”

Shizuka went to the warehouse after saying that. Not too long after that, she returned with a rifle that she picked for Akira.

“It’s A4WM automatic grenade launcher. Since it shoots out grenades, you don’t need to aim precisely at your target. It packs quite a lot of punch that would work against monsters with strong armour. And you can use it for indirect fire too, depending on the type of grenades that you load, you can bounce the grenades off the wall and shoot the monsters on the other side of a corner. If you’re looking for an addition to your current equipment, I think this is the perfect choice for you. It's only downside is the ammo expense though, after all, it shoots out grenades."

"I see, so, how much does it cost?"

"About that though, give me a sec."

Shizuka went to the warehouse one more time. She then returned back with grenade launcher magazines and other extra equipment.

"I think you already understand this, but you can't use it without ammo and there are a lot of grenade magazine types that you can use. I'll sell the gun and the ammo as a set, so listen to my explanation first about the characteristics and the power of each type of grenades magazine and their respective price before deciding which one to take, okay?"

Even after listening to Shizuka's explanation, Akira was not sure which one to buy. So he ended up deciding based on the firepower and the size of the grenades as he picked the most expensive set.

Akira then loaded his new equipment and his reserve ammo into his vehicle. After that, he said his goodbye to Shizuka who was seeing him off outside the shop.

"Thank you very much for today, I'm sorry for coming here after you closed the shop."

"It's fine. Not to mention, you also bought some equipment from me. So don't worry about it. Be careful on your way back, okay?"

Shizuka waved her hand, Akira lightly bowed and turned his vehicle on.

As she saw Akira off, she mumbled.

"…Like I said, in the end, he did buy some of the equipment that I'm selling, so this is fine."

Shizuka was answering her own question there. Although she might have missed a business opportunity there because she was concerned about Akira’s wallet, result-wise, there should not be any problem. In the end, she was still a merchant and Akira was still her customer.

As Shizuka’s merchant side made that excuse, her other side just exasperatedly let it slide with that excuse. She then changed gear and returned back to her shop to properly close it. This time, she took more time than usual closing her shop.

Rebuild World – Chapter 110, A Knock-off Rich Lady's Envoy

Sheryl went to a high-class looking building in the lower district of Kugamayama city. For the sake of her gang's business, there was some stuff that she had to do in the Hunter Office's main branch.

Sheryl took off her wasteland coat and handed it over to Erio. When she did that, everyone around her was amazed by her appearance. She was clad in a high-class old-world dress that was refitted just for her, which had cost 1,500,000 Aurum.

With Sheryl's dress even giving a sense of dignity, it would be expected for the people who saw her to mistake her as someone from the inner wall. It was extremely difficult to see through that disguise and notice that she was from the slum city. Sheryl moved so naturally as if the mood around her did not affect her at all. With that amazing dress boosting her already attractive body, Sheryl looked like a rich lady. The armed young boy and the armed man next to her only served to deepen that misunderstanding since they looked like Sheryl's bodyguards, those two were Erio and Darris.

Erio could not completely hide his nervousness, the nuance of the Hunter Office's main branch overwhelmed him as he looked around nervously while breaking into a cold sweat.

Sheryl then said to Erio to calm him down.

“Erio, take a deep breath and try to calm down. It’s not like this place is dangerous. As a matter of fact, this place is way safer than the back alley of the slum city. So there’s no need to be afraid.”

“A-alright. But still, I’m sure you can understand it, right? Or more like, how can you be this calm?”

Erio looked at Sheryl who did not give off any nervous vibe and he could feel a sense of admiration and amazement. Sheryl was also a slum city child, just like him. Judging from that point of view, both of them were not supposed to be there. It was common for slum children to be kicked out from a building by some armed guards.

[…Well, Sheryl became the boss of the gang after she negotiated with that Akira, that in itself is amazingly brave. It reminds me again that she’s unlike those common slum children… But now that I think about it, those common slum children won’t even think of striking a deal with the Hunter who destroyed their own gang, huh…]

The girl who was once just a common slum city girl in the past had become a beautiful girl clad in a beautiful dress as if they were living in completely different worlds. Seeing that girl in front of her, Erio somehow felt a bit complicated.

Sheryl then warned him.

“If you stay like that, there’s no mistaking that someone would call the guard to kick you out. So try to act casual.”

“I know… I know, but….”

“Take some deep breaths until you can calm down.”

Darris smiled bitterly and said.

“Can I go now? I know you guys are having a hard time here, but I’m busy, you know.”

Sheryl replied.

“Sure. Thank you very much for taking us here.”

“Alright, later then. I’ll still be somewhere inside the building. If anything happens, you guys can just call me, and if you can’t reach me, just call Katsuragi. We’ll meet up again when it’s time to head back.”

“Okay.”

Darris glanced at Sheryl, smiled, and said.

“…Well, as long as you have that dress and stay here, I bet no one would cause you any trouble. This place is the Hunter Office after all, so I’m sure no one here is foolish enough to cause a ruckus. But still, women are scary, they can completely transform. Had I not known you in the past, I would’ve been fooled too. Geez, scary scary…”

Sheryl smiled gracefully.

“I’ll take that as a compliment. It’s a dress that I received as a present from Akira after all.”

Darris smiled bitterly and waved his hand at Sheryl before leaving. Although he took her there due to Katsuragi’s order, he had no plans to accompany her doing the troublesome administration work. So, he was planning to pass time in the shops upstairs.

A strong looking bodyguard had left that knock-off rich lady’s envoy. While the weak-looking bodyguard still looked quite nervous. Everyone’s attention in that area focused on Sheryl and Erio. The main branch of the Hunter Office was often visited by people from both outside and inside the wall. Sometimes, there were even people from companies too. As such, even if Sheryl was indeed a rich lady, it was not a rare sight at all.

Sheryl looked at Erio and said.

“Do you want to talk about something for a little while until you can calm down? If you are this nervous, people won’t believe that you’re my bodyguard. And if that’s impossible for you, I still need you to do your job properly to protect me. That’s exactly why I brought you here with me, you know?”

“Yeah, I know…”

Erio was there to protect Sheryl. At a glance, he seemed to be using a pretty good armour and he was carrying a powerful gun which could be used even without an augmented suit. Sheryl got that equipment by making a deal with Katsuragi. So, looking at Erio, most of the Hunters in that area would think that he was a pretty well equipped young Hunter.

But it was all just a disguise, his armour was needlessly heavy with almost no worth as protection, the aim on his gun was defective and his gun was broken that it might explode when used, Katsuragi even warned them not to try using it since that would be extremely dangerous. Going out to the wasteland with that equipment was simply suicidal.

Erio himself had no skills to protect Sheryl in the first place, but it was still safer than coming alone. Although it was only for putting up an appearance, it was still way better than having nothing. And of course, inside that Hunter Office building, there was no one foolish enough to think of testing Erio’s skill. After all, causing trouble inside that building was the same as picking a fight against the Hunter Office.

Erio tried to think of a subject to talk about to help him calm down, but he ended up thinking about why they were there in the first place.

“By the way, I wonder what Akira-san is busy with. If he would accompany you, you won’t even need me here.”

Sheryl calmly replied back.

“Well, I already know that much. But like, I wonder if it’s that important to even turn down your request.”

“…It’s not like I pleaded with him to accompany me. Moreover, I can’t just keep asking him to come with me every time I want to go to the lower district, right? Although I asked Katsuragi-san to have Darris-san accompany us this time, I eventually would rely on you and the other gang members. So you better get used to it while you still have the chance.”

“Of course, but still… Hunter job, huh…”

Erio thought that it was perfectly understandable for a Hunter to be busy doing his or her Hunter job. But it could not be something that important, at least, it would not be enough for a reason to refuse a request from Sheryl, Akira’s lover, to accompany her for a bit and to make sure that she was safe.

[If Alicia asks me the same thing, I would definitely prioritize her as long as I don’t have anything too important.]

As Erio thought, ‘if it was him and her girlfriend’, he looked a bit confused, his expression was saying that he found something weird.

Right at that moment, Sheryl suddenly stopped smiling and whispered to Erio.

“Erio, are you, by any chance, suspecting my relation with Akira?”

Her calm voice hid her anger, the usual sparkle in her eyes that would mesmerize any boys had disappeared. She sent a cold and dark gaze to Erio.

Erio flusteredly refuted.

“No! Of course not! It’s a misunderstanding!! It’s the opposite!! I just thought that although both of you are so close, it was rather unexpected that you would give up… I mean… I mean it is a reason to go on a date with him! But well, I guess that’s understandable, after all, it might be best to stop bothering him all the time… I mean… it must have been a sudden request to Akira, and he was busy, right?!”

Erio was being desperate, it was rather unclear whether there was a need to change his wordings like that or it was just simply because he was trying to come up with an excuse on the fly.

Sheryl herself understood that her gang could not survive had Akira not supported her. That's why Erio was trying his best to readjust his wordings since he thought that he might worsen the relation between Akira and Sheryl.

Sheryl understood that very well, but that was not enough to abate her irritation.

Sheryl did try to push her request when she asked Akira, but she was coldly rejected. Akira did not even consider her request, he had no intention to change his current plans just because Sheryl and her gang asked him something. So, he flatly rejected Sheryl's request.

But her current irritation actually stemmed from her uneasiness. She was feeling uneasy about whether she could become someone important to Akira before he changed his mind. She was doing her best to do that, but she did not know whether she would even make it or that she was even already too late. She had no idea if that was the reason why her request was rejected this time.

Sheryl somehow returned her expression back to normal, she then smiled and said to Erio.

"Well, I guess that's fine. If that's the case… Just so you know, unnecessary misunderstanding tends to cause trouble later."

"Y-yeah, I'm glad that I can clear up that misunderstanding. I'll be more careful next time."

Erio sighed in relief. His nervousness coming from being inside the Hunter Office had also disappeared.

Sheryl had finished half of the administration work beforehand. She just needed to wait for the Hunter Office to finish their part of the work. Sheryl and Erio were sitting on a bench on the first floor of that building while waiting for the Hunter Office to finish.

Sheryl was spending her time thinking about her plans for the future. To be more precise, she was thinking about what to do to sell the relics that Akira asked her to. She was working on her information terminal to reevaluate, revise, and refine that plan.

If she could make that plan successful, she might be able to be someone not worth abandoning to Akira. It might also be a chance to deepen their relationship even more. Sheryl thought so as she put her best efforts working on her plan.

As Sheryl was extremely focused working on her information terminal, somebody suddenly called her.

“…Oh, as I thought, that’s really Sheryl! Sheryl!!”

A group of 3 Hunters walked toward Sheryl. It was Katsuya who looked rather happy, Yumina who just smiled bitterly, and the as expressionless as always Airi.

When Sheryl noticed them, she stood up from her bench. She then smiled and greeted Katsuya who came all the way next to her.

“Long time no see, I’m glad that everyone seems to be doing well.”

Katsuya looked at Sheryl’s smile and blushed. That dazzling smile decorating her pretty face was the result of Sheryl’s hard work training herself.

Katsuya stood in front of Sheryl and happily said.

“I didn’t expect to see you here. I’m really happy to be able to see you again.”

After he said that, Katsuya noticed Erio next to Sheryl.

“…Uhhh, who’s that guy?”

Erio got flustered when Katsuya looked at him. It might be just him, but for some reason, Erio felt that Katsuya's gaze at him was not a friendly one.

Erio's equipment and appearance was the epitome of what most Hunters usually mocked Katsuya and his team for. Just an inexperienced young Hunter using good equipment, or a stupid young Hunter misunderstanding the power of his own equipment as his own skill. Or at least, that was what Katsuya thought, and that might be unconsciously irritating him. Or it might be simply because he did not like the fact that a guy he did not think suitable for Sheryl was standing next to her. Whichever it was, Katsuya could not give a friendly gaze to Erio.

They then introduced themselves to Erio.

"Ahh, I'm Katsuya, a Drankam Hunter. My Hunter Rank is 36."

"I'm Yumina. I'm also a Drankam Hunter just like Katsuya."

"Airi, same."

Erio panicked even more, the people standing in front of him were not just Hunters by appearance, they were real Hunters. Moreover, it seemed that Katsuya was putting some kind of pressure on him. Although there was no way he would kill him, it was still scary for Erio.

Erio tried his best to make a calm expression as he nervously said the line he had previously decided with Sheryl beforehand.

"…I was told not to speak."

Erio only said that and looked away from Katsuya's group. It might be because he was too nervous that he sounded rather rude.

Katsuya got even more irritated by Erio's answer. He might have thought that it sounded like an answer that someone would give to mock other people.

Sheryl apologetically said to Katsuya.

“My apologies, he’s my bodyguard. He was told not to talk with other people unless it’s absolutely necessary since it might disrupt his duty as my bodyguard. So please let me apologize in his stead.”

Sheryl bowed to Katsuya and his friends, Katsuya flusteredly replied.

“Ah, no. If that’s the case, it can’t be helped then, right?”

Katsuya looked at Airi and Yumina, asking for their support.

“Duty is important, it can’t be helped.”

Yumina and Airi returned back to their usual self as they saw Sheryl bowing to apologize to them.

Sheryl raised her head and smiled while thanking them.

“Thank you very much… As for him, well, it might be rude to say this, but please don’t interact too much with him. He’s not used to his job yet, that’s why he’s high-strung right now.”

Katsuya blushed when he said that.

[Well, Sheryl did say that if I annoy her acquaintance, it might cause her to hate me too. So let’s be careful about that. Alright then.]

If he left a bad impression on Sheryl’s acquaintance, it might also leave a bad impression on Sheryl too, and vice versa. Katsuya then threw a friendly smile at Erio.

Seeing how Sheryl was smiling at Katsuya’s group and how Katsuya’s group’s behaviour changed in a snap, Erio sighed out in relief while also feeling slightly scared at the same time.

But that fear was not of Katsuya’s group, that fear was of Sheryl.

[…I bet Sheryl is planning to trick them too, right? People don't usually treat slum children like that, so I'm sure they at least think that we're from the lower district. In the worst-case scenario, they might be even thinking that we're from the inner wall… Seriously though, is it really that easy to trick people?]

Now that he thought about it, Sheryl actually also did the same thing to the Hunters that she met in the Higaraka Residence Ruin. Back then, Erio did not notice it since he was too nervous being in the middle of the wasteland. But now that he looked back, Sheryl actually did the exact same thing.

Erio knew Sheryl for quite a long time, he already knew her since the days when they were together in Sibea's gang. Because of that, he knew her very well.

But he could not say that with confidence now. Erio noticed that the current Sheryl was completely different from the past Sheryl.

When Erio was kicked out from the gang, Sheryl was actually thinking of a way to let Erio return back to the gang. He knew that from Alicia, it might be out of Sheryl's pity toward someone who she had known well for a long time.

But if Erio got kicked out from the gang now, he was sure that the current Sheryl would just forget about him. Even if Alicia pleaded, Erio bet that Sheryl would not accept him back to the gang as long as he did not directly ask Akira to vouch for him.

Erio could not afford to make any mistake there, so he decided to keep his mouth shut to make sure that he would not leak any important information.

Katsuya smiled at Sheryl and asked her a question.

"By the way, what are you doing here? Are you waiting for someone?"

"No. I came here to complete some administration work. Right now I'm just waiting until they process their side of work."

“So, you’re free right now…? In that case, do you want to hang out with us?”

Sheryl was surprised, but she quickly returned to her usual smile.

“Are you trying to hit on me?”

Katsuya flusteredly replied.

“Eh?! Ah, no, uh, it’s not like I’m hitting on you or anything…”

Katsuya casually invited Sheryl, he did that almost purely out of habit.

Sheryl smiled bitterly as she apologetically said.

“Katsuya-san. I understand that you invited me without any ulterior motives. But, honestly speaking, I don’t think it’s something that you should do when you’re already accompanying another girl, you know? That would be rude very rude, not to me, but to the girl whom you’re accompanying.”

Sheryl shifted her gaze towards Airi and Yumina. Katsuya followed Sheryl’s gaze to them too. Yumina somehow looked exasperated as she sighed. While for Airi, she looked slightly conflicted.

Yumina smiled bitterly and said to Sheryl.

“Don’t worry, this guy is just like that. You can say that it’s his habit.”

“…Humans can really get used to anything.”

Airi vague mumbling somehow sounded pretty convincing. Sheryl then replied with a bitter smile to both of them.

Katsuya could feel a slight pressure coming from the girls. He then flusteredly tried to defend himself, but instead, he sounded like he was only making excuses.

“No, well, uhh, you know, it seems that I offended you this time, so I just thought that if you’re free, I could make up for it. Not to mention that we could not talk to each other that much the last time we met, right? That’s all there’s to it.”

Yumina looked at Katsuya, although it was only an excuse, Katsuya was not lying. Moreover, he did feel sorry for what happened too. Yumina could read that far since she had been together with him for quite some time.

Yumina was not sure what to do, but she eventually decided to go along with Katsuya’s plan. In the first place, they were actually out in the city that day to cheer up Katsuya. So she decided to just let him do what he wanted to do.

[…Well, I guess it’s fine, huh. It might cheer him up for a bit talking with someone else who’s not working in Drankam.]

Yumina then cautiously asked Sheryl.

“Well, it’s not really that comfortable talking while standing like this. So, do you have time to hang out with us for a bit? We’re actually thinking of taking a short rest too.”

Sheryl looked surprised.

“Is that really okay? I might be a bother to both of you.”

Sheryl thought for a bit, it was an easy thing to refuse that offer. Erio also felt uneasy about their offer. But since it might cause them to doubt Sheryl’s identity, he decided to not say anything there.

While on the other hand, if Sheryl refused that offer, she might be missing a good chance to gather valuable information. If she could get some valuable information from Katsuya and his friends, she might get some insight to help her plan to sell her relics.

Not to mention, Akira was quite happy with the information that she gathered last time. Thus Sheryl reached a conclusion.

Sheryl smiled gracefully and said.

“In that case, please let me accompany you.”

Katsuya smiled happily when he heard Sheryl’s answer.

They then moved to a cafe inside that building. After all, for the sake of the administration work that she was planning to finish that day, she could not afford to leave that building.

They found an empty table and took a seat on that table. Erio was the only one who was not sitting, he was just standing-by next to Sheryl without saying anything.

Since lunchtime was getting closer, Katsuya, Airi and Yumina ordered some meals for their lunch. While Sheryl only ordered a cup of coffee.

Leaving Erio who was standing there as Sheryl’s bodyguard aside, Sheryl was the only one not ordering a meal, so then Katsuya casually asked her a question.

“Are you sure you’re okay not ordering anything else? Just a cup of coffee?”

“Yes, please don’t let it bother you.”

Sheryl was smiling like usual when she said that, but Katsuya somehow felt there was a slight disturbance in that smile. So he inadvertently asked her a question.

“…I actually chose this place since it’s pretty cheap considering the quality of the meal they serve here. Do you, by any chance, not find it to your liking?”

Sheryl’s dress was obviously a high-class dress. It was an old-world relic fitted exactly for her, so of course, she was giving off a different vibe compared to the other people with common dresses.

Even Katsuya could not imagine how much that dress would cost him if he tried to buy one. So considering the usual expense of the people who would casually use such a dress, Katsuya was worried if he had picked a cafe that was too cheap for Sheryl's standard.

Sheryl lightly shook her head, she looked slightly embarrassed as she said.

"No, that's not it… Uhh, the reason as to why I didn't order any meal is not because I don't like the food in this cafe… It's… Uhh, to keep my body's proportion under control, so…"

Katsuya could not catch what Sheryl was implying, so he just tilted his head and asked further.

"Your body's proportion?"

Yumina and Airi immediately jabbed at him.

"Katsuya, shut up!"

"Katsuya, you should think before you speak!"

As Yumina and Airi were glaring at Katsuya, he finally noticed it. He immediately flusteredly tried to come up with an excuse.

"Ah, no, I don't think you're fat, you know. And I do think it's rather healthy not to be too skinny…"

"Geez, Katsuya, just shut up, will you?"

"Katsuya, you should really put more thought before you speak."

Yumina and Airi once again immediately shut Katsuya up. Thanks to that, Katsuya realized that he only made it worse, so he decided to just shut up as not to make it even worse.

Yumina smiled bitterly and apologized to Sheryl.

“I’m sorry. I know that I’ve been saying this again and again, but that’s just his habit. I know it sounds like an excuse, but he did not mean to offend you at all. He just… What can I say, tend to go too far… Well, I know that it’s not good at all, I wonder if the effect from the last scolding has worn off.”

Yumina glared at him. Katsuya somehow understood what she wanted to say, so he then apologetically said.

“I’m really sorry… I’m sorry, Sheryl.”

Sheryl tried to show that she was not angry as she smiled at Katsuya and his friends.

“Please don’t worry about it. It’s also partly my fault for doing something that might cause a misunderstanding. Since we’re here, let’s not worry too much about it and enjoy ourselves.”

Katsuya and Yumina smiled and blushed when they saw Sheryl’s smile. Yumina then tried to hide her embarrassment by changing the topic.

“Very well then, let’s talk about something else.”

After that, meals and drinks were delivered to their table. They then started talking to each other while enjoying their meals and drinks.

Sheryl slurped her coffee as she sighed in relief since she was able to keep her image.

[…It seems that it somehow leaked on my face, huh. I’m glad I was able to dodge it. But still, we’re really living in a different world, huh. For them, this cafe is a rather cheap cafe. I wonder how much I need to earn to be able to feel the same.]

The coffee that Sheryl ordered cost her 1500 Aurum per cup, seeing from the perspective of someone who used to live in the slum city, it was an extremely expensive cup of coffee. But even so, it was actually the cheapest thing on the menu of that cafe, and of course, it was not like she could just order water and leave. So after a lot of thinking, Sheryl decided to just order a cup of coffee in the end.

Inside that small cup that Sheryl could easily fit her hand into, it was only 70% filled with coffee. She spent 1500 Aurum for that cup of coffee, honestly speaking, she had a lot to complain about that cup of coffee as she put a lot of the free sugar and milk inside that coffee and mixed them together.

After putting so much sugar and milk inside her coffee, which would definitely cause a certain group of coffee lovers to rage, Sheryl's coffee turned into a very sweet liquid. When she took a slurp, the sweetness quickly spread through her tongue and softened her expression. Her brain might have been seeking sugar to help clear her mind.

Up until now, Sheryl had never ever been in a situation where she could use sugar without worrying about the cost, and since she had spent 1500 Aurum for her coffee, she used so much sugar as if she was trying to make up for that price. Thus her coffee turned into a very sweet liquid.

Katsuya and Yumina were so surprised when they looked at Sheryl who used a lot of sugar on her coffee and how her expression turned softer when she took a slurp of that coffee. But on the other hand, they could understand why Sheryl would do that. It might be something that she had to do so that she could keep her body shape under control.

Sheryl noticed Katsuya and Yumina's expression.

"…Uhmm, is there any problem?"

Yumina carefully asked.

"Uhh, isn't that too sweet for you?"

Sheryl looked a bit confused.

"Yeah. It's sweet."

"No, that's not what I meant… Uhh, sorry, it's nothing."

Yumina was about to ask if it was not too sweet, but she realized that there was not even any need to ask that question as she stopped herself.

Sheryl still looked a bit confused as she shifted her gaze from Yumina to Katsuya. Katsuya noticed that and flusteredly asked.

“Uhmmm, do you like sweet things?”

“Yes, I love them.”

Sheryl smiled, there was no lie in her smile. Although it was a dazzling smile, Katsuya somehow felt pressured by that smile. It must be because he was overwhelmed by how Sheryl could smile like that after drinking a coffee with that much sugar without showing any difficulty.

“I-I see, well, I can totally get that. A lot of my Hunter friends are girls and all of them like sweet things. Well, we move around a lot as Hunters, so I guess it helps with recovering their energy and healing the wounds. That’s why I think there’s nothing wrong with eating a lot of calories. I know some girls who always eat a lot…”

Katsuya then kept on talking while trying not to touch the subject about Sheryl’s palate and hoping that he was not making a weird face. Yumina and Airi did not seem to plan on stopping him any time soon.

When they thought about that cup of coffee, they knew that it must be extremely sweet and could not help but to imagine how it would taste if they took a slurp of that coffee. Thus they were trying not to look at Sheryl’s cup in order to avoid thinking about it.

As they continued talking to each other, the subject slowly shifted to Katsuya's group's work as Hunters. It was because Yumina and Sheryl intentionally pushed the conversation in that direction.

Katsuya's story started from when he was having a hard time just after joining Drankam. He already showed a glimpse of his talent right after he joined. The veteran skilled Hunters of the gang noticed that rare talent, so they sent Katsuya with the other Hunters to explore ruins and fight monsters. Then eventually, he grew strong enough to be recognized as one of the Drankam officers.

Katsuya and his friends had also formed a rather influential faction inside Drankam. Recently, he had even gotten to command a Hunter team to hunt for the bounty monsters. Katsuya took the command and his team was able to successfully hunt a bounty monster. It was a rather amazing track record that showed his talent as a Hunter.

Sheryl exaggerated her surprise before asking more questions to Katsuya. In the middle of their conversation, she praised, complimented, and applauded him frequently. She applauded Katsuya's ability to make decisions in a hard situation, or how he fought bravely in the dangerous battlefield, or how he tried to save his friends without caring for his own safety.

Sheryl listened closely with full interest, she showed a worried face when he talked about how he faced a dangerous situation, and she showed a happy face and praised him when he talked about how he and his friends made a big achievement.

Sheryl realized that Yumina kept bringing up subjects that would make it easier to praise Katsuya. Although she did not know the reason, she decided to jump wagon that subject and kept praising him.

Although Sheryl's compliments were all intentional, they neither felt out of place nor weird at all. They did not feel forced either. Sheryl's speech skills was so high that there was no flaw in it. But the response from Katsuya was rather dull.

At first, Katsuya started talking with full vigour as if he was boasting about his story, and when Sheryl praised him, he would blush and smile. But as his story went on, his expression started getting cloudy and he started to sound less and less excited. And when he talked about his hunt for the bounty monster, even when Sheryl complimented him, he just awkwardly laughed.

Sheryl thought that she might have complimented him too much and annoyed him instead, but when she looked at Airi and Yumina's expression, she noticed that it was not the case. Both of them looked worriedly at Katsuya, basically, both of them knew why Katsuya looked so down and Sheryl thought that must be the case.

Sheryl showed a puzzled face, she looked a bit at loss and worried at Katsuya's reaction as she was considering her options. She might have to wait for some time before her business there was finished, but she could say that it was about time for her to leave and withdraw from Katsuya's group. Although that would mean she would leave in the middle of a bad mood, it was still a choice that she could pick to leave before the mood got even worse.

But it seemed that Katsuya was starting to climb the ranks in Drankam, so she decided that it might be a good idea to stay there longer and use that chance to deepen their relationship and gather more information from him.

Sheryl sounded apologetic as she asked Katsuya.

“…Katsuya-san, I’m really sorry but did I say something that offended you? If that’s the case, my apologies.”

Katsuya became flustered when Sheryl suddenly apologized to him.

“Eh?! Ah, that’s not it!”

“Is that so…? It seemed that your mood got worse every time I said something…”

Sheryl replied while lowering her voice. She hung her head as if she was down.

Katsuya looked at Yumina, asking for help.

Since Yumina was worried about Katsuya, she made a serious face and changed the subject.

“Katsuya, if that’s not the case, I think it’s better if you properly explain it to Sheryl”

“Eh? Ah… You’re right.”

Katsuya was stumbling over his words while Yumina just kept staring at him.

Katsuya also reacted in a similar way the last time Yumina asked him what’s wrong when she saw him looked so down. But when that happened, he always apologized for making her worry and said he was alright without telling her anything.

Yumina herself actually had a guess as to why Katsuya was feeling down. But she could not say that herself.

After Sheryl checked with them, she was relieved that it was not her fault that Katsuya seemed depressed. She then smiled awkwardly and both intentionally and naturally looked worried for Katsuya and said.

“I won’t force you to tell me. It’s enough for me to know that it’s not because of me. But if there’s anything that bothers you, I’m all ears. I will listen if you want to share it with me. I heard that it might help you feel at ease if you share your problem with someone else. Although I might not be able to support you like Yumina-san and Airi-san, I can at least listen to your worries and complaints. So, if you’re okay with it, I’m willing to listen.”

Katsuya glanced timidly at Sheryl. Sheryl locked her gaze at Katsuya while smiling at him.

Katsuya was not sure what to do. It was obvious that he was hesitating from telling about his worry to anyone else, he looked conflicted as his gaze wandered around. Then eventually, his gaze returned back to Sheryl. The moment he looked at her gentle smile one more time, Katsuya opened his mouth.

“…Sheryl, do you think that I’m a great Hunter?”

“Yes.”

“…Are you sure?”

“I’m sure different people would have different indicators to decide whether someone is a great Hunter or not. But from my point of view and from what I heard from your story just now, as long as it was not a lie, I do think that you’re a great Hunter.”

“…I see.”

Katsuya paused for a bit, he then looked dispirited as he said with a voice that expressed his distress.

“…I don’t really know anymore if I’m that great of a Hunter.”

He then slowly continued talking.

Katsuya had admired Hunters for a long time. He had heard stories about Hunters and when he imagined that scene, his heart would flutter.

They worked so hard to get stronger and went to explore the dangerous, but more than that, wondrous old-world ruin together with their comrades that they trusted. They then fought against swarms of monsters that were way out of their leagues and explored undiscovered ruin without any guides, they had to go through a lot of ups and downs together with their comrades to be able to return back alive with valuable relics in their hands. Sometimes, they splurged on their reward money to throw a big celebration or when they discussed how to use their reward money to step up their power as Hunters. Those were the common stories of all those successful Hunters in the eastern district.

Katsuya imagined himself going through all of those things, he promised to himself that he would be one of those successful Hunters one day. Fortunately enough, he was blessed with a suitable talent to reach that and he was blessed with friends that he could trust and good luck.

His luck, comrades, and talent pushed him further up. He quickly climbed the ladder into a great Hunter and distinguished himself from all the other common Hunters.

Then finally, Katsuya, who had become one of those successful Hunters stories in the eastern district, had to face the darkness behind all of those glorious stories. It was the reason why people did not even try to accomplish it although they would be able to attain great wealth if they succeeded.

“…At first, wait no, it’s not exactly at first, huh. Basically, the moment when I realized it was when we took that request to face the monster swarm flooding out from the Kuzusuhara ruin heading to Kugamayama city. Some of my friends died back then, I've known them well, we've eaten together in the same cafeteria in the past, we've gone through hard training together, we've worked together to explore ruins and hunt monsters. Some of them were blown into small pieces by cannons, some of them eaten alive by monsters, some of them ran out of medicines and died from nonfatal wounds… They died… and I couldn't save them."

Hunter's job was indeed an extremely dangerous job. It was a common thing for them to get killed on duty, so there was nothing strange about it at all. The stories of those successful Hunters were basically the stories of those Hunters who survived. Due to his rare talent, Katsuya and his friends had forgotten that truth. But it was only a matter of time before they had to face it.

"At that time, I thought that it would be alright as long as I can be strong enough, it would be fine as long as I can be powerful enough. So I tried my best and I thought that I'd become the great Hunter that I aspired to be back then. Then, they gave me the responsibility to command a team to hunt for the bounty monster and we successfully hunted the bounty monster. I'm sure a lot of people think that I'm a great Hunter, but… It was no use, I lost a lot of my friends… I couldn't save them too. I do feel happy when you say that I'm a great Hunter. But, like, you know, when you call me a great Hunter it also makes me feel conflicted… That's all."

Yumina looked at Katsuya who was speaking as if he was confessing his sin. Her guess was correct, Katsuya was lamenting the friends that he had lost, he was lamenting the fact that he could not save them. But Yumina could not think of any words to cheer him up.

Getting killed was an occupational hazard for Hunters. Thus, it was better for those Hunters to stop mourning for their dead friends, forget about it, and move on. At least that's what Yumina thought, but she could not say that to Katsuya. After all, she was also one of his friends and she might be one of his friends that would get killed too.

Yumina could not say those words since it might cause him to just forget about her and move on when she got killed.

Airi also guessed the reason why Katsuya was depressed, but she thought that it was just a common problem, that was why she did not say anything. In the first place, she did not lament the death of her friends as much as Yumina and Katsuya. It was a common thing for people to die, especially in their line of work. So, there was nothing to be surprised about. Even if they were her friends that they just laughed together yesterday, after all, it was a common scene in the world where she was raised.

Airi looked up to Katsuya since he was the one who saved her from such a world. Moreover, she did want him to lament her if she got killed. She did not want Katsuya to just quickly forget about her when she died or think that she might have died just because he did not see her for some time. That was why she could not tell him to get used to losing friends.

From the outside, it looked like Sheryl was sympathizing with Katsuya but she was actually organizing that new information in the back of her head and thinking of how she should react to his story.

Katsuya thought that everything would be fine as long he worked hard enough. After all, he had the rare talent to accomplish that, he had done that in the past, he experienced that first hand, and he was likely to do that again in the future. Although Sheryl had no proof, she was sure that it must be the case.

No matter where and when he was born, it was very likely that Katsuya would work himself hard and reach success and happiness. Then loving him and getting loved by him would mean getting a share of his success and happiness.

Sheryl then thought that there must be 2 kinds of people around him. Either those that accepted him and cared for him, or those that rejected him and hated him to death. Either way, it showed that they were interested in him. There must be something in him that caused people around him to not be able to just ignore him. Leaving aside those sociopathic people who did not care about other people, normal people would not be able to just ignore Katsuya’s existence.

Sheryl then smiled bitterly, but she kept it inside her heart and did not let it show on her face.

[I wonder if he's one of those people who are too talented and have to face hardship because of their talents. Honestly speaking, I can't sympathize at all, but let's leave that aside for now and think about how I should react. Well, I can just pretend that I can't find any words to say and just keep quiet, but…]

After a lot of thinking, she finally decided on what to do. Then she made a rather serious face and said to Katsuya in a strong tone.

"Katsuya-san, I'll tell you what I think after listening to your story. If it's wrong or if I say something that I should not, I hope that you can just let it slide or just mock me and laugh it off."

Katsuya, who was hanging his head low and looking down, raised his head and looked straight to Sheryl with a serious expression. He felt a bit overwhelmed with her staring at him as he was waiting for her to continue.

Sheryl was staring straight at Katsuya with a serious face, but she then smiled and bowed deeply to him.

"Thank you very much for protecting the city. I can only give you and your comrades as well as all of your friends that you lost my deepest gratitude for protecting the city. Thank you very much!"

Katsuya, Airi, and Yumina were extremely surprised when Sheryl suddenly thanked them. Sheryl then raised her head and stared at Katsuya before continuing.

"Had that swarm of monsters from the Kuzusuhara ruin not been stopped, I bet the city would have suffered extensive damage. And if those bounty monsters were left alone, they would have slowly killed the city. I'm sure each Hunter has his or her reason to fight for protecting the city, some of them might have done it for the sake of money, some of them might have done it for the sake of renown, or it might be just because it was one of their jobs, some of them might even have done that because they had no other choice. But it did not change the fact that they had put their lives at stake and some of them even lost their lives in that fight. Thus I feel greatly indebted to them."

Katsuya realized that he was really moved by Sheryl's reply, but he did not know the reason why.

"As long as you work as a Hunter, there's a risk for you to get killed. It could even be said that it's their own responsibility for taking that occupation. I bet the Hunters need to resolve themselves to take that risk when they decide to be Hunters. But with that being said, not everyone is blessed enough to work as a Hunter. I'm sure there are people who don't have the skills and get killed in no time. Then, even for those Hunters with proper skill and equipment, they might also get killed simply because of bad luck. And I believe for those Hunters who died because you couldn't save them, it was simply because they were not lucky enough to get saved by you."

Katsuya realized that he felt as if a burden was lifted off his shoulder. But he did not know the reason why.

"I don't know the detail of your relationship with the friends that you have lost. But if you feel proud that you have risked your life together with them, if you feel proud that you were able to fight alongside them, please never forget about them. But if that's not the case, if their deaths only chain you down, then please forget about them this instant."

The moment Katsuya heard Sheryl telling him to just forget about his dead friends, he immediately shouted in anger.

"Are you seriously saying that I should just forget about them?"

But it did not faze Sheryl at all, she kept staring at Katsuya's eyes with a serious face as she continued.

"If you're proud of them, then it should be fine. I'm sure that it would even help you down the road. It would give you the courage to push through difficult situations. It would help you stand up again in a hopeless situation.

But, if it only serves as a burden to you, it would eventually kill you one day. It would one day trip you when you have to step forward and get you killed. It would drag you down when you have to retreat and get you killed. So just forget about them. You can go ahead and scream as much as you want then just forget about them. You can go ahead and curse me as much as you want then just forget about them."

Katsuya did not say anything back while listening to what Sheryl was saying. He was still feeling sad for the friends that he had lost. But the thing that was born from that sadness was no longer something that was blaming him.

Sheryl relaxed her expression and said.

"…I won't tell you to keep on living for the sake of dead people. But, I'll tell you to keep on living for the sake of the other people who are still alive. The other two are really worried about you, you know?"

Katsuya felt a bit at a loss as he looked at Yumina and Airi. It had been such a long time since the last time he saw Airi and Yumina making those faces, indicating that they were truly worried about him.

Katsuya then turned to Sheryl again. He then made a smile filled with resolve and optimism as he said.

"I won't forget about them, I'll always remember them."

Katsuya somehow looked like he was finally able to move on, Sheryl then replied with a smile.

"You're a nice person. Honestly speaking, I was expecting you to get angry at me and tell me to just shut up since I'm only a stranger to you."

Katsuya looked surprised as he said.

"…Then why would you say something like that?"

Sheryl just smiled and answered back casually.

“It’s because I thought that it would at least make you feel better once you get angry and vented everything that you’ve been keeping to yourself until now. And if you vent to a stranger like me, it at least won’t affect your relationship with the people who are close to you. But it seems that there was no need for me to worry about that.”

It left a big impression on Katsuya. Sheryl helped him to move on from all of his accumulated grieve that he had kept inside his heart since the day he lost his friends. She prioritized helping him in moving out of worry even though the words that she said there might anger him, a Hunter who had even successfully hunted a bounty monster, a Hunter who was strong enough to easily kill a common civilian. Katsuya felt slight amazement as he stared at Sheryl.

Sheryl then stood up from her seat.

“Unfortunately, it seems that it’s about time for me to leave, so please excuse me.”

Sheryl lightly said her goodbye.

“Ah…”

Seeing Sheryl was about to leave that place, Katsuya inadvertently tried to stop her, but he himself did not know the reason why he did that.

“…Uhmm, can we meet again some other day?”

Sheryl looked a bit surprised, but she then smiled smugly and teasingly said.

“Are you trying to hit on me?”

Katsuya was so flustered that he could not give any concrete reply to that. Sheryl then mischievously smiled and said.

“I’m just joking. We should be able to meet again if we’re fated to. Yumina-san and Airi-san too, please be careful out there and until we meet again”

Sheryl once again said goodbye and left that place together with Erio.

Katsuya, Airi, and Yumina who were left continued eating their lunch. Yumina and Airi glanced a few times at Katsuya.

“…Uhmmm, is there anything wrong?”

“No, it’s nothing. I’m just glad that you cheered up.”

After hearing Yumina’s answer, Katsuya then apologized to her and Airi.

“I’m really sorry to have worried both of you… I should’ve talked about it to both of you sooner.”

“We’re teammates, after all, there’s no need to hold back. You can tell us sooner next time.”

“Of course.”

Katsuya gave a firm nod. The shadow that plagued him lately had completely vanished.

Yumina sighed, the girl who she met only twice was able to easily clear Katsuya’s worry. Yumina was amazed by that. Although she did not show it on her face, she actually felt discouraged by it too. But that was not the most important point here, Yumina was focused on something else.

[…I guess that was a mistake, huh… Ahhh, no no no, I should not think like that. Katsuya was cheered up, so it should be fine.]

Yumina kept telling herself that at least Sheryl was not looking at Katsuya as her love interest, that was why it should be fine.

After finishing the rest of the administrative work, Sheryl walked through the streets of the lower district and headed back to her base. She had met up with Darris beforehand. But after telling Darris what happened, she decided to take a detour to avoid meeting Katsuya again.

Sheryl realized that Erio was looking at her. Ever since she finished her business in the Hunter Office, he had been glancing at her with a conflicted expression.

Sheryl was weirded out by that as she lightly snapped at him.

“Erio, what is it? You’ve been glancing at me. Do you have anything you want to say to me or something?”

But Erio then replied as if he was trying to run away.

“Ah, no, it’s nothing.”

Half of the reason as to why he kept glancing at Sheryl was out of fear. He was fearful of how she was able to completely trick Katsuya and his friends. It was because he noticed how much the person that he knew well, had changed. But, he did not have the courage to say that in front of Sheryl.

But then, Sheryl sounded irritated as she replied back to Erio. It might be because she did not like the fact that he was not being honest there.

“You won’t behave like that if it was nothing, right? So just tell me already, what is it?”

Erio understood well that it would be a bad idea if he kept trying to say that it was nothing. Thus he decided to ask Sheryl something that had been bothering him.

“…Back then, you said all of those things to that Hunter… Katsuya, was it again? So like, how much of them were your true feelings?”

“My true feelings?”

Sheryl looked flabbergasted after hearing Erio’s question, her face was saying that she did not understand the meaning behind that question. But after she had that expression on her face for a few seconds, she suddenly seemed to have realized something and said.

“…Ahhh, I see!! By any chance, do you think that I was really worried about Katsuya and sympathized with him, that’s why I tried to cheer him up? Don’t be stupid, I don’t care about his story at all. As a matter of fact, the main point that I was actually saying to him was for him to stop moping around and move on, you know? Although I did overly dramatize it though. You got hooked to his story too much, you know. Were you so bored just standing next to me that you could not help but to listen closely to our conversation?”

Erio was rather surprised by her answer as he said.

“I-is that so? But well, I do feel sad when I lose my friends too. So when I realised that even a strong Hunter felt the same, I sympathized with him for a bit though…”

Sheryl frowned.

“Erio. Get a better grip of yourself, will you? We’re not in a position to feel pity for them, you know? Seriously though, sympathy? Do you really think that such a thing could exist between slum children like us and a successful Hunter who had even hunted a bounty monster? I bet you’re just mistaking it for your feeling of wanting to be like him.”

“W-well, now that you mention it, that might be true…? No, but still, like, you know, don’t you think that it might be a good idea to get close to them and get them to support us just like Akira?”

“So then what? Will you be satisfied if he mourns when you, me, Alicia, and the other children get killed? That’s obviously not the case for me though.”

“Neither for me as well…”

“In the first place, what do you think we can give back to them if we get them to support us? It’s already a miracle to have Akira supporting us, you know? Even right now… I’m at loss on what we can give back to him.”

Sheryl was about to say that she still could not repay for everything that Akira had done for the gang and she had no idea how long Akira would keep helping the gang, but she somehow was able to change her wordings.

When he heard that, Erio hung his head low. It was because the hope that he was unconsciously having was crushed with no mercy at all by Sheryl.

“…You’re right, I’m sorry. I just thought that it would be great if they could do that. But I guess the reality is not that kind, huh.”

“It’s all good that you understand now. And if you really understand it now, you should be more thankful to Akira. It’s all thanks to his support that we’re not dead now, you know…? Well, of course, except for that fool. That fool even dared to be so rude to Akira and tried taking me hostage, that’s why he’s dead now. You got spared once, so you should be extra careful.”

“I know, I don’t want to die after all.”

Sheryl nodded in satisfaction after hearing Erio’s response. She then added an extra warning.

“Erio, I’ll give you one other warning besides that one just now. In case if you never break up with Alicia, you should never let her get close to that Katsuya.”

Erio’s face stiffened. He then asked Sheryl in panic.

“W-what do you mean by that?”

“It’s just my intuition. Since both of you are officers in my gang, I’m sure there’ll be a lot of occasions where both of you accompany me, it would be bad if Alicia gets to meet Katsuya by pure coincidence. There is a chance that she will fall for him, you know. Judging from what I heard back then, it seems that Katsuya has a habit of saying things that invite misunderstanding to girls. After all, he’s a kind young handsome powerful Hunter with a lot of money and talent. Even though it seems there are a lot of girls around him, if he treats Alicia kindly… I'm not sure if she can just give up on him, you know?"

After saying that, Sheryl sent a deep meaningful gaze to Erio. Erio's face turned pale, he must be imagining what she just said. After she confirmed that, she then made a serious face and thought.

[It seems that Erio was really pulled to Katsuya's side although he was only listening to our conversation from behind me. Well, it's true that it's a rather amazing story of successful Hunter, so it's no surprise that Erio admired him, but… I wonder if that's all there is to it. Or maybe he felt that weird feeling that I also felt back then? In the worst-case scenario, he might even propose a crazy idea like kicking Akira out and hiding behind Katsuya and his friends for protection. I brought Alicia into the conversation to prevent him from getting too close to Katsuya, but… Looking at his reaction, I guess that was unnecessary, huh…]

As Sheryl kept on thinking about it and Erio kept making a pale face, Darris who heard their conversation thought about something else.

[I don't know just how strong that Katsuya guy is, but leaving him aside, Akira himself is pretty crazy… He fought a swarm of monsters twice on the same day. I didn't think about it much since he saved us, but back then, he was not using an augmented suit and was able to fight a swarm of monsters with just his flimsy AAH rifle. He was even able to save us in the end. Well, it's true that back then, we had a machine gun as our main firepower, then Elena and Sara saved us on our second encounter with the monster swarm that day, but there's no mistaking that Akira did very well in both fights… As I thought, it's really weird. Katsuragi is also bothered by that sudden change in Sheryl's behaviour but… Sheryl is indeed a competent person and there's nothing strange about it, As for Akira… It's true that he's a powerful Hunter, but… There's just something not right about him.]

All of them had their own thoughts as they walked back to their base.

On the night of that day, Katsuya was lying on the bed of his personal room as he remembered what Sheryl said to him. That time when he had only met her once, he yearned to meet her again. And, on their second encounter, she was able to clear his worry.

Lately, Katsuya could not get a good sleep since he always had nightmares where his dead friends blamed him. His regret for not being able to save them, his feeling of guilt, they unconsciously turned his dead friends into ghosts. But after listening to what Sheryl said to him, they had been turned back to his important friends that he was proud of. He was sure that he would not see those nightmares anymore.

Katsuya's heart was gnawed by his regret and guilt. Although it pushed him to get stronger as fast as he could, it only chained and bound him down. Thus preventing him from showing the true value of his talent.

But now, it had completely disappeared. It left a big hole in his heart, and the feeling for a certain someone was slowly filling that hole.

"We didn't exchange contact numbers but… I wonder if we can meet again one day?"

Katsuya lightly smiled and closed his eyes, he was then peacefully lulled to sleep.

That night, Sheryl was lying on the bed in her private room and recollecting what happened that day.

She looked back at everything that she said that day, analyzed them to find any flaws that she should fix next time. Then she remembered how much Katsuya grieved for his dead friends.

It might be due to the creeping sleepiness that she started to think about unnecessary things.

As questions welled up inside her head, they were quickly followed by her own answers. Although she was answering her own question, there was a good chance that her answers were correct. Sheryl's face then twitched.

Her question was short and simple–if she got killed, would Akira mourn for her death? And the answer was an obvious resounding ‘no’.

She then immediately stopped herself from thinking of any reasoning or assumptions that she could think of to refute that since it felt like she could spend eternity just thinking about those things.

[…Let’s think about something else, there are still so many other things that I need to worry about.]

If she kept thinking about that, there was no mistaking it that she would get a nightmare that night. As Sheryl thought so, she immediately tried to think about something else. She tried her best to fight back against the sleepiness to think about other subjects, and in the end, she fell asleep without thinking about anything.

Inside that white world, she heard a voice.

“Stop thinking about unnecessary things.”

And then, that voice vanished.

In the middle of the night, when the morning was still hours away. Alpha was trying to wake up Akira who was sleeping on the bed of his house.

“Akira, wake up.”

Alpha’s voice was transferred directly into Akira’s head. Although her voice was gentle, it was pretty loud. After all, it was not like she could wake Akira up by shaking him.

Akira was still groggy as he scanned his surroundings. It did not take long for him to notice that it was still in the middle of the night. Although he went to sleep earlier than usual last night, it was still way too early for him to naturally wake up, he still had not gotten enough sleep. Looking at Alpha, he understood that he was not in immediate danger. He then sounded slightly irritated as he asked Alpha.

“…What now? It’s still night, you know? What’s wrong?”

“There’s a text message from Elena. I don’t mind if you want to ignore it for now since it’s still in the middle of the night and I don’t mind ignoring the other messages coming after this too, but don’t blame me since I’ve properly woken you up, okay? “

Akira tilted his head, confused. He thought that Alpha must have checked the message first before deciding that it was better to wake him up. Or at least, she must have thought that he might get angry if she waited until morning before telling him about that message.

Akira yawned while reaching for his information terminal that he left not too far from him. He was still sleepy as he operated his information terminal.

In short, the subject of Elena’s message was a request. There was a big battle going on in Mihazono ruin, so the Hunter Office was issuing requests to assist, support, and to save the Hunters who were on the battlefield. It seemed that Elena and Sara accepted a good deal for that request through the mediator company that they were registered under. The message was basically an invitation for Akira if he wanted to join in that request too.

The body of the message said that Akira was allowed to either move alone or move together with Elena and Sara. Of course, he was free to refuse if he had some other things to do. So if he was interested, he could give them a call.

Akira read that message a few times. He thought about a lot of things as his expression turned stern.

“Alpha, do you think Elena-san and Sara-san are going to Seranthal building?”

“I don’t know. After all, it seems that the situation in the Mihazono ruin has greatly changed. But, I do think that there’s a good chance this huge battle is taking place near the Seranthal building. You still remember that short notice from the Hunter Office yesterday, right? So I’m sure some of the Hunters headed to the Seranthal building. Then that request might be to help those Hunters who couldn’t retreat from the battlefield.”

Akira remembered what happened back then. Indeed, it was true that when he was stuck inside the Seranthal building, he could not make a call outside.

“Can they contact the outside after they went inside that building?”

“They might be able to do that now. Either that or that request was issued beforehand to help them retreat in case they don’t return back after some time. Basically, it’s one of those time-based emergency requests. And of course, it might also have nothing to do about that at all.”

Akira did not say anything as he stepped off from his bed and started making preparations to head out.

Alpha at least asked for a confirmation.

“So, you’re taking that invitation from Elena and Sara, right?”

“Yeah.”

“Although we had to go through all of those things yesterday?”

“…This and that are two different matters.”

Alpha sighed exaggeratedly, but Akira just ignored that as he continued with his preparation.

Akira’s reaction was within Alpha’s range of expectations. It was proof that she had a better understanding of his behavioural pattern. She was happy that all of the information that she had collected to control and manipulate Akira combined together with her computing power was able to give an accurate prediction of his action.

But her prediction also gave one more notable result. Even if she tried to stop him, there was a good chance that Akira would still decide to meet up with Elena and Sara. And even if she refused to give her support, there was still a good chance that he would still go.

Back then, Akira saved Elena and Sara in Kuzusuhara ruin, then not too long after that, Elena and Sara saved Akira when he was attacked by a swarm of monsters when he was together with Katsuragi.

From Alpha's opinion, that made them even. But for some reason, from Akira's perspective, he was still carrying 2 debts to Sara and Elena. If Alpha could precisely understand the reason why he decided so, she would be able to more easily manipulate Akira. But for now, she had not even the slightest guess. As long as Akira was still thinking that he had not returned that debt yet, Elena and Sara would still sit on the top of his priority list.

Alpha kept staring at Akira, in the back of her head, she was thinking that she had to do something about it.

Akira put on his augmented suit as he asked Alpha to operate his information terminal.

"Alpha, call Elena-san for me."

"Sure… It's not getting connected. She's outside the reachable area."

"But her message reached me, right?"

"There's no guarantee that the message reached you the moment it was sent, you know. It might have been delayed due to the route that it took or the load on the device. It might be also be coming from how calls are treated differently compared to text messages."

"It can't be helped then, at least send a message to them that I'm accepting their request. It should be possible to at least do that, right?"

Akira thought of his message and sent it to Alpha through telepathy. After all, it was faster than saying it out loud.

"Got it, it's already sent. I'll also frequently check if I can get a connection with their information terminal too."

"I'm counting on you."

After Akira put on his augmented suit, he grabbed his information terminal and his rifles before heading to his vehicle. He then checked the medicines and ammo reserve left on his vehicle before grabbing extra medicine or ammo that he needed. Since he did not know what he would be facing, Akira decided to bring a lot of extra ammo.

After checking everything, Akira sat on the driver seat and was about to turn on the vehicle, but he suddenly stopped.

Alpha who was sitting on the driver assistant's seat looked at Akira with a questioning expression.

"What's wrong? Did you change your mind?"

"No, I just thought of something right before heading out."

Akira then pulled out his information terminal and operated it. Alpha who knew well what he was doing looked slightly surprised. Akira was making a call, it took 10 seconds before the person that he was calling picked up the call.

The sound of the person that he was calling could be heard from Akira's information terminal.

"It's Carol here. I never thought that you would call me this soon. Well, it's true I'm happy that you did, but it's rather rude calling me this early unless it's not about my side job, you know? So like, it's okay to take it that it's about that, right?"

Carol began with a sweet voice as if she was tempting Akira.

But Akira casually answered.

"Sorry, but it's about your main job."

Carol then mischievously replied back.

"Oh my, is that so? In that case then, is it okay if I close the call here?"

"Well, I can understand that. Sorry for calling you this early. Later then."

Akira then ended the call, Alpha who was next to him just smiled amusedly.

Akira then put aside his information terminal and turned on his vehicle. Right when Akira just drove out from the garage, a call from Carol reached his information terminal.

Alpha smiled as she pointed at Akira's information terminal and said.

"I'll do the driving."

"You sure? I'll leave it to you then."

Akira trusted the driving to Alpha as he let go of the wheel and picked up his information terminal to answer the call.

"It's Akira."

Carol sounded a bit annoyed.

"…There's no need to suddenly cut your call like that, you know. Can't you at least try being kinder?"

"I'm in a hurry here. So I don't have the time to negotiate at all. So basically it's about your main job, I take it that you're willing to listen then, right?"

"Of course. Since you just ended the call like that, I can't help but get curious. So, what is it?"

"Carol, you have knowledge about Mihazono ruin including the Seranthal building, right? I want to buy some information from you. If you're willing to sell some, just tell me the price. If you're okay with a bank transfer, I'll immediately transfer the payment to your bank account. But if you prefer cash, I don't have any with me and I don't have the time to get some right now, so I'll be paying you later."

"There's no need to worry about that. So, what kind of information are you looking for exactly? Your description just now is way too vague."

“It seems that there’s an ongoing big battle in Mihazono ruin and there’s a good chance that the Seranthal building is in the centre of that battle. I need any information that might help me fight battles, search around that area, and save people who might be stuck there which includes escape routes or any other things that might also help me survive that place. I know that it’s still rather vague but I can’t make it more detailed than this. Although I’m heading to Mihazono ruin right now, it’s not like I have any particular destination at the moment after all.”

After listening to everything that Akira just said, which did not make much sense, Carol thought for a bit and said.

“Well, even if you tell me so, I have no plans to get into trouble with you. After all, we need to decide a lot of things too, like how am I going to send that information to you, or how accurate it is, or how are we going to decide on the price of the information, right? I can sell you the map of Mihazono ruin that I have right now, but it might not be in a format that you can open, I’ve also added some notes to that map, and some part of it is even encrypted. In the first place, I never make a copy of any important information like the one that I taught you yesterday except inside my brain.”

Akira was convinced by what Carol said to him. As in matter of fact, now that he thought about it, it was completely understandable. The reason why he did not think about putting that in his explanation was because Alpha and Shizuka always interpreted his vague questions or requests so he did not have to explain everything.

Alpha always stayed beside Akira and understood what he was trying to say, while Shizuka always came up with a good rifle that was close to what he was looking for although he only gave Shizuka a vague description. Akira thought that he might have gotten too used to it, as he reflected on that and felt thankful to Alpha and Shizuka.

Akira had no time to slowly talk about it with Carol, thus he immediately gave up on that idea and said.

“…You’re right. Just forget what I said, sorry to have called you so early. Later then.”

When Akira was about to close the call, Carol suddenly interjected.

“Wait for a sec, are you really going to just end the call? Just wait for a bit.”

“What?”

“Let me get this straight, you’re going to Mihazono ruin again, which means you might have to go to a dangerous place. As a matter of fact, there’s a good chance that you’ll have to go to the Seranthal building again, that’s why you’re looking for any information about Mihazono ruin that would help you survive that place, right?”

“Yes.”

Carol sounded slightly amused as she made a suggestion.

“In that case then, how about hiring me? Let’s say, how about 10,000,000 Aurum? If you end up having to use information that is worth more than that, we can talk about the price later. So, what do you think? I think it’s a pretty good offer.”

Akira was a little bit surprised by that unexpected offer from Carol. But he immediately questioned back without showing any confusion nor hesitation.

“I’m driving my vehicle through the Kugamayama city lower district right now, can we meet up in a few minutes?”

“Sure, I’m also in the lower district right now. As for the preparation… Can you give me 40 minutes?”

“I’m not going to be your bodyguard this time. I’m not expecting you to help in fights either, but I’ll still have you at least protect yourself. So don’t expect me to cover you like yesterday.”

“That’s fine. Although, I would be really happy if you would protect me. But if something like that happened again, you can just subtract from my reward money. Are you okay with that?”

Akira immediately replied.

“I understand, I’ll hire you then. Send me where to meet up and make sure that I can reach that place with my vehicle. If you don’t have any ride to go to Mihazono ruin, I’ll give you a ride.”

“I’ll take that offer then. I’ll immediately send you where to pick me up after this, later then.”

Carol’s voice sounded extremely inviting before she closed the call.

Alpha then asked Akira.

“Are you sure it’s okay to do that before asking for Elena and Sara’s permission?”

“I’m hiring Carol myself, so I’m sure that it’ll be okay. But well, if Elena-san and Sara-san are angry because of that, I’ll just keep my distance away from them while making sure that I can immediately meet up with them when they ask me to.”

Alpha was wondering if that was even the problem, but she decided not to pursue that question. After all, if this hurts Akira’s relationship with Sara and Elena, then it was a rather good turn of event for her.

“I see, well, it doesn’t really matter. By the way, Carol has sent you the meet-up place. I’ll take the wheel until we reach that place.”

Akira then headed to their meeting place.

Carol was taking a shower inside one of the rooms in a mansion located in the lower district. She had a nanomachine augmented body, not only it enhanced her physical abilities oriented for fighting, but it also enhanced her figure to the point that it would attract the attention of any men. And since she had spent a lot of effort and money on it, as expected, her figure was extremely seductive.

The warm water that she was showering with was not just warm water, it was even mixed with medicines that were adjusted for her body. Those medicines would heal even the smallest wound that she got from her usual lifestyle and left her with flawless glowing skin.

Carol then stepped outside the shower room and stood in front of a wall equipped with blowers which blew a strong wind to remove any water droplets left on her body. After that, she went to another room where she stored all of her clothes.

After she entered that room, Carol put on a bodysuit that stuck tight to her skin prior to putting on an augmented suit on top of it. It was an old-world augmented suit designed for women.

Although it covered all of her skin from her neck down, it had a seductive design comparable to being naked. After all, the design of her augmented suit left almost nothing to imagine about what was under it.

As she was putting on her armors, fasteners, belts, and any other accessories, she also holstered her huge gun and put on her information-gathering device. She then stuffed ammo into her rucksack and carried it on her back. After she was done putting on everything, she checked her own reflection on a mirror and smiled bewitchingly. The reflection on her mirror showed a girl who could effectively work her way against both monsters and men.

“This will do… Only 10 minutes left, huh. I guess I’ll hurry up, I feel like Akira would just leave me behind if I’m late even for a bit.”

Carol, who more or less understood a bit of Akira’s personality, smiled bitterly.

Akira was waiting for Carol in their meeting place.

The meeting place sent by Carol was located near a relatively small area in the lower district, so in short, it was a place with expensive rent. The safety in that area was maintained by a private security company that regularly patrolled the area, they checked any suspicious person in the area and disposed of them when needed. It did not even matter if that suspicious person was armed to the teeth like a Hunter. It was an area filled with people who had no problem paying for such a service.

One of the guards also asked Akira why he was there. When Akira said that he was waiting for another Hunter, the guard glanced at Akira's vehicle and equipment before leaving him alone.

It reminded Akira how much he had changed as he said to Alpha.

"If I looked like a new Hunter, I bet that guard would have shooed me, huh."

"Well, that shows just how much you've grown as a Hunter. So let's keep this up, and for that sake, let's make sure to only take actions that would bring you profit."

Alpha there was actually warning Akira.

"Eh? Ah, right, of course."

Akira sounded as if he was caught off guard for a sec, but immediately returned back to his usual self. He then continued as if he was trying to dodge that subject.

"I'm sure it's not like Elena-san is offering a request that might cause me loss instead of profit, so don't worry about that."

"Well, that's fine if you think so. But just in case if you forget about it, you're already in red for hiring Carol for the sake of your safety, you know?"

Akira nodded and firmly replied back.

"Of course."

Although he said so, Akira was actually placing profit in a pretty low place in his priority list. Akira unconsciously looked away from Alpha, of course, Alpha noticed that he was not really prioritizing profit this time.

Honestly speaking, Alpha actually had no problem with losing money. Her real qualm was with the fact that he decided to take action knowing that it would cause him a loss, it showed just how much Elena and Sara's existence affected Akira's course of action.

But of course, if working together with Elena and Sara caused Akira a huge enough loss for him to start keeping his distance away from them, then Alpha would not have anything to complain about.

But Elena invited Akira believing that it would be a profitable request. Having a Hunter that Akira thought he was indebted to offering him a profitable request, in which he would get properly rewarded for it, Akira felt thankful and slightly delighted as it also strengthened Elena's presence in Akira's priority list.

Not too long after that, Carol showed up. When Alpha saw Carol, she thought that Carol might bring some good change to the relationship between Akira and Elena and Sara that she could look forward to.

Carol smiled at Akira and said.

"Sorry, did you wait long?"

"You're 5 minutes early, so it's all good."

Carol smiled bitterly seeing how Akira replied casually as if he was not really waiting for a girl.

"Geez, although you're meeting up with a beautiful girl like me… Can you get a bit more excited and give me a more normal reply?"

"I'm sorry, I'm bad with common sense. I'm still working on that one though. Well, just hop on."

Carol put her rucksack on the back of Akira's vehicle and sat on the driver assistant's seat. Akira then immediately turned on his vehicle and stepped on the gas.

Akira and Carol once again headed to Mihazono ruin. Although Akira did try to contact Elena and Sara while he was still within the reception area of Kugamayama city, he could not get any connection at all. Since there was nothing he could do about it, he just sent a text message saying that he hired a Hunter who knew well about Mihazono ruin before driving outside the city's reception area.

Akira was driving his vehicle toward Mihazono ruin at a high speed through the dark wasteland. At that rate, he would be able to reach Mihazono ruin before the sun rose.

On their way, Akira explained the current situation to Carol. After understanding what was going on, Carol looked a bit surprised as she said.

"I get what's going on here, but are you sure you're okay bringing me along?"

Akira then replied.

"That would be for Elena-san and Sara-san to decide. If they don't want me to bring along someone that they don't know, we'll be moving separately. And since I can't get in contact with them, we haven't decided on how to divide the reward. I have no plans to make you work more than as a guide, but if you're planning to receive a reward from someone else, you better properly do your work for the reward that you're receiving."

Carol smiled bitterly since Akira's answer was not exactly answering her question.

[Well, it's true that it's also important, but… I'm actually asking him if it's okay for him to bring another girl when he's going to meet up with a girl. Well, I guess it's true that being a Hunter has nothing to do with gender. Or is that he thinks it's better than bringing another guy with him? Either way, I'm working for Akira this time, so I guess that has nothing to do with my gender.]

Akira was the one hiring her and bringing her with him, so all the responsibilities lie on him.

As a matter of fact, that gave Carol an excuse to just dump the responsibility to Akira in case anything happened. She smiled confidently as she thought so.

“I see.”

Carol smiled as if there was nothing to worry about, Akira saw that and thought that it should be fine. So then he moved to his next question.

“But still, after all that happened yesterday, I didn’t think you would accept to be my guide. We might have to go to the Seranthal building again, you know?”

“I can say the same to you too, right? After all, it seemed that you too had a hard time yesterday.”

Akira sounded as if he was trying to evade that question as he said.

“About that… Well, isn’t it fine? I’m planning to meet up with some powerful Hunters today, so I just thought that it should be fine this time.”

Although he was not lying, that was not his main reason. Moreover, it did not seem like Akira was heading to the Mihazono ruin against his will. Carol at least noticed that much. Not to mention, this time, Akira was going to meet up with other female Hunters. It made her want to make a lot of guesses, but judging from how Akira treated her yesterday, she decided to hold back her imagination.

One thing for sure, Akira was someone who did not react that much to seduction. If he was someone with a strong desire, he would not have treated Carol the way he treated her yesterday. Or at least, that was what Carol thought.

“I see. As for me, the reason why I accepted your request to be your guide is because I know I can handle the situation like yesterday as long as I properly prepare my equipment. Yesterday, I only carried equipment designed for stealth and avoided fights. After all, it's a ruin that I know well. But I admit I was careless."

Akira looked at Carol and scanned her equipment. The augmented suit that she was using this time looked better and stronger than the one that she was using yesterday.

"Wouldn't it have been better if you used this augmented suit yesterday too?"

"This one has a pretty high consumption rate, you see. If I use it all the time, it'll definitely affect my profit. If I know that it's a relic that I can just sneakily take out, I would rather carry a lighter set of equipment like yesterday. I know it's important to make sure that you're ready for the unexpected like what happened yesterday. But if you use that as a standard every time you go out, it will cause you a loss, then it would be meaningless, right? But this time, not only did you say that you would pay me, but you also said that there's a big battle going on in the Mihazono ruin. That's why I'm bringing these equipment set this time just to be safe."

Akira was convinced by that explanation as he nodded.

"I see, it's true that it's important to watch out for that kind of expense."

Akira looked closely at Carol's equipment, to be more precise, he was looking at her augmented suit. But of course, her beautiful figure also got into his views when he did that.

When Carol saw Akira looking closely at her, she changed her pose as if she was showing her body to him. She then smiled seductively as she was watching carefully for any reaction from Akira.

"If you're interested in my body, feel free to ask about my side job and I can give you a good taste of it."

Akira was at loss for a moment since he did not understand the meaning behind Carol's words, but it did not take long for him to finally realize it. He then asked her a question.

“…Hmmm? Ah, no, that’s not what I meant. I just thought of something when I saw that augmented suit, is that augmented suit from the old-world?”

Carol’s mood turned sour since it seemed that Akira was actually not interested in her body at all.

“Nope, it’s not. Why do you think it is?”

“I just thought that it has a similar design to an old-world battle suit that I once saw in the past. But I guess I’m mistaken, huh?”

“Well, it’s true that the designer of this augmented suit used an old-world design as a base. This kind of image is important in business after all.”

“Ohh, I see.”

Akira answered back casually. But there was something in that short exchange that caught Carol’s interest, so she then asked Akira a question.

“By the way, Akira, old-world battle suit can cost way more than a common tank, you know. So where exactly did you get to see one?”

Akira was caught off guard. As far as he could remember, it was from the old-world battle suit that he saw Alpha using multiple times in the past. But of course, he could not say that to Carol.

“….I don’t really remember. Maybe it’s somewhere in the network.”

“But it sounded as if you saw a real one and not only from an image though?”

“That’s just your imagination.”

“Is that so?”

Akira thought that he was able to successfully trick Carol, but of course, Carol knew better than that.

[…I’m 100% sure he actually saw a real one. Not to mention that he’s that powerful although he’s still so young, this boy is a really mysterious boy. I guess I’ll try asking the Hunters that we’re going to meet later.]

Carol then returned her pose and looked at the wasteland that was still shrouded in darkness. Although she only met Akira yesterday, his skills, power, experience, and that conversation just now, made her curious. There was no doubt in her mind that Akira was an intriguing boy. But of course, if she just normally asked him about that, Akira would not tell her anything.

[I’m sure I can get him to tell me a lot of things on top of a bed, but unfortunately enough, he’s not interested at all.]

Carol slightly smiled when she thought about it.

Alpha then warned Akira.

“Akira, if you think that you were able to evade that question, you’re sadly mistaken, okay?”

“W-well, it’s true that it’s not like I’ve ever seen a real one though. So that excuse should be just fine.”

“It’s true that she would not know about my existence from that answer and I think she won’t be able to infer that you can connect to the old-world domain from it too. But I can guarantee you that it piqued her interests on you even more. So be sure to be careful not to say anything careless to Carol.”

“Roger that.”

Alpha smiled satisfied when she got that straight answer from Akira.

“Leaving that aside, Akira, if you’re interested in old-world battle suits, I can put it on as many times as you want. Maybe something like this?”

As she said that, Alpha’s appearance changed into an old-world battle suit.

The battle suit that Alpha used, was made of a thin material that stuck really close to her skin and thus pronouncing her body line. There were some strange openings on that battle suit where Alpha's skin could peek out. Some parts of that augmented suit had a strange-looking material that looked like it was made of metal or rubber. A type of glowing material was mixed into its fabric which made it look as if Alpha was surrounded by a wall of light.

The battle suit seemed like it was not designed for functionality in the first place. Moreover, unless the one wearing it was already used to old-world design, they would need extra courage to even just put that battle suit on. But even so, it was obvious that it was far more advanced than the current battle suit. After all, it was an old-world battle suit.

Alpha was smiling seductively in that battle suit, which made her look even more charming than being naked. Moreover, her beautiful face and charming figure were the results of reconstructing Akira's preference. Although it was true that Akira had already gotten used to all kinds of attires that Alpha would use, it was all only under certain situations like when they were in the middle of a fight or a training session. In those situations, Akira had built up a level of resistance to the point that he was able to ignore it. But on the other hand, it also meant that unless he was in those particular situations, Akira would still show some level of reaction.

Akira looked away from Alpha who was on the opposite side of where Carol was sitting. His face turned stiff to hide his embarrassment as he returned his eyes to the front. He sounded irritated as he said.

"…Can you at least do that later?"

"Sure, it's for later then."

Alpha was smiling mischievously watching how Akira reacted to her attire.

Rebuild World – Chapter 113, The Changed Mihazono Ruin

Akira and Carol reached Mihazono ruin right before the sunrise. There were a lot of vehicles parked near the Hunter Office. Among the normal vehicles brought by the Hunters, there were some trailers owned by weapon merchants, portable clinics, and trailers used by Hunter gangs as their temporary base.

A traffic officer stopped Akira and said.

“All the parking lots near the Hunter Office branch are controlled under strict regulation to make sure there is smooth traffic. I don’t mind if you are just passing through to the ruin, but make sure not to block the way when you do that. And, if you want to park your vehicles around here, make sure that it won’t block the way too. Do note that the parking lot inside is already full.”

“Okay.”

“I’ll at least tell you this. If you’re here to hunt for relics, you might want to pick another day.”

“I know. I can tell just by looking at it.”

Akira gazed at the Mihazono ruin when he said that.

The loud banging sounds of battles kept resounding endlessly from the Mihazono ruin. There were some places where smoke was rising into the sky. Flashes of lights illuminated the ruin that was veiled in darkness. The Mihazono ruin showed a completely different side compared to the one that Akira saw yesterday.

“I guess you’re right about that.”

That officer then left Akira.

Carol suddenly asked Akira a question.

“So then, what are we going to do from here?”

“We’ll meet up with Elena’s team. The real problem is how exactly are we going to find them… It’s not like we can just dive into the ruin looking for them without any clues.”

Akira made a stern look, he then asked Alpha.

“Alpha, we’re in Mihazono ruin now. So like, we still can’t contact Elena-san?”

Alpha shook her head.

“No, I still can’t establish any connection at all. There is still no reply from your last message and I still can’t connect your call. If I have to make a guess, it might be because there are too many signals around this area that interferes with the communication line. Or maybe, the comm relay in this area is already turned off.”

It might be a waste of time if they just waited for Elena and Sara without doing anything. After a bit of thinking, Akira then turned to Carol.

“Carol. If you were looking for a certain Hunter inside this ruin, where would you go?”

“Look for them? Can’t you call them or something?”

“Yeah.”

“Do you have any clues where they might be?”

“Sadly, no.”

“Have you decided where to meet beforehand?”

“I could not manage to contact them even before we made the decision.”

Carol looked at Akira with a slightly pitiful gaze.

“….Akira, are you one of those people who tend to decide on a whim and move first, and then think later?”

“…Yes.”

Akira replied back with a feeble voice, he sounded a bit ashamed after Carol pointed that out. Alpha, who was next to him, tried her best to hold back her laughter.

Carol looked a bit disappointed as she looked at Akira, she thought that she might have overestimated his strength. But she then decided to just forget about it and started to think for an answer to his question. She was hired as a guide by Akira, so she thought that she should at least do her job properly.

“Looking for other Hunters, huh? Do you have anything that can uniquely identify both of your positions? For example, if both of you know each other’s information terminal’s identification code, you can set the local connection to the maximum hoping you can find each other. And if the other Hunter notices you, then, he can also set the local connection to the maximum and make a call with your information terminal. But, there’s a good chance that the mechanical monsters roaming around this ruin would notice your location if you do that though. And since you’ll need to set your information terminal to constantly broadcast signals, it’ll be pretty dangerous.”

Some of the monsters in the wasteland could detect the signals broadcasted by the information equipment often carried by the Hunters. They could use that to ascertain the locations of those Hunters and attack them. The only reason why Hunters could send signals across the wasteland was because they were using the comm relays buried under the ground. After a lot of trials and errors, they managed to create comm relays that could withstand monsters' attacks.

Unlike in the middle of the wasteland, the ruins had denser monster distribution and fewer escape routes. Thus, broadcasting strong signals inside a ruin was extremely dangerous. The only people who would do that would be fatally wounded Hunters who could not get out from the ruin using their own power. But even so, they would only do that for a few seconds just to let the rescue squads know their location.

Akira tried to imagine what would happen if he were to do that. Inside his mind, he imagined that he would end up in a situation where he was surrounded by a huge number of monsters. And then, unfortunately enough, Elena tried to contact him in that situation which caused some of those monsters to head toward her location. Although he might be able to break the encirclement and force his way to Elena's location, it did not change the fact that he would still drag Elena and Sara into more trouble.

Akira then cut his imagination there.

"That would be too dangerous so, let's not do that."

Carol then made another suggestion.

"In that case, your only choice will be either diving into the ruin and looking for them or wait for them near the Hunter Office branch. If they are taking that emergency SOS request, I'm sure they'll be back here after rescuing some Hunters."

As Akira was still thinking about which option to take, Alpha suddenly pointed her finger toward the parking lot near the Hunter Office branch.

"Akira, look over there."

When Akira looked toward the direction that Alpha pointed, he saw a vehicle that looked somehow familiar to him. It was the APC that Shikarabe used when they were hunting for bounty monsters.

“So? What do you want me to do with that?”

Akira thought that it was the same APC model owned by other Hunters. But Alpha knew for a fact that it was Shikarabe’s APC.

“That’s Shikarabe’s APC. If Shikarabe is inside it, how about you try contacting him? He might be able to help you find Elena and Sara.”

Akira pulled out his information terminal and called Shikarabe through the local connection. The call almost immediately got through.

“Shikarabe’s speaking. Is this you, Akira? You’re calling me through a local connection though, does that mean that you’re somewhere nearby?”

“Yeah. I’m just outside the parking lot near the Hunter Office branch. I want to contact Elena-san and Sara-san but I can’t get any connection at all. Do you know where they might be?”

Shikarabe sounded exasperated as he said.

“That’s what you get from using a cheap connection line. Wait a sec, I’ll connect you.”

After Akira waited for a bit, Elena’s voice suddenly came out from his information terminal that was connected to Shikarabe.

Akira then explained where he was to Elena. He then told her that he hired Carol, the fact that he tried to contact her but couldn’t, and that he had sent a message to her.

“…Wait for a sec there… Ahh, yep, I got your message. I see, it seems that the signal priority change also affected the connection line that I’m using, huh. So, basically, you want to meet up with us first, right?”

“Yes, please.”

“Alright then. In that case, come here together with Shikarabe. We’re actually working in a team with Shikarabe right now. If you follow him, you’ll be able to meet up with us. We can talk in more detail later after we group up. We’ll be waiting for you.”

“Understood.”

Shikarabe’s voice suddenly interjected.

“Akira. If you’re going to follow me, come and help me carry the wounded Hunters. I’m parking my APC in the parking lot near the Hunter Office. You already know my location, right?”

Akira then turned his vehicle back on and drove off.

Shikarabe’s APC was parked in the parking lot near the Hunter Office. The backdoor of the APC suddenly opened up and wounded Hunters came out from the inside of that APC.

Shikarabe could be seen carrying out corpse bags filled with dead Hunters. The corpse bags were not closed completely as it let the face of the Hunter inside exposed. The faces peeking out from the corpse bags clearly showed that no life remained in them.

When Shikarabe saw Akira’s vehicle approaching the APC, he then pointed toward the inside of the APC.

“You’re finally here. Help me carry out the wounded too. There’s no need to help those who can still walk on their own.”

Akira stepped inside the APC and looked around, there were numerous corpse-filled bags exposing the ‘deceased’ face. Meanwhile, some in the corner, which were folded, empty.

Akira then asked Shikarabe a question.

“…Fatally wounded Hunters, huh. For now, I just need to carry those who can’t walk on their own, right?”

“Yeah, just leave it to the doctors to check if they’re already dead or not. We don’t know if any of them have suspended-state devices installed inside their body. So, just assume that they’re all just fatally wounded until the doctors say otherwise.”

Akira remembered the scene of a clinic in the Kuzusuhara city that he visited in the past. That time, the doctor in that clinic, Yatsubayashi, treated even Hunters who had lost half of their body as only badly wounded.

If Hunters with such a level of injury could still be saved, there was no way an amateur like him could judge the wounded Hunters in the APC. Thus, Akira just thought all of those Hunters inside the corpse bags as only fatally wounded, and started carrying them out of the APC.

Carol, who was behind Akira, followed him inside the APC. When Shikarabe saw her, he suddenly shouted in surprise.

“….Geh?!”

Carol smiled mischievously at Shikarabe.

“Geez, you don’t need to be that mean, you know. Long time no see by the way.”

Shikarabe, who just realized that he was flustered, tried to contain himself.

“W-well, right… So, why are you here?”

“Akira hired me. Don’t just stand there, you have bags to carry, right?”

Carol then left Shikarabe and followed Akira. Shikarabe kept staring at Carol as she walked toward his APC.

“Why in the world would Akira hire that woman?”

Shikarabe was still a little bit bothered by that as he returned back to his job carrying the corpse bags.

Akira and Shikarabe then handed over the fatally wounded Hunters to the Hunter Office, they had no reason to worry about how many of those Hunters were still alive. Even if some of them were already dead, the Hunter Office would handle them appropriately. One thing for sure, the Hunter Office would handle them better than just leaving them inside the ruin.

Shikarabe then closed the back door of his APC and looked at Akira with a gaze saying that he wanted to say something to Akira. It was not like it was a gaze of hatred or anything, but it was undeniable that he did not appreciate the fact that Akira brought Carol together with him. His gaze was saying that he honestly did not know what to do about the current situation. Although Akira did not notice it, there was also a trace of pity in Shikarabe's gaze.

Akira looked at Shikarabe and tilted his head in confusion, he then asked Carol.

"Carol, you know him?"

"Yep, well, a lot of things happened between us."

"I see."

Akira at least understood that Carol and Shikarabe were acquaintances. In reality, Akira was actually trying to find a roundabout way to ask her the reason why Shikarabe looked at her with such a gaze.

But Carol only gave a short answer that only confirmed that they knew each other. Akira had no idea if she did not catch his real intention or that she just simply did not want to talk about it, or it was simply that she did not care about it.

Akira then shifted his gaze to Shikarabe, his gaze was asking for an explanation from Shikarabe.

But Shikarabe did not answer that gaze as he said.

“Let’s go then, just follow me.”

Shikarabe still looked a bit bothered as he returned to the driver seat.

Akira returned back to his vehicle and sat on the driver seat, he then glanced at Carol to check her reaction. It did not seem like he did something that worsened her mood. As in matter of fact, it looked like she was a bit amused by the situation.

Akira prioritized grouping up with Elena for now, as he just shelved that subject and followed Shikarabe from behind.

Akira, Shikarabe, and Carol went inside Mihazono ruin. There were countless wreckages of dead mechanical monsters scattered around. There were almost no biological monsters inside the Mihazono ruin, so all the blood splatters should be from the Hunters. After all, other than those monsters, there were also Hunter corpses scattered here and there. But those corpses were already crushed into an unrecognizable mush, the monsters might have trampled over them, or it might be because of the Hunters who drove over them.

The further they proceeded into the ruin, the more prominent the leftover of fights surrounded them. They were pretty standing out although it was still dark. It would have given a more solemn scene once the sun was up.

Alpha then told Akira that there was a monster approaching.

“Akira, there’s a monster from behind. It’s a vehicle with a long-range rifle, they came from the alleys.”

“Roger that.”

Akira let go of the wheel and moved to the backside of his vehicle. He then took off the CWH anti-material rifle fixed on his vehicle and aimed it to the back. There were no monsters visible.

Carol saw Akira move to the back and aim his rifle. But she could not see any monsters in that direction and her information-gathering device did not pick up any signal from that direction either. She thought that it might be because the vehicle's information gathering device caught something, but when she checked it, it also did not show such a signal.

So Carol decided to ask Akira if he detected any monsters.

"Akira, is there-"

Akira suddenly pulled the trigger. Gunshot echoed through the ruin and cut Carol's question short, the bullet from the muzzle flew straight and hit a monster that just came out from behind an alley. It pierced through the monster's torso and threw its body into the air. It then landed and rolled over on the ground with half of its body destroyed.

Alpha then warned Akira.

"A24 type, huh. Akira, be careful."

"You don't even need to tell me, but is it okay if I ask you why did you warn me?"

"That monster is designed as a city guard, it's built exactly as the blueprint. Thus, it's a well-equipped monster."

"How much is it different to the other mechanical monsters that I faced until now?"

"If you compare it to those cannon insects that you fought in the past, those cannon insects are like failed product made by putting a big cannon on a faulty blueprint while the A24 type is a well designed and well-equipped monster."

Akira inadvertently twitched.

"That's a huge difference."

“That’s why, keep your guard up. Don’t put your guard down just because its size is relatively small or because it looks like the other monsters that you’ve fought before.”

“Roger that.”

Akira decided to be extra careful this time as he took another aim. His vision was enhanced by Alpha’s support, thanks to that, he was able to clearly see and aim at the monsters that were hiding in the alleys just with his naked eyes. It even showed the time left until those monsters jumped out from the alleys and the points that he should aim at.

Akira followed Alpha’s instruction and shot down the A24-type that appeared from the alleys one by one. He was able to deal enough damage to render them unable to fight by leaving them half-destroyed or even completely destroyed in one shot. Thus, adding more wreckages on the road. It did not take that long for Akira to take care of all the monsters there alone.

Alpha smiled and praised Akira.

“Good job. You did well.”

But Akira, who thought that there was no way he could hit those shots without Alpha’s support, smiled bitterly and said.

“I don’t have any complaints at all, all of my shots hit their targets… I wonder how long it would take for me to be able to do something like this on my own. I guess I still have a long way to go, huh.”

“Don’t worry. You’re actually getting better. Your aim barely needs any readjustment from me compared to before. I’m sure it won’t take long before you can accurately snipe from this range.”

“I see, it’s good to hear that all my training are not for vain.”

Akira then remembered that Carol was about to say something back then. So he lowered his rifle and turned to her.

“Sorry, what were you saying again?”

Carol smiled, she was hiding the shock inside her heart as she praised Akira.

“Well, yesterday we’re in a situation where all my shots would hit no matter where I aimed after all.”

Akira remembered when he was trapped inside a Seranthal building as it was getting flooded by monsters, his face twitched a bit when he remembered that.

Carol smiled amusedly and asked Akira a question.

“That rifle, can I take a look at it?”

“Sure.”

Akira then handed over his rifle to Carol.

Carol checked the rifle that she just received. From the outside, it looked like she was just lightly checking out that rifle, but deep inside, she was actually closely checking that rifle including its production code, its parts, and its condition.

Carol then aimed Akira’s CWH anti-material rifle to the back. When she gazed through the aiming device, she could see nothing but the usual information from a normal aiming device. There was nothing in particular that surprised her, she confirmed that it was just a normal rifle.

Carol then handed it back to Akira, she smiled at him and said.

“Thank you, that’s a pretty good rifle. I wonder if I can aim as good as you as long as I use this rifle.”

“I think anyone would be able to do that with enough training.”

Akira did not really think it through when he said that. He only thought that if he would be able to do that with enough training, then everyone should be able to do that with enough training too.

Carol then casually replied.

“Really?”

“Yes, but of course it’s assuming that you use an augmented suit that would help you suppress the kickback. Even I too have no plans to use this rifle without an augmented suit. I’m pretty sure that my hand would get ripped off if I do that.”

Carol then smugly pointed at her augmented suit.

“If that’s the case, then there’s nothing to worry about. Look here, my augmented suit is actually a pretty advanced one after all.”

“Well, it does look like an advanced augmented suit.”

Akira looked at Carol’s augmented suit and nodded.

Akira put his CWH anti-material rifle back and returned to the driver seat. Carol also returned back to her seat.

Carol pretended to look casual as she kept observing Akira.

[That CWH anti-material rifle, is a normal rifle, and judging by the information shown in its aiming device, its aiming device works in tandem with his information-gathering device… It has no auto-aim function. Or at least, it’s true that it has no support function that would allow him to normally hit all of his shots at the same time those monsters show themselves from behind the alley even when he is shooting from above a moving vehicle.]

There were some rifles sold in the eastern district equipped with auto-aim function to help with aiming. Some of them could automatically move when the user pulled the trigger, to ensure that the trajectory of the bullet would hit the target. Or, they would not allow the user to shoot a bullet even if they pulled the trigger when the calculated trajectory of the target will not hit a monster.

Carol thought that Akira's accurate sniping was due to the auto-aim function of his rifle. But it did not seem to be the case. It might as well be due to the feature installed in his augmented suit, but Carol judged that it was also unlikely since such a feature usually relied a lot on the feature installed on the rifle and she should be able to find such a device installed on that rifle if that was the case.

[In the first place, how did Akira detect those monsters? I bet he already noticed the monsters even before he let go of the wheel. Although I have a pretty good information-gathering device, I didn't get any signals at all even when he started taking aim. What would he do if the one jumping out from the alleys were not monsters and instead Hunters on bikes? Or did he know for sure that they were monsters? Did he notice that they were monsters with long-range weapons, that's why he decided that he needed to take them out as soon as possible? Since when did he know that…? Was it right from the start?]

Detecting enemies was a crucial skill for Hunters. If they could discover and ascertain enemies' positions quickly, they would be able to evade having to fight them, and even if they decided to fight those monsters, that would give them the upper hand.

Carol was a Hunter who preferred to evade fighting as much as possible, because of that, she invested a lot in her detection ability. The reason why she tried to seduce Akira yesterday was because she knew for sure there were no monsters around.

Carol was pretty surprised by Akira's ability to shoot, but more than that, she was very surprised by his ability to detect enemies.

When Carol praised Akira's shooting skill and asked if she could borrow his rifle, she was actually checking for his reaction. She was testing if Akira would boast about his skill or his rifle. She was wondering whether he would credit that to his own skill, or to his hard training, or to the features installed on his rife.

There were many Hunters who would boast about their talent, or skills that they acquired after working hard, or their advanced rifle. After all, it made them feel good talking about their hard work or their advanced equipment with other people. Carol was actually an expert in coaxing those kinds of people into leaking information.

If Akira was one of those people, Carol might be able to harvest information from him. But Akira did not show such a sign at all. It did not seem like he wanted to boast about his equipment or his skill at all.

Carol then reflected. She admitted that Akira's shooting skill was amazing, but that was all there was to it. In contrast to that, his detection skill was way above amazing.

If it was only amazing, she could just use that to praise and coax Akira into telling her any valuable information that he had. But that was not the case when it was more than amazing. In that case, she needed to make sure how he would react to other people who tried to dig for the secrets behind such an ability first. After all, there were people who would go as far as to kill the other people who knew their secret to make sure that it would not leak.

If that person was a man, Carol could wait until they were close enough before asking for such information, or she could wait for a situation where she could casually ask that question without any risks. Of course, she would use her side-job to help her do that.

Carol had the skill and experience to cajole someone. She was confident that she could fight them back in a situation where both of them were naked and unarmed. No matter whether they were a cyborg or a person with enhanced bodies, Carol was confident she could accurately judge their strength after sleeping with them at least once.

Carol then sighed.

[…So basically, I can't use that method on Akira… Although it's true that he's still just a boy, strangely enough, he has less interest in women compared to the other boys of his age.]

Carol glanced at Akira. The current Akira did not show any childish vibe of a young boy that he showed yesterday when he was watching the scene outside with sparkling eyes from inside a flying drone. It could even be said that he gave off the intimidating aura of a skilled Hunter, he even looked somehow more mature.

[Well, it would be troublesome if he won't grow more mature in the more important aspects. Although, honestly, he doesn't seem to be that young to be more interested in food rather than in women. I wonder if it's because he's only interested in a certain type of women.]

Carol's guess was correct. Akira's interest was completely biased. No matter whether it was a man or a woman, the only thing that interested him was whether they were enemies or not. For now, he saw Carol as not any enemy. For him, that fact took precedence over gender and appearance.

Carol did not doubt her charm at all. After all, she was really proud of it and she had used that charm on a lot of people in the past. But that was exactly why her pride was hurt when Akira showed almost no reaction at all when she tried to use her charm on him.

She sounded a bit irritated as she suddenly said to Akira.

"Akira, what kind of girl do you like?"

Akira was a bit confused by that sudden question as he asked back.

"What's with that sudden question?"

"It's because it seemed you're not interested at all when I invited you. Normally, that won't happen to most of the people that I Invite, you know?"

"Isn't that because you only invite those people who seem to be likely to accept your invitation? I'm sure those people with girlfriend won't readily take on your invitation."

"Well, for the sake of common sense, I won't try inviting people with girlfriends though. But of course, it's a different story if they invite me first.

Because of that, I won’t take responsibility if they break up with their girlfriend.”

Carol smiled when she said that.

Akira looked a bit disgusted as he said.

“You are quite a bad individual.”

“It just shows how charming I am. That’s why I’m interested in your fetishes since you won’t even consider my invitation.”

“Stop calling it a fetish. But well, even if you ask me so…”

Akira himself knew that he was very unfamiliar with that kind of talk. When he was giving a ‘hmm’ sound, Alpha then suddenly pointed at herself with full of confidence. Akira immediately stopped pondering.

“Nope. I don’t even have the slightest idea.”

“But you should, right? After all, you have a perfect example here.”

Alpha could freely change her appearance, and so she chose to match her appearance with Akira’s preference. So in short, her current outlook was the mirror image of his taste. Akira knew that very well as he replied.

“You’re pretty stubborn, aren’t you? If you have anything to complain about my appearance, there’s no need to hold back, you can just tell me. I can change my appearance as much as you want, you know.”

Alpha smiled mischievously.

Carol frowned as she looked curiously at Akira.

“…You don’t seem to genuinely have no idea at all though?”

“Well, that’s because I feel like a certain someone would try to match it if I say it here.”

“Ahhh, I see… You won’t tell me because you don’t want to, huh? But just so you know, I’m someone who can keep a secret.”

“Still, no.”

“I see, that’s just too bad. I wonder if it’s because it’s something that you can’t say out loud. But if that’s the case, I can help you overwrite it if you would take my invitation even if it’s only once, you know. I would recommend you do that if you have a rather peculiar fetish.”

“Like I said, stop making it sound as if I have a weird fetish.”

Akira looked so annoyed while Carol was smiling amusedly.

Akira, Carol, and Shikarabe eventually arrived at the meeting site. It was one of the many destroyed buildings inside the Mihazono ruin, but in front of that particular destroyed building, Elena and Sara were standing guard.

Inside that building, there were Hunters who Elena and Sara had saved. They were the remaining Hunters who could not fit in Shikarabe's APC in one go. The reason why Shikarabe limited the number of people inside his APC was not based on the open space inside the APC, but it was more based on the number of unknown armed people that he was okay putting inside the same APC with him. So it was more of a matter of his personal safety.

As for the reason why Elena and Sara stayed behind with the remaining Hunters, it was simply because those Hunters desperately asked them to since they were afraid of getting abandoned. After a lot of consideration, Elena decided to take their request. It was because of her good nature and how pitiful those Hunters were. Furthermore, there was also the detail of her contract, and most importantly, it was because she knew that she could kill them all in case they tried to do anything funny.

Those Hunters sighed in relief when they spotted Shikarabe's APC. When Shikarabe parked his APC near them and opened the back door, those Hunters immediately flooded the back door together with the relics that they carried with them.

Shikarabe then stepped off from his APC and asked Elena.

"Anyone need the corpse bag?"

"Nope. There's no fatally wounded Hunters and no dead bodies."

"I see. If they're really okay, they should just barricade themselves somewhere. Because of them, I had to go back and forth with no escort, you know."

Shikarabe looked annoyed, to which Elena responded with a light smile as she said.

"They're paying with their money in exchange for safety and we're receiving that money for our reward. That's all there's to it."

"Well, you're right about that."

Akira and Carol also stepped off from Akira's vehicle and headed towards Elena and Shikarabe. Although Elena and Sara were planning to welcome Akira with a smile, their expression turned conflicted when they saw the girl next to Akira. It was because Carol was using an augmented suit with a design that was obviously inviting the opposite sex.

Elena and Sara did hear beforehand from Akira that he would be bringing another Hunter. But they did not expect him to bring Carol, who was obviously flaunting her charm there.

Akira then greeted Elena and Sara.

"Elena-san, Sara-san, I'll be in your care for today… Is that okay? Although I do want to join the team, if me bringing another Hunter is a bad thing, I don't mind moving as a different team. And even if we decide to work as one team, I'll take responsibility if Carol causes any trouble."

Elena looked a bit troubled as she said.

“Uhhh, wait for a sec, let me calm down for a bit… Alright then.”

Elena knew that she must be making all kinds of faces there. She then told herself that she needed to make decisions with a cool head since she was the team leader.

She then looked at Carol, she tried to throw away her preconception, or at least, put it aside for now, as she spoke to Carol.

“I’m Elena, and this is Sara, my best friend.”

Sara awkwardly smiled, it was obvious that she could not completely move on from the shock.

“I’m Sara, nice to meet you.”

Carol smiled and introduced herself.

“I’m Carol. Nice to meet you.”

Elena then continued as Carol was still smiling.

“We’re working as a team of 3 with Shikarabe at the moment. The team leader is me, so if you want to negotiate about the reward, you should talk to me.”

“Okay, but please talk about that with Akira. I’m working under Akira at the moment so I’ll prioritize his orders too.”

“Well, now that we’ve gathered here, I would like to take command of the whole team though.”

“It’s not like we’re already formally formed a team, right? Moreover, you haven’t even made a deal with Akira on how to share the reward, right? So I think it’s only normal for me to prioritize on the contract that I’ve made beforehand.”

“Well, you have a point there.”

Elena and Carol were smiling at each other. For some reason, Akira could feel the awkward mood around them. But he could not tell the reason why.

Elena then smiled at Akira and took a step closer.

“So then, Akira, let’s start the negotiation.”

“O-Okay, please be gentle.”

Akira could feel some kind of pressure coming from Elena as he was questioning if she was standing a little too close.

Shikarabe then interjected.

“If it seems that it’ll take some time… No, even if it does not, how about we go back first? Whichever the case, we need to transport these people after all. No matter whether we’ll move as one team or not, I’m sure both of you need to talk it out first before deciding. So, both of you can finish that in the middle of our way back. Moreover, it’s easier to handle the contract process if we do it near the Hunter Office.”

Elena then calmed herself one more time.

“…You’re right. Okay then, Akira, you’re okay with that too, right?”

“Yeah.”

Akira then returned to his vehicle with Carol. Elena and Sara watched Akira’s back with a conflicted face.

They then once again drove through the ruin. Akira asked Alpha a question while driving the vehicle.

“Alpha, what do you think was that?”

Alpha casually replied.

“I don’t think there’s any need for you to worry about that. Even for Elena, there are times when she has a bad mood and it’s normal that there are people who just don’t go along well with her.”

“Hmmm, I guess you’re right about that.”

“I’m sure both Elena and Carol could differentiate between their jobs and their personal feelings. I’m sure it’s just that because they were thinking about what to do with the contract. Don’t worry. I think it won’t go as far as causing a fight. Moreover, it seems that you really trust them, so I bet you have no plans to complain about the details of the contract and the way they’ll share the reward. But for Carol, it’s their first time meeting each other. So to get a better deal and to make sure not to get swindled, it’s nothing strange for them to show off a little bit of intimidation like that.”

Akira was fully convinced by Alpha’s explanation.

“I guess you’re right about that too.”

Let’s say there was a certain girl who liked a certain boy, although it was not as far as love, that girl pretty much liked that boy and she thought that boy also liked her back to some extent. But when they planned to meet up, that boy brought another girl, who was a beauty in a seducing attire. Akira was still so socially inept that he could not imagine what those girls whom he was going to meet might feel.

There were a lot of reasons why Akira was socially inept. He grew up in an environment that did not give him the chance to learn such a skill, he originally already had a distorted character, and to top it off, although Alpha knew it, she always came up with another excuse to convince Akira while keeping him unaware about that aforementioned fact. Of course, Alpha did that intentionally, after all, it was better for her if Akira stayed that way.

Alpha looked and smiled at Akira who was successfully tricked by her words.

They were driving through the Mihazono ruin toward the Hunter Office branch. Midway, they were communicating with each other using the local connection of their information terminal to talk about the details of the request and the current situation.

The request that Elena and Sara took was an emergency request. Basically, it was a request to save the Hunters who could not get out from the ruin on their own. The request did not come from those Hunters, it came from the individual insurance companies that those Hunters were registered in.

There were all kinds of insurance for the Hunters. Most of them offered a subsidy in case those Hunters got badly injured. But in order to get their injuries treated, they needed to return back alive first. Thus, in order for them to return back alive, the insurance companies offered all kinds of service in case those Hunters went into a ruin and could not come back on their own. When those Hunters sent a request or when they were out of reach for a certain period of time, the insurance company contracted to those Hunters would dispatch a squad to help them.

Some of the insurance companies had their own special squad to send, but most of the insurance companies usually either made a request to the private security companies that they were contracted with to send their squads or sent that request to the Hunters. And that was how Elena and Sara received that emergency request.

By getting such an insurance before going out to the ruins, in case if they got attacked by monsters and could not return back on their own, these Hunters could just barricade themselves somewhere while waiting for a rescue squad. Or at least, in the worst-case scenario, the rescue squad would retrieve their bodies instead of leaving them in the wasteland.

Akira then asked a simple question to Elena through his information terminal.

“So basically, this request is made by the insurance company for Drankam and then Drankam distributed it to us, am I correct?”

Elena refuted that.

“No, this one comes from a completely different source. It seems that there was a lot of things going on with Drankam, including that similar request that Drankam made yesterday. But our request this time has nothing to do with them.”

Akira sounded a little confused.

“Is that so? But if that’s the case, it’s weird that Shikarabe is with you…”

Shikarabe sounded a little irritated as he said.

“It’s true that Drankam also dispatched rescue squads and it’s true that they sent me a request to be added to that squad. But I declined it and decided to join Elena and Sara’s team that has nothing to do with Drankam management.”

“Why did you do that?”

Shikarabe shouted as if he was venting his anger.

“The leader of Drankam’s rescue squad is Katsuya. Even if it’s on name only, I refuse to work under him.”

“…I-I see.”

Akira flinched back a bit when he heard Shikarabe shout. Shikarabe did not stop there and even started complaining. But after a few minutes of complaining, Carol suddenly interjected and stopped him.

“Shikarabe, you should stop here. If you want someone to listen to your problems, I can do that for you after we finish our job here. I can even give you extra services depending on how much money you would pay me, you know?”

“No thanks. I have no plans to spend my hard-earned money on you.”

“Isn’t it fine? I’ll listen to your problem, so you can at least buy me some drinks.”

“I know that you won’t stop there, that’s why I’m not taking your offer. Elena, you can continue.”

Shikarabe honestly declined Carol’s invitation and asked Elena to continue with her explanation.

Elena scanned through the rescue list that she received from the company which issued the emergency request. As the leader of the team, Elena carefully checked all the requests on that list and picked some of them. She chose the rescue requests based on the location of the targets, the number of the people, and the amount of reward for those requests. They then would head there to retrieve those Hunters, it did not matter whether they were dead or alive, and then transported them over to the Hunter Office.

As for the rewards, Shikarabe would receive 50% of the share, then Elena and Sara would receive the remaining 50%. The reason why Shikarabe received a bigger share was simply because he was the one who prepared the APC to transport the Hunters that they rescued. After all, an APC was the perfect vehicle to safely carry those fatally wounded Hunters who could not move on their own while they were still alive. Because of that Elena and Sara had nothing to complain about their reward distribution.

And now with Akira joining in, they would distribute the reward evenly between Shikarabe, Elena and Sara, and Akira and Carol. To be more precise, Shikarabe, Elena, and Akira would each receive 33% of the reward. And then from there, Elena would share her reward with Sara as well as Akira would share his with Carol.

Carol and Elena then discussed the details on how they were going to distribute the reward, their discussion went very smoothly since none of them were trying to impose any difficult conditions on each other. As for Akira, he had no interest in how to distribute the reward, thus, he just accepted Elena’s suggestion. But since Carol was working under Akira, she started negotiating with Elena, it turned into a rather in-depth negotiation.

The thing that surprised Akira was the fact that not only Carol, but even Elena too, was against the fact that he just accepted Elena’s suggestion as it was. When they were done with the long and difficult negotiation, they already arrived at the Hunter Office parking lot.

After they disembarked the Hunters inside the APC and handed them over to the Hunter Office, they moved their vehicle to make sure that they would not block the way. After they stepped off from their vehicles, Shikarabe suggested taking a short break.

Elena replied.

“Sure. Let’s meet up again here after 1 hour. I’ll also short-list the requests during the break.”

It was the perfect time since Elena and Sara were also thinking of taking a short break too. When Shikarabe was about to head back to his APC, Carol followed him.

“Shikarabe, I’ll help too.”

“…No need, go back and leave me alone.”

Shikarabe answered back almost immediately. Carol smiled and just ignored it.

Carol lightly waved at Akira, she then put her hands on Shikarabe’s shoulders and pushed him into the APC together with her.

Akira just watched Shikarabe and Carol go inside the APC. But he then noticed a gaze behind him, it was from Elena and Sara.

When Akira turned around, Elena smiled at him while Sara’s smile was a little bitter.

Elena then said to Akira while still smiling.

“Well, I guess we should go too.”

Elena’s smile was gentle. Together with her beautiful face, that smile was a very lovely smile. But for some reason, Akira could feel some kind of pressure coming from that smile.

Akira flusteredly shifted his gaze to Sara. Sara smiled at him, it was an amused but mischievous smile.

“At least let’s go somewhere else where we can relax first, are you okay with that?”

“S-sure.”

Akira nodded. After all, he had no reason to decline, and even if he had, it might be not easy to decline that offer.

Even in that situation, there were a lot of merchants gathered near the border between Mihazono ruin and the wasteland. As a matter of fact, a lot of those merchants came to Mihazono ruin exactly because of the current situation in the Mihazono ruin, it was the time where they could reap a lot of profits.

Shikarabe brought his APC into one of the supply depots to replenish his ammo reserve and put up new armour plating for his APC. Carol was also there, helping him.

The supply depots were shops that specialized in selling consumables for the Hunters. And with a huge ongoing battle in the Mihazono ruin, it was only to be expected that the Hunters would consume a lot of expendable goods. So some merchants who sold their goods in the ruins decided to sell expendable goods rather than spending efforts trying to sell rifles that might not sell that well in the ruins.

Shikarabe was replenishing his ammo reserve and the armour tile of the APC in one of those supply depots. He just needed to leave those ammo and armour tiles near the supply entrance on the side of the APC and the APC would automatically load them. It was a very convenient function that saved Shikarabe from the troublesome work. Sadly enough, Akira's vehicle was not equipped with such a function.

Carol, who was together with Shikarabe, gathered quite a lot of attention. Not only she already had a beautiful figure, to top it off, she was also wearing a sexy old-world design augmented suit. It was only to be expected for her to attract a lot of attention from the opposite sex.

But it would not be the case if they went further to the east, Carol's attire would only attract a small amount of attention. It was because the people to the east were already used to old-world relics. A lot of people would say that Carol's attire was rather too extreme, but that was only the opinion of the people who were from around Kugamayama city. And if she would go to the eastern frontline, no one would even be bothered by her attire. After all, just like in the case of Akira, who had gotten used to old-world design from Alpha's attire, the Hunters in the eastern frontline had also already gotten used to old-world design.

Some Hunters did try to strike a conversation with Carol, but she refused all of them saying that she was busy. They left her alone after she gave them her contact number. Those Hunters were lucky at the moment since they were able to meet a beautiful Hunter. But it was a different story whether that luck would last after that. After all, meeting Carol might be the trigger that would destroy their lives or cause them any other kinds of troubles down the road.

Shikarabe frowned, he looked like he had given up. His stiff expression was not caused by annoyance, it was more because he was trying to control his facial expression. After all, he knew very well about Carol's nature.

Shikarabe went inside his APC and operated the control device of the APC to execute an automatic system check. He then lightly leaned over while confirming the result. That was when Carol slowly approached him from behind as not to alert him and slowly hugged him. She wrapped her arms over his neck.

Shikarabe stopped operating the control device and asked Carol.

“What are you doing?”

Carol whispered in Shikarabe’s ear.

“We’re done with replenishing the supply, so like, you have time for a small talk now, right?”

“I still have to do the check-up, so don’t bother me.”

“It’s fine, isn’t it? You just need to wait for the check-up to finish, right? So it’s not like you have anything to do right now.”

There were leftover blood and the scent of dead bodies left inside the APC. Although the ventilation was on, that scent might as well stick there as long as no one did a thorough cleaning and even an anti-deodorant could only go as far as to reduce the scent, not completely erasing it.

But even so, with Carol getting close enough, the sweet fragrance from her body wafted to Shikarabe. It was a sweet fragrance that would easily melt logic and reasoning.

Shikarabe irritatedly said.

“…What do you want to talk about? Let me tell you this beforehand though, I’m not the same person that you know in the past…”

Carol sported a charming smile and said seductively.

“Oh my, I did pay my price though. It’s so rude to say that as if I forced you to give me that information. Even you did enjoy it, right?”

Carol’s hand crawled to Shikarabe’s chest.

“Moreover, it’s not like I’m planning to extract information about Drankam this time. I know that it seems there are a lot of things going on inside Drankam lately, but I have no plans to talk about that this time. So don’t worry, okay?”

Shikarabe lowered his guard. Carol did not let that go as she faintly smiled.

“What is it then?”

“I want to ask about Akira, you know him well, right?”

“Well, it’s true that I know him, but it’s not like we’re close or anything. We have only done Hunter jobs together twice in the past. Unfortunately for you, that’s all I know.”

“That Hunter job, did you do it together out of coincidence? Or did you invite him to that job? If it’s the latter, we’re talking about you here, so I’m sure you did some investigation about him.”

Shikarabe did not say anything back, it was because he wanted to avoid leaking out any information to Carol. But Carol immediately saw through that as she smiled seductively.

“So, it’s the latter, huh. In that case, there are a lot of things that you can tell me about Akira, right? Don’t worry, I’ll properly pay you. I don’t mind paying you with money, but if you want, we can finish a quick one before the break is over, you know?”

Carol then twirled around and stood in front of Shikarabe, her body blocking his views.

Shikarabe shifted his gaze to the monitor showing the result from the APC automatic check-up. The result said that the system was all green, with that, he lost his chance to refuse her saying that he had to fix the error.

He then turned to Carol again, she was smiling seductively and charmingly. It was a hard smile to resist for those who had a taste of her.

Carol operated the APC control device, the back door of the APC slowly moved until it was fully closed.

Akira just followed Elena and Sara as they took him into a cafeteria near the Hunter Office branch.

They parked their vehicles outside the parking lot. Although it was outside the parking lot, some guards would patrol and guard the area when asked, like how they guarded the parking lot. And just as the case with the parking lot, the patrol was also charged based on duration.

Elena and Sara sat facing Akira, all of them ordered some light meals before taking their seats.

Both Elena and Sara were smiling, but there was something strange behind their smiles. Sara seemed to be bothered by Akira's new friend while Elena was looking at him as if she was inquiring about something that she did not know.

Elena then spoke.

"So, what is your relationship with Carol…? It doesn't have any deeper meaning than that, okay? It's just that we'll be working with her after this, so I want to know more about her, that's all."

For some reason, Elena was making excuses for her question. She herself did not know for sure why she did that.

Akira then answered Elena's question.

"Well, even if you ask me, there's nothing special, we're just fellow Hunters. And about her, uhh, I just met her not too long ago. So, honestly, I don't really know much about her. But it seems that Carol and Shikarabe know each other, so it might be better to ask that question to Shikarabe."

Elena did not get any valuable information about Carol and it did not seem that Akira was trying to hide anything. Sara then asked a question.

"In that case, is it okay if we ask you some questions? You can just tell us if you don't want to answer. But if you do answer, please don't lie since it might cause trouble later. Is that okay?"

"Okay."

"Thank you. So, first, since when did you know Carol?"

"I just met her yesterday."

Elena frowned and asked.

"…Yesterday?"

"Yes."

Elena and Sara seemed rather troubled. Sara seemed hesitant as she said

"…Akira. If that's true, then it means that you're bringing someone you don't really know, someone you just met yesterday, to work on this request, you know…?"

"Ahh… That… Does sound… That's indeed the case, huh."

Akira sounded disheartened as he replied back with broken words. Elena and Sara looked even more troubled than before.

Although it was already obvious, working together with other Hunters in a team meant that they had to really trust each other. After all, there were cases where they had to leave their back or might even trust their lives on the hand of their teammates. That was the exact reason why the arbitrator agencies with a good reputation would prosper.

Akira once told Elena and Sara that he once got attacked by other Hunters in the same team, that was why Elena and Sara thought he well understood the importance of that problem. Even this situation was also caused by the fact that he could not contact Elena and Sara earlier, it was still a rather unexpected situation for them.

Akira sounded apologetic as he said to Elena.

“…I’m really sorry. As I thought, is it better if we don’t move in the same team this time?”

Hearing how Akira suddenly sounded so apologetic, Elena flusteredly replied.

“Uhh, you don’t have to go that far. We’re also happy to get more helping hands and if she’s really a troublesome Hunter, Shikarabe would have stopped us too. Ahhh, and also, as you said, you’ll take responsibility if Carol tries to do anything funny, right?”

Akira replied back with a serious face.

“Of course, I’m the one who brought her here after all.”

Sara suddenly asked Akira a question.

“When you say you’ll take responsibility, how far are you actually planning to go?”

Akira thought for a bit before answering back.

“Well, let’s see. If it’s a problem that can be solved with money, I’ll pay. If it’s an amount that I can pay right away, I’ll immediately pay. If it’s not, either I pay it in form of a request or I'll ask to wait until I get enough money."

After listening to Akira's answer, Elena and Sara thought for a bit. Although he straightforwardly replied with a serious face, it somehow felt lacking. Akira did not say any exact amount of money that he was willing to pay, even if he said that he would pay no matter how much he would be asked, it was not like he would pay just any amount. There were many people who would take back what they said when an exact amount of money was specified, moreover, there were many problems in this world that could not be solved with money.

Sara then continued.

"Is that all?"

"If Carol causes anything that puts Elena-san or Sara-san in danger, I'll take the responsibility and kill her myself."

Akira replied casually, there was no trace of resolve or determination in his words. But that was the exact reason why Elena and Sara knew that he was being serious.

Akira was the type of person who could just casually kill others. He did not fear or hate or feel excited about that act, he did not need faith or determination or resolve to execute the act, he did not hesitate, he did not let himself get carried away by it, he did not let it affect him at all, he was simply absolutely impartial on the act of murder. In the eyes of people from the inner wall, his openness toward murder was extremely unethical and abnormal.

Of course, Elena and Sara would also kill people when needed. As a matter of fact, they did murder people a few times in the past. But in the end, it was because those people tried to attack them, it was for the sake of self-defense.

Elena made a serious face as she said to Akira.

“Alright, but is it okay if we ask you for one thing? If she does put us in danger, can you just leave how to deal with it to us? If it’s possible, I want to avoid any kind of in-fighting. We have a reputation to uphold too after all.”

“I understand, please feel free to ask for me if I’m needed.”

Akira replied without showing any hesitation.

Sara was staring at Akira, she seemed a bit troubled as she thought.

[It’s true that it’s rather weird for Akira to bring with him someone that he just met yesterday, but more than that, I’m more interested about that reason… I don’t want to believe it, but don’t tell me he…]

Sara then asked Akira a question to confirm her guess.

“So then, what exactly happened yesterday? Can you please tell us everything including when you met Carol?”

“Okay.”

Akira then told Elena and Sara all the information that he thought they would want to know. He told them that he went to Mihazono ruin yesterday, he then entered the Seranthal building and met Carol inside that building. All of a sudden they were swarmed by monsters and somehow was able to escape the building. He then lost his relics for protecting Carol. But she compensated for his lost relics and treated him for lunch. Of course, Akira did not say anything about Carol’s side job.

“The information that Carol had really helped us escape the Seranthal building. Moreover, with someone who knows well about this ruin, I thought that we would be able to safely complete today’s request. That’s why I hired Carol.”

“That must have been hard. To be more precise, is it okay if I ask you how you escaped Seranthal building?”

When Sara asked that question, Akira hesitated to answer back.

“Uhh… Do I really need to answer that question no matter what?”

“I won’t force you. If you don’t want to answer, you can just say it.”

“Uhhh, that’s not exactly the problem. Although I came to know about it because of an emergency, it’s information that I paid money to get, so…”

Elena sounded convinced as she said.

“Ahhh, I see, so basically we just need to pay you money, right?”

Akira flusteredly shook his head and said.

“Ah no, I don’t really mind telling Elena-san and Sara-san for free, but… I was just thinking if it’s okay for me as a Hunter to give such information for free to another Hunter. What should I do about such information normally? Since I already paid for it, I wonder if it’s okay if I spread it around without permission. What do you think, Elena-san?”

Elena was taken aback when Akira asked her that question. It was because she did not expect him to be that careful about dealing with such information. After all, in the past, he did share information about an unexplored ruin to her and Sara casually. Sara was also surprised by that unexpected change.

Elena thought that it was a good thing if Akira had changed because he had that talk with her. She then happily told him about her own opinion.

“It depends, if you agreed beforehand not to spread it when you bought it, then, you shouldn’t spread it. But if you don’t have such an agreement, I think it’s okay for you to tell other people. With that being said, you still need to have some kind of implicit agreement with the person from whom you got that information. After all, there’s a chance that person will sell the next piece of information at a higher price since the last one spread widely among the Hunters. For that one, well, you can only learn that from experience.”

“…This is really difficult.”

“If you don’t know what to decide, it’s safer if you keep it a secret. There’s no need to leak it out just because we asked you. Which in that case, is it okay if we ask you how much it cost and whether it was worth paying that money?”

“It was 5,000,000 Aurum and I think it was worth that money. Although, I can only say that since I was able to escape the building thanks to that information.”

Sara pondered, “hmm…”

“5,000,000 Aurum, huh. If you say it is really worth that much, I have no plans to refute it but… Just because you were able to escape danger because of that, I don’t think that’s enough of a reason to blow it out of the proportion that much. Are you sure it was really worth it?”

“Yes. Although, in the end, I didn’t pay even a single Aurum for that information since I accepted her request to escort her back. Either way, I was in a situation where it was bad if Carol got killed, so the timing was good too.”

Elena smiled confidently.

“You’re pretty good.”

Sara also smiled, she seemed a bit surprised. Akira blushed as he got flustered.

After Elena and Sara asked a lot of questions about Carol to Akira, they decided that there should be no problem adding Carol to the team. Although she did ask Akira to escort her to escape the Seranthal building, it was not like she did not fight at all. Moreover, it seemed that she did change her equipment into something more suitable for fighting this time. And in the first place, if Shikarabe thought that she would only slow them down, he would have rejected that suggestion.

It might be true that Carol knew a lot of things about Mihazono ruin, or at least, it was true that she had information that helped Akira to survive and return back alive from the ruin. Thus, Akira thought that it would be helpful to have her around if they wanted to explore Mihazono ruin.

Sara felt relieved that her fear was proven to be wrong, she then apologetically said to Akira.

“Let me apologize to you first, I’m really sorry. To be honest, I thought that Carol seduced you and is tricking you right now. I just thought that… Well, I’m sorry to put it this way, I just thought that Carol is cajoling and manipulating you for her own benefit, you see.”

Elena also apologized to Akira.

“…Sorry, I actually thought so too. You did tell us that you basically work alone, remember? That’s why I was so surprised when you suddenly brought with you another Hunter, it just somehow bothered me.”

At first, Akira did not understand what exactly Elena and Sara were talking about. He just sat there with a confused face. But after a few seconds, he realized what it was all about. It was true that it would not be strange for Elena and Sara to think like that after seeing Carol’s attire. He then smiled bitterly and said.

“Uhmm, I’m sorry to make you worry. But it’s alright. I think I’m the type who doesn’t get baited by something like that.”

Sara smiled mischievously.

“Is that so? Then I might as well test you.”

Sara stood up from her seat and moved next to Akira. She then leaned her face close to his while smiling and staring at him.

Akira obviously started getting flustered.

“W-whoah, Sara-san?!”

Sara kept staring at Akira’s face while moving her face closer and closer. The closer she got, the more flustered Akira became.

Akira then turned to Elena, asking for help. But Elena just smiled bitterly at him and said.

“Looking at you now, I don’t think you’re okay at all though? Maybe you want to get used to it while you still have the chance?”

Sara then pulled back her face. Akira sighed, he was still blushing as he said.

“…Give me a break!”

Sara smiled teasingly at Akira.

“If you want to get used to it, I can help you, you know?”

“No, thanks!”

“Oh my, you don’t like it?”

“…Please just stop.”

Akira replied back in a strong tone to hide his embarrassment. Looking at that him, Elena and Sara just smiled.

Alpha was also smiling, although, deep inside, she was a little bit disappointed since it seemed that bringing Carol along did not disrupt Akira’s relationship with Elena and Sara.

Akira, Elena, and Sara went back to their meeting point. Not too long after that, Shikarabe’s APC arrived right on time. Shikarabe and Carol then stepped out from the APC. Shikarabe seemed a little irritated while Carol looked somehow in a good mood.

According to Elena’s experience as a Hunter, she thought that Shikarabe was the type of person who preferred to come early and wait for other people to arrive, but since this time he came just right on time, Elena found that weird and asked them a question.

“You’re cutting it pretty close this time, was there any problem?”

Carol smiled and answered Elena’s question.

“Nope, we did replenish the supply and had a good rest before coming here.”

Shikarabe did not say anything. The other Hunters there directed their gazes on Shikarabe. He noticed that tried to calm himself down before opening his mouth.

“…There’s no problem with the resupply. If I have to say anything, well, the cost of the armour plating and the ammo was more expensive than I expected.”

“If the negotiation took most of your time and you didn’t get much rest, I don’t mind waiting for some more time for you to get adequate rest.”

When Elena said that, Carol immediately replied in place of Shikarabe.

“It’s fine, we did have a good rest after all, right? Or was that not enough?”

Carol glanced at Shikarabe. Shikarabe averted his gaze from her as he said.

“…It’s alright. So then, how about you guys? Did something happen?”

“Nothing. By the way, I’ve picked our next request.”

“In that case, let’s get working. With the sun already up, it’s much safer than during the night. With that being said, there should be more people competing for the rescue requests now though.”

They then returned back to their respective vehicles. Carol returned back to Akira’s vehicle and sat on the driver assistance’s seat. She then looked at Akira in a good mood. Since it was not like she was glaring at him, Akira just ignored her and started his vehicle.

They were heading to the building in the Mihazono ruin where the Hunters who sent the rescue request barricaded themselves inside. Elena and Sara were in the front, Shikarabe's APC in the middle, and finally Akira and Carol in the rear. They intentionally took a wide road as they drove through the ruin. After all, there was a good chance that if they picked a narrow road, it might be blocked by the wreckages of the dead mechanical monsters.

But even on that wide road, there were wreckages of huge mechanical monsters that almost blocked the whole road. There was a huge tank-like object with multiple legs lying on the side of the road with countless holes on its torsos; around it, there were pieces of humanoid weapons that must have fought that huge tank assorted with huge empty ammo cartridges scattered around.

Akira frowned when he saw that.

"Say, Alpha, correct me if I'm wrong, but these huge monsters don't really roam the city district of Mihazono ruin normally, right?"

Alpha who was sitting on Akira's vehicle's door with her leg extended outside the vehicle turned her face to Akira.

"Well, that's indeed the case, at least until yesterday. If this is a normal thing in Mihazono ruin, I wouldn't have suggested you to come here."

"Thought so… What exactly happened for it to change all of a sudden?"

"I'm sure it's because the security drones increased their alert level for some reason. Judging by the fact that they're dispatching the A24-type drones inside the city district, I'm sure it's not just for simply driving out common robbers."

"Common robbers…? Ahh, the Hunters, huh. Well, if it's about them, there is always a lot of Hunters coming to this ruin every day after all."

It was as Akira said, a lot of Hunters came to the Mihazono ruin every day, at least, enough for the Hunter Office to decide to build a branch in that ruin. Honestly speaking, he thought that must not be the reason, but Alpha suddenly said something that refuted his guess.

“There’s a limit for everything. There might be a limit set on the drones, which proactively try to reduce the number of Hunters inside the city ruin. That limit must have surpassed yesterday, so there are a ton more.”

“I see. But if that’s really the case, I really hope it would have gotten triggered when I’m not in this ruin though.”

Alpha just smiled at Akira who was complaining.

“I think it’s nothing strange considering your bad luck. Honestly speaking, I’ve already given up resisting your back luck. So I suggest that you give up too, okay?”

Akira smiled bitterly at Alpha. He could see Seranthal building in the direction that he was looking, it was a huge building that stuck out from the rest even from afar.

Carol noticed Akira was smiling bitterly in the direction where the Seranthal building was. She then smiled lightly and said to him.

“It was really rough yesterday, wasn’t it? I wonder if that was some kind of omen that the ruin would turn like this?”

“That might be true. Carol, you know a lot about this Mihazono ruin, right? Do you have any guess?”

“Unfortunately, I have no guess at all.”

“So we really have no idea of what’s going on, huh? Well, that’s not surprising at all though.”

“There must be some Hunters who came here to investigate the reason behind the current situation. Those Hunters who usually sell maps often explore the inner part of the ruin too. If they can find out the reason behind the current situation and sell that information to the Hunter Office, I bet it can fetch them at least 10,000,000,000 Aurum.”

Akira was flabbergasted when he heard that amount of money.

“I-Is it really worth that much?”

Akira himself knew that it would be a pretty expensive piece of information, but he did not expect it to be such a huge amount.

Carol, who noticed Akira’s expression, just smiled teasingly at him and said.

“Oh my, it’s a piece of information related to the safety of the Mihazono ruin, you know? At the moment, there’s still no news saying that the monsters from inside the Mihazono ruin are going out into the wasteland, but there’s no guarantee that it’ll stay that way. When a lot of monsters flood out from the ruin, it might greatly affect the monster distribution in the wasteland. Because of that, some routes that are originally considered as safe might turn dangerous, and if that kills the trading flow of the city, it’ll also give a huge hit to the companies that depend on those trading routes. So with that information, the Hunter Office can take an initiative to prevent such situations from happening. After all, just think about it, even if you pay 100 Hunters 100,000,000 Aurum each to take out all the monsters that are flooding out from the ruin, do you think they can really accomplish that?”

“Nope, I don’t think they can.”

“Yep, so that’s basically the gist of it. Moreover, leaving that aside, if that amount of money is enough to keep the ruin that’s already under the control of the Hunter Office to the point that they built a branch office in that ruin, then I bet they would have no complaint paying that amount of money. Depending on the quality of the information and how the negotiation goes, it might even cost even more than that.”

Akira sounded amazed as he said.

“So there’s something like that too, huh. I never thought that kind of work is also available for Hunters. Wait, does that mean that you’re actually that kind of Hunter?”

After all, there were not many Hunters who knew about the invisible transport drones in the landing pads of some buildings in the Mihazono ruin. So, if Carol was one of those Hunters who worked as a map dealer, then it was not surprising for her to know about those transport drones.

Carol then smiled smugly and answered Akira's question.

"My main Hunter job is hunting relics and selling them while I also work as an information dealer on the side."

Akira looked at Carol with wide eyes, he seemed to be honestly amazed by her. A question suddenly popped up inside his brain.

"…Wait for a sec, you did tell me that some Hunters intentionally opened only a few doors in between floors in the Seranthal building so that the other Hunters who explore that building would easily get lost inside that building. And it was done in order to increase the price of the map of the Seranthal building, right?"

"Oh, yep, I did tell you that… But no, I don't do something like that."

"Really?"

"Yep."

Carol answered back with a bright smile, Akira could not read whether she was lying or not.

Elena's voice suddenly came out from Akira's information terminal.

"Akira, we'll enter an area where a lot of monsters are roaming around. We'll basically try to pierce through the swarm, so make sure not to get left behind, okay? I'll leave the monsters on the flank to you. If it's too hard for you, we'll temporarily withdraw. So make sure to contact us beforehand, okay?"

"Understood. Elena-san and Sara-san too, if things get dicey, please immediately withdraw."

Elena then replied as if she was provoking Akira.

“Oh my, if we immediately head back because of something like that, we won’t be able to get money from the request that we could originally complete, you know? Are you okay with that?”

If they got too reckless, they would get killed and that would be the end of them. But if they were too careful, they would not be able to get money and would eventually die out of starvation. Being Hunters meant that they should be able to decide whether they could get enough money to justify the danger that they would face. Elena thought that Akira’s words just now sounded too pessimistic, that was why she tried to lightly poke at Akira.

“I don’t mind. Elena-san and Sara-san’s safety is much more important than money.”

Akira answered back in a straight-forward and casual manner. There were a few seconds of silence before Elena replied.

“…Don’t worry, I have no plans to die here. So I don’t think I would make a blunder about that. Thank you for worrying about us, good luck, Akira.”

Right at the end of her sentence, Elena sounded like she was in a good mood. After that, she cut the call.

“Alpha, can I leave the driving to you again?”

“Sure, there’s no need to be in such a hurry, I’ll tell you if I detect any monsters.”

It seemed that Akira got a bit excited, Alpha thought that it might be because of that reply from Elena just now. She then suddenly pointed her finger.

“Akira, use the A4WM grenade-launcher this time. I want to gather some data first while we still have the chance.”

“Roger that.”

Akira returned to the back seat and grabbed his A4WM grenade-launcher, it was a gun that he had not tried to shoot even once before. Although he was planning to get used to it by testing it in the wasteland, he did not expect that he would have to use it right on the next day after he bought it. At the moment, he was in a rather safe situation, so it was a good chance for him to get used to his new gun.

Carol looked around and asked Akira a question.

“Akira, did you find a monster somewhere?”

“Nope, my information-gathering device didn’t detect anything in particular. How about yours?”

Carol thought that Akira somehow found monsters that she could not detect. Although with the sun up right now, it was far easier to check the surroundings compared to when it was during the night, there were a lot of rubbles and wreckage around where monsters could hide.

“Even if you tell me so. It’s not like I’m trying to scare you or anything. You also heard that order from Elena-san just now, right? I’m just getting myself ready for the upcoming battle.”

“Well, it’s fine if that’s the case. By the way, since I left it to you to take care of all of the monsters last time, can you leave the next ones to me? I’ll show you that I’m different from yesterday.”

Carol was smiling smugly filled with confidence when she said that.

The front-most vehicle in that group was Elena and Sara’s, Elena was driving the vehicle. She was also the one operating the vehicle’s information-gathering device and its machine gun. As for Sara, who was sitting next to Elena, her job was to take care of the monsters that the machine gun could not take out.

There, Sara was looking in Elena's direction while smiling teasingly at her. Elena's face turned stern for a bit as she said.

"…What?"

Sara then amusedly said.

"It's nothing. It's just that it seemed Akira is worried about us."

Elena's stern face was basically her trying to hide her embarrassment. She fully understood that Sara knew that too but if she did not do that, she knew that Sara would start teasing her. That was why she could not relax her expression.

In their team, Elena was the one who was responsible for negotiation. Because of that, she learned a lot of skills used for negotiating such as probing for ulterior motives, reading behind words, detecting lies, digging for real motives, or judging for cost and benefit of a deal.

Elena had the experience of negotiating with problematic and dangerous people like those who were so prideful that they had no ulterior motives at all, or those who would casually make a bad suggestion with a smile, or those people who tried to strike a deal while also planning to betray that deal right from the start. Thanks to that, Elena was able to more or less read the real intention behind people's words.

And of course, Akira's words were not an exception. Elena unconsciously tried to probe what was behind those words and she came up with the conclusion that Akira was not lying at all, he was not trying to act cool nor trying to woo her. He was only simply stating his real feelings. Elena knew that very well as she tried to look even deeper for the reason why he said that.

If it was true that Akira felt Elena and Sara's safety was more important than money, then he would not complain at all and just follow her if she told the team to withdraw right now, which at that point, Akira would not get even a single Aurum. Or more like, he would be already in red since he had to pay for Carol's reward. If he would really do that, it meant that Akira did not take Elena’s invitation to work on this request for the sake of money.

To top it off, Akira knew that Mihazono ruin was a dangerous ruin. As a matter of fact, he even went as far as hiring Carol as insurance, so there should be no mistaking it.

Which then, the real question would be why Akira would accept Elena and Sara’s invitation. At least, it was not for money. Although he still needed money, it was not his first priority. In order for Elena to pull out the answer, she did not immediately reply to Akira back there.

Akira was there to help out Elena and Sara. He knew that Mihazono ruin, or at least the Seranthal building, was a very dangerous place. As such, he was there to make sure that Elena and Sara would not need to go through what he had gotten through. He must have decided to accept their invitation thinking that if he was around, he would be able to at least be of some help to Elena and Sara.

If Elena and Sara were able to contact Akira, it might have been the end of it once she told him the details of their current situation. He might have decided to come exactly because he could not contact Elena and Sara back then.

Having a young Hunter who just started working not too long ago worrying about her, it could even be said that she was having a Hunter below her worrying about her. So there was no way Elena did not feel anything about it. Even she had her pride as a Hunter.

But even so, Elena was delighted that Akira came there to help her, she was so happy that it betrayed her pride as a Hunter. As a matter of fact, Akira had been saving her life and Sara’s life ever since their first meeting. If Akira had not saved her back then, she would have been raped and then killed. So, it might be too late for her to be saying anything about her pride as a Hunter.

The feeling that Akira and Elena had for each other was basically a form of love for close friends and as fellow Hunters, they felt indebted to each other for saving each other's life. Or at least, for Elena, she did not look at Akira as a target for her romantic feeling. She thought that should also be the case for Akira too. After all, their age gap was simply too big.

But even so, when someone whom she considered as a close friend came to help her disregarding profit and loss and even risked his life to help her, it was only natural for her to feel happy. There was nothing strange about it.

Elena herself knew that she was in a very good mood, while on the other hand, she also understood very well that getting too happy would affect her ability to judge and make decisions. That was why she was making a stern face. Moreover, with the person who knew her inner feeling sitting next to her while smiling at her, Elena could not afford to relax her expression.

She then warned Sara with a serious face.

"If you know that he's worried about us, you should be extra careful too. Don't forget that you got saved by him back then in Yonozuka station ruin, okay? I'm sure you're not thinking of making him save you again, right?"

Sara replied in a serious voice.

"I know. I've vowed that I won't ever make the same mistake again."

"That's good then."

Right at that moment, the sensor installed in their vehicle suddenly showed a reaction, it was showing that there were a lot of monsters ahead. Elena checked the display of the radar while saying to Sara.

"…It would take forever to kill all of them. We'll try to force our way through. Sara, are you ready?"

"Ready when you are."

Elena accelerated her vehicle to open up a road for the other vehicles behind her. The machine gun on their vehicle and Sara's gun started shooting almost at the same time as they were laying waste to the monsters ahead of them.

Akira's vehicle suddenly accelerated. Due to that sudden acceleration, the inertia hit Akira and Carol. Akira was able to keep his balance thanks to Alpha's support via his augmented suit, while Carol was also able to keep her balance thanks to her own skill and her augmented suit.

Carol kept her eyes on Akira to watch his movements closely, right at that time, Alpha explained the current situation to Akira.

"Akira, there are multiple monsters ahead and Elena is planning to just focus their firepower on the front to create a way forward. Since it'll leave the other monsters on the left and right untouched, be extra careful. If those monsters decide to attack us, they would surround us from both sides, so let's take them out first before they can do that."

"Roger that."

Akira then said to Carol.

"Carol, we have incoming monsters."

"Got it, just leave it to me."

Carol had already got some incoming enemy signals in her information-gathering device. She then smiled and readied her gun. Suddenly Akira said to her.

“I’ll be joining in too.”

Carol sounded a little bit offended as she replied.

“You really don’t trust me, do you? It’ll be fine, just leave it to me.”

“That’s not the problem. Or more like, I hired you as a guide in the first place. Of course, I’m thankful if you help me in fighting the monsters too, but there’s no need for you to proactively fight them.”

Carol just giggled and said.

“Oh my, I won’t be able to ask for a reward from you if I don’t contribute during the fight too. Now that I’m here, I don’t plan to be just content with my reward as a guide alone, you know.”

Akira smiled back.

“Got it. That also means if I can take out most of the monsters alone, then I only need to give you a small reward, right?”

“No worry, I’ll squeeze you dry.”

Akira and Carol smiled confidently at each other.

At the moment, the road inside the Mihazono ruin was filled with mechanical monsters. Their sizes and strength greatly varied from one and another. Elena’s team blazed through that ocean of monsters focusing their firepower only on the monsters blocking their way forward, while some of the monsters were slammed by their vehicles before getting crushed under the wheels. If they slowed down even for a bit, there was a good chance that the monsters would immediately swarm them. Thus, they had no other choice but to keep pushing forward even if it meant that it would damage their vehicles.

The destroyed mechanical monsters left piles of metallic wreckages on the road. It would be really hard to drive through that road if they were using a normal vehicle. But of course, it did not pose any problem at all against the powerful vehicles designed to be used in the wasteland. As long as the pile of wreckages did not fully block the road, their vehicles should be able to forcefully push the way forward.

For those mechanical monsters, no matter how much the other monsters were destroyed, and no matter how damaged their bodies were, that would not stop them from fighting back, at most, it would only change their priority target. But if the Hunters got away far enough from them, those mechanical monsters would stop attacking and instead search for other targets closer to them. And of course, for those mechanical monsters with high mobility, they might as well decide to keep pursuing the Hunters in that case.

Some of the monsters that they passed were monsters with a lot of legs equipped with wheels. Those wheels suddenly spun so fast that it raised a cloud of dust before it started accelerating to chase for Akira and the other Hunters.

Of course, compared to Elena and Sara who were carving their way forward, those wheeled monsters were way faster since they were chasing Akira through an already cleared road. It would be incredibly difficult to lose them without shooting at them.

Akira aimed his A4WM automatic grenade-launcher at the enemies behind. He took an aim through the aiming device and was about to pull the trigger.

But before he could completely pull the trigger, the monster that he was aiming at suddenly got blown away and rolled over the ground. The impact left a big dent on that monster’s body as it then collided with another monster and exploded.

Every time a gunshot echoed from beside Akira, one of those strong looking monsters would get blown away and then destroyed. It was Carol’s handiwork, she was carrying 2 pistols, one in each hand. The size of the pistol was huge compared to its grip, it seemed to be completely impossible to carry those pistols with one hand. But even so, Carol was carrying one in each of her hands as she kept shooting at 2 different targets. Amazingly enough, all of her shots hit their targets.

Akira looked at Carol, he was obviously surprised. Carol turned to him and smiled confidently before returning back to shooting.

Alpha seemed pretty amazed as she said.

“I see, she’s indeed as strong as she said she is.”

“You can say that again. I need to hurry up or all of my shares will be taken.”

“Carol is taking out all the monsters starting from the ones in the front, so you should focus on the monsters on the behind.”

“Roger that.”

Akira’s target priorities that were shown in hin enhanced vision suddenly changed. He followed that indicator and took another aim before pulling the trigger. But the launched grenade did not hit his target, instead, it landed just in front of his target, but even so, that was enough to blow away the monsters around the impact area.

Akira frowned.

“A miss, huh. I guess I need to aim a little bit higher.”

“As long as I don’t have enough data for shooting with that A4WM automatic grenade-launcher, I can’t give you my usual support. And since you’re shooting out grenades, at least keep in mind not to damage your own vehicle, okay?”

“Got it, just stop me if it gets dangerous.”

Akira took another aim and pulled the trigger. Some of the launched grenades landed just right next to his target, some of them landed on the wall of the buildings on the side of the road, some of them hit the other monsters that he was not targeting at. Although it was to be expected that it would be really difficult to aim accurately from a moving vehicle, Akira's accuracy there was even worse.

"I just can't get any clean hit."

"It's not surprising at all. It's your first time using that gun after all. But even if you miss, it at least slows down the monsters chasing us, so just keep on shooting."

"I guess that's just how important training is, huh."

Although Akira's accuracy was pretty bad, it at least would not cause any trouble thanks to Carol. His accuracy was completely different compared to when he was using CWH anti-material rifle, it was as if he was a completely different person, and he kept shooting with that accuracy until the situation calmed down.

__*__*__*__

Inside a certain building among all the buildings in the Mihazono ruin city district, a lot of Hunters barricaded themselves.

Those Hunters gathered in a hall near the entrance and they barricaded the pathways leading to other rooms. As for the entrance to that building, they used their own vehicles to block the way in. Their vehicles were already destroyed by the monsters, so those vehicles were basically useless except as a barricade, preventing monsters from flooding in.

The building itself was pretty strong, thanks to that, as long as the entrance was properly barricaded, the building itself could handle the monsters' attacks. Though due to the exact same reason it was also difficult for those Hunters to escape from that room.

The Hunters in that building were taking turns to rest, but even so, all of them looked exhausted. The monsters were roaming just outside of the buildings and some of them already filled the halls and the rooms inside that building. If they were unlucky, the barricade might get destroyed, which would result in those monsters immediately flooding into the room. They were not in a situation where they could relax at all. With no means to get extra ammo or medicines, their life span only extended as far as how long their current ammo reserve would hold.

No one there tried to escape from that building. Some of them did try but they were quickly killed by the monsters that were roaming just outside the building.

Their only hope was for someone to come and rescue them, but of course, chances for that was really slim.

One of the Hunters who were on guard duty asked one of his friends who was operating his information terminal while taking a rest.

"…Is there any change?"

The other guy did not say anything, he just shook his head.

"… I see."

The Hunter who asked that question actually knew well enough that there was no need to ask that question. After all, if there was a change in their situation, the other guy would definitely show some reaction. The only reason why he ended up asking that question even though he understood that very well was simply because he was still clinging to that slim hope.

The Hunters had been barricading themselves inside that building for half a day. They went inside right before the sunset, at that time, they already lost half of their team members.

They were attacked when they were running into that building, they were attacked when they were putting up barricades, some of them got fatally wounded during those fights, and some of them tried to get out from that building only to get killed. Some of them died during the battle, some of them died while screaming in pain and agony, some of them went on a suicidal rampage before getting killed. The leftover survivors were already in extreme stress. Even if one of them decided to try to get out of that building, they already had no strength nor spirit to stop that person.

But even so, they still had some hopes to return back alive from there. After all, after they completely exhausted their options, they decided to send an emergency SOS request. So someone might come to rescue them. If they kept buying more time, someone might eventually come to rescue them.

All the surviving Hunters did not have the courage nor spirit to try challenging the monsters outside. As their ammo reserve got shaved bit by bit, their already exhausted morale clinging to that slim hope of returning back alive also got shaved bit by bit. They could only cling on that slim hope while waiting, every single second felt so long to the point that it could drive them mad.

That guy kept his eyes on the information terminal in front of him. Suddenly a call came into his information terminal, he immediately pulled himself together and checked his information terminal to reconfirm if it was only an illusion since something like that had happened multiple times before.

There was a sudden call through a local connection. That man then checked the location of where that call came from and started laughing. He had no idea whether it was a dream or an illusion or reality. But, whichever the case, his next action was the same. He operated his information terminal to accept that call, and when he did that, a girl’s voice could be heard from his information terminal.

“We’re Hunters that accepted the SOS request from Alhain insurance company. Are you Cocolens-san?”

That guy was flabbergasted. Although he heard everything that girl said very well, he was in no position to process that information.

“Can you hear me? This call should be connected to Cocolens-san who is in contract with Alhain insurance company though? Or am I mistaken?”

That guy started panicking. He was still so confused if this was only a dream or an illusion.

“Are you wounded to the point that you can’t talk? In that case, can you give the information terminal to someone that we can talk with? I want to confirm the situation over there.”

That guy could not say anything back, the girl then continued.

“Can you hear me? If you can’t talk and there’s no one around, can you at least send me a text message? Or is it that this information terminal is set so that it automatically accepts local calls even if the owner is already dead? Hello? Anyone there?”

That guy finally snapped back to reality. He realized that the girl’s voice was real. Right in the next moment, that guy used all his leftover voice to scream at his information terminal.

“Save us!!!”

That guy’s voice echoed through the hall, all the Hunters in that hall turned to that guy.

The girl’s voice from that guy’s information terminal was Elena’s voice, she was heading to where that guy was.

Elena and her team kept pushing their way forward inside the Mihazono ruin. The road was wide but it was filled with monsters. If they stopped even for a few seconds to fight those monsters, they would be surrounded by so many wreckages from the monsters that they would kill to the point that they would not be able to drive their vehicles through those wreckages.

Akira and Carol were shooting at the small tank monsters chasing them from behind as if they were competing against each other. Number wise, Carol was leading Akira. But even so, there were still enough monsters for Akira to be able to shoot enough grenades to get a good feel of his A4WM automatic grenade-launcher, so Alpha should have gotten enough data during that battle.

Akira suddenly complained.

“Aren’t there too many of them? There’s just no end to these monsters.”

Carol answered Akira’s question.

“It seems that the Hunter Office is building up a defense line around its branch using their influence. So that might be the reason why the monster density outside the defense line is so high.”

“So, the Hunter Office is doing something like that, huh? How did you get a hold of such information?”

“I heard from Shikarabe when we were taking a break. It seems that during the night, they dispatched humanoid weapons inside the predetermined line of defense to clean up all of those powerful autonomous weapons behind the line of defense. It seems that they’re focusing on barricading the main road and securing the safety around the area at the moment. I also heard that the squads dispatched by Drankam are participating in that operation.”

Akira remembered the wreckage of a huge monster surrounded by humanoid soldiers that he saw not too long ago. That might be the leftover from the battle last night. But at the moment, they were outside the defense line, thus they might encounter that huge monster somewhere.

Akira looked a bit annoyed.

“Is the situation outside the defense line like this no matter where we go? If that’s the case, I can see why no one would accept that SOS request without taking any insurance. I really get it now why people are taking insurance.”

“I’m sure those insurance companies did not expect something like this to happen either, so I bet they’re losing a lot of money at the moment.”

Akira was having a conversation with Carol while fighting the monsters. Compared to yesterday when they had to fight a swarm of monsters inside the Seranthal building, their current situation was way better. Normal Hunters would be desperately fighting the monsters in that situation, it really showed just how strong Carol and Akira were compared to those common Hunters.

Elena then gave orders to everyone in the team through the information terminal.

“Our rescue target this time has barricaded himself inside a building 200 metre ahead. Shikarabe, stop your APC in front of the entrance to that building and carry everyone into your APC regardless if they are still alive or not. The rest of the team will hold the entrance and keep the monsters away from the entrance. Since the rescue target is staying in a room close to the entrance, there’s no need to go too deep into the building or securing the escape route leading to the entrance of the building.”

Shikarabe then asked a question to Elena.

“How much time do I have for getting them into my APC?”

“10 minutes. If some of them are taking too long, just leave them behind.”

“Is there any priority target?”

“That would be a Hunter by the name of Cocolens, he’s contracted with the insurance company that issued this request. In case if he’s already dead, bring his body into the APC, or at least, bring back his information terminal. And in case we can’t find his information terminal, you have 5 minutes to look for it, just give it up if you can’t find it in 5 minutes.”

“Can’t you get in contact with him?”

“Well, at least I was able to get in contact with someone who claimed to be that person just now.”

Shikarabe sounded obviously annoyed.

“…Got it. Roger that.”

Shikarabe had been working as a Hunter for a long time, thus he knew what Elena was talking about, that was also the case for Carol and Sara too. The only person who did not understand what was going on there was Akira.

Elena then asked Akira.

“Akira, are you okay over there? It seems that there are more monsters than I predicted. There’s no need to be reckless, okay?”

Taking that question from the positive point of view, it sounded as if Elena was worried about Akira out of care. But taking that from the opposite point of view, it sounded as if she was worried about Akira who was the weakest in the group, and Carol, who Elena did not know well. If Akira gave a worrying answer, in the worst-case scenario, Elena might stop their rescue operation there.

Akira then firmly replied back.

“I’m good, no problem at all over here.”

Elena then excitedly said from the other side of the information terminal.

“I see, in that case, let’s go.”

They headed straight to the building where the Hunters were barricading themselves with Elena leading in the front.

All the monsters surrounding the building where the Hunters were, suddenly shifted their attention to Elena and her team. The monsters with guns and cannons aimed their long-range weapons at Elena and the other Hunters, while the monsters only equipped with close-range weapons started running towards them.

Then, right as they fixed their aim on Elena and her team and was about to shoot, they were suddenly blown away and turned into a pile of wreckage due to the barrage from Elena and her team.

The machine gun fixed on Shikarabe’s APC spewed out countless bullets. That machine gun was strong enough to injure even a bounty monster when used from up-close. Thus, those bullets could easily pierce through the monsters’ armoured body and blow its innards to pieces.

Elena and her team released a barrage of bullets to all the monsters surrounding that building. Sara readied her automatic grenade launcher and started shooting too. As countless grenades rained down from the sky, they exploded and blew the monsters to smithereens.

Akira and Carol shifted their aims to the entrance of the building and started shooting at the monsters who were trying to crawl their way into the building.

The monsters tried to force their bodies through the big entrance into the building, there were so many of them that they almost completely blocked the big entrance that was wide enough for few vehicles to pass through at the same time. But Carol's barrage and Akira's grenades made short work of them and blew them to pieces, thus turning them to just metal wreckage.

As the other monsters tried to push their way forward while trampling the wreckages leftover of their dead comrades under their feet, Akira used the other rifles fixed in the backside of his vehicle to push those monsters back, leaving them either completely destroyed or half-destroyed. Thus turning them one by one to just another metal wreckage.

The area around that building immediately turned into a battlefield riddled with explosions and gunshots.

The Hunters inside that building saw the battle happening outside through the small openings of the barricaded entrance.

"They're here!! Someone actually came to save us!!"

"Quickly, open the entrance door!! We won't be able to go outside with the barricade there!!"

"For those Hunters with an augmented suit, help me move away the vehicles blocking the entrance!!"

"Leave the wounded near the entrance!!"

The Hunters there immediately sprung to action. If they let go of this chance, they would have no other chance to survive. Everyone in that building understood that very well. They squeezed all of their leftover physical power and spirit to start working again.

After they cleared the monsters around that building, Shikarabe stopped his APC just right in front of the entrance, the back door of the APC opened and he stepped out from the APC.

The entrance was still blocked by the vehicles that the Hunters left there. One of the Hunters from inside the building was trying to desperately squeeze his way out through a small opening in that entrance.

Shikarabe then just stood there and released a powerful kick at those vehicles, blowing them a few metres aside.

Shikarabe then shouted.

“We’ll leave in 10 minutes!! Get everyone inside the APC, it doesn’t matter if they’re alive or not!! And also, which one of you is Cocolens?!”

When one of those Hunters passed aside Shikarabe and was about to enter the APC, Shikarabe suddenly grabbed that guy and stopped him. That guy immediately shouted.

“Wh-what!? Just let me in already!!!”

“You guys that can still move are for later, get those who can’t move on their own first.”

That guy then shook off Shikarabe’s grab and went to the APC.

“Shut up!! I’ll definitely return back from here!!”

Shikarabe immediately grabbed that guy and threw him back into the building. That guy landed hard on the floor and lost consciousness as he rolled over on the ground.

Shikarabe glared at the other Hunters, few Hunters who were about to do the same thing immediately stopped.

“I’ll say it one more time!! Get everyone inside the APC regardless if they’re alive or not!! Either it’s only a corpse, or it has lost its head, or it’s nothing but a head, it doesn’t matter, just get everyone inside the APC! And also, which one of you is Cocolens? Or at least, which one of you was on a call with us not too long ago?”

One of the Hunters who was helping a wounded Hunter to stand up pointed his finger.

“…I-It’s that guy over there.”

Shikarabe then signalled that Hunter who just answered his question to get inside the APC. That Hunter sighed in relief and boarded the APC. The other Hunters started helping the Hunters who could not move on their own regardless if they were already dead or not.

Shikarabe looked at the Hunter who spoke to Elena not too long ago, that Hunter looked completely terrified.

As Shikarabe was getting their rescue target and the other Hunters into the APC, Akira, Carol, Elena, and Sara were still fighting the monsters outside. The number of monsters just outside the entrance to the building site and around that building already decreased significantly.

Akira lightly sighed.

“Well, after killing this many monsters, it’s not like we’ll get another wave of monsters, right?”

Carol smiled and said.

“Akira, do you think I can get a lot of rewards this time?”

Akira just smiled bitterly at Carol, but he sounded a little bit amused as he said.

“At this rate, I’ll have to pay you a huge amount of money.”

Carol smiled satisfied.

“It seems that I was able to show you that I’m not the same as yesterday. So, it means that I can look forward to my reward, right?”

“I can’t say anything for now. And also, it’s too soon for you to relax, don’t drop your guard just yet, okay?”

Akira and Carol smiled confidently at each other.

Alpha then gave Akira an order.

“So then, to make sure that you won’t lose your share of reward, let’s go kill some monsters. Akira, change back to CWH anti-material rifle.”

“Roger that. Geez, even after we killed that many, there are still some extra reinforcements, huh.”

Akira then changed back to his CWH anti-material rifle as ordered, he obviously looked annoyed.

“Well, to be more precise, it’s not like they’re new monsters. They’re already here right from the start.”

Alpha then pointed her finger toward the building. When Akira also looked at the building, his vision immediately enhanced. Thanks to that, he was able to see the monsters that were hiding behind the walls of that building. He immediately aimed his CWH anti-material rifle at that building.

Carol noticed that and aimed her guns toward the building too, but she did not see anything that resembled a monster. She could only see a strong-looking wall, a pile of dead monsters scattered around it, and Shikarabe and the other Hunters carrying wounded Hunters into the APC as well as Sara and Elena who were standing guard near them. There was nothing suspicious at all.

Carol then looked at Akira. He was aiming at the building with a serious look.

When she looked back at the building, a monster suddenly jumped out from one of the windows on the third floor. She was a bit surprised by that, but she was surprised even more when Akira immediately sniped that monster, it then just crashed into the ground and stopped moving.

The other monsters immediately started jumping out from the other windows too. Akira was able to snipe them down one by one accurately. The sniped monsters then fell off regardless of the damage from the impact of the sniping and crashed into the ground. Some of them crashed into the APC and made a loud banging sound which caused the Hunters inside the APC to start screaming.

Akira was able to firmly grasp the location of the monsters thanks to Alpha's support, and with her aiming support, he was able to snipe the monsters' weak points only with one shot. He kept shooting down the monsters that jumped out from the building one by one.

Elena and Sara immediately noticed that and started helping out, Carol also did the same. The pieces of the destroyed mechanical monsters rained down from above.

Carol then thought as she kept shooting at those monsters.

[Again, Akira was able to detect enemies faster than anyone else. How exactly did he do that? We didn't notice them at all until those monsters started jumping out from the building. But it doesn't seem like he's carrying a powerful information-gathering device either. I wonder if it's that intuition that those top-ranking Hunters have.]

Although Carol only checked Akira's equipment based on its outlooks, from what she could gather, she did not think he was carrying a powerful information-gathering device and it did not seem like he was faking the appearance of his equipment either.

There were many Hunters among the top raking Hunters who could accurately detect enemies' locations which were not supposed to be detected unless with a powerful information-gathering device. They themselves could not exactly explain why they could do that. Since they could not exactly explain it to the other Hunters, people just called it as intuition.

[There's also that too. During the fight, he fully left the driving to auto-drive. Although there were that many monsters and we were in such a situation, did he really trust the auto-drive function that much? Or is it that he was driving the car through remote driving? Is that even possible in the first place?]

There was a limit on how good an auto-drive function could be. Unless it was supported by a specially designed control device, it would be almost impossible to traverse the old-world ruin fully relying on the auto-drive function. Even more so when they were in the middle of a fight. In the worst-case scenario, relying on the auto-drive function could throw Akira and Carol off the vehicle.

It was not impossible to remotely drive the car with the help of a camera or something else to see what was in front of the vehicle and displaying that video in the goggles. But the real problem was whether Akira was able to do that or not. Watching both in front and behind him, driving the vehicle, and fighting the monsters chasing the vehicle from behind, most Hunters would not be able to do all of those things at the same time. Or at least, Carol could not do such a feat.

[If I trust my intuition, I don't think that's the case though… But I feel like it's a bad idea to poke Akira about that… Seriously, this boy is a real enigma.]

Carol was smiling confidently while thinking about all of those things in the back of her mind.

She had gathered some information about Akira from Shikarabe, she knew that Akira was a Hunter who was worth more than 100 million Aurum, she also knew that he participated during the bounty monster hunt at Shikarabe's invitation, and he did very well during that hunt. She also knew that that information must be true and she knew well just how strong Akira was judging from what happened yesterday inside the Seranthal building. That information really pulled up her evaluation of Akira to the point that she was sure he was one of those top-ranking Hunters.

Hunters risked their lives in order to obtain money. Some of them went to dangerous old-world ruins to bring back relics and sell them for money, some of them obtained money from accomplishing difficult requests. Carol felt pleasure making those Hunters spend their hard-earned money just to be able to sleep with her.

Carol thought that she gave a pleasure worthy of that money. Even if those Hunters, who once slept with her, would try to go to a more dangerous ruin or challenge a more difficult request to be able to sleep with her again just to meet a foul end, she would just laugh it off. Or more like, she might as well feel happy knowing that some Hunters would even try to go over their limit and do something reckless just to be able to sleep with her again.

As Carol thought how much money Akira would be willing to spend on her if she seduced him, she could not help but smile, but her face suddenly twitched with unpleasantness for a split second.

[…But until now, Akira didn't show any interest in me though. Shikarabe also has no idea about the type of girl that Akira might like. Moreover, it seems that when Shikarabe invited Akira to a pub that was in the same building as a brothel, Akira did not seem to mind at all. Those Elena and Sara, if Akira is going along with both of them, that means that it's not like he has no interest in girls at all. I don't understand, what about me that he doesn't like. Figure wise, I think I'm more or less as beautiful as those two though, is it because he has some kind of particular fetish or something?]

Carol decided to stop thinking about that and focus on the current battle. The situation that they were in did not allow her to divide her attention any longer.

Akira and the other Hunters were able to deal with the incoming monsters for a while, but as more and more monsters started to jump out of the building from the higher windows. The wall of that building started to get covered with monsters. Some of them even started to latch their bodies on the wall of that building and shoot at Akira and the other Hunters. Although they prioritized the monsters with long-range weapons, the number of bullets raining down from above their heads just kept increasing.

“Judging from this situation, I’m sure that building is filled with monsters up to the brim. I’m glad we only need to fight the monsters from the outside.”

Carol focused on the monsters in front of her while smiling and shooting at them. Although she did not have enough leeway to think about something else in that situation, she was not hard-pressed either since she came there with her expensive powerful equipment.

After the situation suddenly worsened, Elena finally decided to pull out sooner than she planned. She had a grim face as she said to Shikarabe.

“Shikarabe! We need to withdraw now!!”

“Roger that!”

Shikarabe immediately replied with a firm answer without asking any question to Elena. It was because he understood they were not in a situation where she could leisurely answer his question.

Shikarabe then shouted to the other Hunters inside the building.

“We’re leaving soon!! If you don’t get into the APC now, we’ll leave you behind!! So hurry up!”

Shikarabe picked up a guy who was lying on the ground, he was the guy that Shikarabe threw not too long ago. Since no one carried him, he was left there lying on the ground until now. Shikarabe just thought that it would leave a bad aftertaste if he just left that guy there since he was the one who knocked that guy unconscious.

After Shikarabe gave off that sudden announcement, a Hunter said in a panic.

“Wait for a second!! We still have some relics inside…”

Shikarabe just ignored that Hunter and went back to the APC, he then threw the guy that he was carrying inside and quickly got on the driver seat.

The Hunters who stood there carrying relics looked sadly at their relics before leaving it behind and running into the APC. It was because they understood well that Shikarabe was serious when he said he would leave them behind.

The back door of the APC started closing even before all the Hunters in that place were able to get inside, and when Shikarabe immediately started the engine, the remaining Hunters started running toward the APC in a frenzy.

Shikarabe suddenly accelerated the APC. It blazed as fast as it could out of the building site under the barrage of bullets coming from above. The entrance to the building site was half-filled with wreckages of dead monsters. But he just smashed his way through using the momentum of his APC.

Elena, Sara, Akira, and Carol followed behind Shikarabe. Numerous monsters flooded out from the building such that the surrounding area was filled with them, some of them even started chasing Akira. But Akira was way faster than them, and by shooting down the monsters that were leading the pack chasing for Akira, they were turned into obstacles that slowed the monsters behind them even more. Thus it was an easy thing for Akira to get away from those monsters.

After they opened up some distance from that building site, Alpha smiled at Akira and said.

“It should be fine now, you did well back there.”

Akira sighed in relief. It seemed that he was able to escape from the dangerous situation for now as he went back to the driver seat and relaxed for a bit.

“Say, Alpha. Is that building also filled with monsters just like the Seranthal building from yesterday?”

“I can’t exactly grasp the situation inside that building. But looking at what happened just now, I think that’s highly possible.”

“I wonder where all of those monsters came from.”

“I can come up with a lot of theories, but well, I think there’s a warehouse somewhere nearby filled with those monsters and they were suddenly dispatched at the same time, and also factories nearby also suddenly started producing those monsters at a high rate. After all, most of those mechanical monsters were all the same type.”

“Then why did something like that suddenly happen?”

“No idea. As a matter of fact, if you know the reason why, you can sell that information for 10,000,000,000 Aurum. If you’re interested, we can try to investigate later, you know?”

Alpha was smiling confidently at Akira when she made that suggestion. But he instead made a displeased face and replied.

“…No thanks.”

“That’s a wise decision.”

Carol, who saw Akira relaxed back, also lowered her guard. She then returned to the driver’s assistant seat and said to Akira while smiling at him.

“That was pretty dangerous. They’re just simply too many of them.”

“It’s still better than yesterday. This time we could run away using a vehicle after all.”

“Well, you’re right about that. As expected, even I too don’t want to get through the same thing as yesterday again.”

Akira and the rest of the team were driving through the Mihazono ruin, they were in a situation where they had enough leeway to chit chat. None of them were injured during the rescue and they were able to rescue the Hunters inside that building. They just needed to return back to the Hunter Office now. It seemed that they did well in that rescue operation. They just blazed through the road while crushing the leftover wreckages of dead monsters scattered around under their wheels.

In the middle of their way back to the Hunter Office, Akira checked his information terminal that he put in his vehicle. It was showing that he received an emergency SOS request sent through a local connection.

Elena had told him beforehand to just ignore those emergency requests, after all, they had to prioritize finishing the contract that they had taken first and make sure that they would get the reward before thinking about the other requests. That was all there was to it. Even if those Hunters who sent the emergency SOS request were barricading themselves somewhere near, Akira could not afford to stop every single time to save them, he had no responsibility to do something like that nor he had the leeway to do so.

But it was not like they completely ignored those requests, Elena at least forwarded that SOS emergency request to the Hunter Office. If those Hunters were lucky, someone would accept that request. Although it was a completely different problem whether anyone would take that request which had no guarantee of getting paid with the promised reward, even the person who sent that request might as well already be dead by now.

That was why Akira did not even think of checking the details of those emergency SOS requests. It just aroused his interest for a bit, that was all there was to it.

Alpha noticed that, she then said to Akira.

“If it bothers you, I can just erase those notices.”

“You’re right, please erase them.”

After he said that, the notices on his information terminal immediately vanished. Alpha erased them.

Akira then tried to come up with another subject as if he was trying to forget something that was bothering him.

“But well, there are still so many of those requests left, huh?”

“I’m sure it’s because most of the Hunters thought that it would be safer if they barricaded themselves inside a building, I bet that’s why a lot of them decided to do that. I think that’s indeed a good option in case they can’t return back on their own. I bet some of the Hunters who decided to barricade themselves inside the Seranthal building from yesterday are still alive even right now.”

“Well, even if that’s true, it’s impossible to get out from there in that situation, you know.”

“As I said, it’s indeed a good choice only if they have given up returning back on their own.”

“…Ahh, if the situation inside the building gets better later, I guess they still have some hope, huh.”

Akira had no idea in what situation those monsters would leave the Seranthal building. They might have already left the building since Akira left yesterday, but they might be still there even now.

Since Akira had no plans to go there and check it himself, he just decided to forget about it.

Elena and her team were able to return back to the Hunter Office without encountering any trouble. Although they encountered some monsters on their way back, they were only in small packs, so they could handle those monsters just fine. It was either because they killed most of the monsters in that route when they were heading out to save the Hunters, or it was simply because those monsters were in the middle of fighting another group of Hunters, that was why there were only small packs of monsters.

Elena and her team parked their vehicles in front of the Hunter Office's parking lot. Akira, Carol, Elena, and Sara stood in front of the backdoor of Shikarabe's APC. The door itself was still closed.

Akira thought that the door would immediately open, but it did not seem that it would open anytime soon. Right when he thought that it was rather strange, an armed group approached them. The guy who was taking command of that squad compared the data in his information terminal with the data in Elena's information terminal. After that, he asked Elena.

"You guys are the Hunters who took the C32 area rescue request, right? Are the rescued Hunters inside that vehicle?"

"Yep, can I just leave the rest to you then?"

"Of course, just leave the rest to us."

"Shikarabe, open the door."

After she said that, the back door of the APC slowly opened up.

As the rescued Hunters looked around, they realized that they were back in the Hunter Office, all of them looked really relieved. But in contrast to that, some of those Hunters were making a grim face while hanging their heads low. They looked really desperate as if they were driven to the corner.

The squad commander then stood in front of the opened door and said to the Hunters inside the APC.

"We're from Alhain insurance company. We'll escort you to an emergency clinic to check if any of you need any treatment. I hope that all of you will cooperate and follow our orders. If any of you having trouble moving on your own, please let us know."

Those Hunters then slowly boarded off the APC one by one following the instruction from the people from Alhain insurance company. Some of them could walk on their own, some of them could only walk with the help of others, some of them could not walk and had to be carried with a stretcher.

Among all of those walking Hunters, one of them looked extremely pale and worried. He was breathing roughly and his hand that was holding his gun was slightly shaking. He was keeping his distance from the other people around him, especially from the people from Alhain insurance company.

Another Hunter in front of him asked a staff nearby.

“Uhh, excuse me, I want to contact my friend but I can’t seem to get any connection from here, can you help me?”

“It depends on the situation of your friend. If it’s only a problem caused by the connection line, you might be able to call your friend inside the temporary clinic. You can use Alhain insurance company’s communication line there after all.”

That staff shifted his focus from that nervous Hunter to another Hunter who asked him that question. When that nervous Hunter noticed it, he made his resolve and suddenly started running.

But when he started running, another Alhain soldier who was standing guard in his blindside immediately held him down. That soldier locked his movements by pushing him down on the ground. He looked like he was in pain on the ground as his weapons were taken away from him. The other guards came and cuffed both of his hands and legs, thus rendering him harmless.

The other Hunters in that area looked at that guy being secured by Alhain’s soldiers. One of the Alhain soldiers then turned to the other Hunters, smiled, and said.

“Please stop trying anything that might cause misunderstanding. Don’t try to leave without our permission until you finish all the administration work with us. I hope all of you will cooperate.”

Akira was watching when that incident happened, he looked pretty surprised by it. But the other Hunters looked completely normal as if they expected something like that to happen. It clearly showed the difference in their experiences as Hunters.

It did not take long for Shikarabe and Elena to hand over all the Hunters that they rescued to Alhain insurance company.

Elena was negotiating with someone from Alhain insurance company when Shikarabe called Akira to come in from inside the APC.

“Akira, come and help me check if any of them left anything behind.”

“Sure, what should I do if I find something?”

“If it’s a relic or a piece of equipment, just leave it outside the APC. If it’s a body or limbs, gather them all inside a corpse bag and put them outside. You can find the empty corpse bag under the seat.”

Akira frowned. He did not expect that limbs or torso would be included in the list of things that he might find.

“…Okay.”

“Thanks, I’m counting on you.”

Akira used his information-gathering device to help him scan the inside of the APC. He found 2 rifles left under the seat. Fortunately enough, no one forgot to bring their limbs or torsos out with them.

It only took a while for them to finish searching the inside of the APC. That was when the commander of the squad from Alhain insurance company said to Elena.

“Thanks for the hard work. If it’s okay with you, would you take another request from us? Actually, we lost contact with the Hunters who took the rescue request to area C47. Since you’ve finished the rescue request to area C32 from us, we’re willing to give you an extra bonus for the reward if you’re willing to take this request.”

“Just leave it in the request list for me, I’ll think about it.”

“I see. Well, if you end up taking it, we’ll be counting on you.”

After that, the squad commander left with the rest of his squad.

Elena and his team moved their vehicles to another place first as not to block the way to the Hunter Office before they grouped up again to discuss what to do next.

“First thing first, let’s take a 1-hour break to replenish our supplies. So make sure to use this time to properly replenish your ammo and other expendables. And also, can you guys tell me your impression about the last request that we just took? Although it’s kind of weird for me to say it myself since I’m the one who decided to pick that request, that last one was harder than I thought it would be. That’s why I’m thinking of picking an easier one for the next request.”

Akira agreed with Elena’s opinion as he said.

“It’s true that the last request was pretty dangerous, so I think that is a good idea.”

Shikarabe made a stern face and said.

“We did decide to withdraw sooner than we planned. I believe that, including me, we underestimated the difficulty of that request. So I think it’s a good idea to take an easier request, it doesn’t matter even though it means that we would get less reward out of it.”

Sara frowned and seemed slightly worried as she said.

“Judging from the number of mechanical monsters that were flooding out from the inside of that building, it means that we really need to think about the escape route in case if our rescue targets barricaded themselves deep inside a building. Honestly speaking, I don’t want to fight that many monsters in a closed space.”

Carol smiled bitterly.

“And in case if it’s a bigger building, it might be better to just forget the idea of going inside that building right from the start. I don’t want those monsters chasing me inside such a building after all.”

Elena believed that all of the Hunters gathered here were relatively successful Hunters, and some of them hated the idea of taking a request with low reward. But looking at how they reacted to her idea, it seemed there should be no problem prioritizing safety for now.

“Got it then, so for the next request, I’ll decide on an easier one.”

Akira glanced at Carol, she was using a rather expensive augmented suit that regularly used a lot of power. If they kept taking cheap requests, she might end up facing a deficit. So he thought that Carol might not like that idea.

But that did not seem to be the case at all, thus he decided to stop worrying about it.

Carol noticed that Akira was checking on her. It was true that she had no complaint taking easier requests with relatively small rewards and she had no reason to fake that. Carol’s attention was all focused on Akira, so she had no interest at all about the small reward.

Akira was putting the armour plating in one of the supply depots. It was a manual job, a pretty boring and bothersome work. But if he was careless, he would have to pay for it with his life. He knew that very well, thus he spent extra effort focusing on putting on those armour tiles.

Akira lost more armour plating than he expected. When he found a part of his vehicle clearly exposed, his expression turned grim.

“I lost quite a lot of armour plating this time.”

Alpha casually replied.

“It’s no surprise after taking on those attacks. If you don’t want to take them bare, head-on, make sure to properly install all the armour plating.”

“You’re right. I did buy a pretty expensive type of plating this time, so it should at least be pretty durable. I don’t regret it, it’s an important expense.”

Dealing with armour plating was a tricky business. Of course, the more expensive it was, the more durable the plating would be. But if Akira wanted to get even better plating, the cost-value ratio would drop fast. This time, he bought expensive armour plating that Alpha recommended. It was the second most expensive armour plating in that supply depot. The price gap between that armour plating and the most expensive armour plating in that supply depot was huge.

Carol was also there helping Akira putting on the armour plating. She then asked Akira a question.

“Akira, what’s your plan after this?”

“I still haven’t thought about it at the moment. But I’m planning to just take it easy until the break time is over.”

“Is that so? In that case…”

“Ah, now that I think about it, I guess I’ll do some workout.”

Carol actually was about to invite Akira to a meal or something, but she was cutoff midway with that sudden statement from him. She could not help but express her surprise.

“Eh?”

“I’ll be done with the armour plating soon, so how about you, Carol?”

“…I’ll be done soon too.”

Carol still had her surprised face when she said that.

After they finished putting on all the armour plating, Akira really started working out. Carol just stood there watching him with a flabbergasted face. He seemed a little bit in pain as he slowly stretched his body. Carol then asked Akira a question.

“Is it okay if I ask you why would you be working out right now?”

“I heard that increasing the flexibility of my joints and my muscles is good for my health and it can help strengthen my body. Actually, I have a pretty stiff body, you see. And also, this works as my augmented suit training too.”

“…I-I see.”

Carol actually was not asking about the benefit of working out, she was asking why Akira started working out right now. Or at least, according to her experience, there was no guy that would actually start working out during a break time together with her. She then thought that it might be just out of whim and decided not to ask any further.

Moreover, it did seem that Akira decided to do that really out of whim. Not to mention, talented individuals usually had a different way of thinking compared to common people and Akira might be one of those.

Well, it was not like it caused her any trouble and she felt that she would not be able to get along with Akira if she let things like that bother her. Thus, Carol decided to just ignore it.

There were a lot of occasions where Akira had to shoot his rifle from a weird position in order to be able to get out of dangerous situations. He often had to injure his own body to continue fighting, sometimes he had to twist his body past the rotation limit of his joints, sometimes he had to keep on shooting while tearing his own muscle with each shot, sometimes he had to hold back the strong kickback that caused micro-cracks in his bones. He would use medicines to keep his body functioning in those situations while he kept on fighting.

In order to minimize those types of injuries, Akira had to increase his body’s strength and flexibility. Although he did that out of whim, it was indeed something that would be useful for him in the future.

If Carol asked more detail about that, she might be able to understand why Akira did that. But since she started to identify him as a boy with a weird personality, she lost her chance to know more about him.

If that quirkiness was able to hide Alpha's existence, if that would cause people to ignore his weird actions, then it might be a good thing both for Akira and Alpha.

Carol decided to just forget about it as she said to Akira who was stretching his body.

"My body is actually pretty flexible, you know. Want to see?"

Akira stopped stretching and turned to her. After Carol confirmed that Akira was looking at her, she smiled confidently as she raised her right leg while still standing. She kept raising her right leg until both of her legs almost formed a straight line while keeping her balance standing on one leg.

Carol knew very well how to show off her beautiful body to seduce someone. And the augmented suit that she was using had a design that invited gazes from the member of the opposite sex. Carol, who was standing on one leg with her right arm intertwined with her right leg, looked so beautiful and bewitching.

Akira, who was watching Carol, looked a bit surprised and praised.

"Oooh!! That's amazing!!"

Akira was simply amazed by Carol's ability to stay in that position, he knew that he could not do something like that. Unfortunately enough, unlike what Carol wanted, he was not getting amazed by the beauty of her body. But even so, Akira was still amazed by her body, so she decided to just accept that compliment.

Carol returned back on her right leg and said.

"Thank you, it's pretty amazing, isn't it?"

"How exactly did you get your body that flexible?"

“Well, I think you have no other choice but to regularly stretch your body every day. Although, in my case, it might be also because of my nanomachine enhanced body.”

“Is that so? But now that I think about it, if someone else tries to put on your augmented suit with your data still left in it, I’m sure it would cause a big disaster.”

Akira remembered about his conversation with Shikarabe the other day and frowned. Carol was interested in that remark, so she inquired about that subject further.

“Oh, what do you mean by that?”

“Well, Shikarabe told me once that if I put on an augmented suit that still contains another person’s data, it might cause my body to twist in a strange way that it would tear my muscle.”

Akira then told Carol what Shikarabe told him in the past. Carol seemed to be listening closely to his story and agreed with what Shikarabe had told him. She then added to that information.

“That’s not the worst-case scenario yet. There are a lot of cyborgs who also use augmented suits, right? Those cyborgs have joints that are way more flexible than normal humans. So if the past user of a certain augmented suit is one of those cyborgs and a normal person uses that augmented suit and tries to move, his limbs might make 180 degrees turn and it would break his body. In the worst-case scenario, it might completely tear his body to pieces.”

Akira imagined something like that happening to him. The image of his body turned 180 degrees and just laid there in the middle of the old-world ruin unable to move was pretty scary.

“T-that would be horrible.”

Akira could not help but voice out his impression, Carol smiled lightly at that him and said.

“Well, basically, if you don’t want something like that to happen, you better only get all of your equipment, not only your augmented suit, from shops that you really trust. And be extra careful so you don’t get any weird equipment from the black market.”

Akira then thought.

[I buy my equipment from Shizuka-san’s shop, so it should be alright. Although I buy my medicines from Katsuragi, I’m sure he won’t sell me any dangerous drug since he knows what I’ll do to him if he does that. It should be alright… Right?]

“Well, I think there’s no need for me to worry about it.”

“Is that so? If you’re worried about something, I can introduce you to shops that I recommend, but it seems that I don’t need to do that, huh…”

“Yeah. It’s alright.”

Akira returned back to stretching his body. He was stretching his body following Alpha who was in front of him. Alpha sat down on the ground and spread her legs, she was leaning forward to the point that her breast touched the ground while looking at him. Akira seemed to be in pain as he was trying his best to do that too, but his body was not flexible enough and he was barely able to do it properly.

Alpha then smiled at Akira.

“Want me to help you?”

“No thanks.”

Akira sounded displeased when he said that. He knew that he would be able to stretch his body even more if Alpha controlled his augmented suit. But he got a bit scared after listening to Carol’s explanation just now.

“Don’t worry, the augmented suit that you’re using right now is designed so that it can’t make 180 degrees twist.”

“Do you really think it would make me feel safe by telling me that? I’ll do the stretching myself.”

Akira did trust Alpha, but this and that were two different things. So he kept stretching with his own ability which also served as a training for operating his augmented suit on his own.

He properly differentiated and felt the movement of his limbs under the augmented suit and the movements of his augmented suit as he tried to match both of those movements. In order to minimize the damage to his limbs while increasing the efficiency of his powerful augmented suit, he tried his best to match the movements of his body with his augmented suit to get the best performance. Even stretching his body like that was already a difficult thing for Akira. There was nothing that he could do to fix it except training.

Akira kept on working out until Elena and Sara came as their break time was about to end.

After Elena and Sara arrived, they were just having a chat with each other while waiting for Shikarabe. As for Akira, he was asking questions to Elena about the detail of the request that they took last time, about why the people from Alhain insurance company were waiting for them when they returned, the guy who was trying to run away back then, and the other things that piqued his interest.

Elena then offered an explanation to Akira based on her guess. The Cocolens guy who they had to save back there was someone who was contracted with Alhain insurance company. According to that contract, if they lost contact with him after a certain period of time, or if he sent a rescue request, the company would dispatch a squad to escort him to safety.

After they arrived at the location based on the information obtained from Alhain’s investigation, Elena first tried to look for Cocolens’ location based on his information terminal. Fortunately enough, she was able to make a call with that guy. But after she asked him some questions to check the situation over there, she found something weird.

The information that Elena obtained beforehand said that there should be only 8 people, but there were more than a dozen survivors and more than 20 dead Hunters. It was not strange since he might group up with the other Hunters before they barricaded themselves inside that building, but the problem was that he did not say anything about that during his call with her.

And then after Elena asked that person some more questions, she started to get suspicious if he was not the real Cocolens and started to make guesses as to why he would lie there.

If she was being optimistic, that guy might be under immense stress, and with the real Cocolens not around, he thought that the rescue team would not come unless he assumed that name. Thus, he ended up doing that in panic. If that was all there was to it, then it was not a big problem at all. Elena could just simply rescue them and normally escort them back to the Hunter Office.

But if she was being pessimistic, it might have been a perilous situation for Elena and her team. Cocolens and his team might have been killed, not by the monsters, but by the other Hunters who then took their equipment. Which in that case, it would mean the Hunters who barricaded themselves inside that building were the ones who killed Cocolens' team and they were trying to call for help using Cocolens' name. They might have been planning to attack Elena and her team and take their vehicles to escape from that building. Although it was only a guess, it would be really bad if that was the case.

Although she had to be extremely careful there, she did not have the leeway to wait for confirmation first. There were too many of them to transport in one go, but they might riot if she told them that only half of them would be escorted back to the Hunter Office first. Thus she pushed dealing with the aftermath including the confirmation to Alhain insurance company.

"Normally, we would ask them to show their Hunter IDs, but I decided not to do that in order not to provoke them too much. Our request is basically saving Hunters who can't return back on their own. So we have no obligation to do anything more than that, that was why I left the aftermath to Alhain insurance company and they also gave us their approval."

Akira nodded and said.

“So it’s not that simple, huh. It’s not like we can just go out there and save those Hunters.”

“Yep, that’s correct. There’s no guarantee that the Hunters we’re going to rescue are good Hunters. Moreover, most people tend to make bad decisions when they’re pushed to the corner like offering a big reward that they can’t pay when they send out an emergency SOS request. And when they have to pay more than what they have in hand, they’ll end up drowning in debt. People like that sometimes immediately try to run away the moment they are escorted to a safe place, and when that happens, in the worst-case scenario a shootout will occur between them and the people who rescued them. That’s why you too need to be careful out there okay, Akira?”

“I understand, I’ll be careful.”

Akira nodded firmly and deeply. Elena was happy to see that since it seemed that, as a senior Hunter, she was able to teach something useful to Akira, who was a junior Hunter.

Rebuild World – Chapter 118, Bad Girl

Carol was keeping her eyes on Akira as he was talking with Elena and Sara.

Carol was, objectively and subjectively speaking, a beautiful girl. And even when they were compared to her, both Sara and Elena were pretty beautiful too. So, looking from the outlook alone, Sara and Elena were not that much different from Carol.

But even so, Akira reacted very differently when he was with Elena or Sara compared to when he was with her. Carol thought that Akira had no interest in girls at all, but now she had to change her opinion after seeing that.

[I wonder where this difference comes from? Is it just because he has known both of them for longer? Is it just that he's bad at dealing with people that he doesn't know very well…? No, I don't think that's the case.]

Carol immediately rejected the guess that came up in her mind. Thanks to her long experience dealing with a lot of people, she at least knew that she was heading in the right direction and that might give her a hint on how to seduce Akira.

If it was only because Akira had never experienced the allure of the opposite sex, then she might need to find another way to approach him. As Carol thought so, she decided to keep that in mind, at least for now.

[Well, there's no need to rush myself. It has only been 2 days since we met. I'll just slowly and carefully approach him to make sure that he won't cut his relation with me.]

Shikarabe arrived right on time. The other Hunters there looked a bit surprised when they saw him step out from his APC with an irritated look.

Shikarabe then said.

"Sorry, am I late?"

Elena replied.

"Don't worry, you're not late, you came just on time. So then, you look pretty annoyed though, what happened?"

"Nah, it's nothing."

"If it's really nothing, as the team leader, I at least want to know the reason, alright?"

Shikarabe frowned and looked at Elena. Elena looked back at Shikarabe without changing her expression. After a few seconds of silence, Shikarabe sighed and said.

"…Since I'm here in Mihazono ruin right now, the people in Drankam are telling me to at least join the Drankam team even if it's on name only, and it was not easy refusing them. That's all."

It seemed that Shikarabe really did not want to work under Katsuya even if it was only on paper to the point that he even hated the idea of explaining it to other people.

Elena and Sara smiled bitterly. Both of them understood Shikarabe's hatred toward Katsuya and they knew well that he really hated Katsuya's gut. As in matter of fact, there might be a part of them that sympathized with Shikarabe.

Carol smiled smugly, she knew very well that Shikarabe was a man who would not allow his personal feelings to get in the way of his job. Getting himself in a Drankam team in name only, would not cause him any loss, thus, it was only to be expected if Shikarabe accepted that demand. So, the fact that he did not do that showed that he was prioritizing his personal feeling, which was indeed a very rare thing for him. Carol thought that it was indeed strange and made her wonder who was this Katsuya who caused Shikarabe to even go that far.

Akira himself did not show any particular reaction. After all, for him, the in-fighting in the Drankam was none of his business as long as it did not cause any trouble for him or the other people that he cared for.

After they finished a short briefing of their next request, they then headed back into Mihazono ruin.

They did not find any particular trouble from there. Since they decided to lower the difficulty of the rescue requests that they accepted, they did not have to fight a swarm of monsters in narrow places nor they got to encounter any relatively powerful monsters. They just went back and forth from the Hunter Office branch to the Mihazono ruin to escort the Hunters that they rescued without any trouble.

Since they took easier requests, the reward that they received from each request was lowered too. But it was compensated by the number of requests that they took. So, looking at the total rewards that they got that day, considering the difficulty of the request, it could be said that they were making a killing here. There might be some Hunters who had to suffer because they started taking easier requests instead, but that was not their fault since being able to effectively convert risks into profit was one of the essential skills for Hunters.

As they kept the cycle of taking rescue requests and small breaks, the sun eventually set, and Mihazono ruin was once again veiled in by the darkness of night.

Elena and her team returned and parked their vehicles somewhere near the Hunter Office branch, they then stepped off from the vehicles and discussed what to do next.

Everyone there looked tired. Especially Elena, Sara, and Shikarabe who had been rescuing Hunters since the previous day, they needed to take a proper rest soon.

Elena looked obviously tired as she said.

“So then, let’s break up here and meet up again tomorrow to work together with the same members again. Make sure to let others know if anything comes up.”

Shikarabe then said.

“I have some stuff that I need to do for Drankam, so I won’t be returning back to the city, instead, I’ll stay here in Mihazono ruin tonight. I’ll still stay inside the connection range, so there shouldn’t be any problem contacting me. Akira, you should really change your connection service from that cheap line soon.”

Akira thought of something and said.

“Wait, you’ll stay here? Are you still planning to go to the ruin again?”

“Even for me, I have no plans to go to the ruin again for the rest of the day. I’ll be staying in a Drankam facility nearby. Drankam actually built a temporary base nearby so their Hunters don’t have to go back and forth from the city. After all, it’ll take quite a lot of time to go on a round trip from the city. Well, it’s true that I can just sleep inside the APC, but since there’s a bed in that facility, it would be a waste not to use it.”

Sara then said.

“We’ll also stay somewhere nearby, to be more precise, in one of those trailer houses. Which means… The ones heading back to the city are only Akira and Carol, huh…”

Elena, Sara, and Shikarabe turned to Akira and Carol.

Elena looked at Akira and thought.

[If he was alone, I wouldn’t mind inviting Akira too, and I’m sure that Sara isn’t against it either, but…]

Sara looked at Carol and thought.

[…Of course, there’s no way I can invite Carol too since I don’t know her that well, and I’m sure that Elena would not want that too.]

Elena and Sara glanced at each other, both of them knew each other and had been together for a long time. It did not take much for them to understand what the other person was thinking.

Akira suddenly turned to Carol and asked her a question.

“I’m heading back to the city though, how about you, Carol?”

“Let’s see…”

Carol glanced at Shikarabe, Shikarabe obviously looked alerted and slightly frowned. She then smiled and said.

“I’ll head back to the city too. Akira, can you give me a ride?”

“…? Sure.”

Akira was a bit bothered by Shikarabe’s reaction. Although he was sure that there must be a reason for that, he simply decided to just forget about it. He then lightly bowed to Elena and Sara.

“Well then, I’ll be heading back now. I’ll be in your care again tomorrow.”

Elena lightly smiled.

“Be careful on your way back home, and make sure to get a good rest when you get home.”

Sara also smiled lightly and said.

“Don’t drop your guard yet until you reach the city, okay?”

Akira and Carol returned back to Akira’s vehicle. They then waved at the other Hunters who would stay behind and left that place.

After Akira and Carol left, Elena turned to Shikarabe and asked.

“Shikarabe, do you have some free time after this?”

Shikarabe guessed the meaning behind that question as he frowned and said.

“It depends. I’m really tired so I want to get a good rest as soon as possible.”

Shikarabe’s face turned stern, his guess was correct. Elena and Sara who saw that were a bit surprised.

Shikarabe thought to himself without saying anything, some of what he was thinking got leaked on his face. He then carefully chose his words as he said.

“Well, it’s true that it might cause trouble if I try to evade your question about her without giving any good excuse or explanation, but I feel like it’ll also cause trouble if I explain everything about her. So I’ll only answer questions that won’t cause any trouble among us while we’re still taking the SOS rescue requests together. To put it simply, she’s not a good girl, but it’s highly unlikely that her bad personality and habit would cause any bad effects on the current SOS rescue requests that we’re taking. Her ability as a Hunter is also not something to scoff at, so I don’t think she would slow us down either.”

After hearing that answer, Elena and Sara made a troubled face. Elena then asked Shikarabe a question.

“Uhhh, she sounds like nothing but trouble though?”

“I leave it to you how you want to interpret it. And even if it’s true that she’s a problematic person, that doesn’t mean that her problem might cause us any trouble in this short time span when we’re working together. It’s true that I won’t invite her to my own team, but if someone else is bringing her along, I won’t kick her out since she’s pretty strong herself. That’s all that I can say as a team member. If you want to know more about her, I’ll tell you but only after we finish this request. See you tomorrow then.”

Shikarabe then left Elena and Sara.

Elena and Sara looked at each other. It was obvious looking from their face that they had no idea how to treat Carol now. At first, they thought that Carol was someone who would not cause any trouble, but that did not sound to be the case now.

Akira gave Carol a ride all the way to where they met up before going to the Mihazono ruin. Carol stepped off the vehicle and stretched her body while facing away from Akira. She then spun around and smiled at him.

“So then, see you again tomorrow… If you still have some time, you can visit my home, you know? I don’t mind even if you want to sleepover too. I can also serve you some simple food while you’re at it. That way, we won’t have to meet up first before going to the wasteland tomorrow.”

They were planning to go to Mihazono ruin again tomorrow and they planned to meet up in the same place as before.

Akira shook his head.

“No thanks, I’ll go back home. I can’t really relax unless I’m in my own home, you see.”

“I see, that’s just too bad… Seriously though, you refused even when a beauty like me is inviting you, you’re no fun at all.”

Carol smiled confidently at Akira, which Akira returned back with the same smile, filled with confidence.

“Sorry, I hope you get a good rest today.”

Carol saw Akira off and mumbled.

“No reaction at all even now, huh. Well, let’s be patient here.”

Carol thought it had been quite a while since the last time she felt pleasure in trying to seduce someone as she smiled amusedly.

Akira went straight for the bath when he got back home. He enjoyed the warm water as he dipped his body up to his neck inside the bath while letting the warm water heal his tired body. He had already finished cleaning up and taking care of his equipment before taking a bath. So he could just dive into his bed and sleep after the bath. Thus, fully recovering both his body and mind to face tomorrow.

Akira was more or less in a daze, or it could even be said that he was in a trance. Although there was a beautiful girl with a body that was adjusted to his preference taking a bath together with him without even a slip of cloth on her body, he barely paid any attention to her. This in itself could be said to be a not healthy situation.

Alpha, who dipped her body up until around the cleavage of her chest, suddenly stood up without showing any embarrassment and sat on the edge of the bathtub. Her beautiful figure that was blurred by the shaking of the water surface was in full view right now. The only thing that hid her body above her knees was the steam from the warm water and the water droplets sliding down her skin.

Since Alpha suddenly moved, Akira reacted to that and turned to her direction. He locked his gaze on Alpha’s extremely enticing body for a few seconds before returning his gaze forward as if he just lost his interest.

Alpha, who saw that, smiled at Akira and said.

“That reaction even when you’re in front of this beautiful body. It seems that it’ll take some time until the priority between girls and food in your brain switch places, huh.”

Akira was still half-dazed as he jabbed back.

“…Save that for later, will you?”

Akira was in the middle of enjoying his bath, he let the warm water take over his body while relaxing back. Thus, he had no time to react to Alpha’s teasing, he seemed pretty irritated to even only tell her to stop.

As Alpha thought that Akira might have gotten too used to naked girl’s body, she thought to herself that it was a necessary sacrifice. It might have rendered her beauty ineffective, but it was way better than having Akira seduced by someone else. So in order to compensate for that, she decided to improve her support for him.

“Got it. I’ll save it for later. So, putting that aside, I want to ask something though, how long are you planning to work together with Elena and Sara?”

“Even if you ask me so… I haven’t really thought about it. I guess until I find a good point to stop, huh? I’m sure it’s not like Elena-san and Sara-san are going to keep taking the SOS emergency request in the Mihazono ruin forever either.”

“So in short, you’re still planning to work with them at the moment, right?”

Alpha’s expression was saying that she did not hate that idea nor she was happy with it. Akira found that a bit weird as he asked her a question.

“Uhh… Is there any problem?”

“It’s not like I have any problem with it, but honestly speaking, in order to get you to accomplish the request from me, I rather choose for you to polish your skill in exploring ruins rather than saving people. If I can add more, you’ll have to be alone when you go to the ruin that I want you to explore.

Because of that, I want you to get more skilled in working alone rather than in a team.”

“Ohh, I see.”

Akira understood Alpha’s reasoning as he deeply nodded. In the end, Alpha only gave her support to him in order for him to accomplish her request. As a matter of fact, it was an advance payment from that exact request. Akira understood that working together with Elena and Sara was purely out of his selfishness. Thus he understood that working together with Elena and Sara did not polish the needed skill for him to complete Alpha’s request, so there was no surprise that Alpha would find that displeasing.

Akira then replied as if he was trying to make excuses.

“…W-well, I get properly paid and then I can use that money to buy equipment I need to explore the ruins. If you think of it as a period for me to gather money, it’s not that bad, yes?”

Alpha smiled at Akira, but that smile was giving a vibe as if she was scolding him.

“I’ll leave it as that then. Your main job as a Hunter is exploring ruins, just don’t forget about that.”

“I know.”

Akira answered back firmly, so Alpha smiled back satisfied. He then stroked down his chest in relief as he dipped himself deeper into the warm bath.

The next day. Akira picked up Carol and was heading to the Mihazono ruin as planned.

The sun was already up when they reached the Mihazono ruin, it was already well past morning. Akira got a good rest yesterday, thus he was back in his perfect condition.

Carol was sleeping in the driver assistant's seat. Before she went to sleep, she smiled and told Akira that he was free to do anything to her while she was sleeping, but he just ignored her.

Akira thought that Carol looked so defenseless when she was sleeping, which was different compared to when she was awake.

He looked at Carol as if he was interested in her. Seeing that, Alpha smiled at him and said as if she was scolding him.

"Just because she's asleep and she agreed to it, it doesn't mean that you should do something to her, you know? If you're okay with only an image, I don't mind helping you. So keep your hands off from her, okay?"

Akira frowned.

"Like hell, I would do anything to her. I just thought that she looks so different compared to when she's awake."

"Hmm, you're right about that. But it's the same for you too, or at least, that's the case lately."

"Is that so? Well, it's not like I can see my own sleeping face though… And what about that 'lately'?"

"When the first time I met you, it seemed like you always kept one eye open to watch for your surroundings, and you never fell too deep to your sleep. But lately, you've been defencelessly sleeping so deeply as long as I don't wake you up. So you too look very different when you sleep compared to when you're awake lately."

"…I see."

Akira sounded as if he was thinking deeply when he said that. Back when he had to sleep in the back alley of the slum city, he always hoped that he would be able to wake up the next morning when he closed his eyes. After all, it was not a strange thing if someone killed him and took all of his belongings in the middle of his sleep.

But right now, he could sleep on a comfy bed inside a house with an outer wall, moreover, Alpha would definitely wake him up if something came up. That was why he could sleep peacefully lately.

[…Now that I think about it, I'm living a pretty luxurious life now.]

Akira smiled bitterly as he once again realized how much his lifestyle had changed.

When Mihazono ruin finally came to his view, Akira shook Carol to wake her up.

"Carol, it's time to wake up."

Carol immediately woke up, she looked at Akira and mumbled.

"…We've arrived?"

"Yeah, the meeting point is just ahead."

"Hmmmh, I got good sleep, thanks."

Carol lightly stretched out her body to wake herself up as she smiled and said.

"So then, did you do something to me?"

"Nope."

"Oh my, that's just too bad. There's nothing to worry about, even if you do something, I'll at least still pretend to be asleep."

"Wait, you were pretending?"

"I was asleep. What I'm saying is that of course, I would wake up if you do something to me, but I'll still pretend to be asleep. After all, I sometimes get that kind of request."

"…I see."

Akira replied so indifferently as if he was not interested at all. Carol who saw that then thought.

[…He won't do anything even when I sleep and show him my defenseless side, huh. He's a pretty hard nut to crack.]

Carol thought that Akira was indeed a difficult person to seduce since he would not do anything to her even when she slept next to him and had already properly given him her permission to mess with her when she was asleep. That was rather unthinkable according to her experience.

[It seems that it's faster if I win his trust through doing good work as a Hunter, huh. I guess I'll put extra effort than usual this time.]

Carol thought that it seemed to be highly unlikely for her to be able to seduce Akira with light teasing. It might be faster to try seducing him again once she won his trust. As she thought so, she made the required adjustment in her plan.

Akira and Carol finally arrived at the meeting point. They arrived there way sooner than the meeting time, but Elena and the other 3 Hunters were already waiting. The extra Hunter was a young Hunter around the same age as Akira, he was standing next to Shikarabe.

Akira and Carol stepped off from Akira's vehicle and met up with Elena and the rest. Elena opened the conversation first.

"It seems that everyone is here. So yeah, let's work together again today… But before that, Shikarabe has something to say."

Shikarabe tried to hide his annoyance as he said.

"Because of my situation, I had to bring one more person. He's a Hunter from Drankam and his Hunter Rank is… Hey, what is your Hunter Rank, again?"

"It's 30. My name is Togami, I'll be in your care today."

Togami lightly introduced himself. The young Hunter boy that Shikarabe brought with him was the one that Akira was together with when they were hunting for the bounty monster.

Shikarabe then said in a more perky voice as if he was trying to hide his bad mood.

“Akira. If you have anything to complain about bringing this guy along, there’s no need to hold back. You can say anything you want, I’ll take it for consideration, you know?”

Shikarabe looked at Akira as if he was trying to send some kind of message to him through telepathy. Akira was a bit confused by that, he instead turned to Elena and asked.

“Elena-san and Sara-san, are you okay with him joining the team?”

Sara answered Akira’s question.

“I’m actually leaving that kind of thing to Elena and Elena decided that it’s not a problem as long as the other Hunters have no problem with it too. That’s why, in the end, it depends on you.”

Elena then added to Sara’s explanation.

“If you don’t like having him in the team, feel free to tell us. I have no plans to decide based on majority, so no pressure at all.”

Even if Shikarabe recommended Togami, Sara and Elena had no plans to let Togami in the team if Akira had something to complain about him. After all, they confirmed from yesterday that they had no problem accomplishing the requests only with 5 of them.

But on the other hand, they also had no plans to reject Togami if Akira was not against it. After all, it was the person that Shikarabe himself brought and Akira also did bring Carol to the team yesterday. So Elena could not reject Togami using that kind of excuse.

If it was someone that Shikarabe brought, even though he did not want to do that, that person would at least be skilled enough as not to slow down the team. Not to mention, they had a hard battle yesterday, thus it was a good thing to get more help. Thus, after a lot of thinking, Elena decided to accept Togami to the team.

Akira understood that if he rejected the idea of having Togami in the team, Togami might actually get kicked out of the team. Thus he thought carefully without saying anything.

“I don’t mind having him on the team. After all, I also brought Carol to the team yesterday.”

Carol then asked.

“Is there any need to readjust the reward distribution then?”

Elena answered that question.

“Nope. Just like how you’re paid from Akira’s share of reward, Togami will be paid from Shikarabe’s share of reward. He’ll also prioritize Shikarabe’s command just like you to Akira.”

“In that case then, I have no complaint either. After all, since Akira will take responsibility if I mess up, Shikarabe too will take responsibility if he messes up, right?”

Carol glanced at Shikarabe and smiled at him. Shikarabe frowned, he looked obviously displeased.

“…Well, I guess that’s how it goes, huh?”

Shikarabe looked at Akira as if he was expecting something, but he eventually gave up and sighed.

Akira was a bit bothered by how Shikarabe was acting there, so he decided to ask Alpha.

“Alpha, did I say anything strange here?”

“Nope, I think he was hoping that you would be against having Togami in the team.”

“But he was the one who brought Togami here, right?”

“It’s common when a Hunter has a different opinion than the people in the organization that Hunter is in. Shikarabe actually doesn’t want to bring Togami along, but he could not refuse the order from the gang that he’s in. That’s why he was hoping he could refuse that order with an excuse that most of the other Hunters in his team are against it.”

“That does sound plausible, I guess Shikarabe is having it hard, huh.”

Akira said it so nonchalantly as if he had nothing to do with it at all. Well, strictly speaking, it was indeed none of his business after all. But getting around troublesome things like that while getting the benefits from being in a gang would definitely help as a Hunter as well as increasing the survivability chance out in the wasteland. It was indeed one of the many important skills for Hunters to reach success.

Akira understood that very well, but he had the habit of looking down at such a thing. That was why he thought that Shikarabe’s problem had nothing to do with him. That was as far as Akira’s skill to get along with other people could go.

Elena also noticed Shikarabe’s reaction there, but she decided to just ignore that as she continued talking about today’s job.

“That’s decided then. Let’s go with these 6 people today.”

She had no plans to get involved in the in-fighting in the Drankam and it was not like Shikarabe asked her to reject Togami. Since Shikarabe would be responsible for him and as long as it would not affect the reward distribution, it was a good thing to have another skilled Hunter in the team. Thus, as the team leader, she had no reason to reject Togami. Elena tried not to include her personal feelings when she decided that.

They then accepted an SOS emergency request and went to the Mihazono ruin again, just like the day before.

Elena and her team went to the city district of the Mihazono ruin again. Akira was driving his vehicle while looking at his surroundings, the area was cleaner than yesterday. Most of the wreckages from yesterday had been cleaned up, or at least, moved to the side of the road.

Akira found that a bit strange as he mumbled.

“The road is already cleaned, but who exactly did that?”

Carol answered his question.

“It might be the squad sent by the Hunter Office to secure the city district of the Mihazono ruin. I bet they cleaned the road for carrying supplies to the frontline.”

“Ahh, now that you mention it, they’re doing something like that, huh. If they finally completely secure the city district, I wonder if the SOS emergency request would stop coming.”

“It depends on how far they secure the city district. Although it’s only my guess, I think that squad would withdraw after they clean up some monsters in the inner area of the city district. I believe they'll just clean up the monsters in the inner area that disrupt the Hunter Office from maintaining its branch and then they'll just check to make sure that no monsters are wandering into the wasteland before withdrawing, I'm pretty sure they won't do anything more than that."

"Is it okay if I ask you why do you think so?"

"Let's see. It's just simply because Mihazono ruin is too big of a ruin for the Corporate Government to completely secure and control, not to mention the area around it. After all, it's not an easy thing to keep their guard up all the time against the monsters that keep coming from unknown locations inside the ruin. But well, I'm sure it's possible for the Corporate Government to do that if they get serious, but I don't think the profit that they can get from doing so is worth the expense. Basically, they would have done that if it might bring them a lot of profit. As a matter of fact, they had done that in the past, the Corporate Government created Kugamayama city in order to secure Kuzusuhara ruin."

Carol continued.

"And even if some monsters from the Mihazono ruin wander into the wasteland, they're highly unlikely to cause any fatal troubles to the nearby cities, so I'm sure they just ignore it too. And even if they do, the cities would also dispatch their defense squad here. Whichever the case, I'm sure that the current squad will pull back after confirming the situation around the ruin."

As far as Akira could remember, the monsters had attacked Kugamayama city 3 times, he had no idea if those attacks happened because someone made a miscalculation or something. Although the inner wall was not damaged at all, those attacks did some damage to the lower district, especially to the slum city, but that might as well because it was designed to be so.

Akira listened closely to Carol's explanation.

Carol's explanation was actually the result of her analyzing the huge amount of information that she had gathered. Akira did not have that information, he did not even have the ability to obtain them, while Carol had both.

Akira who noticed that felt a bit of admiration toward Carol, and Carol noticed that thanks to her sharp senses toward such things.

As Akira showed amazement and interest in a piece of information that any veteran Hunters would know. It showed just how he was lacking in the basic knowledge of being a Hunter, and judging from his impressive fighting ability, that was a really strange thing. It was one of the downsides from quickly attaining power due to relying on Alpha's support.

Carol then thought.

[Akira is, strangely enough, clueless about the basic common knowledge for Hunters given that he's so powerful. I'm honestly curious why that is, but let's put that aside for later, as for now…]

Carol pretended to smile innocently at Akira.

"Akira, you're that kind of Hunter who doesn't do much research about being a Hunter, right? Like the popular ruins at the moment, or what kind of relics that you can sell for more money at the moment, or what kinds of equipment are famous right now, or what the other Hunters are doing, right?"

"…Well, that's true."

If he had to make an excuse, Akira could say that it had not even been that long since he learned how to write his own name. So forget basic common knowledge for Hunters, he was not in a situation where he could learn basic common knowledge for the people who live in the eastern district. Honestly speaking, Akira was interested in that kind of thing too, but since he spent most of his days training and studying, he had no time to gather such information.

“In that case then, I can help you learn about them. After all, it’s better if you know about those kinds of things to some degree.”

But Akira replied with a rather twisted answer.

“I’m already paying you 10,000,000 Aurum now. I have no plans to pay you more, you know.”

Carol smiled bitterly and said.

“I won’t ask you any money for sharing such kind of basic knowledge with you. I’m just thinking of casually telling you like for a subject in a casual talk.”

“…In that case then, it’ll be great if you can tell me about some.”

Although Akira hesitated for a bit, he decided to take that offer since he was indeed interested in it too.

“Got it. First of all, well, let’s see, since we’re in Mihazono ruin, let’s start with the basic knowledge about Mihazono ruin.”

Carol then started explaining about Mihazono ruin in a good mood.

Akira listened closely to Carol’s explanation. Carol thought that it was a good chance for her to gather approval points from Akira as she continued her explanation with a smile on her face.

Carol felt conflicted since Akira seemed to react to this far better compared to when she tried to seduce him with her beautiful body that she took pride in. But she decided to put that aside for now and continue to bring in subjects that might grab Akira’s interest.

Togami was sitting on the long bench inside Shikarabe’s APC. Inside that APC with a faint smell of blood and corpse, he was seriously working on his information terminal.

Togami was carrying powerful equipment. Although all of them were borrowed from Drankam, they could easily cost more than 100,000,000

Aurum if he had to buy them himself. Even among the equipment lent to the young Hunters of the Drankam, his rifle, augmented suit, information-gathering device, and even the ammo and the medicines that he was carrying were all high quality. Even Katsuya, who had the support of one of the high officers in Drankam, Mizuha, did not get that level of equipment.

Togami was recognized as one of the Hunters that successfully hunted a bounty monster with a small team headed by Shikarabe. Although some of the high officers inside Drankam knew the truth behind it, as long as Togami was recognized as such outside, they had to give proper rewards to him. As such, Togami was allowed to borrow powerful equipment.

If it was the past Togami, he would have been delighted knowing that Drankam finally recognized his skill, or he might even lash back complaining that it took too long for Drankam to finally notice his skill.

The past Togami believed that the people around him were underestimating him. The basis of that evaluation was the handful of Hunters among the young Hunters in the gang who were considered to be strong. As a matter of fact, he still thought so even now, that was why he was the rising star of the anti-Katsuya faction. That belief caused him to tend to overestimate himself, both for the better and for the worse.

But that confidence was crushed during the bounty monster hunt. So much to the point that he was suspicious if the high officers in Drankam allowed him to borrow powerful equipment just to spite him.

Since Togami finished that bounty monster hunt, he had been thinking if his pride up until now were nothing but empty. He had been thinking about it without being able to share it with anyone as he thought that all of his amazing achievements up until now as well as his pathetic performance during the battle against the Tank Tarantula were not because of his own skill.

After thinking about it for so long, he finally decided to wait for a chance to confirm his real skill. So, his next question was what kind of chance he could use to do so.

Even if he tried to work together with another young Hunter outside Drankam, he could not exactly use that to confirm his skill. It was because he could not take off his mind from Shikarabe's words when Shikarabe told him that he was just a fool who misunderstood his real skill just because he had a high Hunter Rank.

After some time, Togami regained his composure and realized that Shikarabe's words were actually referring to the people who got ahead of themselves, and not particularly referring to him. But even after he realized that, that was not enough to get his mind off it. It showed that he actually agreed with what Shikarabe said, albeit only to some degree.

After spending a lot of time thinking about it, Togami eventually came to a conclusion. If he could once again get in the same team with Shikarabe and perform as well as him, and produced results as good as him, it might help Togami reconfirm his own skill one more time.

Togami was originally scheduled to join the squad dispatched by Drankam to Mihazono ruin. But due to his request, he was suddenly transferred to Shikarabe's team. After all, he was recognized in public as one of the 4 Hunters who defeated the Tank Tarantula, thus Drankam at least allowed him to do that much.

So, in order to once again reconfirm his own real skill, Togami made his resolve and joined Elena's team. Togami then mumbled as if he was saying to himself.

"I'll once again reconfirm my skill in this request, I don't care if it turns out that I'm just a weakling who got ahead of myself. I just have to train even more. After all, I don't want to stay as a weakling forever."

Togami renewed his resolve there.

Togami then thought about the members of the team. It was Shikarabe, himself, Akira, Elena, Sara, and Carol, six people in total. After he thought about each person in the team, he then frowned.

[It’s a good thing that I got to meet Akira again, this is a good chance to look at his skill… But that Hunter with an augmented suit that basically invites men… Akira brought her to the team, right? What exactly is going on?]

Togami was surprised when he saw Akira was there too, but he was more surprised when he saw Carol next to Akira. Togami was moderately used to girls for someone of his age, but even for him, Carol’s augmented suit had a design that highlighted the beautiful figure wrapped under it. It was a rather provocative design for men around Togami’s age.

[Even that Katsuya, who everyone calls the leader of the harem squad won’t make the girls wear that kind of attire, right…? Does Akira have that kind of fetish or something?]

People used to say that great people had a particular fondness for pleasure, whether it was Katsuya or Akira, it was still unclear whether that was the case for great Hunters too. Togami groaned thinking that he saw a completely unexpected side of the person that shook his confidence.

Elena’s team moved deeper and deeper into Mihazono ruin city district. Right about the time Togami started making slanderous guesses about Akira behind his back, they encountered a group of people, it was the squad that the Hunter Office dispatched to secure Mihazono ruin city district.

Long sharp objects were installed on the side of the road, from there, a thin metallic wire-like object extended out. It was a simple force field armour wall. They were basically easy-to-carry pillars that had strong enough power to bounce back regular-sized warheads and cannons, it was common defensive equipment usually used for temporary bases built in the middle of the wasteland or inside a ruin.

There were heavily-armed people complete with tanks equipped with huge machine guns standing guard near that simple force field wall. They had enough power to make a quick work of a swarm of mechanical monsters.

Elena stopped her vehicle and negotiated with one of the soldiers guarding the wall. That person then told his men to temporarily lower the force field wall. With the narrow metallic object blocking the road removed, Elena could pass through the road again.

That person then warned Elena.

“Be careful out there. We just got attacked by a huge monster just now, and the smaller monsters also keep popping up from time to time. Since you took that SOS emergency request, I’m sure you’re a skilled Hunter, but if you think that this is the same Mihazono ruin as before, you’ll only get yourself killed.”

That person pointed in the direction where Elena and her team were heading when he said that. In the direction that he was pointing, there was a wreckage of a huge dead mechanical monster, empty warheads and missile pods could be seen scattered around that wreckage. It must have been a pretty powerful monster.

“Thanks, we’ll be careful.”

Elena said her thanks to that person as she restarted her vehicle and stepped on the gas. Shikarabe and Akira followed behind her. After Akira passed over the force field wall, it immediately erected back up.

Akira looked around his surroundings while driving his vehicle after passing through the force field wall. The area around him was filled with rubbles, wreckages, and dead monsters. The situation inside and outside the force field wall differed greatly.

Akira scanned his surroundings and said.

“There are obviously more monsters than yesterday. Is it because they’re pushed out from the inner wall so the area outside becomes more dangerous?”

Carol, who was sitting next to Akira answered that question while also scanning around her surroundings.

“Well, with all of these monsters dead, the outside area might have become relatively safe though?”

“Maybe. If the monsters get more reinforcement, the same number as the dead here, safety would be a pipe dream. After all, it would come as no surprise if the factories produce as many new monsters to replace all of these dead monsters, you know?”

“I did hear that the cleaning drones of the old-world ruin gather the remnants of the dead monsters when no one is looking and then they use the material gathered to create new monsters. But since these wreckages are still here, it means that they can’t use them for material to create new monsters, right? So, I don’t think it’s that easy for them to produce replacement monsters.”

“There might be a warehouse somewhere filled with mechanical monsters, right? In that case, there’s no need to retrieve the dead monsters just to create new monsters. Furthermore, Mihazono ruin has a factory district, right? It won’t be strange if there’s a warehouse filled with monsters over there.”

Carol always gave a more optimistic guess while Akira always gave a pessimistic guess. She found that really weird as she looked in Akira’s direction. Akira who noticed Carol’s gaze then asked.

“…What?”

“Akira, for someone who always takes the worst-case scenario in mind to the point that I can easily call you paranoid, it’s strange that you tend to act without proper planning. Not only did you come to Mihazono ruin without first contacting Elena and Sara where to meet up, back there when we were chased by monsters inside the Seranthal building, you decided to go alone without any plans too. If you’re really that careful, you should think before you act.”

After Carol pointed that out, Akira was lost for words.

The reason why Akira was being paranoid was simply because he knew that he had bad luck, or at least, he thought he had bad luck.

He got unlucky and got attacked by former Hunters that had fallen off grace, he got unlucky and got roped into facing a swarm of monsters, there was also a time when he had to fight powerful relic thieves. In the first place, if he had good luck, he would not be living in the slums of Kugamayama city.

In reality, Akira was actually not as unlucky as he thought he was. After all, if he was really that unlucky, he would not have met Alpha and received that sudden power boost in the first place, which was in itself a very lucky encounter.

Moreover, he would not have visited Shizuka's shop where Shizuka was so nice to help him with a lot of things. He would not have met Elena and Sara in Kuzusuhara ruin, where both of them later saved him from a swarm of monsters. All of them were lucky events, so it was not like Akira always got nothing but unlucky events.

Strictly speaking, Akira simply had a twisted personality, or he might have put too much trust in Alpha's words when she said that he had used all of his lifetime worth of luck by meeting her.

While on the other hand, Akira also was not as reckless as Carol thought he was. Or at least, Akira thought so of himself. Due to the complicated order of priority that he abided by, he thought that it must be simply because he looked reckless from Carol's point of view.

But with that being said, Akira could not tell Carol the reason behind his order of priorities since it included information about Alpha as well as Elena and Sara. So instead, he tried to evade that subject.

"Well, it's not that simple for me too. Moreover, it's a good thing to be careful when exploring a ruin, right?"

It was easy for Carol to notice that Akira was trying to evade the subject, and she also noticed that there was something that he was not willing to share. But she thought that trying to poke for that information would only worsen her relationship with Akira, that was why she tried to follow along with his intention to just let it slide.

“That’s true. But, it’ll be bad if you get too careful and because of that you get to meet monsters when your concentration is significantly lowered, so it’s not good to be too careful. Well, that’s all I want to say.”

“Ahh, I see, got it then. Don’t worry.”

Akira agreed with what Carol said and nodded. He looked relieved, it might be because he was able to successfully evade the subject that he did not want to talk about.

Carol was staring at Akira’s face and thought.

[…Although he had that incident in Seranthal building just the other day, I wonder why he would even come to Mihazono ruin again to meet up with Elena and Sara. Is it simply because they are his friends? Or is it that Akira actually has some feeling for them? Or one of them is actually Akira’s lover or something? But if that’s the case…]

Carol mumbled.

“…If it’s something that they keep secret, then there’s no need for me to hold back.”

“Did you say something?”

“Hm? It’s nothing.”

Carol smiled amusedly when she said that.

Elena and her team continued moving deeper into the city district of Mihazono ruin and away from the secured area.

The situation outside the wall was worse than yesterday. The condition of the road was so bad that it was hard to go through it. Even the vehicles designed to explore the wasteland were only barely able to pass through it. Thanks to that, Elena and her team could only continue forward slowly.

Putting that drop in speed aside, they did not encounter any other problems, they did not even get to encounter any dangerous monsters. They only met relatively small monsters and they had no problem taking them out.

Akira suddenly asked Alpha a question.

“I don’t see that many monsters outside the wall though. Alpha, do you detect any monsters around?”

Alpha replied casually.

“Yep, there are some monsters.”

Akira was a bit surprised when he heard that.

“There are? You should’ve told me then, where are they?”

Akira looked around, but he did not spot any monsters around.

Alpha smiled and said.

“They’re scattered around the area. Since they don’t seem to be going to attack us, there’s nothing to worry about.”

Alpha then enhanced Akira’s vision. He could see mechanical monsters pass through the rubbles and wreckages. Some of them were on the other side of a building, some of them were inside a building, some of them were hiding under the wreckages on the side of the road. They were hiding in all kinds of places around the area. And just like Alpha said, they were not trying to attack Akira. They were just there waiting in silence without moving.

Akira was a bit confused by that.

“Why are they not trying to attack us?”

“I can come up with a lot of guesses. They might be just weak monsters, so they’re just observing us from where they’re hiding while sharing that information with the other monsters. Or they might decide not to attack us since they know they have a low chance of winning after seeing our armed vehicles. Or they might be waiting for extra reinforcement to gather their strength together before attacking.”

“So we’re basically safe for now, right?”

“They’re not attacking us, and even if they do, we should be able to easily take them out. So from that point of view, yes, we’re safe at the moment. But monsters are basically dangerous beings, that’s why people call them monsters in the first place.”

“Well, that’s true, but that’s not what I meant…”

Akira felt that he was not fully convinced by Alpha’s answer, but he did not know the reason why. Alpha also did tell him that they would not have any trouble fighting those monsters, so it might be okay to just ignore those monsters for now. In the end, he decided not to let those monsters bother him.

There was one monster that was outside the detection range of Elena and her team. Although it was damaged, it still had enough strength to fight. It was one of those huge monsters that fought the humanoid soldiers dispatched by the Hunter Office, so in short, it was an aggressive and dangerous monster, an enemy.

The scanning device installed in its body was showing Akira and the other Hunters’ positions. The image of Akira moving inside the ruin was transferred from its detection devices that were scattered around the area. That so-called S101 big-sized multi-legged tank had the main duty of destroying enemies of the same type, i.e. the tanks and the humanoid soldiers.

The image displayed in the S101 control device was Akira’s vehicle with Akira and Carol inside it. Alpha was invisible to that monster.

The S101 fixed its aim at Akira. The huge cannon that it was equipped with had enough power to destroy the humanoid weapons used for securing cities. It could launch a warhead at a high speed, it had powerful firepower, and it had a wide explosion radius. If Akira's vehicle got hit by that warhead even once, the people on that vehicle would not be able to get by unscathed.

Right before it launched a warhead, Alpha's image suddenly appeared in the control device of S101. Alpha showed some kind of symbol next to her, she pointed at that symbol while shaking her head.

The S101 confirmed that symbol and stopped from trying to attack Akira. It then immediately returned back to stand-by mode just like before it discovered Akira.

Elena and her team finally reached their destination. It was a 3 storey-building inside the city district of Mihazono ruin. They parked their vehicles next to that building, stepped out from their vehicles, and gathered together.

Elena made a grim expression as she checked her information-gathering device. She then lightly shook her head and said to the rest of the team.

"…Nope, no reply at all. Forget signal from local connection, I can't even find any trace of signals at all."

Elena tried to contact the rescue target, but sadly enough, she did not get any reply at all.

Shikarabe tried to analyze the situation as he said to Elena.

"Even if the rescue targets are all dead, I think we should be able to at least get some signals from their information terminals but… Does that mean that they got attacked by some powerful monsters and got all of their equipment destroyed? The target location is here, right?"

"If we follow the information from the request, yes, it's this building."

They then peeked inside from the entrance of the building. The interior of the building was pitch black, there was no light source at all. There was not even a trace saying that the entrance was barricaded either.

If the rescue targets were really in that building, then they should be barricading themselves somewhere inside that building. While on the other hand, there was also a chance that the information of the rescue targets was wrong and they were not in that building.

They peeked inside that building while having a conflicted feeling. They saw a lot of monsters flooding out from inside a building just yesterday, so they did not want to explore that building to search for the rescue targets if it could be helped.

But it was not like they could just return back without trying to do anything there. They came all the way to that building because they accepted a rescue request from the broker that Elena was contracted with. So in order to properly do their work based on the information given to them, even if the rescue targets were no longer inside that building, they had to at least check the inside of that building and properly confirm that there was no one in that building.

If that building was filled with mechanical monsters, they could use that as an excuse to make a guess that the rescue targets were already dead. But if that was not the case, if they had the option to check a bit inside of that building, then they could not afford to just return back without doing anything.

Elena sighed, her face turned stern as she said.

“It can’t be helped then. Let’s search the inside of the building. Sara, Akira, Carol, and I will go and search the building. Shikarabe and Togami will guard the building from the outside. Give us a call if anything comes up. If we don’t return back after 1 hour and you can’t contact me, then issue an SOS request for us.”

Shikarabe nodded and said.

“Roger that. If that happens, is it okay for me to decide where to issue the request?”

“Since we’re here because of the request from Alhain insurance company, you should first send the request to them to let them know what happened. Then after that, it’s up to you.”

Shikarabe seemed a bit dissatisfied as he said.

“Got it. Is it okay if I set a high reward offer for that SOS rescue request and take that request myself?”

Elena smiled and replied.

“Of course. That is, if you think that I will pay any amount of reward that you decide without resisting.”

Sara and Carol just smiled lightly watching that short exchange between Shikarabe and Elena.

Akira too was watching that short exchange filled with interest. In the back of that short exchange, there was a lot of underlying knowledge about how to handle an emergency situation and unspoken common senses among Hunters, and Akira had almost no knowledge at all about both of those things. He simply did not have enough experience working as a Hunter. Although he received a sudden power boost thanks to Alpha’s support, it did not instantly turn him into an experienced Hunter.

Togami somehow looked unsatisfied with that plan since he actually also wanted to search the building. After all, there was a good chance that nothing would happen if he just stood there guarding the building from the outside. He believed that was the exact reason why Shikarabe did not protest at all when Elena proposed to use most of the team’s firepower to search the building instead of guarding the building.

Togami joined Shikarabe because he wanted to reconfirm his skill. Of course, there was no guarantee that something would happen if he joined the team searching the inside of the building. But he believed that he should be able to get more chances to reconfirm his skill by going inside instead of standing guard outside. Even if he did not get to find monsters, he could at least see how the other Hunters explored a dangerous place and compare that to himself.

After a bit of thinking, he then nervously asked Elena.

“Uhmm, if it’s possible, I actually want to search the inside of the building too, is that okay?”

Elena looked a bit surprised. She then shifted his gaze to Shikarabe.

Shikarabe then answered Togami’s request in place of Elena.

“No.”

It was a short answer that did not show any willingness to negotiate.

Togami looked at Shikarabe with a dissatisfied look, while Shikarabe looked back at Togami with an annoyed gaze, there was even a trace of mockery mixed in that gaze too.

“If you slow them down, I’ll be the one in trouble. So like hell I would let a dead burden like you to go with them.”

“…Alright, I understand”

Although Togami still looked like he could not accept it, he obediently gave that reply.

Shikarabe looked obviously surprised, he thought that Togami would lash back at him. But since Togami unexpectedly obeyed him, Shikarabe awkwardly felt relieved.

“W-well, it’s all good as long as you get it.”

Seeing how Togami properly stood guard there, Shikarabe tilted his head in confusion.

After finishing the preparation to go in, the rest of the team went inside the building. They were using a relatively powerful torchlight while exploring the building. The powerful light from the torchlight banished the darkness inside that building that the sunlight could not even reach, the light pierced deeper into the building through small openings and cracks. Elena told them to intentionally use powerful light so the rescue targets would easily find them if the rescue targets were still somewhere inside.

There were traces of battles inside that building. There were bullet holes both in the walls and the floors, there were also wreckages of dead mechanical monsters. But there were no blood marks nor corpses of dead Hunters. It seemed that the Hunters were able to get away from the monsters uninjured.

Akira moved carefully while searching the inside of the building as he asked Alpha a question.

“Alpha, do you find any monsters or the rescue targets?”

“I don’t detect anything inside my searching range.”

“I see. This building is a rather small building, so if you don’t find anything, the rescue targets might be really no longer in this place.”

Akira knew very well just how great Alpha’s detection skill was, moreover, Alpha also had a very wide detection range. So, after he knew that Alpha did not detect any monsters nor any rescue targets, Akira unconsciously lowered his guard.

But the other Hunters immediately noticed that Akira lowered his guard there. Normally, they would have scolded him for lowering his guard in the middle of a dangerous place. But since all of them knew just how unnaturally sensitive Akira was when it came to detecting enemies, they did not scold him at all.

Sara then asked Elena a question.

“Elena, do you find anything?”

“Nope. Even my information-gathering device doesn’t detect anything.”

Even Elena’s information-gathering device also agreed with Akira. So there might be really no monsters nor their rescue targets inside that building.

Both Elena and Sara already realized that Akira was someone who can connect to the old-world domain. But because of that, they always pinned the unnatural skill that Akira showed from time to time, like his astounding ability to detect monsters, as his ability as someone who could access the old-world domain. They did not even guess the existence of Alpha at all.

Sara looked at Akira one more time and scanned his current equipment. Akira was using an augmented suit that was way outside the reach of fresh Hunters, and he was carrying heavy weapons that normal humans could not carry unless with the help of an augmented suit. It showed just how powerful Akira was as a Hunter.

[When we met for the first time, Akira was carrying nothing but AAH rifles and he was just using a cloth that was neither an armour nor an augmented suit. But in such a short time, he got all of that equipment. Not to mention that his detection ability is more or less as good as Elena, then to top it off, his fighting ability is nothing to scoff at… At this rate, it won’t take long for him to surpass me and Elena. I wonder how long we can stay as his senior.]

Sara smiled bitterly, she felt a bit lonely when she thought that she did not have much time left until Akira became stronger than her, and when that time came, Akira would stop relying on her and Elena as his senior.

On the side, Carol confirmed how Elena and Sara reacted when they noticed Akira lowered his guard, she then thought.

[They continue exploring the building without showing any reaction even when they notice Akira lowered his guard, as in matter of fact, it seems that they also lowered their guards too. Judging by the information-gathering device that Elena has, I don’t think both of them are Hunters who would lower their guard because of something like that… Does that mean they know why Akira is so good at detecting monsters? Or is it that because they know Akira for a long time and really trust him? Or is it that they're already used to it since they have worked together with Akira many times before?]

Carol knew that Akira had an unnaturally high ability to detect enemies, but she did not think that it was because he might be someone who could connect to the old-world domain. It was because she knew that being an old-world connector did not equal having a great ability to detect enemies. Of course, it was not completely unrelated, but that also did not give a definite proof either. Carol knew that very well.

That was exactly why Carol credited Akira's skill to detect enemies as one of the rare talents that those great Hunters had. She did not even consider the possibility that Akira might be able to connect to the old-world domain.

[…Honestly speaking, I want to ask a lot of questions about it. But I guess I should do that later and not here.]

If Carol tried to poke about that information from Elena and Sara here, of course, Akira would be able to hear her too, and it might cause trouble later down the line. If she wanted to gather information about Akira, she should at least do that somewhere where he could not hear her, and she should choose her words wisely as not to cause any suspicion.

Moreover, she should be able to deduce whether it was something that she could ask Akira directly or not by seeing how Elena and Sara would react to her questions. So for now, Carol tried to calm the curiosity that was welling up inside her heart as she tried to keep her poker face.

After they looked around the inside of the building, they ended up with the conclusion that no one was there. Elena then told the rest of the team to stop searching and head back to Shikarabe.

After Elena, Sara, Carol, and Akira returned to Shikarabe, Shikarabe listened to their explanation and understood the current situation. He then sighed and looked disappointed. Although the SOS request that they took was considered to be completed after searching the target area, the reward was far less compared to if they returned back with the rescue targets.

With this, not only Shikarabe ended up coming all the way there while forced to bring along a burden with him due to the gang that he was in, but his first request of the day also ended up badly. He then let out all of his disappointment and psychical tiredness together with a sigh before continuing.

“So our first request for today is a dud, huh. I feel like today will be an unlucky day. So then, what’s the plan next?”

Elena answered his question.

“We didn’t use much ammo, so I’m thinking of heading to the next request-target right from here. Although, I don’t mind heading back too in case you guys used most of your ammo when we were not around.”

Shikarabe glanced at Togami, he thought that Togami would make a complaint. But unlike what Shikarabe was expecting, Togami was still standing there with a serious face while properly keeping his eyes peeled.

Shikarabe was wondering the entire time while waiting for Elena to return, he was waiting for Togami to act out. In the end, nothing happened at all, which indicated Togami had changed. This questionable fact made Shikarabe feel a little bit disturbed as he continued.

“We’re okay with that, after all, nothing happened at all when you were gone.”

Elena watched Shikarabe’s face closely. Although it did not say that nothing had happened, it did not seem that it would affect his performance during the rescue request either.

“I see, in that case, let’s hurry up and head to the next location.”

“…Hmm? Wait for a sec, I just got a notification from the Hunter Office, give me a few seconds to check it.”

Shikarabe noticed that a notification from the Hunter Office had reached his information terminal. As he pulled out his information terminal and was about to check it, almost at the same time the same notification reached Togami, Elena, and Sara too albeit a little later. Sara also pulled out her information terminal to check the details of that notification as she turned to Akira and said.

“It seems that we also got notification from the Hunter Office too. Akira, wait for a bit while we check the details.”

“Okay.”

The people who received those notifications started checking their own information terminals and they reacted differently when they read the details of that notification.

Elena and Sara looked obviously annoyed as if they just got roped into something troublesome. Togami on the other hand, seemed rather excited as if he just got something that he had been waiting for. While for Shikarabe, he seemed a bit panicked and extremely irritated.

Elena and Sara then started talking to each other. Shikarabe immediately used his information terminal to call for someone and he seemed to be negotiating with the person he was calling, he also sounded really displeased. While Togami just stood there waiting for Shikarabe to finish his negotiation.

Suddenly, a call reached Elena's information terminal. Elena stopped discussing with Sara and picked that call with a stern face, she then started talking with whoever on the other side of that call in a bad mood.

Akira frowned and asked Alpha.

"Alpha, do you have any idea what's going on?"

"Nope. But looking at this, one thing for sure, it doesn't seem to be anything good."

"Thought so…"

When Akira checked Elena, Elena sounded a bit angry, which was rather rare for her.

"…Leave that aside for now… Yeah, that's right. You should at least know where we are right now, right?! We're in the middle of the ruin, we're in a situation where we might get attacked by a swarm of monsters any second, you know?! At least give us some time to relocate!! Or are you actually trying to kill us or something?!!"

Elena then cut the call and immediately gave Shikarabe an order.

"Shikarabe, we'll head back now."

Shikarabe was still talking in his information terminal as he glanced at Elena and nodded to convey his affirmation. He then signalled Togami to get into the APC with his hand and went to the APC himself while still on the call.

Elena, who was not even trying to hide her displeasure, was taken aback when she noticed that Akira was looking at her. She then lightly sighed to calm herself down before she apologetically said to Akira.

“Akira, I’m sorry, but is it okay if I tell you the details later? We need to return back to the Hunter Office for now. I’ll tell you the details after that.”

“Sure, I don’t mind, is it better if we hurry up then?”

“No, it’s fine. There’s no need to hurry up… After all, we have no obligation to go that far.”

Elena was only mumbling in a small voice in the last half of her sentence before she returned back to her vehicle. Sara smiled bitterly and followed behind Elena.

Akira turned to Carol. Carol seemed so relaxed and calm there. Unlike Akira who did not understand what was going on at all, it seemed that Carol had some inkling about the current situation.

Akira then threw a question to Carol.

“Carol, do you have any guess about that notification that the others just received?”

“Nope. But it’s not like I have no idea at all though. I gathered some information regarding the Mihazono ruin yesterday, so I at least have some guesses.”

“So, what is it?”

“Rather than making poor guesses, it’s faster if you hear it from someone who is directly connected to it. That aside, we need to hurry it up if you don’t want to get left behind.”

“Whoops!”

When Carol pointed that out, Akira immediately hurried up back to his vehicle, Carol followed suit behind him.

Carol looked at Akira and thought.

[Normally speaking, for a Hunter as strong as him, he should have the ability to gather that level of information. But it seems that Akira is basically an amateur in gathering information, huh… I wonder if I can make my move from that side?]

Seeing from how Akira was behaving yesterday and today, Carol was sure that Akira properly recognized Elena and Sara as beautiful girls.

Akira did say in the past that he had more interest in food than girls. But it was not like he had no interest in girls at all either, being able to confirm that was already a huge success for Carol.

So with that in mind, Carol compared herself to Sara and Elena, the 2 girls that Akira properly recognized as the member of the opposite sex. Although both of them were indeed beautiful, she did not think that her beauty would lose to any of them. As in matter of fact, Carol had gathered and spent a lot of money to polish her body, as such, she actually thought that she had a better figure than Sara and Elena.

Of course, it depended on the personal taste whether someone was attractive or not. But Carol did not think that the difference between her and Sara and Elena was that big as to make such a factor so important, unless Akira was only interested in a very limited type of girls. But according to her experience, she did not think that was the case at all.

Carol thought that there might be some kind of particular requirement for Akira to properly recognize someone as a member of the opposite sex. After all, unless that was indeed the case, it was unnatural for him to be so disinterested in her at all. But the reason why she thought so might simply be because she had absolute confidence in her own body.

But Carol had no idea at all what this particular requirement might be. Which meant that she either had to do something to investigate what this particular requirement was, or she should change the way she approached Akira. Akira was indeed a Hunter who was very skilled at fighting, but in contrast to that, he was utterly lacking in knowledge as a Hunter. She might be able to get closer to Akira by sharing that kind of knowledge with him. And the closer she got, the easier it would be for her to investigate the type of girl that he liked.

“Well, I guess there’s no need to be in a rush here. Let’s be patient about this.”

Carol was sitting next to Akira, who was driving his vehicle, while smiling and thinking about her next plan.

Elena and her team were able to return back to the Hunter Office without any incident at all. They did not even encounter a single monster on their way back. Although they detected some monsters, those monsters let them pass through without trying to attack them. Akira who thought that those monsters called for reinforcements and were waiting to ambush them on their way back. So, that ending felt rather anti-climatic.

When they stepped off from their vehicles, some Drankam Hunters and Hunter Office staff were already standing by near the Hunter Office as if they were waiting for Elena’s team. Elena was obviously annoyed and sighed when she saw them.

Elena was going to negotiate with them from here. And judging by the fact that those people were already waiting for them there, it seemed that she would not have the chance to explain the current situation to Akira and Carol.

Elena then glanced at Carol and remembered that she was rather skilled in negotiation too. She then suddenly asked Akira a question.

“Akira, is it okay if I borrow Carol for a bit? From here, I’ll have to get into a rather, no, a really annoying and troublesome negotiation with those people.”

“I don’t mind though, but…”

Akira then checked on Carol. Although he hired her as a guide, she even helped during the battle too, and now Elena asked her to help to do some negotiation. Akira thought it would be way outside of the role that she was paid for, so it would not be strange if Carol refused.

But Carol just casually said.

“Sure, I’m okay with helping out.”

Akira was a bit surprised by that.

“Are you sure?”

“Yep, I’m here because you hired me. So I don’t mind doing that much.”

Akira slightly bowed.

“I see… Thank you.”

“Don’t mention it.”

Carol smiled at Akira as if it did not bother her at all while taking a note of that strange and sudden change of attitude from Akira.

Elena then said to Sara and Akira.

“Well then. We’ll be temporarily parting ways here. Sara, can you explain to Akira what’s going on for the time being?”

“Sure, I’ll leave the negotiation to you.”

Elena, Carol, and Shikarabe headed to the Hunter Office’s branch. But before Shikarabe left, he gave Togami an order.

“Togami! Take my APC back to Drankam temporary base!! After that, just wait for the next order from Drankam there!!”

Togami flusteredly replied.

“Wait for a second there! What will happen to me after this?”

“Like hell if I know?!”

Shikarabe sounded annoyed when he shouted back and just left it at that. Togami seemed like he could not completely accept it, but he then dragged himself back to the APC and did what Shikarabe told him to do.

Akira and Sara were told to move their vehicles so as not to block the way, so they did. After Akira relocated his vehicle, he stepped off from the driver seat and stretched out his body, that was when Sara came to him.

He then asked Sara a question.

“So then, what is going on? It seems that both Shikarabe and Elena-san looked pretty annoyed though.”

Sara seemed to be hesitating for a bit before she opened her mouth.

“Well, there’s just this troublesome thing. Although I said that, I’m not really sure what’s going on in Shikarabe’s side, but I think it’s the same reason why we’re also roped into this troublesome thing.”

“It’s that notification from the Hunter Office, right?”

“Yes, the content of that notification is a rather troublesome thing from the Hunter Office that we usually receive from time to time. So about that though… Well, it’s not that simple, but to explain it properly…”

“If it’s something that is hard for Sara-san to talk about, then there’s no need to do that.”

“Ahh, no, it’s fine. The message itself doesn’t contain secret information or anything like that, not to mention that Elena also told me to explain it to you. So I actually hope that you would listen to it.”

“I understand then.”

“So, about that, it’s basically a request to join the efforts to investigate this strange change in Mihazono ruin.”

Sara then started to explain the content of that massage from the Hunter Office to Akira. After listening to that explanation, Akira made a stern face.

“…So they’re sending a squad to Seranthal building, huh?”

“Yep. They put up all kinds of excuses for sending that squad and I don’t really know all the details. Some people said that it’s for investigating the source of this recent change in Mihazono ruin, others said that it’s for rescuing the people who are stranded inside that building, or it’s for taking control of that whole building. It is not even clear whether that information is true or it’s just someone’s guess. But one thing for sure, it seems it has been decided that a squad will be dispatched to that building, and it seems that it’s going to be a pretty big squad.”

Akira made a grim face as he remembered what he had gone through inside that Seranthal building.

“Uhh, is it possible to refuse it?”

“Well, although it’s not a compulsory request, I think it’s pretty unlikely.”

In order to give a boost to the defense squad from Kugamayama city that the City Management had dispatched, and to convince the people of the inner wall who paid them, the City Management decided to issue that request to the Hunters who had successfully hunted a bounty monster in the past.

With that monster swarm incident the other day and the appearance of the bounty monsters not too long ago, it seemed that the people in the inner wall were starting to feel insecure. But it was not like they could just demand the city defense squad to dispatch soldiers to solve it. It was difficult to readjust the strength of the city defense squad in case anything bad happened while making sure that the people in the inner wall felt safe at the same time.

Moreover, the hunt for bounty monsters also got pretty famous within the inner wall. And the story about the skilled Hunters dispatched to take down those powerful monsters that even warrant a bounty must have calmed down the people inside the inner wall. Not to mention, it would also increase the available budget for the defense squad, it was like killing two birds with one stone.

Because of that, although the request to join that squad was not a compulsory one, it was like half-compulsory. If the Hunters refused that request without a good excuse, it might cause them trouble later. After all, it might cause more unrest in the inner wall since they might think that even the Hunters who defeated the bounty monsters refused to take that request. Thus those Hunters were pretty much forced to take that request.

If the City Management had its eyes on a certain Hunter, there was a good chance that Hunter would have a hard time staying in that city. In the worst-scenario, they would not be able to sell relics and buy ammo. Thus eventually forcing them to go to another city.

There were not that many Hunters who were ready to face that consequence just to refuse such a request, at least, they would try to negotiate a suitable amount of reward for doing that request. In the first place, the City Management would not have issued that request if they knew that the Hunters would not take it. Moreover, losing skilled Hunters was also not something that the City Management wanted.

Sara explained everything regarding that subject plus some other related information that Akira might not know yet.

“Well, so basically, that’s it. That’s why Elena is trying to negotiate with the City Management about that troublesome request.”

Akira listened closely and understood Sara’s explanation, but a question suddenly popped out in his mind.

“I see… But, I never thought that Elena-san would be that angry, is it that the reward offered was really that bad?”

Sara hesitated for a bit before answering.

“…Well, that is… Uhh, you know. The reward is not that bad and I’m sure Elena is trying to pull it up higher too. I have no problem with the reward and I don’t think Elena has any problem with it either… It’s just that, well, they basically just cut in while we were doing another request and they’re bringing a request that is hard for us to refuse. Moreover, they even started trying to negotiate in the middle of the ruin where we might get attacked by monsters any second. So it’s no surprise that it causes Elena to get mad.”

“Now that you mention it, well, that’s true.”

Elena was also a human. It was only to be expected that she might get angry from time to time. And in this case, a request was pushed to her while she was in the middle of doing another request, it might completely throw her schedule and preparation into disarray. Elena might have also gotten angry because of her sense of responsibility as the leader of the team. Things did make sense if Akira saw it from that point of view.

Sara was relieved when she saw that it seemed Akira accepted her explanation, she then immediately tried to change the subject before Akira brought it up again.

“By the way, Akira, you didn’t get that notification? Didn’t you also hunt the bounty monster in Shikarabe’s team?”

This time, it was Akira’s turn to hesitate before answering.

“Ah, well, you see, I’m basically not allowed to talk about it, so…”

“I see, if that’s the case, I won’t pressure you. It just got me curious for a bit. I’m just wondering how did you perform during the bounty hunt.”

“I didn’t do anything big, as in matter of fact, I’m not even sure if I deserve the reward that I received.”

Akira thought that it should be fine to tell Sara that much when he said that.

Sara did not say anything for a while, it seemed that she was thinking about something. Her expression suddenly changed as if she just realized something, she then smiled and said to Akira.

“Ahhh, so basically you accepted a request from Shikarabe without going through the Hunter Office to help him as an extra personnel in order to hunt the bounty monster, and then you guys were able to successfully kill the bounty monster, huh.”

Akira gasped, Sara was able to accurately guess what happened just like that. As he looked at Sara with a surprised face, she looked back at him with a smile. He then asked Sara a question.

“…That was enough for Sara-san to make that guess?”

Sara smiled amusedly as she answered Akira’s question.

“Since you said that you’re not even sure the reward that you got matched your contribution, it meant that you properly received the reward, which meant that you took that request. At that time, the only request that Shikarabe offered you was only to help him hunt the bounty monster. Then, judging from the fact that you didn’t get that notification from the Hunter Office, that means that request is only a request among Hunters and the Hunter Office has nothing to do with it. Since Shikarabe hired you, it means that he knew you would at least pull your own weight. That’s why he didn’t hire you only to be a driver. When you said that you didn’t do anything big, basically it’s because the main firepower during that fight against the bounty monster was Shikarabe and his friends. Then as for you, in order to give support to Shikarabe and his friends, I bet you used expendable equipment that Shikarabe gave you to attack the bounty monster as well as trying to keep its attention off from Shikarabe. When you said that you’re not sure you deserve the reward that you received, I can make a guess that it’s at least not a small amount of money. Shikarabe himself would not pay that much money unless the bounty hunt was a success. That’s why I can say for sure that you were able to successfully kill the bounty monster… You can’t confirm whether I got it right or not, okay? It’ll violate your duty of confidentiality, after all.”

Akira hung his head low.

“…I’ll keep my mouth shut.”

“That vehicle is not the same vehicle that you bought from Shizuka, right? Is it a reward from Shikarabe? Although I’m not that knowledgeable about vehicles, that one is pretty expensive, you know. Although you received that as a reward, you still said that you didn’t know if it was worth it, huh. Akira, it must have been a hard fight.”

“I can’t say anything.”

“Akira, you’re an honest kid, aren’t you?”

Sara giggled seeing how Akira was pouting.

She then changed the mood and said.

“I’m sorry, my apologies. By the way, just so you know, the ones who can’t refuse that request are only Elena and me, so it’s completely okay for you. After all, that request didn’t get issued to you in the first place. I know that you’ve gone through something really bad in Seranthal, right? So if you don’t want to come, you don’t need to force yourself. After all, this wasn’t in our plan at all when we invited you.”

Akira’s expression returned back to normal.

“No, I’ll come along too if it’s okay with Sara-san and Elena-san.”

Although it was true that the situation had changed greatly from their initial plan. But for Akira, that was not the case at all. After all, he originally came to Mihazono ruin to help Elena and Sara.

Sara then asked Akira one more time.

“We’re more than happy to have you, but are you really sure it’s okay?”

“Yes.”

Sara's expression turned serious as she said to Akira.

"…Is it because you know you might be able to get some profit from it? Despite the danger, you are moving for profit?"

"Eh? Ah, yes. Yes, something like that. I want to get better equipment after all, so I'm in need of money right now."

Akira sounded a little surprised, but he immediately tried to match his excuse with what Sara said.

Sara did not say anything back for a few seconds, she then smiled and said to Akira.

"…I see, got it. But, there's no need to be reckless, okay?"

"I understand."

Akira answered back firmly.

As she listened to Akira's reply, Sara then thought.

[…This boy is really bad at lying. Or more like, he's bad at trying to trick people in general, huh?]

Sara confirmed that Akira did not decide to come with her for money.

Moreover, she guessed that he decided to come along in order to help her. Although it might be nothing but her wishful thinking, she had no proof that refuted it.

As Sara thought that Akira decided to set his foot again in a place where he almost got killed in order to help her and Elena, she felt both happy and pathetic at the same time. But even so, since she felt more happy than pathetic, she did not make a saddened face.

Sara decided to use that feeling as the motivation to grow stronger and smiled.

Akira was talking with Sara while waiting for Elena to return back from negotiating.

Akira then asked Sara a question.

“I wonder how long will it take until Elena-san finishes?”

“It depends on how hard the negotiation is, so, I don’t really know myself. But I’m sure the City Management doesn’t want to spend too much time on negotiating just to get late in dispatching the squad either. So I think it would end before afternoon even if it means that the negotiation fails.”

“Fail? But it’s not a request that you just can refuse, right?”

“Basically, yes. Which also means that there are exceptions. If they can’t agree on the conditions that we put on no matter what, then, we’ll refuse to take the request even if it means that we need to change our base of operation to another city. If I’m to make an extreme example, they might only pay us a small amount of money just to be expendable pawns. Well, I’m sure Elena will properly do her job so that something like that would not happen unless something unexpected happens.”

The one that Elena was negotiating against must be someone who was used to having a hard negotiation. If it was him, Akira would have been swept by the flow of the negotiation and forced to accept a very bad deal. As he thought so, he made a conflicted face and mumbled.

“…That sounds rough.”

“That’s why most of the Hunters hire other people to handle the negotiation for them. In my case, Elena would do that for me, that’s why I don’t have to do that. Akira… You’re bad with negotiation, right? In that case, it might be a good idea to hire someone to do that for you.”

“Hmmm, I see, I’ll think about it.”

Akira thought that he was not that great of a Hunter yet, so he would not get roped into such a troublesome negotiation, and he did not need people to negotiate in his place yet. But one day, he might need one, so he just kept that in mind for now.

In reality, Akira was already someone who could easily get roped into troublesome stuff. The reason why he did not realize it himself was simply because he had no misgivings in killing other people and he did not care about the trouble that killing other people might cause. In the worst-case scenario, it was okay to kill, that kind of thinking was a normal thing in the slum city.

Normally, people would try to find a way to solve their problems peacefully, but Akira simply ignored that way of thinking. It had been etched into Akira's mind that the other person always guaranteed to look down on him and his life, there would not be any chance to negotiate, nor compromise. It might be also because of this that Akira was overly lax to certain people.

Although Akira had escaped the slum city, his mind was still somewhere inside the slum city where he knew no other way to protect himself except to kill.

That indeed had caused troubles for him in the past, but Akira always credited that to his bad luck, or at least, he understood that he reaped what he sowed when that happened.

Sara then turned her gaze to the Hunter Office. Elena was still negotiating there. Since there was still no call from Elena, it showed just how hard the negotiation that she was having over there.

[…As I thought, I bet they're bickering there.]

For Sara who very well understood Elena might be having a hard time, she imagined the scene of Elena trying her best negotiating in the Hunter Office's branch and sighed.

As Sara had guessed, Elena was having a difficult time negotiating. When Sara explained the current situation to Akira, she deliberately hid some information including the reason why Elena was so irritated to the point that she raised her voice.

Although it had been decided that the squad sent to Seranthal building would consist of the Hunters that successfully hunted a bounty monster in the past. And with that many Hunters that would be sent to Seranthal building, they would need to have a clear chain of command so that they could work together effectively. But at the same time, this chain of command could be the source of another trouble.

The City Management was originally planning to use the same chain of command used during the bounty monster hunt. After all, it was to be expected that the Hunters who led the group that successfully hunted the bounty monster should at least have a good commanding skill. Even the group that was able to successfully hunt the Big Walker actually had a sudden team reconstruction before they were dispatched, and yet, they were able to kill the Big Walker with that team. The City Management thought that the Hunters would sort out any problems regarding the chain of command by themselves.

In order so that the Hunters had the same chain of command in the field, they needed to take someone who was already a leader of a team or an officer from an organization or a gang. Thus, the City Management let the team with the most contribution during the bounty hunt to pick the squad leader.

Which in this case, meant the City Management left that decision to Drankam since Drankam bounty hunt team had contributed greatly during the bounty hunt. Most of the independent team from the Drankam were also able to successfully kill a bounty monster too. Moreover, the gang also contributed greatly in defeating the strongest bounty monster. Thus, it was no surprise that the City Management left the details of the investigation squad to Drankam. So, the current plan was to let Drankam decide the strategy and the leader of the team, then the other Hunters would work under Drankam's command.

But in the end, an unexpectedly lot of Hunters complained about that.

When the situation in Mihazono ruin suddenly changed, Drankam issued the SOS rescue requests to the Hunters around the ruin. This resulted in a lot of Hunters getting trapped inside the ruin. Most of the rescue targets for the current SOS rescue request were actually the Hunters who got trapped from the previous SOS rescue request.

Although they ended up judging the situation only from the result, this basically meant that Drankam had sent a lot of Hunters into the wasteland just to get them trapped there only for a small reward. There was not a small number of Hunters who fortunately were able to return back alive while their companions got killed back in the ruin, and most of these Hunters ended up holding a grudge against Drankam. Due to a lot of Hunters getting trapped in the ruin because of that SOS rescue request from Drankam, the current public opinion of Drankam had already significantly fallen.

While on the other hand, some people in Drankam were thinking of using this chance to increase Drankam's reputation in Kugamayama city.

There were a lot of other Hunter gangs in Kugamayama city beside Drankam. If Drankam was able to make the investigation a success with the strategy that Drankam itself decided, there was no mistaking that it would definitely make Drankam even more renown. So, if someone not from Drankam took the command and participated in that investigation and made it a success, it would give a boost to the reputation of the gang that Hunter was affiliated with.

Moreover, there were also Hunters who were worried if Drankam took command of the squad, people from Drankam might push the dangerous jobs to the other gangs.

Because of those reasons, a lot of Hunters refused to have Drankam taking command of the squad.

Then to top it off, there was also an in-fighting within Drankam itself.

Drankam had already dispatched its Hunters to Mihazono ruin, and that particular squad was formally commanded by Katsuya. So any reinforcement who joined that team would basically work under him.

Inside Drankam, there was friction between the young Hunters and veterans, there were also some young hunters in the gang who were members of the anti-Katsuya faction. Although they were not as bad as Shikarabe, a lot of Hunters in Drankam refused to work under Katsuya, enough for the gang not to be able to just ignore those Hunters. They demanded to shift the command from Katsuya to one of them or for the City Management to accept the extra conditions that they imposed for that request, and in order to do that, they even dragged the upper echelons in Drankam to get involved in the negotiation.

Then, to top it off, each Hunter had different aims during the negotiation. Some of them demanded as much rewards as they could get, some of them deliberately picked a fight against the other gangs in order to be able to refuse that request while keeping their reputation, while some of them tried to get special favour in exchange for taking that request.

With all kinds of people gathered there, each of them was aiming only to bring profits to themselves, or to the gangs that they belong in, it was only to be expected for the negotiation to turn complicated.

At the moment, there were a lot of people gathered in the Hunter Office branch of Mihazono ruin including the negotiators from Drankam, leaders from various Hunter teams, and people from the request brokers that some of the Hunters were contracted with, Elena was one of them. They were trying their best to reach a consensus.

All of them gathered in the cafeteria of the Hunter Office branch. Carol and Elena were also there, Carol was sitting next to Elena on one of the tables in the cafeteria. Sitting opposite to them was a negotiator from Drankam by the name of Maeda.

Elena and Maeda were talking to each other with a stern face, while Carol was listening to them with a relaxed smile.

After that Maeda listened to a report from one of his co-workers, he then cut the call on his information terminal, sighed, and said to Elena.

“…I just checked with Drankam side again, and as I said, the answer is still a no. We can’t accept the conditions that you put up.”

“I see then. It means that we have no deal here, yes?”

When Elena said that, Maeda’s face twitched.

“You do know that we can’t have that here for the sake of both of us, right? It’s a request from Kugamayama City Management, you know? You do know well how angry they’ll be if we keep dragging this negotiation without any good reason, right?”

Elena did not waver at all, her expression did not change as she replied.

“Of course. I bet the City Management wants us to quickly finish this negotiation so that they can dispatch the squad to take control of Seranthal building as soon as possible.”

“If you understand it, can you at least lower your demand? The longer we drag this negotiation, the more the City Management would hate both of us.”

“Just to let you know, in order to save us from that, we already lowered our demand as low as we can, you know?”

“…You demand 5 times the original reward offered by the City Management and for us to pay some of that reward in advance as the condition to join the squad under Drankam’s command… Then you say that it’s already as low as you can go? You know that we can’t accept that demand no matter how you look at it, right?”

“That’s because we recognize this request is much more dangerous than Drankam is willing to admit. Like I said, it’s the lowest we can go. If we had more time, I would have demanded even more reward, you know?”

Maeda was staring at Elena with a stern face, there was no trace of deception in Elena’s expression and words. Maeda then sighed.

“…Seriously now, are you for real? This is a request from the City Management, you know? If you keep insisting on making such impossible demand, we have no other choice but to tell the City Management that the negotiation has failed because you keep making that demand. Are you sure you’re okay with it if the City Management thinks of you as a Hunter who can’t be reasoned with?”

Hunters spent their days fighting dangerous monsters in the old-world ruin, so in order to have a winning chance against those monsters, they had to bring along powerful weapons, and it would be an overkill using those weapons that were designed to kill monsters on humans. So, for the sake of maintaining order in the eastern district, the City Management had no other choice but to get those Hunters armed with powerful weapons under their control.

The cities of the eastern district, the corporations that were in control of those cities, and the Corporate Government that controlled those corporations, all of them were doing all kinds of things to maintain order in the eastern district. There were times when they made use of the Hunter Office to threaten the Hunters so that they would not get ahead of themselves and go on a rampage in the eastern district.

They sometimes had to reason with the Hunters and reminded them to keep their behaviours in check, or some other time, they had to convince some Hunters to not wreak havoc. There were even cases where they had to act as arbitrator between 2 Hunters in conflict or offer certain benefits to persuade certain Hunters. Or if nothing worked, they sometimes blatantly threatened Hunters to just stop. But the City Management would only do these kinds of things if they saw that those Hunters could be reasoned with.

As for those Hunters who could not be reasoned with, the City Management saw them as equal to monsters. Those Hunters were treated as threats against the public order in the eastern district, usually a bounty would be put for their heads and they would be killed by other Hunters.

Being recognized as someone that could be reasoned with was a very important thing in the eastern district where most of the people knew how to fight and powerful weapons were freely distributed around.

Although no one could tell what kind of effect it would bring if Drankam informed the Hunter Office that Elena was a Hunter who would only make one-sided demands and would not listen to other people, it was obvious that it would bring some level of harm toward her.

Most of the Hunters in Kugamayama city already knew that Drankam was deepening its relationship with Kugamayama City Management. So of course, Elena also knew about that too. Thus Maeda lightly threatened Elena there hoping that it would ease her demand.

But then Elena stoically said.

“You can go ahead and do whatever you want. But don’t you forget that I’ll also explain to the City Management why the negotiation with Drankam side ended up in failure. I'm pretty sure that they can understand my reason, that's why, if it's possible, I hope you can just let me negotiate directly with the City Management."

Elena did not waver at all. Maeda who saw that put both of his hands on his face in frustration. Elena herself knew that Maeda was also stuck in a difficult position, but that did not mean that she should lower her demand just because of that.

"By the way, just to let you know, you're the one who suddenly butted in when I was negotiating with the City Management in the first place, you know? So I have no reason to play nice with you."

"We've been giving you requests through Drankam. Although it doesn't mean that you have the duty to accept all of our demands, you can at least make some compromises, can't you?"

Elena's face turned slightly irritated.

"You've used that favour entirely in the last request that you gave us. To be more precise, although we've agreed on it in the contract, we did not make any complaint when you cut a big part of our reward money last time."

Elena thought that she was keeping her poker face and that she was calmly assessing the situation, but in reality, her face was slightly changed and a part of her real feeling was starting to leak out, Maeda also noticed that.

Maeda was using a glasses-type information terminal. That information terminal was connected to Drankam's server and was showing information about Elena on its transparent display. To be more precise, Maeda was looking at Elena's request history.

Maeda picked the last request that Elena accepted and checked its detail. The record also contained the subject about the reward cut too. But it only said that both sides agreed on that reward cut and there was no problem with it at all.

[…What the heck is with this ‘no problem at all’, this is one heck of a problem, isn’t it? Who the f*ck wrote this report… Mizuha? That new officer who just got promoted from the administration department, huh? She’s an officer now though, is she that stupid as to write ‘no problem at all’ here? Or is it that someone from the other faction overwrote the report? Seriously though, I really hope they would stop roping me into this infighting problem between factions. It’s really making my job difficult. Wrong information like this is really fatal during negotiation.]

Although Maeda was a member of Drankam, he did not belong to either faction. To be more precise, he was more of a neutral faction, and this faction chose to keep itself from getting involved in the infighting.

[With more infighting inside the gang, more negotiations are happening lately. Most of the negotiators are ending up arbitrating among Hunters inside the gang, and so, fewer negotiators are available for negotiating with people outside the gang. Good grief, I really hope they would do something about this… Whoah. This is not the time to worry about that, I need to do something about this negotiation first.]

Maeda shook off his irritation while still lamenting how he got roped into such an annoying situation.

Drankam side could not afford to accept Elena’s demand. After all, Elena was not the only Hunter that Drankam had to negotiate with. If the other Hunters discovered that Drankam accepted Elena’s demand, they would use that information to demand more rewards too.

But with that being said, Drankam could not afford to have the negotiation break down there and let Elena negotiate directly with the City Management. Drankam was the one who used its connection with the City Management to butt in when Elena was negotiating with the City Management, as such, if he reported back to the City Management that he failed, there was no mistaking it that the City Management would lower its evaluation of Drankam.

But the more time he spent trying to reach a deal there, the worse the evaluation from the City Management would be.

Maeda, who had no idea what to do there, shifted his gaze from Elena to Carol. Although he was sure that Elena had the last say there, since Carol was sitting next to her, Carol might be able to somehow affect the direction of the current negotiation. Thus in order to change the mood, Maeda turned to Carol and spoke to her.

“Carol-san too, I’m sure you don’t think it’s a good idea to be stuck in this place forever, right? If we keep being stubborn here, no one would win, it’ll only bring trouble to both of us, yes?”

Carol was still smiling as she asked Maeda a question.

“In that case, can you at least tell us how Drankam organizes its Hunters and who will take the responsibility for making the plan?”

“…Will it even make any difference if we tell you?”

“You won’t then?”

“Like I said, it won’t make any difference, right?”

“It’s part of making compromises, no? If the one who will take command is a skilled and experienced Hunter, then we, as the Hunters who might be working under that Hunter, would feel safer, right? I want you to understand that we asked that much rewards since we feel uneasy about that part.”

“Are you saying that you can’t trust the leader that Drankam picks?”

“I won’t go that far though, but like, you know, a lot of Hunters are trapped inside the Seranthal building because of the last request that Drankam issued, right? I heard that it was enough to cause panic among the insurance companies.”

“So you’re saying that it’s Drankam’s fault? No matter how you look at it, no one could have predicted something like this would happen, yes?”

“It’s not like I’m saying that Drankam is at fault here. But, I want you to understand when we say that Seranthal building is a really dangerous place.”

“It’s exactly because we know it’s a dangerous place that we’re forming a big Hunter squad in order to save those Hunters inside the Seranthal building. We’re asking the other Hunters to work under the same leader here to prevent them from moving independently and cause trouble during the operation. I’m sure you can understand that too from reading the detail of the request.”

“We do understand that point. That’s why I’m asking you who will take the lead of the squad. If we know that the one taking the lead is a competent Hunter, we can feel safer following the orders from that Hunter. And if it’s someone that I know, I can also more or less predict that person’s commanding skill. Which in that case, I can explain to Elena and I maybe can even convince her too. That way, Elena might be willing to lower her demand and we might be able to finally find a compromise that we both can accept. Do you understand why I asked you that question now?”

After she said that, Carol threw a smile at Maeda. Maeda understood well that he was in a disadvantageous position there as he was barely able to react to her reasoning.

“….Yes.”

“I’m glad to hear that, so, will you tell us now?”

After Carol said that, Maeda suddenly went silent. Carol understood the situation that Maeda was in as she smiled at him and said.

“If you won’t tell me, I won’t be able to say anything to Elena, you know?”

Maeda hesitated.

“…We haven’t decided yet.”

“I don’t mind if it’s just a guess. If you can tell us of any particular person or any particular faction that might get chosen, it’s at least better than nothing.”

“…We’re still in the middle of discussing that.”

Maeda sounded as if he just forced himself to say that and he immediately hung his head low for a bit after he said that.

Carol was really happy that she got the answer that she was hoping for, but she did not show that on her face, instead, she made a rather troubled face and said to Maeda.

“I’m sure Drankam also understands the importance of this request since it came from the City Management, right? And I’m sure Drankam also understands very well that it should decide on the leader as soon as possible, right? If you guys can’t decide on the leader even in this situation, I can’t help but feel worried about your commanding skill. If you think the reward Elena demanded is to compensate for the danger that this request might cause us, then unfortunately enough, I don’t think that Elena’s demand is unreasonable at all.”

After listening to what Carol said, Maeda let out a long sigh. A part of him actually agreed with Elena and Carol’s reasoning. But, due to his position, he could not express it.

Maeda then complained inside his heart.

[…Ahh, I can’t take this. I don’t have anything that I can use to convince them. To hell with this, I’ll just let them negotiate directly with the City Management. I’m sure the upper echelons would make some complaints later, but it’s their fault in the first place for taking too long. It has nothing to do with me, it’s not my fault.]

Honestly speaking, Maeda was actually a dutiful person. But there was a limit to how far he could keep going. The infighting between the people in the upper echelons caused trouble to his job and he also agreed with some arguments that the other party was making, so he concluded that if he stubbornly tried to continue the negotiation there, it would be nigh impossible to achieve his original aim. It really lowered his motivation and caused him to start considering just letting Elena negotiate directly with the City Management.

From that sudden change in Maeda's behaviour, Carol immediately noticed that Maeda had given up on the negotiation. She then smiled at Maeda and said.

"This might be unrelated, but I think it's a bad idea not doing anything until the main squad is formed. At the very least, you guys could have sent some smaller squads ahead, yes?"

Maeda looked confused there for a moment, he tried to think what was the meaning behind those words before he said anything back.

"…Are you telling me that we should use you as a reconnaissance team and send you ahead in order to prevent the City Management from bothering us for the time being? Even if you said that to me, I have no right to say anything about the strategy used in this operation. And even if I have that right, that would be the decision that Drankam should make as a whole, not me alone. I can't let your team go for something like that, after all, we need you to join the main squad since there are not that many Hunters in Drankam who are skilled enough to be dispatched to Seranthal building. Not to mention, I'm sure only those Hunters who have something to complain about this chain of command would want to join that reconnaissance squad. In the first place, we don't have Hunters to spare for that squad, or at least, I can't spare you any Hunters to form such a squad."

Carol smiled mischievously.

"So basically, we can do that if we have someone who has a say on the strategy used by Drankam, or at least someone who has some connections with the upper echelons in Drankam, right?"

"…Well, that would be true, but…"

Maeda looked a bit confused.

Carol then pulled out her information terminal and called someone. The person that she was calling almost immediately picked up her call.

"Carol, what now? You should know well that I'm really busy, right?"

It was Shikarabe, he sounded like he was in a really bad mood, but in contrast to him, Carol replied in a good mood.

“Oh my, I called you thinking that I might be able to help you, you know… Are you sure you’re okay treating me like this?”

“What do you mean?”

“I’m actually looking for more Hunters so that we can take that request from the City Management as an individual team though. I’m sure you’re also having a hard negotiation over there, right? I bet that you’re in a panic right now since at this rate you’ll get assigned to work under that Katsuya guy, right?”

After Carol said that, there was a few seconds of silence. From that silence, she confirmed that her guess was correct.

Shikarabe’s calm voice then could be heard from Carol’s information terminal.

“…Why do you think so?”

“Hah?”

Shikarabe could not help but to leak out his real feeling there with that reaction. Hearing that, Carol then giggled and continued.

“The request from the Kugamayama City Management is basically issued to the Hunters who successfully hunted the bounty monsters not too long ago. But then I bet that because of some reason, those Hunters who were in your team when you hunted the bounty monster could not come to the Mihazono ruin at the moment. After all, if that was not the case, you would have picked those Hunters and already formed a team with them instead. I bet you’re trying to find replacements for those Hunters but you still can’t find enough people at the moment, right? After all, if you did, you would have been dispatched to Seranthal building by now. And if you’re already heading to the Seranthal building, it would mean that the operation is already underway and you would not be roped into the infighting inside the Drankam about who should take the lead of the squad, which would mean that you would not have picked my call, right? But you did not ignore my call. Since you can't go with the same team that you were together with during the bounty hunt, Drankam must be trying to get you into another team, for example, another team that also has successfully hunted a bounty monster too. And then, that exact team that's also already in Mihazono ruin right now is the team that Katsuya leads. Since Drankam cannot afford to keep dragging out the request from the City Management, I bet that the officers from Drankam are pressuring you to join Katsuya's team, right?"

Shikarabe went silent again after Carol said that.

Carol's guess was completely correct. The upper echelons in Drankam were pressuring Shikarabe to join Katsuya's team.

The only thing that Carol got wrong was Shikarabe's actual plan. Carol thought that as this situation continued, Shikarabe would eventually break under the pressure from Drankam and join Katsuya's team.

But in reality, Shikarabe had no plans to join Katsuya's team no matter what. If his only option was to join Katsuya's team, he would rather accept that request from the City Management and head to Seranthal building alone. But of course, he wanted to avoid that if it could be helped, that was why Shikarabe was looking for more personnel for his team.

Shikarabe then sighed as if he just gave up there, he then annoyedly asked a question to Carol.

"Yeah yeah, you got that right. I'm more or less in that situation right now. So then, how are you going to help me out? I'm super busy right now, so I won't take any stupid ideas, okay? So then, tell me what do you have in mind."

It was not like Carol brought that subject to Shikarabe because she wanted to help him out. Shikarabe himself knew that very well, he also knew how dangerous it was to get indebted to Carol. But he thought that it was way better than working under Katsuya, thus he decided to take Carol's offer.

Carol then explained her idea to him, Shikarabe registered that plan inside his head and analyzed it. He was not pondering whether to take her suggestion or not, he was pondering if it was possible or not. He then finally reached a conclusion.

"Alright. I'll convey that to one of the officers in Drankam who might agree with your plan. Tell whoever negotiator that you're talking with right now to let you talk with an officer from Drankam by the name of Arabe."

"Okay, later then."

Carol then ended the call and asked Elena.

"I ended up pushing the negotiation without your permission though, is that okay?"

Elena at least did not show any displeasure as she said.

"It's alright. I have nothing to complain about with your suggestion."

Elena's main goal was actually to avoid working under Drankam since it might get her in the same situation as the previous time when she accepted that request to hunt the bounty monster. Back then, not only did Elena and Sara have to cover for the rest of the team, they were even insulted for being useless and got their reward cut. Moreover, if things were to happen again this time, it would not only affect her and Sara, but it would also affect Akira and Carol too. That was why Elena refused to step back.

Of course, Drankam had its own indicators that it used to evaluate Sara and Elena, and it seemed that Elena and Sara's performance during that request was far below what Drankam was expecting from them. So from Drankam's point of view, it was simply that they had no other choice but to do what they did.

But if that difference was a fatal one, it would have been better if both of them stopped working with each other. It would have been better if Drankam hired other Hunters who could accept the evaluation that Drankam gave.

While at the same time, although it was not like Elena did not feel anything when Carol just pushed the negotiation without her permission, thanks to that, Elena was able to fulfil her main goal. So she had no complaints about it.

Carol smiled a bit smugly to Elena and said.

“Is it okay if I take it that it was worth it taking me with you here?”

Although Elena was a bit bothered by the way Carol was acting, she then said.

“…? Well, you’re right, you’re a big help. Thanks to you, it seems that we can avoid getting roped into a troublesome situation.”

“Can you please tell that to Akira too?”

“Sure, but can you tell me why you want me to do that?”

“It’s to increase my value in his eyes since he’s the one hiring me at the moment. Since I’ve been useful, it’s normal for me to want to let my employer know that I did well, right? After all, if Akira knows that I’m useful, he might pay me a lot of money later. So, will you do that for me?”

Although there was something that was still bothering Elena, she also understood that Carol had a good point there. In the first place, it was exactly because Elena did not agree with the evaluation that Drankam had about her that she did not want to negotiate with Drankam this time.

“…Sure… I’ll properly convey that to Akira.”

Carol smiled as she thought that it would leave a better impression on Akira if he heard it from Elena instead of hearing that from Carol herself.

As Akira was waiting for Elena and Carol together with Sara, he suddenly received a call from Carol. The same also happened to Sara, except that it was from Elena.

Akira opened his information terminal and accepted the call. When he did that, Carol's happy voice could be heard coming out from his terminal.

"Akira, just want to let you know that we did pretty well over here, I'll tell you the details of the request later. I did my best to get a deal that you might like, you know."

"I see."

Since Akira only reacted rather flatly, Carol once again gave her report again, but this time she put more pressure to make sure that Akira was listening to her.

"…I properly did my job during the negotiation and got a deal that Elena is also satisfied with. If you think that I'm lying, you should ask Elena once we group up."

To be honest, Akira was actually not doubting Carol. He was a bit weirded out by the reaction from Carol as he thanked Carol.

“…? It’s not like I’m doubting you though. Thank you, you’re a big help.”

“You’re welcome. We’ll be waiting in the parking lot near the Hunter Office, can you pick us up together with Sara?”

“Alright, we’ll head there soon.”

Akira closed the call and returned back to his vehicle. Sara also got more or less the same report from Elena. Both of them then headed to the Hunter Office to pick up Elena and Carol.

Carol made a conflicted expression as she closed her call with Akira and stared at her information terminal. Judging from that short exchange, she was able to confirm that she scored some points to get closer to Akira. That in itself was well under her expectation and she was happy that she was finally able to make some progress.

But, during that conversation, Akira’s reaction was completely different when Carol brought up Elena too. To be more precise, Akira showed more interest in Elena’s situation rather than his own situation. Or at least, that was what Carol could catch from that short exchange.

[It seems that Akira really cares for Elena. From what I can gather from Shikarabe, it doesn’t sound like Akira has any reason to like Elena that much though… As I thought, I won’t be able to know the reason unless I directly ask either Akira or Elena, huh. But I feel like Akira would just try to play innocent if I ask him, either that, or I feel like Akira himself actually has no idea why he’s that invested either. Which means…]

Carol glanced at Elena. Personally speaking, she was better at extracting information from guys, but she had no other options in this case. The real problem was whether she had enough time to do that or not. Akira and Sara would arrive there soon and it would be better if she did not bring that up during the operation. And she did not know if she would have the time to ask Elena and Sara after the operation was done.

[…I guess I need to be more useful so that he would invite me again next time, huh. We're going to head to the Seranthal building after this, it's a dangerous building that the City Management even decided to gather Hunters who successfully hunted the bounty monster to send to that building. Although this is not out of our own volition, we're going to head to such a dangerous place together. I'm sure that it would at least get us close even if it's only for a bit.]

As Carol thought so, she remembered that she almost got killed the last time she was in that building.

[Well, let's focus on returning back alive for now.]

Being a Hunter meant risking one's life for money. But even so, it was not like those Hunters expected themselves to get killed. If it was possible, they wanted to at least have the right to decide when and where to die. Carol reminded herself of the dangerous place that she was going to head to from now on and pulled herself together.

After they grouped up, they then went to the city district of the Mihazono ruin. Since the Hunter Office had secured the area, they did not get to meet any monsters.

Elena already gave a detailed explanation about the current request right after they grouped up. Their main job this time was to scout the Seranthal building and check the inside of the building before the main squad that still had not fully established yet was dispatched there.

The composition of the team was the same as this morning. Akira, Carol, Elena, Sara, Shikarabe, and Togami. The only difference was that the leader of the team changed from Elena to Shikarabe.

But that was only for formality since it was a request that came from Drankam. On the paper, Shikarabe could not bring Varga and Yamanobe who were also present when they defeated the Tank Tarantula, thus, he was given other personnel to replace Varga and Yamanobe.

So in reality, the leader of that team was still Elena. Shikarabe used his connection with Arabe, an officer in Drankam, to convince Drankam's side so that he was allowed to do that.

With this, Elena had the highest say on what the team would do inside Seranthal building. But that did not mean they could not just leave Seranthal building without her consent. As in matter of fact, the other Hunters could freely explore the building and decide to retreat anytime they felt that they were in danger.

Akira looked around his surroundings while driving his vehicle.

The road leading to Seranthal building was cleaned of rubbles and wreckages so the main squad that would be sent later could quickly reach Seranthal building. He could see humanoid robots moving heavy rubbles and wreckages off the road. It was a scene that would make people who had an interest in robots to watch them cleaning the road for a while. But, Akira had no interest in such a thing at all.

Akira made a rather stern face when he suddenly said.

"…So, this is why we didn't encounter any monsters this morning when we went to that empty building, huh?"

The main road heading to Seranthal building was protected by walls so that monsters would not block the road. Those walls were tall and looked pretty durable, there were also some tanks and humanoid soldiers stationed around those walls as well as armed soldiers.

Carol who was sitting next to Akira expressed his agreement with what he just said.

"It seems that since most of the monsters in Mihazono ruin gathered around the Seranthal building, there are not that many monsters roaming in the other locations, huh. And it seems that a fierce battle is also still in progress around that building even now, I can understand why the City Management decided to dispatch Hunters who had the experience of hunting bounty monster."

Most of the tanks present were shooting at monsters. The warheads released by those tanks accurately hit the monsters, exploded, and turned those monsters into a new pile of wreckage.

While the humanoid weapons were pushing the medium-sized monsters back using their huge weapons that they were carrying, countless bullets rained down on those monsters and shredded them to pieces.

As for the armed soldiers, they were using the wall to shield themselves from the monsters while shooting back at those monsters focusing more on the small monsters that were hiding behind the wreckages and rubbles.

Akira looked at the ongoing battle around him and frowned, he then mumbled.

"…Are we really going to be okay?"

Akira skipped most of the details in his question there, but Carol immediately answered that question while looking relaxed.

"I think that it'll be alright. Looking at the current situation, I'm sure that the defence line will still hold while we're scouting the inside of Seranthal building and I'm sure that this road won't be filled with monsters on our way back from that building. Although the squad dispatched by the City Management was hard-pressed to secure the road to the Seranthal building, once the supply route is also secured, they should be able to hold out just fine for the time being."

The equipment used by the squad securing the road to Seranthal building were mostly transported from the Hunter Office parking lot through the road leading to Seranthal building that they just secured. As long as this route was secured, the Hunter Office should be able to sustain its upper hand for the time being.

"Not to mention, they're also planning to send the main squad later, so I'm sure they'll keep this road secured. So as long as nothing really bad happens, I'm sure they'll be able to secure this road while we scout the Seranthal building."

As Akira looked at the squad guarding the main road, he thought that they indeed looked exceptionally powerful. He then mumbled.

“Isn’t it faster if they just send in these people rather than waiting for a squad of Hunters?”

Carol smiled bitterly as she looked at Akira who found such a thing to be weird.

“Well, I’m sure that one of the reasons is because they can’t bring along their tanks and humanoid weapons inside that building. But more than that, I’m sure that it’s a matter of cost.”

“Cost?”

“Yep. The real problem would be the cost, it’s basically cheaper to just hire us, Hunters. It’s only my guess but I think that squad is a part of the city defence squad. So I’m sure some of them are from the inner wall. Those people from the inner wall should have gone through a certain level of education before they went through extra training and were sent to the outside of the inner wall. Basically, they already spent a lot of money from the day they were born. So if the City Management sends them to somewhere as dangerous as Seranthal building and gets them killed, it would inflict a huge economic loss for the city. Not to mention, if they have families, then the City Management needs to pay for the annuity. And if they have insurance, the city should pay for that too. I can’t even imagine how much money the city would lose if the city opts to send those people.”

Seeing how Carol said that while lightly smiling, Akira sighed and said.

“So basically that’s because it’s way cheaper to send us, huh. And the rewards that they have to pay for us which is a pretty big sum of money from our point of view is relatively small compared to the amount of money that the City Management might lose if they send the city defence squad.”

“Yep, basically that’s the gist of it. If I have to add anything, that might be also the reason why they don’t pay that much attention to Seranthal building until now. There are many ghost stories in Mihazono ruin that are related to Seranthal building, then there are many Hunters who lost their lives in this ruin which I bet is also because of Seranthal building. This ruin might turn safer if they just destroy that building, but they don't do that since it means that they'll lose all the old-world relics inside that building. It's understandable that they have no plans to kill the goose that might give them golden egg, and even if that goose becomes a monster that kills everyone around it, as long as it keeps producing golden eggs, it's highly unlikely that they would kill it."

Akira was making a conflicted face as he sighed.

"… Well, it's true that Hunters only risk their lives going to wasteland if only they know that it's worth it."

Akira understood that reasoning and even agreed with a part of it. If the Corporate Government decided to destroy that building, there would be opposition coming from the people who were getting profits from that place. But even so, there was also a part of it that Akira could not help but to feel bothered with, and that showed in his face.

Carol giggled and said.

"If you don't like how they treat you as if your life is worthless, you should work hard to increase the value of your life."

"To be more precise, what do you think I should do?"

"You can just keep on making more money. This is the eastern district, and we are Hunters. If you are alive, you can make so much money, to the point that the Corporate Government would not want to lose someone like you, and if you become strong enough to be able to make that much money, the Corporate Government would be more careful dealing with you, both for the better or for the worse."

Akira smiled bitterly.

"I still have a long way to go, huh."

“That’s just how it goes, especially for us, Hunters. Since we work by risking our life, so risking our lives alone is not enough to make others respect us. We need to keep showing results and obtain enough money worth risking our lives. And of course, the more money that we gather, the higher the value of our lives.”

Akira understood what Carol was saying. He also agreed with what she said. But he could not just laugh it off like Carol.

“Seriously, that sounds really rough.”

Alpha smiled and said.

“Don’t worry, it’ll be fine. You have my support and around the time you complete my request, you’ll be strong enough that the Corporate Government won’t be able to treat your life as worthless. Basically, you just need to get strong enough and everything will be solved. So just leave it to me.”

“…You’re right about that, I’ll be counting on you.”

Although Akira felt that what Alpha said there was not exactly about the same subject that he was talking about, he still calmly replied with that.

The squad around the Seranthal building formed an encirclement with the Seranthal building in the centre. They erected some kind of line of defence to make sure that no monsters would be able to get inside that encirclement as well as to make sure that the monsters coming out from the inside of that building would not escape the encirclement.

As Elena and her team approached one of those squads, a soldier waved at them and signalled them to stop. And when they did, that soldier approached the front-most vehicle.

The front-most vehicle was Shikarabe’s. This time Shikarabe did not come with his APC, instead, he was driving another wasteland vehicle just like Akira and Sara. A huge Drankam mark was painted on the side of Shikarabe’s vehicle.

Shikarabe then said to that soldier.

“We’re the reconnaissance team sent to Seranthal building, let us pass.”

“They already told us about your team. I’m sorry but can you proceed by legs? This defensive wall takes a lot of time to set up, close, and open. You can park your vehicles over there.”

After listening to that soldier’s explanation, Shikarabe made a stern face. The defensive wall installed in that place was not the same as the defensive wall that his team went through this morning. It was a stronger defensive wall that did not even have an opening for a vehicle to go through.

“Is this area that dangerous that you guys have no other choice but to use this defensive wall?”

“No idea. But after the Seranthal building is secured, we were told to use that building as the second base in this ruin. So you guys can think of this defensive wall as the defensive wall for that second base.”

“With so many of you guys around, isn’t it faster if you guys go ahead and at least secure the first floor of that building?”

That soldier obviously looked slightly annoyed as he said.

“Give us a break, will you? Even if it’s an order from the people from above, I have no plans to go to a place where the City Management even opted to dispatch Hunters who successfully killed a bounty monster in the past, you know. That’s your job in the first place, isn’t it? So don’t just throw that on us.”

Those soldiers were actually dispatched by private military contractors in Kugamayama city, they were not a part of the city’s defence squad, and they were not Hunters like Akira and Shikarabe, who regularly hunted for relics in the wasteland. They were basically people who specialize only in guarding bases and similar facilities.

And those people looked at Hunters with fear and awe.

Their impression of the Hunters was not wrong. But in order to attain such an impression on the Hunters, they had to get enough education, which meant that they must have lived their lives in safety up until now and had spent a lot of money for that education. Some people who could not afford such a luxury would turn into Hunters, then slowly get used to the dangers that they faced every day and distorted their sense of danger, which in turn would give them an excuse to face even more danger.

From another point of view, it was not wrong to say that the Hunters were the gathering of those people with a broken sense of danger. Moreover, from those soldiers' point of view, the Hunters who went to hunt the bounty monsters out of their own volitions were the craziest among the crazy. So, from their point of view, Akira, Shikarabe, Elena, Sara, and the rest of the Hunters there were basically the craziest among the crazy Hunters. And strictly speaking, they were not wrong to think that way.

Shikarabe explained the situation to the other Hunters, they then decided to walk toward Seranthal building.

After they finished their preparation and walked past through a small opening on the encirclement net, one of the soldiers who saw them off said to another soldier.

"…They're bringing two boys with them though, but all of them are the Hunters who successfully killed a bounty monster, right?"

"I bet they're from Drankam. I'm sure you heard about it too right that there's a young boy who is exceptionally skilled in that gang, I heard that boy had successfully hunted a bounty monster. So one of them might be that boy."

"Ahh, now that you mention it, I did hear about that too. I guess that must be the one with that expensive-looking equipment, but then who is the other boy?"

"No idea. It doesn't really matter anyway. That aside, I really want to go back to the city. Why in the world did we get dispatched to this place?"

“I heard that some big-shot from the City Management is scheduled to visit the Seranthal building for negotiation or something. So we’re here basically to make sure that it’s safe, and that’s why they’re doing anything that they can to secure that building and to even make that building a second base if it’s possible.”

“Are they seriously thinking of doing something like that in this situation?”

“Yep, they’re thinking of doing something like that even in this situation. So in order to make sure that their plan would go smoothly and that big-shot won’t get killed, they send more soldiers than they normally would, and we’re basically a part of that operation.”

“I don’t know how great that Mr big-shot is, but he’s a real pain in the neck. The ruin is more dangerous than usual at the moment, that guy should have postponed his plan or something.”

“If I’m not mistaken, he’s the head of the long-term strategic department, Yanagisawa, was it again? Well, judging from our situation, he’s basically that great of a guy so the Corporate Government can’t say no to him.”

“Good grief, I really hope those people in the upper echelons can understand our suffering in the field.”

They then continued complaining about the guy who was the main reason why they were dispatched there while kept on the watch.

After passing through the encirclement net, Elena’s team carefully approached the Seranthal building. There were wreckages of dead monsters and corpses of the dead Hunters scattered around the area that they had walked through. Once they reached the building’s entrance and confirmed that no monsters were spawning out from the entrance, they finally stepped their feet inside of the Seranthal building.

The first floor of the Seranthal building was basically a big atrium hall with some receptionist desks. Akira looked around the hall and tilted his head. The inside of the hall was unnaturally clean. Although there were some bullet holes in the ceilings and walls as well as some rubbles scattered inside the hall, there were neither dead monsters nor dead Hunters.

While they were exploring the inside of the building, Alpha suddenly said to Akira.

“Akira, I’m sorry but I need to leave you for a bit.”

“Eh?”

“Don’t worry, I’ll be back right away. I don’t detect any monsters around either, so there’s nothing to worry about.”

After she said that, Alpha’s image immediately vanished from Akira’s views.

“Alpha?”

There was no response when Akira called for her. Akira could also feel that his augmented suit suddenly felt heavier and the reading coming from his information-gathering device also slightly worsened. Those two proved that he had lost Alpha’s support.

Akira could feel nervousness creeping up inside him.

[…Calm down. She said that there are no monsters around and she’ll be back soon. It’ll be alright, just calm down.]

Akira tried to slowly take a deep breath to calm himself down. The current Akira had the ability to analyze his current situation in order to calm down his nerves.

The other Hunters noticed that slight change, but since they already heard that Akira almost got killed the last time he went to Seranthal building, they thought that he got nervous since he had to visit Seranthal building again.

Elena then gave an order to her team.

“According to what I heard from Akira and Carol, the sensitivity of our information-gathering device might decrease down as we go deeper into the building. So make sure to keep your eyes on your information-gathering device, check if the reading starts getting worse, make sure that it’s still connected to my information-gathering device. Since I also heard that even the local connection might also get affected, you might lose connection with the other information-gathering device if the signal gets pretty bad. And lastly, check that you can still see the map of Seranthal building and the location of the other Hunters in your information-gathering device.”

Akira could see the map of the Seranthal building displayed on his goggles as well as the scan result of his surroundings. It was the data that he received from Elena. They already set their information-gathering device to be able to exchange information with each other before they left the Hunter Office branch.

Akira then glanced at Carol, Carol was not using any equipment to display extra information. Akira found that weird, he then threw a question to Carol while pointing at his own goggle.

“Carol, are you sure you’re okay with not using anything?”

Carol smiled full of confidence and replied.

“My body is actually an enhanced body, so basically both of my eyes are also modified eyes. That’s why I don’t need to use such a thing.”

“Is that so?”

Akira stared deeply into one of Carol’s eyes. Carol smiled proudly while staring back at Akira.

“…It looks like normal eye though?”

“Well, that’s because it’s made of a certain nanomaterial that imitates biological tissue. So, what do you think? It’s pretty amazing, isn’t it?”

“Like I said, it looks like just normal eye.”

“Don’t you think that it has a different glisten or something?”

“…Now that you mention it, there might be some… No, I’m not really sure though? Hmmm.”

Akira made a long ‘hmm’. From the other point of view, it looked like Akira and Carol were staring deeply at each other.

“Akira, are you done with the checks?”

“Ah, right, sorry. I’m not done yet.”

Akira flusteredly answered back, he then remembered that Sara also had an enhanced body just like Carol. And he noticed that she was also not using goggles, just like Carol.

Like with Carol, Akira also asked the same question to Sara while pointing at his goggles.

“Sara-san, do you also don’t need to use goggles? It seems that Carol has both of her eyes modified.”

“Eh…? Ah, about that, huh? Elena and I are actually using this.”

As Sara finally understood Akira’s question, she then pointed at a hair ornament-like object that she was using. Akira who saw that tilted his head in confusion. Sara then smiled and explained.

“This is basically a mini display device. It’s projecting stereoscopic hologram images just a few millimetres in front of my eyes.”

Akira looked even more confused than before.

“Is it really okay to put that in Sara-san’s hair? It looks really unstable though? Won’t it cause the image to move a lot and hard to see?”

“It’s fine. The image itself doesn’t sway at all so it’s very easy to read the information projected in that image. And when it’s blocking my view, I can just simply move it outside my view too. It’s really convenient since I can control it with my sight.”

“What kind of technology do they use to make such a thing?”

“No idea. To be honest, I don’t know anything at all about the technology. But the manual says that it’s based on some kind of old-world technology. So I’m sure the researchers are doing their best to answer that exact same question.”

“I see.”

Akira’s expression changed from confusion to confirmation. To be more precise, he actually gave up pursuing that question any further. The old-world technology, that one sentence had the power to solve such a question in one go.

There were also other people who asked the same question as Akira and that was totally understandable. Even after the exceptionally talented people of the eastern district were brought up to spend their time studying such a thing, they still did not have enough knowledge to fully understand the mechanism behind it. That was what it meant to be an old-world technology.

The moment Akira heard the word hologram, it reminded him about the holographic girl that he saw the last time he came there. He once again scanned the whole hall, but he still did not spot that hologram.

“…She’s not here.”

Sara tilted her head and asked Akira.

“What’s wrong?”

“It’s just that I remembered something when you mentioned the word hologram.”

Carol immediately realized what Akira was talking about and scanned the area too.

Elena finally realized that Akira was looking for the A.I that managed that building. From the information that she gathered, a certain hologram would welcome anyone who entered that building. But she did not see anything like that at the moment.

“Seranthal, the A.I managing this building, huh? I was actually thinking that we might be able to gather some information from her about the current situation of the ruin. But it seems that we can’t do that, huh. Akira, don’t just stand there looking for that A.I, are you done with your checks yet?”

“J-Just a little bit more.”

Akira flusteredly returned his gaze back to this information terminal. Since Alpha was no longer around, he had no other choice but to do the adjustment manually. After testing a few settings, he understood well that it only worsened the reading, so he gave up and returned the setting back.

Shikarabe was still adjusting his information-gathering device when he suddenly asked Elena a question.

“By the way, how did you get this map of the interior of Seranthal building? This isn’t the data from Drankam, right? Did you get it yourself before coming here?”

Carol immediately interjected and answered Shikarabe’s question.

“That map is actually from me.”

Shikarabe looked a bit surprised.

“…Are you sure you’re okay with that? If it’s originally from you, it means that it’s from one of that information protected with a named license, so that you can’t share it freely, right? Don’t tell me that you’re planning to take everyone’s share of reward for yourself using this.”

Carol replied with an expression saying that she was offended by that remark.

“Oh my, that’s so rude of you to say that although I gave that data for free for the sake of everyone’s safety. Don’t you think so too, Akira?”

Akira was surprised when Carol suddenly roped him into that conversation.

“Eh? Ahh, well, it’s true that it’s great to have this map. Thanks.”

Shikarabe was still looking at Carol with a distrusting gaze as he said.

“My bad, I didn’t grow up in an environment where I can just trust free things given out of “pure kindness”. Moreover, I know just how precious the map of Seranthal building is and it’s not something that you can call cheap. Since when did you turn into a kind person?”

Akira also grew up in such an environment. So when Shikarabe pointed that out, he started to get suspicious too.

Carol noticed that slight change, so she immediately tried to explain her reasons to Shikarabe.

“Geez, that’s so rude of you. I’ll do at least that much to help someone who helped me to get out from a deadly situation in the past as well as his trusted friends too, you know. Well, if I really need to say something to convince you, it’s basically a map from when the ruin was still in a normal state. Not to mention, the old-world ruin often changes so suddenly in such a short time span. And even if the interior of the Seranthal building has not changed that much, it would not be strange that the interior of the building is changed after all the battles between the Hunters and the monsters that happened inside this building, you know. That’s why the price of that map from before the state in the ruin changed should have significantly lowered by now. Moreover, once the main squad that will come after us secures this building, I’m sure that they’ll release the latest version of the map. And when that happens, the value of this map will be lowered even more. That’s why I decided to just share it for free, do you understand it now?”

Carol was not speaking to Shikarabe in order to convince him, even Shikarabe knew that much. While on the other hand, Shikarabe also understood from there that no matter what she was scheming, Carol would not cause any trouble during that request.

Shikarabe basically had no interest as long as it would not cause any trouble for him. Thus, he signalled to Carol that he had no plans to pursue that question any further.

“… I see, I get it now, sorry for suspecting you.”

“It’s fine as long as you get it now.”

Shikarabe and Carol then smiled at each other as if they were talking through telepathy with each other and ended their conversation there.

The reason why Carol shared the map data was not only to make sure of her own safety, it was also for selling a favour to Elena and Sara as well as to win Akira’s trust. Thus, she could not afford to have Shikarabe messing up her scheme. That was why she said that to Shikarabe.

Carol then glanced at Akira, and as she planned, Akira did not seem to be suspicious of her any longer.

Elena then said to everyone, especially to Shikarabe.

“If you guys are done with the preparation, should we go now? And also, hold yourself from causing any unnecessary fight.”

“Sorry about that. I’m ready here, let’s go.”

Elena then looked at the other Hunters, Akira lightly nodded and signalled that he was ready too.

Akira renewed his resolve and tensed up his whole body. With Alpha still not around, he had no other choice but to rely on his own skill to follow Elena and the other veteran Hunters. He reminded himself to do his best as not to slow down the other Hunters.

“I’m back, were you missing me?”

Akira’s resolve was immediately wasted. Alpha appeared back in his view as she smiled mischievously at him.

If Akira had to be honest, he would have to answer Alpha’s question with a yes. So in order to avoid that, he instead asked Alpha a question.

“Where were you gone?”

“If it’s really not that important, don’t do that again. Where do you think I’m right now?”

“That’s not what I meant when I said that. It was at least something that demanded me to leave you for a while just to do it. I don’t mind telling you the detail, but in order to do that, I need to tell you all the applied conditions which will take about 30 hours of oral explanations, then I need to make sure that you understand it, then I’ll still need your permission after that. So, do you still want to know?”

“No thanks.”

“Thought so.”

Alpha smiled amusedly after getting the reaction that she already predicted from Akira.

Silavin: Such an obvious lie. Applied conditions? Why would you need all of that? He could just make it a ping pong conversation and ask only what he wants to know.

Elena’s team started exploring the interior of the Seranthal Building. They started from the first floor and slowly climbed up relying on the map data they got from Carol.

Inside the rooms and hallways, there were metal wreckages that might have been what was left of mechanical monsters, there were also bloodstains that might have been left by Hunters. The bullet holes and scorch marks scattered around the area seemed to be recent. All of these showed just how fierce was the battle that happened in the building. But even so, Elena and her team did not encounter any enemies at all.

When they reached the 5th floor, they found a room with a half-destroyed door. There were scorch marks from bullets around that door and there were traces of monsters trying to get into that door, chasing for the Hunters who must have run inside that room.

When Akira nodded without saying anything, they immediately got themselves ready to break into that room. They readied their rifles and matched their timings to make sure that there would not be any trouble if there were still monsters inside that room. They quickly broke into that room, scanned for enemies, and once they confirmed that there were no monsters inside, Akira sighed and lowered his rifle.

They actually had scanned the inside of the room using their information-gathering device before they went in. Although they did not detect any monsters, it might be simply because their information-gathering device could not detect them, thus, it did not guarantee that there were no monsters inside that room. If they lowered their guards just because their information-gathering device did not detect anything, they would eventually have to pay with their lives for doing something as foolish as that, even more so at the moment when the sensitivity of their information-gathering device was considerably lowered.

It was not like Akira had training on how to work in a team, but even so, as a Hunter with enough experience and skill, he should be able to judge what he should do by observing the other Hunters. And if he knew that, he should be able to judge how good the other Hunters were from how they reacted to the situation when they broke inside that room with no monsters inside.

So, judging from how they broke into that room, it was obvious that Akira had the least cooperative skill in that group. After all, he did not have enough training nor real-life experience to learn that skill.

Due to Alpha’s training, Akira’s ability to fight was indeed superior, but he was not skilled enough to work in sync with other skilled Hunters as skilled as Shikarabe and the others.

The only reason why Akira was not slowing the other Hunters down was simply because of his training and the support from Alpha.

Before they broke into that room, Akira could see the image of himself breaking into that room, where to position himself, where to aim his rifle the moment he broke in, and which direction he should check first. Even if he was not able to follow that guiding image, Alpha would forcefully move his body through his augmented suit.

But in reality, before he broke into that room, before he searched the hallways of the Seranthal building, even before he even stepped inside the Seranthal building, Akira actually had always been in the middle of his training. Because of that, from Elena and the others' point of view, Akira seemed to be at least skilled enough to not slow them down.

It was not impossible to see through Akira's real ability from the small deviation when he moved his aim or the small lag in his movements. But that would be nigh impossible except for those top Hunters from the frontline in the easternmost part of the eastern district. And of course, Togami who was there in order to reconfirm his own skill was not an exception.

After all, Togami, Shikarabe, Elena, Sara, and Carol were better Hunters than him. They indeed had higher Hunter Ranks than him, and Togami, who had his confidence shattered last time, confirmed that they were indeed above him when he saw how they moved during the search.

Akira's Hunter Rank was lower than Togami. But from his experience working with Akira during the bounty hunt and from observing his movements up until now, Togami also thought that Akira was definitely someone above him.

Togami looked at the other 5 Hunters with a conflicted expression. Although he was together with Hunters who were above him, rather than feeling safe, he was instead worried that this time he would not be able to get any conclusions again.

Elena checked the inside of that room, she then frowned and mumbled.

"…This is… Going pretty well… Really well."

Akira then asked Elena.

"What's wrong?"

"Hm? Well, it's nothing big. But, Akira, since we entered this building, did you see any dead Hunter or monster? I'm not talking about the small traces, I’m talking about whole wreckage or body.”

Akira did not remember seeing one. But he thought that it might be just because he missed them, so he decided to ask Alpha.

“Alpha, was there anything like that?”

“Nope.”

“No, I didn’t see them at all.”

Akira actually did not know what had been bothering Elena. But, if answering her question could clear that worry, he thought that he should at least answer it honestly. When Akira thought so, he chose to rely on Alpha rather than his vague memory.

Since Akira answered back so straightforwardly, Elena found that a bit amusing as she giggled.

Sara was smiling too as she said to Elena.

“I didn’t see any too, is there anything wrong with that?”

Shikarabe then asked Elena a question.

“In that case, let’s hear your guesses. Let’s start with why do you think we didn’t find any monsters?”

“Basically, I think that after the monsters killed all the Hunters inside this building, they went outside and fought the squads surrounding this building, then they got killed by those squads instead. And since the encirclement also prevents the monsters from the outside to get into the building, so the current Seranthal building is left with no monsters inside.”

This time it was Sara who asked Elena a question.

“Then why didn’t we find any dead Hunters?”

“The current Seranthal building is actually still active, thus the cleaning drones must have dumped them outside the building. Some of the dead monsters and Hunters outside the building might have come originally from here.”

Akira then said.

“I see, then why don’t we find any of those cleaning drones? And if they did clean the building, why did they leave some leftover wreckages and bloodstains?”

“They might have a fixed time to do the cleaning and they’re on standby right now. Or it might be because they’re actively avoiding us since they don’t have much fighting power. That also means that they somehow can ascertain our positions too. As for the leftover wreckages and bloodstains, it’s either because the cleaning drones haven’t cleaned them or it’s just because they need more time to clean all the small things since they prioritized cleaning the bigger ones first.”

Elena answered the other Hunters’ questions one by one. Akira and Togami were actually just simply asking questions that came up in their minds as they unconsciously lowered their guards. Their expressions were slightly relaxed. On the contrary, after Elena answered questions from Sara, Shikarabe, and Carol, the three of them did not lower their guard at all.

Shikarabe then asked another question.

“I see. That does make sense. If that’s the case, we should be able to continue the search without much trouble, but… What’s your bad take of this situation?”

Elena’s expression turned slightly stern.

“They’re in the middle of doing their best to kill us. The reason why we didn’t meet any enemies is because the A.I manager of this building has taken control of those monsters and that A.I is telling them to hold back for now to reserve their strength as they’re planning to attack us when they’re sure they can trap us and we have no chance to survive their attack. While the reason why we don’t see any dead Hunters is because they’re trying to lower our guard. After all, if we spot some dead Hunters, it’ll definitely get us to be more careful, which in turn might cause us to hesitate from going deeper. Moreover, if the cleaning drones made the building speckless, we might find that strange and instead makes us more vigilant too. That’s why they left the building not fully cleaned. Of course, leaving the building half cleaned like this is indeed strange, but it at least won’t make us retreat right away. Instead, it might even lure us in to investigate the reason behind that strangeness. I guess that’s the gist of it if I’m being pessimistic here.”

After listening to Elena’s answer, all the feeling of relief inside Akira’s heart was blown away.

Carol somehow managed to smile and said.

“Well, that does make sense too. So then, leader, what are we going to do from here? I know that you might don’t want to do it, but I hope you can bring something to bring us relief after telling us something that scary. There are 2 people here who faced death in this building yesterday, you know.”

Carol glanced at Akira, although she was smiling like usual, there was a slight trace of seductiveness in her smile.

Elena looked at Carol without saying anything for a few seconds as if she was trying to read something out of her.

Elena renewed the map that the others were looking at. Small points appeared on that map, those points traced their location starting from when they were on the first floor.

“These are the information coming from the mini information-gathering devices that I installed. These devices can communicate with each other and the end result is actively sent to me. Since the sensitivity of the information-gathering devices and the range of the short-range connection are lowered inside this building, I put quite a lot of these devices on our way here.”

Lines came out from each point and connected them to the other points near to them showing that they were actively connected to each other. While at the same time, it also showed that their communication and scan range was significantly lowered.

“To be honest, I want to install them all over the interior of this building, but I didn’t bring enough supply since we didn’t plan to come here in the first place and I didn’t have the time to resupply either. That’s why I only installed enough so that we can quickly secure our escape route.”

More points appeared on the map that the other Hunters were looking at, as if it was trying to cover the whole building with those points, it then showed the number of extra devices that they would need if they wanted to do that in red. After that, those extra points vanished.

“If these devices pick up anything that threatens our escape route, we will retreat. If not, we will continue to search the building until I run out of these small information-gathering devices. Of course, we’ll also adapt to the situation and retreat if it gets too dangerous.”

The human-like images that indicated everyone’s position in that map then moved up the building while leaving dots on their way up. After that, those images immediately returned back to the first floor when one of the dots turned red.

“Even if the monsters really gathered somewhere upstairs, these information-gathering devices will quickly detect them if they go down to the lower floors and try to ambush us. And with how wide the hallways are in this building, we should be able to limit the number of monsters trying to pass through them, and I believe that we should have enough firepower to force a way out from this building.”

Extra images appeared on the map that represented monsters, then the indicators that represented the Hunters there started retreating back while using the layout of the hallways inside that building to reduce the number of monsters that they were fighting at the same time.

Elena then finished her explanation with that map as that map immediately returned back to its original state.

Akira looked at that map while closely listening to Elena’s explanation.

“As I thought, having someone who specializes in analyzing information really makes things easy to understand.”

“That might be true, but honestly speaking, I think it should have been enough to use only words for that level of explanation. I bet Elena deliberately used that map to help you understand.”

After listening to Alpha’s reaction, Akira tried to sound strong as he said.

“…It’s not like I wouldn’t understand if she didn’t do that though I just meant that it really makes such an explanation easy to understand.”

“Is that so? Well, I’m sure there will be many occasions where Elena would explain her plan only with words in the future, so I believe that you would understand them with no problem, right?”

“…I’m sorry, I hope that you would help me when that happens.”

“Of course.”

Alpha giggled when Akira just easily gave up trying to look strong.

Elena then threw a smile at Carol and said.

“…This is basically the gist of my plan though, so, how is it? If you have anything you want to say, there’s no need to hold back. After all, I have no plans to ignore the opinion of someone who had experienced fighting inside this Seranthal building.”

Carol once again glanced at Akira to check on him. After she confirmed that Akira did not seem to have anything to complain about, she then smiled at Elena and expressed her appreciation.

“I’m good with that plan. I’m glad to hear that it seems there’s no need to worry too much as we continue exploring this ruin. As expected of someone that Akira trusts so much, it seems that you’re pretty skilled in leading an indoor battle too. It’s just that I only saw your skill in leading battle outside yesterday, so I was a bit worried. I’m sorry if I offended you.”

“It’s fine, don’t worry. That’s normal since we are basically trusting our lives to each other in this situation, and I do think that confirming stuff like that is indeed important. I’m glad that you’re happy with my plan.”

Elena and Carol were smiling at each other while trying to hide the strange impression that they were actually talking about 2 different things there. Sara smiled bitterly, Shikarabe just ignored it thinking that it had nothing to do with him, Togami was too nervous that he did not notice it, and Akira there just tilted his head, it seemed that he did not understand what was going on.

They then continued searching the building. Just like Elena predicted, they did not encounter any monsters as they continued exploring further into the building.

There was no monster at all. The wall of Seranthal building blocked all kinds of information including sound, it might be to reduce the effectiveness of information-gathering devices inside that building, but thanks to that, the situation inside that building was completely quiet. It was as if the silence confirmed that there was no one else there except Elena and her team.

Akira continued searching the ruin following Alpha's instruction, it also doubled as training for Akira on how to explore a building.

"Say, Alpha. There's no monster at all though, which of Elena's guesses that you think is the correct one?"

"Which one do you think, Akira?"

"To be honest, I have no idea at all."

"That answer is actually the correct answer. If there's no need to make the choice, it's better not to make any when you don't have enough evidence. If you do, you will be more susceptible to information that supports your guess and you will be more likely to reject information that disproves it."

"Is that so?"

"Moreover, whichever the case, it would not change the things that you need to do. If the optimistic guess is correct, then this would be a good training for you. But if the pessimistic guess is correct, then you at least won't get ambushed. So don't lower your guard just because there are no monsters detected, and even if there's really no monsters around, let's continue carefully and take this training seriously."

"You're right about that… I actually didn't mean to lower my guard though. So like, did I actually lower my guard there?"

"According to what I can see, you're at least not that tense for someone who is exploring an unknown dangerous old-world ruin."

"Whoops, didn't mean to do that… Alright then, I'll be more careful."

Since he did not encounter any monsters, it seemed that Akira had lowered his guard enough for Alpha to warn him. So he collected himself together and continued the exploration.

Not too long after they reached the 15th floor, Elena suddenly told them to hold.

“Wait.”

Akira sharpened his sense and aimed his rifle at the hallway. The other Hunters also did the same almost immediately.

Elena kept her eyes on his information terminal as if she was trying to confirm something. Her expression then returned to normal as she drew a conclusion and said.

The other Hunters lowered their guard after hearing Elena’s answer. Sara then asked Elena.

“So, what was it?”

“Wait for a sec…”

After she said that, Elena checked the signal that was coming from a place not too far away from them. She then found a small mechanical device and picked it up. If that small device was mixed with the wreckages of the monsters, no one would be able to tell if that was not a part of the dead mechanical monster, but once it was picked up, it was easy to notice that it was not a part of a mechanical monster.

“…This one, huh?”

Elena mumbled as she looked at the small object that stopped them.

Akira looked at the object that Elena picked up with interest. It looked just like the small information-gathering device that Elena was using. But that was as far as his knowledge went, he did not know anything more than that.

Elena noticed Akira, she then showed the device in her hand and said.

“This seems to be a mini relay device. This one specializes in relaying information between Hunters around this device. When a team of Hunters explores an old-world ruin, they need to communicate and exchange information with the other Hunters of the same team who would be moving separately at that point, right? So this device is mostly used for something like that. It might also be used as signs so that they could retrace back their steps when they explore a dangerous ruin. It's also useful for the rescue team to track their location if they get stuck inside the ruin. And of course, some Hunters just leave it as a proof that he or she was able to reach such a dangerous location."

After listening to Elena's explanation, Akira nodded deeply. Elena lightly smiled when she saw how Akira reacted to her explanation, she then ordered her team.

"I'm sure it's left behind by the Hunters who came here before us. I'll analyze it for the time being, so wait for a bit."

Elena then started checking that mini information relay device. When she connected her information terminal to that device, the information from analyzing that device was immediately displayed through the same stereoscopic hologram display device that she and Sara were using.

Elena then continued analyzing the information that was displayed to her. Since she was the only one who could see that display, from the other point of view, it seemed as if she was only standing there while staring at the mini information relay device without doing or saying anything. Looking at that, Akira asked Alpha.

"Alpha, it seems to me like Elena-san is only standing there without doing anything though, but she's actually analyzing that device, right?"

"Yep, that's why you should not interrupt her."

"You don't even need to tell me that."

"By the way, it's not that different to when you talk to me, you know. Thanks to the fact that a lot of other Hunters are also using similar devices, people don't get suspicious of you when you do that though. And even if you suddenly turn your head to look at me, I'm sure that the other Hunters will only think that you're trying to see a similar type of display like the one that Sara and Elena are using."

“Is that so…?”

No one else could see Alpha other than Akira. Because of that, if he tried to talk normally to Alpha, it would look as if he was a suspicious person talking to air. Although Akira tried his best to hide it since he knew that himself, it seemed that as he expected, he was not able to completely hide it. So in short, he sometimes made a weird and suspicious move. Akira seemed a bit dejected after he got reminded about that.

After Elena finished analyzing some part of the information from that mini information relay device, she then said.

“Shikarabe, this information relay device is owned by someone from Drankam. It seems that it’s sending a signal in non-standard format too. Shikarabe, did you get anything in your information terminal? It might be some kind of coded signal only recognized by people from Drankam.”

“Hm? Wait for a sec, let me check.”

Shikarabe then pulled out his information terminal and checked it.

“…Nope, nothing. I bet it’s either because that signal is too weak or it’s simply because my information terminal can’t recognize that signal. What’s the information broadcasted through the normal format?”

“It’s simply a message asking for help since the monsters are chasing them. Although it’s written that it’s an SOS rescue request, it doesn’t say anything about who is the issuer, how much is the reward offer, or the duration of the request. It doesn’t even contain the Hunter code of the sender. Although it’s still one of those SOS rescue requests, I bet no one would take this request after reading this message. It’s unclear how many of them or where they are. It basically won’t change our plan, we might help them if they’re still alive and we find them by chance, but we won’t go out of our way to look for them.”

“Can you send the encrypted signal to me?”

“Sure. There. I just sent it.”

Elena just sent the encrypted message broadcasted by the mini information gathering device to Shikarabe's information terminal. Shikarabe then used the decryption software installed inside his information terminal to decrypt that encrypted message. The output from the decryption software was basically another encrypted message and a short message saying for anyone who received that message to send it to Drankam's officers.

Since Shikarabe had some connections with the officers in Drankam, he was able to decrypt that encrypted message further. After he checked the content of that message, his face twitched.

"Ahhh… Goddammit!!!"

Shikarabe shouted out his frustration.

Somewhere inside his angry expression, it seemed that Shikarabe thought of something else. Elena was actually interested as to why Shikarabe made that face, but she thought that it must be some kind of Drankam's business, so it would be better if she did not try to make any unnecessary guess.

Judging from Shikarabe's expression, it was clear that it must have something to do with the infighting within Drankam. Moreover, that message was an encrypted message. Elena thought that it would give nothing but trouble if an outsider like her needlessly stuck her head in whatever that message was about.

Seeing Shikarabe was still deep in his thoughts, Elena then asked him.

"I don't know the content of that message, but, is it okay if we continue the search now?"

Shikarabe glanced at Elena, he then shifted his gaze to the floor and thought for a bit before looking straight into Elena's eyes again.

"…In that case, I have a suggestion, no, a request. I want to change our main aim from simply exploring this building to rescuing the owner of that information relay device. It's as you said, that Hunter is from Drankam. I still have my reputation to hold among Hunters in Drankam, so I just can’t ignore this message.”

Elena then asked Shikarabe a question, trying to probe what might be behind Shikarabe’s sudden request.

“I know it’s rather cruel to say this, but that Hunter might be already dead, you know. If you want to retrieve their corpse, I’m sure the main squad that will come here later will retrieve all the corpses in this building after securing it, so you can save that for later. There’s also a chance that they have escaped the building on their own. We didn’t get to meet any monsters up until now. If they barricaded themselves somewhere to escape the danger, I’m sure it’s an easy thing for them to escape this building right now when there are no monsters at all.”

After Shikarabe listened to both pessimistic and relatively normal guesses from Elena, he then replied back with a grim face.

“No, I bet they’re still alive and still inside this building. There’s a chance that they might have barricaded themselves somewhere so tightly to the point that they even can’t confirm the situation outside the room that they barricaded in, or they might be injured so that they can’t travel too far. Saving Hunters are also one of the contents of our current request. Not to mention, if they’re survivors from when the situation in the ruin changed, they might have some important key information to understand the reason for that change. I’m sure it’s more profitable than just simply exploring this building, so, what do you think? If you save a Hunter from Drankam, I’m sure Drankam will give you an extra reward on top of the reward that you get from the City Management. I can even negotiate with the Drankam side for you.”

Shikarabe was not lying, but he had another reason as to why he made that request. Elena knew that very well as she asked Shikarabe a question.

“I’ll at least ask you this, what if I say no?”

“Then I won’t ask again, I have no plans to convince you to take it. You act as the leader, and I work under you, that was the deal. As a mere Hunter, I have no plans to break that agreement.”

Elena then thought it must be something that Shikarabe himself did not want to do, but because of his position in Drankam, he could not just ignore it without putting any effort first. And right now, he was trying to make an excuse out of Elena that he could not rescue the sender of that SOS message.

There was no mistaking it, Shikarabe’s request was definitely because of that encrypted message. Elena then asked Shikarabe.

“One more thing then, what’s exactly the content of that message?”

“I can’t say since it’s secret information only for Drankam people. If you want to know no matter what, you would need to join Drankam. If you’re okay with that, I don’t mind using my right to tell you the content of that message here. Drankam always welcomes new Hunters who want to join its rank.”

“Thanks but no.”

“I see, then, will you take the request?”

Elena then thought again, the content of that encrypted message must be something related to the people inside Drankam, something that could not be shared with people outside Drankam. Or at least, it was something that Shikarabe would not willingly tell to people outside Drankam.

Elena calculated all the risks and the profits that the team could gain there since she was the team leader.

Togami suddenly nervously asked Elena.

“U-Uhhh, as someone from Drankam, honestly speaking, if it’s possible I want to take that request too. Drankam also recommended us to rescue any Hunters that we can… But of course, it’s okay if it’s not possible…”

Togami was not lying there, but besides that, he was actually aiming for a chance to reconfirm his skill when said that.

After Elena looked at Togami, her gaze then shifted to Akira. Akira then said.

“I don’t mind either way, I’ll follow whatever Elena-san decides.”

Carol then followed.

“I don’t mind too, after all, Akira also said that.”

Next was Sara.

“Well, we came to this ruin in the first place because of that SOS rescue request after all, isn’t it fine taking in that request thinking that it’s just an extension from our original plan coming here? Not to mention, we can get an extra reward from it too.”

Sara sent a meaningful gaze toward Shikarabe when she said that. Shikarabe immediately responded.

“I can guarantee that I’ll negotiate with Drankam about the reward, but I’ll only go that far. Well, Drankam also has its face to save, so I’m sure they’ll give you quite a lot of money for the reward.”

After taking all the opinions from her team members, Elena then realised that among all of them, the only Hunters who had experience fighting inside the Seranthal building were only Akira and Carol. She was originally planning to reject Shikarabe’s request if either Akira or Carol showed even the slightest sign that they did not want to do it. But they did not show anything like that. So Elena finally made a decision.

Elena’s expression changed to a rather serious look as she said to her team.

“Alright, our main aim from here and on will change to rescuing those Hunters. Judging from that mini information relay device, we can assume that they left similar devices to mark the places that they went through. So, we’ll use them to help us find their location. Then on top of that, we’ll prioritize searching only rooms where they might have barricaded themselves in. We’ll immediately pull back once we retrieve the targets regardless if they're dead or alive. Carol, I'll leave picking the rooms to you. Once you're done with that, decide on a route, and we'll go from there."

Carol seemed a bit confused as she tilted her head and said.

"I've given you that map though, so you should be able to do that yourself, right?"

Elena changed her expression and replied.

"I want you to decide based on the information that is not included in that data. I know that you did not give all the information that you have when you gave me that map, right? Or at least, that data map didn't include anything that explains how you escaped from this building yesterday with Akira."

Carol's smile immediately vanished. Her gaze turned really sharp and she slightly lowered her voice.

"…Did you hear that from Akira?"

Akira and Togami were surprised by that sudden change from Carol. But the other Hunters were not surprised at all. It showed the difference in their experience.

Elena did not show any change in both her expression and tone of her voice as she answered Carol's question.

"I did ask him, but he did not tell me anything. He did at least tell me that he got trapped with you in this building, surrounded by monsters. Since both of you did not force your way all the way to the first floor to escape the building, it means that there's another way to escape this building. It must be some kind of secret route, whether it's a secret room, or a secret hallway, or a secret elevator, or maybe something else. Honestly speaking, I want that information too as an insurance in this situation. Moreover, I want to avoid the situation where we can't find the rescue targets just because they're hiding in that secret room, that's why I'm asking you to do that. If you want extra payment for that information, you can go ahead and ask Shikarabe later.”

Shikarabe immediately reacted when his name suddenly got mentioned there.

“Hah, me?”

“You’re the one who asked us to take that request, the rescue targets this time are Drankam Hunters, right? So at least do something about that extra information cost from the reward.”

Elena had a good point there. Shikarabe also knew that very well as he sighed.

Carol did not change her expression as she mumbled.

“…I see, so Akira didn’t tell you, huh.”

In that short time when everyone’s attention shifted to Elena and Shikarabe, Carol suddenly smiled. It was a dark and ominous smile as if it was leaking out Carol’s inner feeling mixed with a slight tinge of madness and joy.

If any of them there saw Carol’s face, they would definitely make some kind of reaction. But unfortunately, no one saw her. And because Carol immediately returned her face to normal, no one noticed her change at all.

Carol then smiled as if nothing had happened and said to Elena.

“Got it then, I’ll get it done ASAP. Is it okay if I just add extra indicators to the map?”

As Elena’s attention returned back to Carol, she felt that somehow something was bothering her. But she did not know what it was.

“…? Sure, I’ll be counting on you.”

But unfortunately, Elena was not in a position where she had the leeway thinking about the thing that was bothering her. So she just quickly decided to forget about it.

Alpha was staring at Carol. It was not like Alpha existed in the same place as the rest of the Hunters, that was why, in order to gather information about the people in that place, Alpha was using different methods compared to normal people. For example, she was relying on the information-gathering devices in that place to recognize 3D objects. And of course, she was also using other methods too. Basically, she did not need someone to be in her field of view for her to be able to see that person.

As such, Alpha was able to completely see Carol’s expression back there, and that was why she put her guard up against Carol.

Elena and her team changed their main goal to rescuing the Hunters left trapped inside the Seranthal building. They also adjusted their exploration method to fit their new goal.

Up until now, they explored all the hallways and rooms from the first floor using their information-gathering devices to map out the inner layout of the building before. But this time, they only searched the rooms that Carol indicated and immediately went to the next floor once they were done. Their travel speed changed, so much that it surprised Akira.

Since they restarted their exploration, Akira always searched the rooms following the instructions from Alpha.

The level of the difficulty of the exploration suddenly went up compared to before. Since they increased their exploration rate, they did not have much time to check their surroundings and make decisions. And if they were late in doing so, it would cause the next action to get delayed, thus, increasing the accumulated stress, lowering their concentration, slowing them down, and eventually affected how careful they were in doing their searches. It was only a matter of time before Akira could not endure the accumulating stress.

Seeing how Akira was accumulating stress pretty fast, Alpha decided to stop the training.

“Akira, you should take a break. I’ll do the search, so you should calm down and take a rest.”

“…Alright.”

Akira let out a light sigh. Although it was not like he completely lowered his guard, he fully relied on Alpha for detecting enemies now, thus, he could relax a bit as he followed Elena and the rest of the Hunters. Akira also started to move more sluggishly than before, but since Alpha also mended that through his augmented suit, it was not that apparent. Therefore, the other Hunters did not reprimand him.

Now that Akira got some leeway, he then asked a question that had been bothering him for a while to Alpha.

“Alpha, there’s something that I want to ask, though…”

“Oh my, if you have so much leeway as to make a pointless chit chat now, it might be a good idea to restart your training again.”

Akira went silent. Well, it was true that Akira was talking with Alpha through telepathy, so he did not make any sounds nor he did move his mouth, but even so, he suddenly went silent. Anyone who could notice that would think that conveying silence through telepathy was indeed a meaningless action. And the only thing there who could notice it was Alpha alone.

Alpha smiled mischievously and said.

“I’m just kidding, so, what is your question?”

Akira then frowned while still in silence as Alpha was smiling amusedly at him. If it was a competition of being obstinate, Akira had zero chance of winning. Akira knew that well, his face turned displeased as he sighed before his expression returned to normal and said.

“…I just thought that we’re moving faster than before since we changed our main goal. I’m just wondering if that’s really alright. Ah, that’s not right, I actually think that it should be okay, but…”

Akira was trying to gather his thoughts as he was speaking with Alpha. Alpha quickly guessed what he was trying to ask even before he could finish his sentence, she then immediately answered.

“You basically don’t doubt Elena’s order. That’s why you have no complaint about it. But that would be your subjective opinion. It’s not like you, yourself, fully understand the effect of that order, evaluate it, and finally conclude by yourself that it should be fine. If I have to word it differently, if Shikarabe or Togami make the same decision, you would’ve questioned it. So you want to know if I also think that it’s not a bad decision, and if I do, you want to know the reason why. You’re basically wondering if the increased searching speed affects the quality of our searches. You’re also wondering that if you only look in the places where you might find one of those mini information relay devices, you might be missing some devices on your way. It’s not like you can ask about that to Elena right now, you can actually just ask her later, but since it’s bothering you and you have the chance to ask me, you decided to ask me now, right?”

Akira frowned and was a bit weirded out by Alpha’s words. He then said.

“…Well, yeah, something like that.”

Although Akira was trying to hide it, Sara was able to accurately guess what happened when he joined the bounty hunt with Shikarabe only with the limited information that Akira shared with her. And this time, Alpha was able to quickly guess what he was thinking even before he finished gathering his thoughts.

Akira was actually feeling a bit scared that it was only a matter of time before they could completely read his thoughts even without him saying anything.

Alpha then started evaluating Elena’s decision.

“I do also think that Elena’s decision is the right decision. Although it ultimately depends on how you are going to evaluate that decision, and I’m sure that even you are not expecting Elena to have a god-like level of commanding skill, to successfully lead a team of Hunters filled with amateurs through a deathly battlefield, right?”

“Well, yes.”

“Then, there should be no problems. Elena is doing a good job analyzing the current situation and adapting to the new information. I can at least say that much. So, if I have to start from the searching speed…”

Alpha suddenly stopped there and forcefully moved Akira’s body through his augmented suit. Akira was putting too much attention on Alpha’s explanation that he significantly slowed down. Akira, who realized that, flusteredly pulled himself together and aimed his rifle at the intersection that the team just passed through.

Alpha then smiled at Akira and said.

“As I thought, isn’t it better if we talk about it later?”

“…You’re right, let’s save that for later.”

“Alright then. But if talking with you slows you down that much, then I won’t be able to talk to you when you’re exploring an old-world ruin, huh. I’m sure you’ll feel lonely too because of that. Do you think I need to train you to do that?”

Alpha said that while still smiling, while on the other hand, Akira pouted when she said that.

Elena and her team continued deeper into the building. They did not encounter any monsters as they explored the building, but unfortunately enough, they also did not get to encounter any of their rescue targets.

They searched only the rooms where there was a good chance the Hunters who they were looking for might be barricading themselves. But all of them were empty rooms. Although they did find some traces of battles and bloodstains that might be from the Hunters and some other traces showing that someone was once there, they did not find any Hunters at all, not even their corpses.

A change happened when they reached the 20th floor. As they were about to explore the 20th floor, Elena suddenly told them to stop.

They immediately put their guards up and scanned their surroundings. They noticed that the 20th floor looked completely different from all the other floors below it.

There were Hunters' corpses, wreckages, rubbles, and still-moving monsters.

Judging from their outer looks, they should be the A24 monsters that they fought in the Mihazono ruin's city district, but they were badly damaged, their torsos were dented and some of their limbs were blasted to pieces. Some of them lost their legs, while some others lost their wheels. But that did not hinder them from moving around as they were able to nimbly avoid the corpses and the wreckages that were scattered on the floor.

Shikarabe looked around and mumbled.

"…So, they only finished cleaning the lower floors, huh. Well, I guess it's better than having them waiting to welcome us here."

Looking at what those monsters were doing there, it did not seem like they were waiting for Akira and the other Hunters. But judging at the dead Hunters on the floor, it did not seem like they would peacefully let them pass either.

Elena immediately tried to think of a plan to clear up those monsters.

[I bet they're patrol drones. And judging from how they are moving around, it doesn't seem like they've noticed us yet. Is it because their sensors are broken or something? Are they not exchanging information with Seranthal's security facilities? Or is it because the very thing that is lowering the sensitivity of our information-gathering devices is also affecting them? Are they autonomous drones? Are they here for reconnaissance? Or is that they're simply roaming aimlessly after their control devices got destroyed or something?]

Elena thought of so many possibilities, then after going through all of those options, she then said to Sara.

"Sara, kill them."

"Roger that."

Sara aimed her anti-material rifle at those monsters. Just like the information-gathering device, the aiming device of her rifle was also affected by the Seranthal building, thus, its accuracy was worsened.

But, it did not cause much trouble for Sara's ability. She aimed her rifle at the torsos of those monsters and pulled the trigger once she was sure that her shots would hit.

The bullet that flew out of her rifle's muzzle hit its target accurately. That bullet was designed for firepower rather than piercing power, as such, it easily blasted A24's torso. The impact threw its body and scattered its inside around as it rolled over on the ground. It did not take that long before the next A24 also got blown away.

Elena told her team to stay on guard while she was observing the A24 that had turned into wreckages on the floor.

Akira suddenly realized something weird.

"Alpha. It's about the monsters that Sara-san just killed, from the outside, they look like mechanical monsters, it's not like they're actually biological monsters, right…?"

Alpha found that question rather strange, but even so, she decided to recheck the dead monsters that were scattered on the ground. They were made of metals and some kind of nanomaterials. They did not seem to be biological monsters.

“Well, from what I can see, I believe they’re mechanical monsters. What’s wrong?”

“Nah, I’m just wondering about what’s the meaning of killing mechanical monsters. Judging from what Sara-san did back there, does that mean to break them and render them unable to move…? That still doesn’t sound right, though?”

“Oooh, I see.”

From how Elena worded it, Akira was wondering if they were actually biological monsters that looked like mechanical monsters. It was a subject that could easily cause a debate.

Alpha then thought, Akira just encountered a monster. So, it might be better to let him focus more on watching his surroundings instead of thinking about something else. So she was wondering if she should scold Akira instead.

But it was not clear yet whether it was really unnecessary or not. Being critical and extra cautious made people more careful, and sometimes, it might even be the trump card to escape a hopeless situation. An ability to think outside the box and come up with an unthinkable solution was an invaluable skill.

In order to polish that skill, there was no other way but to keep being critical and always ask difficult questions. If Alpha scolded Akira, there was a good chance that Akira would obediently do that, thus, reducing his chance to polish his skill in thinking outside the box.

If it was about the ability to detect enemies, Akira would not be able to get better than Alpha. Thus, Alpha decided that she should encourage him to polish other kinds of skills, although it was unlikely.

Alpha then answered Akira’s question.

“It could be interpreted as putting a short gap in between executing the actions that would kill and when the target could be assumed dead. So applying that to mechanical monsters, I would say that Elena told Sara to leave a small time gap, from the moment she started shooting at those monsters until when those monsters fully stopped moving anymore. Or, maybe even put no time gap at all if it was possible. That was what Elena asked from Sara. Although it’s nothing but a guess, I believe that’s the gist of it.”

“Is it not enough to just destroy them?”

“Let’s say if those monsters are a part of the building’s security. They might immediately call for reinforcement when they’re attacked, or maybe they won’t. They might only call for reinforcements once they judge that they can’t win only with their firepower. This condition might also include the damage done to its own body. Some of them might have a self-repairing system, then they would repair themselves, check the damage on their bodies, and if it’s above the threshold, they would call for reinforcements. So in order to stop them from doing something like that, there’s a need to completely stop their functions with one shot. That’s why Elena used that word. I think you can interpret her like that.”

“If they’re really a part of the building’s security, won’t they already know our location and would call for reinforcement the moment we destroyed them?”

“We don’t know how much these monsters are exchanging information with each other. Maybe Elena wanted to check that too, that’s why she gave that order, or maybe, she wanted to know how many monsters would come here just from the sound of the gunshot. It should be hard to ascertain our position only from that gunshot inside this building, you know. After all, something is reducing the sensitivity of your information-gathering device inside this building, but we don’t know for sure if that also affects the monsters. Moreover, if they’re really a part of the building’s security, even if their sensors are also affected, they should have already known our location from the sensors scattered all over the interior of this building. So these monsters might as well know our location from that shared information. I think Elena is trying to check that too."

Akira looked a bit surprised, he did not even consider that at all. It might be because he always relied on Alpha to decide on what to do during a fight. After listening to Alpha's explanation, it reminded him of his lack of skill in that department.

"I can make other guesses too, but let's just stop here. Now that we just encountered some monsters, you need to be more careful from here and on."

"Just tell me one more thing then. About that thing that you just explained to me, is that a normal thing for Hunters to know that? Am I the only one who doesn't know that far?"

"It might be just simply because Elena thought you would understand what she wanted to convey only with those words. Elena and Sara seem to have been working together for a long time, so I bet they can tell what each other is trying to say without actually saying it. I bet she would add an extra explanation if she was to give the same order to you. But judging from the content of that order, I think it's as you said. If you're bothered by that, you should put more effort into studying from now on. I'll help you too, you know?"

Alpha smiled mischievously, Akira returned that with a bitter smile.

"I guess I still have a long way to go before I can be a proper Hunter, huh?"

When Alpha said that she would help him, she was actually saying that she was willing to increase the difficulty of the training and the study. Akira at least knew that much.

Togami confirmed the change of the situation as he continued watching his surroundings. The monsters were now scattered on the ground while Elena was scanning the area with a serious look. That was all the changes there for now.

Togami who was seriously watching his surroundings suddenly made a confused expression, he then looked slightly troubled.

In the back of his head, he was thinking that there were no longer any monsters in that area and there did not seem to be any reinforcement coming either, which in that case, should it not be better to continue the search? After all, in order to reach their rescue target as soon as possible, it might be better to hurry up.

Togami then asked Elena.

“Uhhh, aren’t we going to continue the search?”

Elena did not even turn or change her expression as she replied.

“Sorry, I don’t have the time to explain it. If you have any questions, just ask Shikarabe.”

“But, like, you know, we’ve been doing this for a while now and…”

Since Togami did not seem likely to step back anytime soon, Shikarabe said with an irritated voice.

“Just shut up.”

Togami flinched and immediately turned to Shikarabe. Shikarabe was exuding a level of antagonism toward him.

Shikarabe had this serious expression, he did not even try to hide his irritation as he said to Togami.

“Listen here, Elena is busy, so don’t interrupt her.”

“…Alright.”

Togami just backed out obediently, Shikarabe was rather surprised by it. It was true that Shikarabe put a little bit of extra intimidation there to make sure that Togami would not get ahead of himself and worsened the situation there. But with that being said, it was still a bit weird for Togami to be so obedient like that. Or at least, to Shikarabe, it did not seem that there was any sign of grudge when Togami backed out.

[…What the heck is with this boy? Since when he becomes this obedient, it's true that it's a good thing though, but still…]

Although Shikarabe was really surprised, he immediately decided to just forget about it for now. They encountered some monsters just now, so as long as it did not hinder them, there was no need to think too much about it.

Togami then reassessed the current situation. From his point of view, including that level of caution against the first group of monsters they encountered inside that building, he thought that they were wasting time and were just delaying rescuing their targets.

This team was formed on such a short notice, so it would be normal for some of the team members to complain if they found the order given to them by their leader was just a waste of time or meaningless. But other than Togami, no one there was complaining.

[So basically she's doing something important, and Shikarabe also thinks so too. But then, how about the other Hunters? Do they also understand why she's doing that and understand its importance too? Is it only me who doesn't understand it?]

Actually, there's one more person there who did not understand why Elena had not given her orders to continue the search yet, it was Akira. But Alpha gave him an explanation that answered his question.

Togami thought that he was the only person there who did not understand something that everyone should already understand. So he used all of his brainpower to keep thinking about the reason why Elena gave that order to stand by there.

Elena then pointed her finger toward a hallway leading to another opening on the right.

“Sara. If it’s possible, let it pass. If it gets dangerous, just destroy it. There’s no need to wait for my order.”

“Roger that.”

Sara aimed her rifle toward the entrance of that hallway, she then lightly smiled and said.

“We don’t really know what’s going on here, so isn’t it safer to just destroy it.”

“I leave that decision to you.”

Sara looked at Elena, she was making a serious face when she said that. Sara then got herself ready while still looking pretty relaxed.

The map of the 20th floor was displayed in Akira’s goggles. It was showing the hallway that Sara was pointing her rifle at. After Elena gave the order to Sara, a red dot suddenly appeared on that map located somewhere deeper in that hallway. It was the indicator for enemies.

Alpha then enhanced Akira’s vision, thanks to that, he was able to see through the walls.

Akira was able to see the monster indicated with the red dot on the map, that monster was also painted red in his vision. Although he was not able to see the shape of the monster, he was at least able to see that there was a monster there.

Alpha then said to Akira.

“They’re enemies, I’m sure Sara can take care of them. But just to be safe, get yourself ready too.”

“Alright. But still, the display looks rather blurry, is it because of that thing that affects the information-gathering devices?”

“Yep, that’s correct. Don’t drop your guard just because you see the same information as from the map.”

Akira aimed his CWH anti-material rifle toward the hallway. He was aiming at the monster way deep inside the hallway and behind the walls.

Shikarabe and Carol were also aiming their rifles in ready, but they were aiming toward different hallways. It was because they believed Akira and Sara would be enough to handle the monster shown on the map. Moreover, they also understood that just because the map did not show any monsters in the other hallways, it did not mean that there definitely were no monsters there.

Togami also readied his rifle while looking at Akira, he was surprised when he realized Akira was aiming his rifle toward a wall.

[Where the hell is he aiming at?]

Togami shifted his gaze from Akira to the wall that Akira was aiming at. But it was just a plain wall without anything that might garner attention. Togami then looked at Akira again with a weirded out face.

The red dot in the map started to approach Elena and her team. It would not be long before they encounter each other.

As the red dot, the enemy, kept getting closer and closer, Akira started to be able to see the shape of the monster through his enhanced vision. The image of the enemy started getting better and better. It was because the closer they got to each other, the better his information-gathering device was reading that monster.

Akira followed the enemy with his eyes. As they got closer, the image of the monster on the other side of the wall was also getting clearer.

It was the same type of monster as the ones that Sara just killed, the A24-type monster. But this one was only slightly damaged, it nimbly moved over the wreckages on the floor as it travelled through the hallway and eventually showed up in front of Akira right when he was aiming at the entrance of the hallway.

Togami who was watching Akira’s movement was taken aback. He realized Akira was looking straight at the monster in front of him.

[That guy is following a monster with his eyes, huh?! How did he do that?!]

Togami was so surprised that he focused more on Akira rather than on the A24 monster that just appeared. If that monster had already known their location beforehand and immediately released a shot there, it would have been a fatal opening.

Fortunately enough, or more like, as Elena had predicted, the A24 monster just continued walking through the hallway without paying any attention to Akira. Sara confirmed that the gun growing out of its back was not aiming at anyone there. She was still aiming at that monster’s gun while letting it pass, just like Elena told her to.

That monster continued walking past through the wreckages of the other A24 monsters that Sara just killed and left that place, that was when Elena told Sara.

“Sara, destroy it.”

Sara did not hesitate at all as he immediately shot a bullet at the monster.

The first shot hit its machine gun and tore it off from the monster’s body, the impact also threw it off balance.

The second shot hit the monster’s torso and threw its body as it rolled on the ground.

As it was tumbling over, Sara released her third and fourth shots. The third shot hit its legs, pierced through its armour and went through its torso, while the fourth shot pierced its body and slammed its body to the wall behind it.

That monster was rendered harmless in just a few seconds. It then tumbled over to the ground, twitched as if it was squeezing the very last drop of life that it had, and finally completely stopped moving.

Sara confirmed that she killed it as she lowered her rifle. Elena looked at the monster that Sara just defeated and hummed.

Akira looked at that monster that still mostly retained its original shape and asked Alpha.

“That was a little bit different compared to when Sara-san took out the first group.”

“That’s because the order from Elena was different too. If my guess is correct, after she disarmed that monster with the first shot, she released the rest of the shots with the goal of checking how durable it is.”

“I see.”

“Monsters of the same type or species usually have the same structures. Since Sara just showed you how much damage you can cause by shooting at which part, you should properly use it as a reference the next time you shoot at them, okay?”

Alpha was smiling as usual when she said that. But in contrast to her, Akira was making a stern face. It was true that Sara just showed how effective it would be if he shot at a particular part of the monster. But even so, he had no idea where he should aim his shot at.

In that short display, he needed to discern which one was the monster’s control device among all the small pieces of the monster that were scattered. Then, he should guess from there the location of the control device before it got destroyed, then finally guessed the weak part of its armour where he could snipe that control device. But of course, Akira could not do that.

“So, should I first prioritize destroying the monster’s gun just like what Sara-san did?”

“That’s a good idea, which in that case then, you just need to be able to accurately aim at the monster’s gun while it’s still moving and without my support.”

“…So, what’s the right answer?”

“The right answer would be that your aim depends on how good you are at shooting. With your current skill, I think it’s better if you aim at its torso to break its balance and lower its accuracy. You need to at least be able to hit it to do that though.”

“You’re right about that, the first step would be to hit my shots.”

He might still need a lot of time before he could shoot as accurately as Sara, Akira then sighed.

Togami suddenly asked Akira a question.

“…How did you know its location?”

Akira frowned.

Togami seemed obviously confused as he said.

“That’s not what I’m asking about, I’m talking about how you followed that monster when it was still behind that wall?”

When Togami asked that question again, Akira finally realized what Togami was talking about. Normally, people would not be able to see through a wall, it was thanks to Alpha’s support that he could do that. Although he was a bit surprised inside, he made effort to not show it on his face.

“The location of the enemies on the 20th floor is shown as red dots in the map, right? If you look at that, you can more or less guess the real location of the enemies.”

“They’re basically nothing but a rough approximation. But back there you were accurately tracking that monster when it was still behind the wall. How did you do that…?”

Togami was not convinced by Akira's explanation as he pressed for more answers. That was when Shikarabe suddenly interjected.

"Akira, there's no need for you to answer all of his stupid questions. Just ignore him. I bet this guy thinks that everything that he can't do or understand are all strange things. There's no need to listen to him."

Although it was unclear why Shikarabe said that, it was not a bad suggestion for Akira. So Akira just nodded and said.

"Got it."

Togami looked at Shikarabe with a bit of hostility, but when he saw Shikarabe's face that was mixed with a bit of mockery, he immediately looked down and hung his head low. And then he returned to monitoring his surroundings.

Shikarabe looked at Togami with a slightly surprised look. It was true that Shikarabe interjected to stop Togami from picking a fight with Akira, but he also expected Togami to pick a fight with him when he did that. But just like last time, Togami just meekly obeyed his order.

[He really has toned down, huh. Honestly though, what happened to this boy?]

Although Shikarabe still had no idea why Togami turned so obedient, seeing how Togami stopped being selfish, he no longer thought of Togami as a spoiled brat for now.

Even after Sara destroyed the second monster, Elena still ordered the team to stay on watch in that hall. There were corpses of dead Hunters, wreckages of destroyed monsters, monsters that had been rendered harmless with their bodies almost fully intact, they were looking at these while still on stand by in that room. The time that they spent there was crucial to gather and analyze all the data that they could get there. But it was only a matter of time before it turned into simply a waste of time.

[Judging from how the monsters reacted, it seems that they don't know our location. It might be because their ability to share information and contact each other is also lowered just like how the sensitivity of our information-gathering devices are also lowered. If it's blocking them from calling reinforcements, it might also be the case for their ability to contact each other, no, maybe they can but only for the monsters on the same floor? Then, even if it's true that the manager of this building has turned hostile to us, then why is their ability to contact each other affected the same way as how the sensitivity of our information-gathering device is affected? Is the manager of this building not sharing information with these monsters? Is it because they’re under different management? Or is it because these monsters are broken or something? Or is it simply because they’re not working under the management of this building? Or is it that they’re trying to trick us here?]

When Elena’s display showed that her information-gathering device had finished gathering and analyzing all the information that it could get there, Elena decided to finally move on.

[I’ve finished analyzing the monsters here. We should be able to detect the same type of monster better now, it’ll at least increase the sensitivity of our information-gathering device. There doesn’t seem to be any reinforcement, but I don’t think it’s a good idea to stay here any longer, it would be a waste of time if we keep staying here longer. I guess it’s time to go then.]

Elena then said to the rest of the team.

“We’ll keep up our method and speed just like before. Although you can see the result for the radar on your map, don’t drop your guard just because there are no monsters detected. Just fight the monsters that block our way, there’s no need to kill all the monsters, prioritize more on searching the area. But of course, safety is still number one. That’s all, let’s go.”

They immediately started moving again, and as Elena ordered, they kept the same speed and method although the situation on the 20th floor was completely different compared to the 19th floor.

There were puddles of blood mixed with wreckages of monsters on the floor as they continued their search on that floor. There were traces of destroyed barricades and the Hunters who must have frantically fought those monsters. The Hunters’ hands that were poking out from a pile of wreckages of dead monsters were still holding their rifles even now. Rubbles and wreckages blocked the hallways and the corpses of the Hunters who created those piles scattered inside the hallways.

The monsters there already turned the Hunters on that floor to corpses, and the still-moving monsters now quickly turned their attention to the new enemies that just stepped into that floor.

Alpha gave Akira an order while they were in the middle of moving.

“Akira, to your right.”

“Roger that.”

Akira who was running immediately stopped at the intersection in front of him and aimed his rifle to the right.

He gathered his concentration and compressed his time perception as he fixed his aim at the target that he could not even see. He then tracked the A24 monsters that passed through the next intersection and pulled the trigger the moment they showed themselves.

Akira was able to see the location of the control device inside the monster’s body due to Alpha’s support. Alpha also indicated the location where Akira’s bullet would easily pierce its armour and destroy its control device. As Akira tried to align his aim, a trajectory prediction line extended from his CWH anti-material rifle’s muzzle.

The bullet that flew out from the CWH anti-material rifle hit the weak point of the monster. It destroyed the monster’s outer armour and pierced through its innards, it went straight for the monster’s control device and destroyed it in one shot. The monster that had lost its brain immediately stopped functioning and just crashed into the ground with the momentum that it had when it flew out from the intersection due to inertia.

“Alright!”

Akira nodded and immediately started running again. When he had a chance, he quickly turned to Alpha and asked her a question while still running.

“How was that?”

Alpha smiled and warned him.

“If I didn’t fix your aim, it would have missed the monster about 1 metre to the left. You need to try to keep calm while fixing your aim as fast as possible.”

“…I see.”

Akira felt slightly depressed, he felt pretty good with himself after that shot, but it turned out that it was all thanks to Alpha’s support.

But Akira quickly pulled himself together, he knew that he had no time to lament. He then commented about the other factor that increased the difficulty of sniping monsters there.

“But still, this place is pretty bad. It would have been much easier if they cleaned this place just like what they did on the lower floors.”

Because of the fierce battle that happened beforehand there, the leftover of that battle blocked the way and made it more difficult for Akira to move around. Wreckages of dead monsters scattered on the ground, they were leaking out oils which then mixed together with the blood from the dead Hunters. These were preventing Akira from moving too fast. They did not have a stable footing and the floor was slippery from the oil and the blood. Sniping alone was already hard enough, but the environment there increased the difficulty even more.

Alpha then answered Akira’s question.

“The cleaning drones might have been destroyed by the other mechanical monsters.”

“…Wait, they’re not friends?”

“We don’t know for sure if those monsters are working under the command of the manager of this building. They might be a completely separate swarm that somehow entered the Seranthal building. Of course, this is nothing but a guess though.”

Akira made a troubled look, but he immediately returned his face to normal.

“This has really turned into something super complicated. It might have something to do with the current abnormality in Mihazono ruin, but well, I guess it has nothing to do with me, huh. Well, it's true that I might be able to get 10,000,000,000 Aurum if I know the reason behind it, but it's not the time to be thinking about that right now."

Alpha smiled at Akira and said.

"That's true. You came here in order to help Elena and Sara out of your own volition after all. So you need to concentrate more on that. But if you've had enough of it, you can tell me anytime. I'll immediately readjust your course of action for moving separately from the team."

Akira sulked for a bit, but Alpha just ignored it and kept smiling at him.

It was true that he actually just ignored Alpha's opinion and dragged her for his own selfishness to help out Elena and Sara. That was why he thought that it was understandable for Alpha to poke at him like that, so he just ignored it and decided to move on.

Shikarabe aimed his rifle at the monster that was located behind a pile of wreckage and pulled the trigger. The piercing bullet that he was using was able to pierce through the pile of wreckage and hit the monster behind it. He was able to destroy the monster's vital component in one shot and killed that monster.

Shikarabe was able to ascertain the enemy's location from the data that he was receiving from Elena.

[It's amazing how accurate this information that she's sending to me is when the sensitivity of my own information-gathering device is this bad. It's great that I can take it easy. I can see now why Arabe is always trying so hard to get Elena and Sara to join the gang, though it always ended up with a failure.]

Shikarabe was honestly impressed by Elena's ability and smiled bitterly remembering how his friend worked so hard for it although it ended up with failures.

While Carol had a large gun with her that could blast the monsters in one shot. It was also thanks to Elena that she was able to quickly detect the monsters that hid in difficult-to-spot places.

[Elena’s ability to process information is really nothing to scoff at, Sara is also moving accordingly to keep Elena protected. It’s understandable that Akira looks up to them. I guess it won’t be easy to impress Akira with my Hunter skill, huh. Well, let’s just do my best.]

Carol was also impressed with Elena and Sara’s skill. So using that as a reference, it seemed that it would not be easy to try to show off her Hunter skill to Akira.

Togami was desperately trying to catch up with the moving speed of the rest of the team. He did not complain at all as he used all he got to use that chance to show his skills to other Hunters.

His powerful equipment supported him to push his way through difficult situations. But that was not enough for him to match the current speed. He was barely able to follow the rest of the team.

Togami checked at the other Hunters while fighting the monsters. Just like Akira who was able to track a monster that was invisible to him, Shikarabe and the other Hunters could also predict accurately where and when the enemy would appear or shoot accurately through wreckages or rubbles.

Togami was also receiving the same information from Elena just like the rest of the Hunters, but even so, he could not use it to perform as well as the other Hunters.

His expression turned stern.

[So it’s normal for them to be able to do that, huh?! While on the other hand, I can’t do that at all… At least for now though, I’ll definitely learn how to do that too as soon as possible!!]

In the past, excessive praises pushed him to grow, but this time, frustration and the feeling of patheticness pushed him to grow. Togami recognized his own skill and his pathetic performance here, he was scolding himself as if to tell him to fight back while pushing himself to the limit.

Elena kept scanning the surroundings while going deeper and deeper into the building. And of course, he was also keeping his eyes for any signals from their rescue targets while scanning her surroundings. At the same time, she was also marking the route that the team would take on the map.

Sara was fighting the monsters they encountered while making sure that Elena, the leader of the team, was properly protected. Sara's display was showing the information that Elena had analyzed and sent to her. Thanks to that information, Sara was able to effectively remove the monsters that were blocking their way forward and any monsters that approached the team.

Elena and Sara basically work together as a team of two when they did Hunter jobs. Depending on the request that they took, they sometimes had to work under a different team, or sometimes, as the leader of the team, but that was not enough to break their habit of working as a team of two. It was simply because they understood and trusted each other, they knew that it was the best option and they trusted that fact.

Sara then contacted Elena through the transceiver.

"Elena, who is this rescue target that we're trying to rescue this time? Or more like, is there really any survivors in this situation?"

"This is only my guess, but I think it's very likely that they're still alive. Or at least, it seems that Shikarabe thinks so. If Shikarabe's aim this time is to retrieve the borrowed equipment or the corpses, I'm sure he would have chosen another option. That's why he asked us to do this even though he doesn't want to."

That answer did not fully convince Sara. She looked around at the wreckages of dead monsters that were scattered on the ground and said.

"The people who fought these monsters might be the Hunters who accepted that SOS rescue request, right? So basically, they must be the Hunters who were in this ruin yesterday. I'm sure most of them only had enough supplies thinking that they would return back during the day, right? And even if they brought with them extra supplies, I'm sure they had used most of them to fight all of these monsters. And if they are strong enough to handle all of these monsters in that situation, I bet they've already escaped the building by themselves though."

Judging from the average strength of the Hunters in the Mihazono ruin, the state of the Hunters who accepted that SOS rescue request, and the leftover of the battles in that place, Sara's experience as a Hunter was telling her that there was zero chance their rescue targets were still alive.

Elena actually had the same thought as Sara. But even so, she believed there was a good chance that their rescue targets were still alive, and that reason might lie in the secret information that Shikarabe would not tell her.

"I actually agree with you. But even so, Shikarabe still believes that they are still alive. They might have some team members who specialize in close-quarter combat, or they might bring with themselves way more supplies than most Hunters would, or they might be way stronger than most of the Hunters in this ruin, or they made sure to barricade themselves somewhere to make sure that they would be able to return alive. So judging from that, they might still be alive even now. Don't you think that's plausible too?"

"Well, that does make sense, a lot of Hunters went to this building after Drankam issued that SOS rescue request after all. So it won't be strange if some of them are actually that skilled."

Sara was convinced by that answer, but even so, Elena who answered Sara's question felt that something was still bothering her.

It was the reason why Shikarabe made that expression back then. Judging from there, there was no mistaking it that it must be something troublesome, something that forced Shikarabe to adjust his action assuming that their rescue targets were still alive. There was no telling how much that something might affect the other Hunters later.

Elena then carefully asked Shikarabe.

“Shikarabe, I didn’t ask you this since I thought it must be information that you can’t share, but at least I’ll ask you this now. Can you at least tell us the name of our rescue targets?”

Shikarabe’s expression turned clouded.

“It’s not secret information. But, in case if that person is already dead or if we fail to rescue that person, it’s way better if you don’t know that person. Not telling you here is actually an act of kindness. But if you want to know no matter what, I don’t mind telling you.”

“I won’t ask any further then. And also, if that’s really the case, if we have to negotiate with them afterwards, I’ll have to ask you to lead the negotiation for us, yes?”

“Roger that. It might include inside information about Drankam, so it might be better if I’m the one to do that anyway.”

Elena understood a few things after listening to Shikarabe’s answer. One thing for sure, it was not someone that Shikarabe did not know. He knew about this person that they were trying to rescue. And it was someone that might bring trouble later to the point that Shikarabe made that annoyed look the moment he decrypted the message from that person.

Elena thought that it was better to just get this request done with and move on. Which meant that they had to find their rescue targets and escort them back to safety as soon as possible.

__*__*__*__*__

Reina, Shiori, and Kanae were barricading themselves inside a room on the 30th floor.

The entrance to that room was heavily barricaded. They used wreckages from the dead monsters, portable barriers, and furniture found inside the room to barricade the entrance. They abandoned their chance to get out from that building and prioritized more on making sure that no monsters could get inside the room.

Shiori was taking care of her weapons while using the wreckage of monsters as her chair and table. The cut surface of that wreckage was clean, Shiori cut that wreckage with a single swing of the blade dangling on her hip.

Her blade was housed in a black sheathe, both the sheathe and the blade were made using old-world technology. The blade was so sharp that it cut through the monster like a hot knife cutting through butter. The sheathe itself was equipped with a feature that automatically repaired the nicks and any other damages on the blade. Among all the equipment that Shiori had, it was her most prized equipment. Kanae was also using the wreckage of a dead monster as a chair, she was sitting next to Shiori.

There was a huge dent on the body of the destroyed monsters, it was created when Kanae punched those monsters. Thanks to her powerful augmented suit and trained body, she was able to make a huge dent on the monsters' armours that could easily ricochet bullets and crush the innards of those monsters.

The monsters that Shiori and Kanae were sitting on were the monsters that they defeated when they secured that room. Of course, it was not comfortable sitting on them, but thanks to their augmented suit, they had no problem sitting on those wreckages for a long time. Although there were other soft things in that place, they gave them all to Reina.

Kanae smiled at Shiori and said.

"Well, what can I say, I'm glad that we made sure we're ready for anything, right?! Thanks to that, we're able to survive this far! We still have quite a lot of ammunition and food! We should still be able to stay here for some time, yep yep!!"

Shiori stopped her hands and glanced coldly at Kanae who was still smiling widely at her.

"That aside, it's pretty amazing how everything that young boy Akira said is true. Our information terminal quickly lost any connections and we can't use it to contact anyone. Then, the sensitivity of our information-gathering device also significantly worsened, then to top it off, we got surrounded by swarms of monsters. Hm? Ahh, the facilities inside this building are still working well though. It might be just because we didn't check it, but I wonder what actually caused it."

Shiori was looking at Kanae with a colder gaze than usual, but Kanae just ignored it as she kept smiling at Shiori.

"But again, if Ane-san didn't ask Akira to escort Milady, we wouldn't know about that and we might be dead by now. Our destiny might have changed for the better the moment Ane-san did that. After all, it's because Akira told us all of that that we decided to buy the map of the Seranthal building. Thanks to that, we were able to quickly find this room that looks strong enough and easy to defend. Although it was a bit more expensive than usual, I'm glad we bought that map."

Shiori looked even colder toward Kanae, she then sighed and looked mildly annoyed as she said.

"So then, how many more times do you need to say that before you stop talking about it?"

Kanae had been talking about that multiple times until now. That was the reason why Shiori's gaze turned colder and colder towards Kanae.

But then Kanae casually replied.

"If you don't like talking about that, how about you come up with something else to talk about? I don't mind listening to your story about Milady here, you know. After all, I have nothing else to do right now."

Shiori obviously looked irritated as she said.

"No thanks. After all, every time I do that, you always try to refute it and we always end up debating each other."

"I was just pointing out that Ane-san is too overprotective and spoiling Milady too much, you know?"

“You’re 100 years too soon to say anything about my relationship with Milady.”

“No no no, it’s a good idea to listen to a third party’s opinion sometime, right?”

It might be because they had been stuck inside that room for such a long time that their decision making skill was affected. Shiori replied with something that she would have never said normally. Then right when Kanae started getting bored making small talks to kill time, she suddenly said to Shiori with a serious face.

“…So then, Ane-san, are we still going to stay here?”

Shiori replied with a serious expression and a rather heavy voice.

“…Yes.”

“I see. I’m fully leaving that decision to you though. So I’ll follow all of your orders, but putting us aside, isn’t it getting worse for Milady?”

As Kanae said that, she glanced at Reina who was lying on her back. She was lightly wounded during the fight, but her wound was already completely healed after using medicine. Although they rationed their food and drinks, there should not be any problems at the moment. There was no reason for them to worry about Reina.

Kanae was actually talking about Reina’s mental wellbeing. It had been 3 days since they barricaded themselves inside that room.

This was not the first time where Reina had to stay inside an old-world ruin for multiple days. But they had done that under a safe situation. They had enough people to keep watch on turns, then to top it off, they had a safe route they could take any time they were in danger. It was not a situation where she was only barely able to reach a safe place in the middle of a fierce battle against a swarm of monsters which was filled with gunshots and screams from the other Hunters.

Moreover, they could not make any contact with the people outside, and their information-gathering devices were barely able to pick up anything. Judging from the sound of the monsters trying to get inside, that room was still surrounded by monsters. So, basically, they were surrounded by killing machines that did not get tired nor hesitated in killing them.

If that situation continued, there was no surprise that they would feel mental exhaustion. Although Reina was still somehow holding out at the moment, it was only a matter of time before she hit her limit. Forget fighting, she might even lose her willpower to move her body.

If the situation developed to that point, Shiori and Kanae would have to fight through the swarm of monsters while protecting an extra burden in order to escape from that building.

If Reina's situation worsened, it would risk the lives of everyone in that room. And if they stayed inside that building, Reina situation would only grow worse.

Shiori knew she had to make a decision to try to escape that building before Reina lost her willpower. Shiori herself knew that very well. That was why she was making a serious and somehow pained expression as she said to Kanae.

"…I know. But it's not the right time yet."

There was still hope that a rescue team would reach them. Although she did not know the extent of losses here, with that many Hunters dead in this building including the Hunters from Drankam, it was very likely that Drankam would decide to do something about it since it had its reputation to uphold. There was a good chance that another rescue team would be dispatched even after knowing the possibility that it might cause them more loss.

While at the same time, the monsters outside might leave that place if they wait long enough. If those monsters flooded the Seranthal building because all of those Hunters entered that building, then now with most of those Hunters dead, those monsters might eventually leave the building. And if it was just a temporary abnormality, those monsters would eventually leave if they wait long enough.

But in the end, those were just possibilities. It might even be just her wishful thinking, but even so, as long as those possibilities were not zero, Shiori had to consider them as she needed to decide whether to stay inside that room or try to force their way out.

If she made a wrong decision, Reina might get killed. She might end up killing Reina with her bad decision, that thought weighed heavily on her mind and dulled her decision-making skill.

Kanae more or less knew that Shiori was also having a hard time there, she then thought.

[Ane-san is way too overprotective of Milady. Honestly speaking, nothing good can come up from mixing up personal feelings in your job though, I wonder if we're really going to be okay?]

If Shiori's decision was affected by her personal feelings, then Kanae would have to make her own decision. Which meant that it was up to her when to try to escape that building while Reina was still able to move. In the worst-case scenario, she might even need to kill Shiori to do that. But if she was lucky, they would be able to get out alive just fine. But she had no idea how much luck she would need to be able to do that.

Shiori herself also should have known that very well. That was why she might make her decision before it reached that situation. Kanae did trust in Shiori's skill, but just to be safe, she then decided to remind Shiori.

"I know that it's my job to protect Milady even if it kills me, but it's not like I'm going to just easily throw my life away, you know?"

"I know."

Shiori's voice sounded somewhat heartless, but it at least showed that she understood what Kanae wanted to convey.

Reina opened her eyes. Although, in reality, it was not like she was sleeping, she was actually only in a half-asleep state all this time as she had given up forcing herself to sleep.

She tried to pull herself up and she could clearly feel that her body was growing weak.

She understood that she was being a useless burden. The only thing that she could do right now, the only thing that she could barely do at the moment for the sake of the other Hunters there, was to preserve her strength as much as possible so that she would be able to quickly move her body if the chance to escape that building finally showed up, or if they had to run away again if the situation suddenly worsened.

Reina herself understood that she was barely able to even do something like that, she was completely crestfallen, the shadow in her expression was even mixed with self-depreciation to the point that was close to depression.

Reina took a deep breath and let out a big sigh, she was trying to expel her feeling of hopelessness and fear inside her heart with that big sigh. She then tried to make a smile, if she kept making a depressed face, it would only make Shiori and Kanae worry even more for her.

"…Alright then, it'll be fine."

Reina told that to herself as she smiled.

She then went to Shiori, Kanae noticed her.

"Milady, good morning, it's still too soon for the shift change though."

"It's okay, I just can't get a good sleep so I ended up waking up sooner. I got bored just lying down all the time."

"I see, well, although it might be sooner than scheduled, I guess we can change shift now."

Kanae stood up and headed to the bed. When she turned her back to Reina and Shiori, her expression turned grim.

[She’s already reached the point where she can’t even get good sleep, huh. This is getting pretty bad…]

Kanae, Reina, and Shiori. It was only a matter of time before they had to make their own decision. Kanae thought so as she laid her body on the bed.

Reina, who just exchanged shifts with Kanae, asked Shiori.

“Shiori, did anything happen when I was resting?”

Shiori smiled gently to calm Reina.

“No. Nothing happened in particular. Or at least, I don’t see anything that might worsen our current situation. So please be at ease.”

“… I see.”

Reina was a bit weirded out since Shiori answered back so firmly, she then forced a smile.

Reina understood very well that she was the very reason why the situation was getting worse from here and on out. Her dejection was slightly leaked out of her forced smile.

Shiori then made a suggestion to help Reina take off her mind from the current problem.

“Milady, since you’ve woken up, let’s get a bite. I’ll prepare the meal right away, so please wait for a bit.”

“…Alright.”

Reina was still a bit overwhelmed by Shiori’s reaction as she was barely able to reply back.

Shiori immediately made the preparation for the meal. She somehow magically transformed a part of that room into a luxury restaurant, it made a rather awkward scene against the backdrop of the old-world ruin’s room.

She put a clean white tablecloth on top of a portable table, then she placed warm food on top of it. Although all of them were foods designed for Hunters, they were from expensive products that might even be much more delicious than most of the self-proclaimed high-class restaurants out there.

The portable foods were designed to reheat themselves when opened, and their containers were designed to keep the foods from going cold, the soup there was even steaming.

If a Hunter who did not know what was going on suddenly saw this scene, there was no mistaking it that he or she would be completely dumbfounded.

Shiori and Reina were sitting facing each other while they were having the meal. Shiori decided that it was better to take the meal together with Reina rather than standing next to her and serving her.

Consuming food is important even when they were barricading themselves. Reina’s face relaxed as she took a spoon of the delicious meal. Shiori, who saw that, smiled. Reina, who could feel Shiori smiling at her, blushed and tried to throw a conversation to change the mood.

“I know it’s a bit too late for me to be saying this, but this reminds me that these portable meals are really something.”

“The usual portable meals from Drankam are cheap portable meals after all. The portable meals that we’re having right now are from a different supplier that I've selected. Although they're pretty expensive, I believe that their quality to price ratio is pretty good compared to the other foods usually sold in the wasteland. Some people don't care much about the food that they eat while some others do, and I'm sure it's impossible for Drankam to distribute this level of portable meals to all its Hunters. Indeed it's better to eat the usual portable meals if we're together with the other Hunters, but since there are no other Hunters at the moment, I believe it should be alright to take these portable meals."

"Now that you mention it, that does make sense. I feel like it'll cause trouble if we eat this kind of portable meals while the other Hunters are getting the usual ones."

Reina imagined a situation where she was eating a luxurious looking meal while the other Hunters around her had to nibble on their Hunter ration, she then lightly smiled.

Reina and Shiori continued chatting while having their meal when Reina suddenly asked Shiori something that just came up in her mind.

"Say, Shiori, do you think that our current situation has something to do with the Mihazono Ruin's ghost story?"

Reina heard about 3 ghost stories of Mihazono ruin from Shiori.

The ghoul building. From time to time, a lot of Hunters and monsters in the Mihazono ruin would suddenly vanish. According to that ghost story, the real cause of that was because the Seranthal building grew hungry and ate them.

The second story was about a door that would suddenly appear out of nowhere inside the Mihazono ruin. It would bait the Hunters to enter that door with relics, but when they entered, the door would shut and the Hunters were never seen the outside ever again.

The third story was about the lonely ghost. It was said that the dead corpses of the Hunters left in the ruin sometimes suddenly started moving on their own and attacking the other Hunters. They must have been longing for more friends.

Shiori thought for a bit before answering.

“I can’t say for sure. If I have to make a connection, it might be related to the story of the ghoul building. But it’s also not normal to find this many monsters in this place, not to mention, they’re abnormally strong, even stronger than the Hunters who took that SOS request. I’m sure the Hunter Office already knows about that fierce battle too. The level of abnormality is too big to blame everything on a ghost story. So I believe that it’s not related to that.”

“I see. I just thought that if it’s related, it might give us some hints on how to get out of this building.”

“It’s common for weird things to happen around old-world ruins, which might develop into ghost stories later. That’s why let’s not drop our guard and keep being careful… I understand that in the past you loved to explore the mansion, Milady. But please don’t do that here, if you get inside that vanishing door from the ghost story, it would be hard for me to find you, you know?”

Shiori smiled teasingly when she said that.

While on the other hand, Reina remembered her past self and could not help but to make a bitter smile.

“I know.”

After that, they continued having a silly talk while taking the meal. Once she was done and got her stomach filled, Reina regained some of her energy. Nutritious food was the main fuel for fighting, that was why they were worth their price.

As Shiori was cleaning after the meal, Reina suddenly apologetically said to her “Shiori, I’m sorry.”

Shiori tried to think of the reason why Reina was apologizing. Although she could come up with several guesses, it did not change what she would reply with.

“Milady, there’s nothing for you to apologize for.”

“But if I had properly listened to you and decided not to come here, we wouldn’t be in this situation right now.”

“Neither I nor Milady could have seen this coming. I also only thought that this Seranthal building would only be a little bit more dangerous than what Drankam thought it was. I also did not expect it to be this bad. Although it might be an exaggeration, I believe that being able to see this coming at that time would be close to predicting the future. If I knew that something like this would happen, I would have tried everything that I could do to stop Milady back then… After all, I’ll never let you go to a dangerous place just to get killed. I hope that Milady could at least believe me about that.”

Shiori had a serious look when she said that to Reina. Even if Reina somehow doubted Shiori’s loyalty, Shiori’s devotion will not waver. But even so, Shiori still held the desire of Reina trusting her.

Reina herself trusted Shiori more than anyone else, she thought of her as one of her family that she had been together with through thick and thin. For her, Shiori was like a reliable sister.

Sometimes, that level of trust caused her to make selfish requests to Shiori, and the current situation was the result of one of her selfish request.

Reina replied with a serious face.

“I know, and I do trust you.”

Shiori smiled happily, she looked somehow satisfied. But her smile then changed to a teasing smile.

“In that case, as I explained just now, I hope Milady would understand that there’s nothing for Milady to apologize.”

“Alright alright.”

Reina smiled, her expression was saying that she understood Shiori just pulled a good one on her.

After cleaning up the table, Shiori returned to check her equipment. She returned back to the wreckage that she was using as a seat. From there, Shiori could see Kanae who was lying down not too far from her and Reina who was sitting close to her.

Shiori looked at both of them for a few seconds, her face then turned rather stern. She took a deep breath to calm herself down, her expression turned back to normal, and then she said to Reina.

“Milady, if I may?”

Seeing from how Shiori was acting there, it seemed that she had something important to talk about.

“Sure, what is it?”

“We’re barricading ourselves inside this room for days since we hope that the situation outside will get better with time, hoping Drankam might send out a rescue team for us, or the monsters that were surrounding this room might leave. But with that being said, we can’t keep barricading ourselves inside this room forever. If we keep ourselves inside this room without no means to check the situation outside, we can only hope that the situation outside is getting better, and sooner or later, we have no choice but to dismantle the barricade and try to make a run for it.”

They could not check the situation outside and they could not make any contact outside either. Due to the unknown source that was lowering the sensitivity of information-gathering devices inside that building, they could only detect a few metres outside the entrance, and they knew nothing about the area further than that. They could only wait and hope there that the situation outside was getting better.

If they got unlucky, the situation outside might have actually turned worse than before when it was filled with monsters, screams, and cries.

Reina then replied back firmly in order to expel the fear and worry that were creeping inside her.

“…alright, so then, when are we going to do that? Is it soon?”

Seeing how Reina replied back so firmly like that, Shiori made her resolve too.

“We’ll do it once we’ve finished all the preparations. We need to dismantle the barricade and Kanae just took a rest not too long ago. We have several strengthening drugs too, but they’ll take some time before the effect kicks in. Other than giving Kanae more time to rest, we have other preparations to do. We’ll try to make our run once we’re sure we’re 100% ready…”

As Shiori was explaining things to Reina, Kanae, who was sleeping suddenly opened her eyes and sprung up.

She stared at the wall as if she was checking something outside that room, she was in a stance as if she was ready to fight anytime.

The moment Shiori noticed that, she immediately stepped in front of Reina to protect her while keeping her eyes on the barricaded entrance. But Shiori did not see anything out of the ordinary.

“Kanae, what’s wrong?”

Kanae looked amused as her rare talent was telling her that a presence that she liked was somewhere close.

“Ane-san, we need to get ready to break out of this room, this might be our only chance.”

Kanae was beaming when she said that.

__*__*__*__

Elena’s team just reached the 30th floor. To be more precise, they were climbing the stairs from the 29th floor to the 30th floor and were checking out the situation on the 30th floor.

Akira’s face twitched when he saw the situation on the 30th floor. The same also happened for Carol, Elena, Sara, Shikarabe, and Togami, although at different levels.

The reason why Akira and Carol looked far more concerned than the other Hunters was because of their experience. They could see countless monsters filling the hallways in front of them.

Fortunately, there were no monsters at all near the stairs, thanks to that, they were able to check out the situation on the 30th floor from a relatively safe place.

Sara frowned.

“Elena, what should we do about this? Or more like, are we still going to push forward?”

If it could be helped, she actually did not want to proceed forward. After all, that would mean that they had to fight all of those monsters for the sake of the Hunters who might already be dead by now. Elena easily caught what Sara was trying to say.

Sara evaluated that this was as far as they could go safely.

But Elena was still unsure, she was still facing forward, looking at the monsters in front of her, she then said with a stern expression.

“If we have no extra information, the right choice, in this case, would be to pull back, but…”

Shikarabe immediately intervened.

“So in short, you have a piece of information that warrants us to push forward, right?”

Elena then answered Shikarabe’s question.

“On our way here, I found similar information relay devices like the one we found back on the 15th floor. The content of those relay devices is also the same so I thought that there’s no need to tell anyone. But then, basically, I also found similar devices here but with different content. Look at your map.”

Elena updated the map data that the others were receiving from her to show an indicator that was pointing at a particular room on the 30th floor.

“If we are to trust the data from that relay device, the people who owned those relay devices should be in that room.”

Carol sounded slightly impressed as she said.

“So basically they ran all the way from the below up to this floor and barricaded themselves inside that room, huh. Well, it’s true that room should be able to hold for a long time against all the monsters outside as long as they properly barricaded the entrance. And it won’t be strange for them to find that room if they bought a map of Seranthal building before they came in here. Shikarabe, you know all of this, that’s why you guessed that they’re still alive, right?”

Shikarabe’s expression did not change as he replied.

“Possibility wise, yes.”

“I see.”

Carol knew that she should not pursue any further as she said that.

Akira made a rather stern face as he looked at the indicated room in the display map.

“They’re in a rather troublesome place, huh.”

“Yeah, you can say that again.”

Elena also agreed with Akira’s opinion. It was obvious that from the way she said it that things would get complicated from here.

If the location was too far away, Elena would have not hesitated and immediately decide to pull back there. She then could just convey that information to the main squad that would come to that building later and hope that they would rescue those Hunters.

But if they were close enough, they could just break through the monsters’ encirclement, secure the hallway to that room, and check the inside of that room. Then from there, they could escort their rescue targets out if it was possible, but if there were too many Hunters, or there were badly wounded Hunters, they would have no other choice but to ask those Hunters to keep barricading themselves inside that room and convey the information to the main rescue squad.

But the problem was that the room was not that far but not that close either. That was why Elena was hesitating.

They already spent most of their energy to come all the way here. Elena tried to calculate all the factors before finally made her decision, the dangers that they had to face if they pushed forward and the possibility of rescuing their targets now.

Elena then ordered the rest of the team.

“I’ll break the team into two–-My team, and Shikarabe’s team. My team will secure the hallway while Shikarabe’s team will go and try to reach the rescue targets. Everyone will try to open a path for Shikarabe’s team to go through while reducing the number of monsters. I’ll leave the timing to Shikarabe when he’ll try to make the run. Once we group up again, we’ll immediately retreat no matter what the condition of the rescue targets. And also, if the encirclement is too hard to break through, we’ll just give up on rescuing the targets and immediately retreat. The moment either I or Shikarabe decides that it’s impossible to rescue the targets, we’ll immediately pull back, okay?”

Shikarabe then asked Elena a question.

“Well, I was the one who asked you to rescue them, so I can understand leaving the job to break through the encirclement to me, but who will be in my team?”

“If it’s possible, I want you to go alone.”

“No, that would be impossible.”

“I do understand that you want to stay in a safe situation, but we don’t have enough manpower to spare here, so just pull back if you think that it’s impossible. If you think that it’s difficult to break through the encirclement unless you take too many people from my team, I’ll stop this plan here and call a retreat now. And also, Sara will be on my team, so you can’t pick her.”

Shikarabe frowned and made a stern look as he pondered. Elena basically told Shikarabe to take the least firepower needed just to barely be able to secure the rescue targets.

If they took everyone to reach the room where their rescue targets were, it was indeed pretty much guaranteed that they would be able to reach that room, but in the worst-case scenario, they might get surrounded and have no other choice but to barricade themselves inside that room too. Shikarabe understood that Elena wanted to avoid that. After all, there was no guarantee that the main squad would come for them later.

After thinking for a few seconds, Shikarabe finally made his decision.

“Akira, come with me.”

Shikarabe believed that Akira was the second strongest person on the team. Moreover, he believed that he had not seen Akira’s full power yet, and he knew sometimes, Akira had an abnormal ability to detect or react to enemies.

Although there was no guarantee that bringing Akira along would give him a better result, Shikarabe was sure that he at least would not slow him down, and Elena should at least be okay with bringing Akira along. Thus, he decided to put his bet on Akira's unknown real ability and proposed to take him into his team.

"Sure."

Akira answered back casually.

Togami suddenly raised his voice and requested to go together with Shikarabe's team.

"…I'll go too!"

Everyone there turned to Togami, whose expression there was saying that he was resolute to go too.

Shikarabe looked at Togami and was honestly at loss on what to do. He glanced at Elena to see her reaction if he took Togami from her team too and thought for a bit before replying back.

"Alright then, the men will break through the encirclement while the girls will secure the hallway. Elena, you're okay with that, right?"

Elena looked at everyone present before replying.

"Okay."

Everyone nodded back to Elena.

Carol lightly smiled and said to Akira.

"If only I'm in your team too, I would be able to show you how good I'm at fighting but… Well, it is just too bad."

Akira smiled confidently.

“Didn’t you already show me enough when we returned back to this ruin and found it in this state?”

“Is that so? In that case, make sure to come back here alive and see how good my skills are again. So I can expect a good reward from you, okay?”

“Well, in that case, I just need to secure the rescue targets and balance out your contribution with mine this time.”

Akira and Carol were smiling at each other while lightly poking fun.

Shikarabe then turned to Akira and Togami.

“I’ll say this beforehand. I won’t give you detailed orders, just observe and adapt to the situation.”

“…Alright.”

Akira replied casually while Togami took a small pause to gather himself together before replying back.

Sara smiled at Akira and said.

“Akira, be careful and don’t get too reckless, try not to make a mistake when to pull back, okay?”

“Of course, Sara-san too, be careful.”

Akira nodded firmly and said that, Sara too replied with a firm nod.

The monsters that filled up the hallway were from the B18 type. They were the upgraded version of the A24 type. Although they were relatively weak, they were equipped with force field armour and extra guns. Their ability to fly around was also better than most of the other monsters. Compared to the legged monsters that had a problem moving around inside that floor that was filled with rubbles, wreckages, and corpses scattered on the ground, they were able to move around much more freely. They were semi-autonomous monsters usually stationed to guard different facilities.

The B18 type had enough firepower to easily defeat common Hunters, but they did not show any sign of hostility toward Akira and the other Hunters. It might be just simply because they were outside the monsters' patrol range. Or maybe, it was simply because the lowered sensor sensitivity also affected the B18 type monsters. Whichever case, the Hunters had the first initiative there.

The Hunters readied themselves to start the rescue operation, they warmed up their bodies, sharpened their senses and perception. They prepared themselves to head into a fight against the monsters that would not hesitate to kill them and to reach their hand for the victory that lay behind it.

Elena then started the countdown.

"I'll start the countdown, 5, 4, 3…"

Akira readied his rifle and waited for the countdown. The Hunter's equipment were specially made to give the Hunters some chance to fight against the monsters that were way stronger than a normal human and to even give the Hunters the upper hand against them. To give the Hunters the ability to kill before killed, to destroy before destroyed, to defeat the monsters before getting overwhelmed by them, no matter what kind of monsters that they were facing.

"…2, 1, zero!!"

They immediately jumped into the 30th floor and spread out into the hall room, they aimed their rifles at the B18 in front of them, fixed their aim, and pulled the trigger without a trace of hesitation. The place was filled with flying bullets in an instant as bullets rained down on the B18 monsters, tore off their outside armour, pierced through their metallic wiring, crushed the inside of their bodies, and ultimately destroying them.

The Hunters who had the first shots quickly turned the B18 monsters into scraps.

Akira kept his finger on the trigger of the DVTS minigun on his right hand as he aimed to the hallway. Countless bullets flew out through its muzzle against the B18 monsters in that hallway. Although most of the monsters there had already turned into scraps, Akira kept on shooting bullets in that direction.

Although the B18 type monsters were equipped with force field armour that could easily hold out against the multiple bullets that were flying out of DVTS minigun, with the energy output of the B18 monster, it was not enough to keep the force field armour active except for only for a short time. Once the force field armour ran out of energy, the bullets easily passed through and dented the monsters' bodies. It eventually opened a hole in their bodies and destroyed the inside of the monsters as the impact threw them further back into the hallway.

After they secured the hall entrance, Elena's team immediately reinforced their position while Shikarabe's team immediately went to their rescue target.

Shikarabe did not completely destroy most of the B18 monsters that he fought, he only stripped most of them from their weapons to render them harmless or destroyed their means to move around and turned them into useless flying devices with nothing but a robust defense.

He then kicked them right to the entrance of the hallway, he kicked only the monsters with still active force field armour deeper into the hallway. The kicked monsters flew and broke through the rubbles blocking the hallway as it flew further in and crashed against the other monsters while blocking the bullets coming from deep inside the hallway.

Shikarabe did that again and again to block the bullets coming from the hallway while forcing a way through the encirclement.

"Let's go!"

Shikarabe only said that and immediately went into the hallway, Akira and Togami were a bit surprised how Shikarabe forced his way into the hallway, but they quickly followed him from behind.

Akira thought about Shikarabe's powerful kicks while running behind him and mumbled.

"Those were pretty powerful kicks, is that the power of his augmented suit?"

"His augmented suit is on a different level compared to yours after all."

"Well, I guess it's normal for powerful Hunters to have powerful equipment, huh. I bet they're super expensive though."

Alpha smiled teasingly and said.

"You'll be able to buy that kind of expensive equipment sooner or later. After all, you'll need those to accomplish my request."

"I know, well, it seems that I still have a long way to go."

Akira smiled bitterly as he imagined how much money he would need to buy that kind of equipment and how much he would need to work to get that money.

Alpha smiled full of confidence and replied.

"Oh my, it's actually sooner than you might think, you know? It'll be fine with my support."

For some reason, Akira felt that mention of the time gap being shorter than what he knew, also meant that his suffering would be doubled.

Shikarabe led the way into the hallway. Akira imitated Shikarabe and used the destroyed B18 to hide from the incoming bullets while creating obstacles to prevent the monsters from entering that hallway as he followed behind Shikarabe.

Akira kicked the dead monster in front of him. Thanks to Alpha's support, the monster that he kicked flew straight to another monster with very high accuracy as if he had kicked a lot of monsters in his life. The powerful kick released from his augmented suit transmitted the full impact of the kick into that monster and sent it flying into the hallway with a high speed.

Shikarabe saw that and thought.

[The augmented suit that Akira is using…It is the PWD Silence from Nejima R&D corp, right? But I don't remember it being that strong and I don't think Akira is that strong either. Did he get some kind of upgraded version or something?]

There were many Hunters in the eastern district who used augmented suits, and of course, in response to that, there were many types of augmented suit distributed in the eastern district.

But compared to the number of augmented suits distributed in the eastern district, the number of the modified augmented suits in the eastern district was extremely low. One of the reasons was because the technology used in those augmented suits was secret information, thus, it would be extremely difficult to modify them without the help of a specialist.

Of course, there were many Hunters who tried messing with their augmented suit, but they only did that to the spare augmented suits that they had. To top it off, most of them tend to leave the control device alone. Since even if they tried, the best that they could do was usually just to readjust some options that were not shown in the usual display.

If they tried to go even further than that, most of the time, it normally ends up in a disaster. If they tried to mess with the ventilation, they might lock the suit and get themselves killed from suffocation. If they tried to mess with the force field armour, it might cause the force field armour to be projected inside and get themselves crushed inside the suit. There were many unfortunate stories like that going around. And of course, the guarantee for those augmented suits was annulled the moment they try to modify their augmented suits.

It was common-sense among the Hunters to not mess with their augmented suit or not to try to modify them if they did not want to get killed.

But of course, there were exceptions. There were cases where a modified augmented suit with upgraded output power and guaranteed safety appeared. They were usually made by people with high technical skills in order to show off their ability, or by a newly found corporation to show off its capability, or by some corporation in order to gain extra capital. Because of that, these kinds of augmented suits would appear in the black market from time to time.

If Akira's augmented suit was really one of those modified augmented suits, it would not be strange for it to be stronger than the public catalogue spec. If that was the case, Shikarabe could easily understand that power. But even so, he still found something bothering him.

[…It's rare to find a Hunter who has the connection to get that kind of equipment. But again, I really can't say for sure.]

Akira was actually using an augmented suit with a control device that was already fully under Alpha's control. So looking from that point of view, it was not a mistake to say that he was using a modified augmented suit.

Shikarabe could guess that Akira was probably using a modified augmented suit, but that was as far as he could go and all the guesses that could come up from that fact made it more difficult to estimate Akira's real ability.

It would be really troublesome if he got on Akira's bad side, Shikarabe was really glad that he was able to peacefully resolve the problem about the reward for the bounty hunting request from last time. As Shikarabe thought so, he decided to be more careful around Akira, the boy that threw off his intuition.

Elena's team was waiting for Shikarabe's team to return back in a hall near the stairs. They already cleaned the room from any monsters and they were in the middle of barricading the other hallways by piling the dead B18 monsters.

Elena, Carol, and Sara were able to casually kick around the dead B18 wreckages that were pretty heavy. It was thanks to Sara's nanomachine enhanced body, Elena's augmented suit, and both for Carol's case.

Due to her side job, Carol enhanced her body with nanomachine so that she could fight even when she had nothing on her. Moreover, it was also to enhance the beauty of her body to help her seduce men. Because of that, she spent a lot of money to enhance her body with nanomachine, then to top it off, she was also using an augmented suit.

Although Carol looked seductive with her already beautiful body wrapped in a sexy augmented suit, as if it was to belie her outer appearance, she was powerful enough to easily send the B18 monster flying with her kick. It was thanks to the amalgamation of the old-world technology that was close to magic.

If not for her seductive outer appearance, it was easy to notice her superhuman strength. And for those who were not knowledgeable about how much such a modification would cost, they would be surprised when they hear the price tag. Most people got their attention diverted by her beautiful and charming outer appearance and did not think about the technical side of things.

After they finished securing the hall, they then took a short break and lightly sighed. They had defeated the other monsters that came to the room, barricaded the entrance to the other hallways, and pushed aside the wreckages that were left inside that room.

Elena scanned the area around the hall with her information-gathering device and checked the hallway that Shikarabe's team was pushing through. But she could not see any signal coming from that direction.

Judging from the physical strength of Shikarabe's team, the strength of the monsters, and the distance to the room, if Shikarabe's team pulled back, she should be able to see them soon. Elena had no idea whether Shikarabe's team was having a hard time or they were doing well.

Seeing Elena, who was looking in the direction where Shikarabe's team went with a worried expression, Sara smiled at her and tried to calm her down.

"Don't worry, they'll be back in no time. I'm sure that you also thought so when you let them go, right?"

"…If you're saying that I thought the danger was acceptable, then the answer is yes. Since I'm sure Shikarabe has no plans to die here, so I'm sure that he won't make a mistake if he decides to retreat."

Balancing risk and profit was the main job of the Hunters. The moment Elena or Akira or any other Hunters stepped into the wasteland, they would be putting their life as a gambling chip. As such, it was important to make sure that they would get profit worth risking their lives.

Elena already evaluated the risk and decided that it was worth the risk. Although it was not like she had absolute confidence in her decision, she also did not unnecessarily doubt it either. She trusted that the decision she made was correct.

But when she said that it would be fine, it would just be her telling that to herself. And if she said that she was worried, it would only cause her to doubt her own decision. Thus, she tried not to say anything to herself.

But to Sara, it seemed that Elena was trying to be strong, which was a rare thing to do for her. Sara found it rather amusing as she smiled.

Elena tried to hide her embarrassment as she sent an intense gaze at Sara and jabbed.

“…What?”

“Nah, it’s nothing. Like I said. It’ll be fine. It’s true that it’s rather worrying, but I don’t think Shikarabe would go as far as to sacrifice his life to save the rescue targets. I’m sure he’ll make the right decision when things get dangerous. Moreover, Akira is strong enough to even make Shikarabe invite him to hunt a bounty monster, as for that Togami, since Shikarabe allowed him to come, I’m sure that he’s not that weak either. It’ll be fine, don’t worry.”

Sara might have guessed what Elena was thinking, so she used the words that Elena was avoiding.

“…I know.”

Elena felt like Sara just read her mind, she replied back rather clumsily trying to hide her blushed face.

Carol approached Sara and Elena, she threw a smile at them and said.

“It seems that we can get a short break here. It would be great if Shikarabe’s team can return back while we have the leeway.”

Carol turned her face and looked at the hallway leading to the room where their rescue targets were as she said that. It did not seem like any monsters were going to come out from that direction. They wanted to believe that it was because Shikarabe’s team was still pushing forward while killing the monsters on their way.

“I really hope they will return back safely soon. Right?”

Carol said so as if she was asking if Sara and Elena also felt the same. From the way she sounded and the expression that she had, it seemed that Carol was simply worried about Shikarabe’s team.

Sara replied back casually.

“It’ll be fine, they’ll be back in no time.”

As for Elena, she seemed to be somehow suspicious of Carol, but she agreed with Carol.

“You’re right, I too hope they’ll be back safely soon.”

Carol smiled as she confirmed that both Sara and Elena agreed with her. But then she said something that might cause a worry.

“Well, 2 of the 3 Hunters in Shikarabe’s team are young boys after all. I guess it’s understandable to be worried. I did see Akira’s skill from up close and I know how strong he is, but for that Togami, I can’t say I’m not worried. What do you think?”

Elena was the one who answered Carol’s question.

“He at least has good equipment on him. As for his ability, well, Shikarabe allowed him to join, so I’m sure he’s not that bad.”

Carol nodded in agreement with that evaluation.

“That’s true. I also don’t think he’s that bad either, but I do think that Akira is still stronger than him.”

Elena and Sara nodded in agreement with what Carol said. After Carol confirmed that, she then frowned and said.

“…But, if we look at them from a glance without any prior information beforehand, I think Akira looks to be the weakest one, doesn’t it?”

Sara was a bit surprised.

“Is that so?”

“Yep. That is if we only judge solely based on their outer appearance. Not to mention, his equipment seems to be the worst among them too… I actually can guess the ability of most Hunters just from seeing them and my guesses never missed that much until now… Or at least, that’s what I thought. Akira is the first one who I was wrong about. Honestly speaking, I find that really strange. After all, I’ve never gotten my guess wrong by this much until now. It really made me lose my confidence.”

If she had not met Akira in the Seranthal building and fled together from that building, Carol would not have had the chance to see Akira’s real ability. If she had met Akira carrying the same equipment in Kugamayama city, she would have thought he was just one of those common Hunters in the eastern district, and she would not be that intrigued by him.

Carol then asked a question to Sara and Elena.

“Hypothetically speaking, let’s say if you meet Akira without any prior knowledge about him, do you think you’ll be able to recognize his real ability?”

Elena and Sara thought for a bit, looked at each other, and then started trying to analyze that question again. Sara was thinking about how to answer Carol’s question, while Elena was trying to probe why Carol asked that question, both of them there were thinking about 2 different things.

Sara smiled bitterly and answered first.

“I don’t think I would be able to do that. It’s true that Akira seems weak from a glance, and he sometimes seems nervous when exploring the ruins. If you ask me whether I can recognize his skill without any prior knowledge, I would say that it’ll be very unlikely.”

As for Elena, she answered back with a common answer as if she was trying to give a neutral reply.

“Even if you said to do that from a glance, you can actually pretty much guess the ability of a Hunter from their outer look, body composition, how old he or she looks, and the quality and number of equipment he or she is carrying. So, let’s say if I meet Akira in the relatively safe residential area of Kugamayama city while he’s on his casual clothing, I would say that it’s impossible to see through his real ability in that situation.”

Carol was listening closely to both of their answers. She then smiled as if she was satisfied.

“So, even Sara and Elena can’t do that too, huh? Well, I guess we’re lucky to have met someone who hides his real ability like Akira in a situation where we can actually see his real ability, right? Yep, as I thought, we should hold it dearly.”

Sara smiled and said.

“Well, now that you mention it, we’re indeed lucky.”

Elena’s expression somewhat softened as she said.

“You can say that again. So let’s do our best to properly do our job so that Akira won’t cut his connection with us.”

Carol smiled and nodded showing that she agreed too.

As she was about to continue chatting in a good mood, suddenly, one of the piles of wreckages that they set up to barricade the room moved. The monsters that were on the other side of the pile were trying to either dismantle the barricade or push the pile off.

Carol, who noticed it, slightly frowned as she clicked her tongue. She then immediately ran to that particular hallway with her gun ready in her hand and an obviously annoyed face. She stood in front of the pile and stuck her gun into that pile.

She pulled the trigger while her gun was still pushed into that pile, aiming at the monsters on the other side of that pile. The muzzle-flash flashed the inside of the pile as flashes passed through the small opening among the wreckages. The powerful piercing bullet easily pierced through the pile and hit the monsters on the other side.

Carol kept her finger on the trigger as if she was venting her irritation. The piercing bullets easily shot down the monsters on the other side of the pile and turned them into extra obstacles, preventing other monsters from coming from that hallway.

Carol whispered, it was obvious that she was angry since she got interrupted back there.

"…Good grief, right when I have the chance to gather more info. Can't these monsters be a little more considerate?!"

From that short exchange, Carol confirmed that Elena and Sara also could not accurately guess Akira's real skill. Carol at least expected it until that point.

Her real qualm was about Elena and Sara, who did not find it strange how big the gap between how strong Akira looked and how strong he really was. That was the big difference between both of them and Carol.

If Carol had to make a guess, it might be Sara was not bothered by something like that in the first place, but that should not be the case for Elena. She should at least find it strange, question it, and at least make some guesses about it.

But judging from their expression and the tone of their voice when they spoke, Carol did not feel any trace of anything like that from both Sara and Elena.

So in short, Sara and Elena should have the answer to that question, or at least, they should have a good guess to explain the reason why such a huge gap was created. Once Carol confirmed it and understood it, she had successfully completed half of her reason why she talked with both Sara and Elena back there.

But the moment she wanted to make the move to accomplish the other half of her aim, the monsters just came barging in and interrupted her.

[Well, I guess I'll just leave it as that, it's a good thing that now I know Elena and Sara know the reason behind Akira's real strength… Wait, no, dammit! As I thought, it's really bothering me!]

Since Carol knew about it now, she could not help but be bothered by it. She then put all her irritation in her bullets and vented it toward the monsters that interrupted her.

__*__*__*__

Togami was barely able to follow Shikarabe and Akira.

They were pushing through the hallway against the monsters that filled it, aiming for the room where their rescue targets were. Other than only being able to slowly proceed because of the number of monsters there, they did not encounter any other trouble.

But, the number and the strength of the monsters were already above what Togami could handle. Akira and Shikarabe forced their way forward relying on their firepower, as for Togami, he was barely able to follow them while picking the monsters that the other two had missed since both of them prioritized more on pushing forward as fast as they could.

It did not seem that Shikarabe had any plans to slow down just to let Togami catch up. Akira also did not seem to be willing to get left behind to help Togami fight against the swarm of B18 monsters. Although both of them had no plans to leave Togami behind, if Togami could not catch up with them and if he could not follow them unless they helped him, then there was no helping it. That's what both Akira and Shikarabe thought about that situation.

If they slowed down there, it meant that they would have to face more monsters. It would endanger them as well as Elena's team that was waiting for them back in the hall near the stairs. So, in order to reach their goal as soon as possible, they prioritized more on pushing forward rather than waiting for Togami.

Not to mention, Togami was the one who forced his way to join Shikarabe's team. So Akira thought that Togami would not want them to lower the speed nor to assist him. And even if Togami wished for that unconsciously, both Shikarabe and Akira had no plans to comply at all.

Togami became desperate and pushed forward. He did all he could as not to get left behind by the other two. After all, even he knew well that getting left behind in that situation simply meant death.

Togami glanced at Shikarabe and Akira who were fighting the monsters in front of him. They were using the layout of the hallway and the wreckage of the B18 monsters that they defeated to hide, they also kicked the dead monsters and used them as a shield against the incoming bullets as they did not show any hesitation at all in fighting the monsters in front of them. They sometimes showed themselves in the line of fire of the enemies, but they were able to shoot the enemies down way faster before they got shot as they kept their upper hand in that situation.

Togami watched how the Hunters who were better than him were moving around, it was as if they were showing the difference in their skills. Togami was making a dejected face. His desperate face was mixed with pain, envy, jealousy, regret, and disappointment in himself.

But looking from the other people's point of view, Togami was actually doing pretty well. His sharpened concentration reached the end of his 4 limbs as he moved them around quickly, showing the skill that he had polished through daily training. Seeing how the other Hunters who were better than him were moving around, he quickly imitated them and boosted his skill even more.

Togami was using every single ounce of his power there, his movement was already above his usual limit. As he was working together with the other Hunters who were better than him and trying desperately to catch up with them, plus from the daily training that he had gone through, his talent started to bloom there.

Togami himself noticed that he was moving better than he expected. When he realized that, he could feel compliments for his growth starting to echo in the back of his mind.

But that was not enough. It was far away from enough for him to have the same pride in himself that he once had.

Togami could see how Shikarabe, who had better equipment than him, was moving very well suitable for someone who was using those powerful equipment. While on the other hand, there was also Akira, who although was using worse equipment than him, was able to perform really well. Even with his high-quality equipment on, Togami was barely able to catch up. This all meant that he was truly lacking in skills. This single fact prevented Togami from feeling satisfied with his current skill level.

Right at that time, suddenly a B18 monster flew to his right. Togami immediately froze up the moment he saw that monster. His reaction was late, as he tried to aim his rifle at that monster as fast as he could, but that monster had already fixed its aim at him first.

The logical side of Togami shrieked that he would not make it on time, he prepared himself to welcome death.

But suddenly, that monster crashed down in a single shot.

Togami was taken aback and turned in the direction where that shot came from. He could see a CWH anti-material rifle’s muzzle pointed in his direction, it was Akira. Akira had noticed that monster ahead of time, he immediately turned back, readied his CWH anti-material rifle, and sniped that monster before it could shoot at Togami.

Akira then just casually turned around again and continued fighting the monsters in front of him as if he did something that was nothing unusual. But behind him, Togami was watching Akira's back with teary eyes as if he was about to cry.

"…Dammit!!"

Togami himself was not sure to whom he said that to and why he said that, he then picked himself up and continued forward.

Akira was pushing his way forward aiming for the room that was not that far ahead of him. He used his CWH anti-material rifle to fight the B18 monsters. The special ammo that he used could easily break the forcefield armour, pierce the monster's body all the way to the other end, and then hit the other monster behind it.

The monster that got its control device destroyed in one shot turned into big wreckage, Akira then used his augmented suit to kick it to the deeper part of the hallway and crashed it into the other monsters. He was also using the wreckage to shield himself from the monsters in front of him as he kept pushing forward.

In reality, Akira's augmented suit was not designed for CQC. But thanks to Alpha's support, the augmented suit would harden only the moment his kick connected. Furthermore, Alpha was also doing other small adjustments like transmitting the shock from the kick to Akira's whole body to reduce the burden on his leg. But of course, there was a limit to how far that could continue.

The moment Akira kicked a monster, suddenly a strange sound came out from his leg. But rather than pain, Akira could feel something else that was equally bad and twitched.

"It just made a 'crack' sound though!! It did!? Didn't it?!"

Alpha smiled casually at Akira and replied.

“Don’t worry, your leg is not broken.”

“That doesn’t mean that everything is fine as long as it’s not broken, you know!??”

“It’ll heal up in no time. Aren’t you glad that you bought that expensive medicine?”

“That’s not the problem here!!”

Akira swallowed another pill of the medicines that he already had in his mouth when he said that. It seemed that he had gotten so used to it to the point that he was using the 2,000,000 Aurum per box medicine without any hesitation.

The medicine that he had taken beforehand quickly fixed the source of that strange sound, his bone, together with the muscle that got torn up from the kicking. And before the effect of the last medicine that he took had worn off, Akira swallowed another pill to make sure that any injury in his body would immediately get healed.

The current situation was actually way above what Akira could handle. So in order to be able to face that situation, Alpha was controlling Akira’s body through his augmented suit and moving his body around pretty violently.

His muscle was torn when he suddenly accelerated, his bone cracked when he suddenly stopped. In order to avoid enemies’ shots while shooting back at them, Akira had to shoot from positions where he could not properly take in the kickback from his rifle, so in order to do that, he relied on the power of his augmented suit and put his body in even more burden. And when he kicked the wreckage on the floor, the impact was transmitted to his leg as if he was dragging it on the floor.

So for Akira, fighting in that situation was the same as crushing his body bit by bit. The medicine that he took beforehand would then immediately heal any injuries, and only by that, was he able to sustain himself in that situation.

Akira kept on complaining to Alpha through telepathy while fighting the monsters there, then Alpha would respond back while smiling as usual. That silly talk that he was having there helped him to keep his calm in the middle of that battle filled with flying bullets from both directions. It served as a support to Akira's mental state.

As long as Alpha was smiling like usual, it meant that his life was not in danger. No matter how many times bullets passed close to his face, no matter how many monsters that he was facing, as long as Alpha was smiling like usual, Akira was sure that he still had the upper hand.

Even if that was only his misconception, that kind of good misconception was something that he needed in that situation. He did not need any pessimistic opinion that might disturb his calmness. Akira somehow was already over such a thing as he continued fighting without showing any hesitation and even having a confident smile plastered on his face.

Looking at that Akira, Alpha somehow smiled in satisfaction.

Akira suddenly asked Alpha a question.

"We've gone quite far though!? How far away is that room from here!?"

"It's not that far ahead, just a little more."

Alpha pointed his finger toward a huge pile of dead monsters not too far from him.

"What's up with that pile?"

"The entrance to that room is basically behind that pile of wreckage. I bet the people who barricaded themselves inside that room killed the monsters that were trying to enter that room and eventually created that pile."

Akira's face twitched, he seemed a bit disturbed.

“Do we really have no other choice but to remove that while fighting the monsters?”

“If I have to add more, I would say that you would need to secure the entrance while checking the inside of the room too. Otherwise, you’ll get trapped inside that room.”

“Good grief, what a pain in the butt. Is there anything we can do to remove that pile in one go…?”

The moment Akira said that, the pile in front of that entrance was suddenly blown away.

__*__*__*__

Reina, Shiori, and Kanae stood in front of the entrance of the room where they barricaded themselves.

Although they were in the middle of barricading themselves inside that room, Kanae noticed fighting was going on outside and decided that it was their chance to escape. They immediately finished all of their preparation, and now they were ready to go out.

There was a good chance the monsters that they were running from were still roaming outside the room, and there was no mistaking it that those monsters were in the middle of a fight against something else.

The most important thing was not the fact that the monsters were fighting against something else, but that they were in the middle of a fight. If they had to make an optimistic guess, they might be fighting against a squad sent to rescue them.

But there was no guarantee that those Hunters could reach that room. Moreover, they might be just completely different Hunters fighting against the monsters for a completely different reason.

Their best chance there was to use the chaos happening outside to slip away and make a run. Both Shiori and Kanae thought so, they knew that they might not get another chance.

Kanae was smiling casually and turned to Reina.

“Milady, are you ready?”

Reina looked slightly nervous.

“I’m okay. We can go anytime.”

They were about to plunge themselves into a place that was filled with monsters. It was understandable for Reina to feel nervous. Reina repeatedly took deep breaths to calm herself, she could feel her heart was thumping so hard to the point that it was so deafening for her.

Shiori then gently said to Reina to help her calm down.

“Milady, no matter what happens, Kanae and I will protect you, so please don’t be worried.”

Reina looked at Shiori and smiled.

“I know, I’ll be counting on you.”

“Just leave it to us.”

Shiori smiled back confidently at Reina.

Shiori had set up portable walls to barricade the entrance to that room, and there was a pile of dead monsters on the other side of that wall. Kanae carefully approached that portable wall while getting herself ready.

She then squeezed her fist and pulled it back.

“Well then, here we go, 3, 2, 1…”

Kanae was smiling from ear to ear, she was excited to join in on the fight. Reina had a serious look on her face as she resolved herself and gripped her rifle tightly. While Shiori also had a serious look, which showed her devotion toward Reina.

“Zero!”

Kanae then blew away the portable wall and the pile behind it with a single powerful punch from her right fist.

Akira was completely dumbfounded when the pile of monsters that was blocking the entrance to the room suddenly got blown away.

From there, Kanae and Shiori jumped out. Kanae immediately punched a B18 monster while Shiori swiftly sliced a B18 monster near them. The punched monster crashed into the wall with a loud banging sound, while the sliced monster was beautifully cut into two symmetric pieces and fell down to the floor.

Akira immediately noticed that those were Kanae and Shiori, both of them also immediately noticed Akira too. Not too long after that, Reina also jumped out from that room. The moment she was out, she immediately looked around and checked her surroundings.

Shikarabe quickly grasped the current situation and shouted.

“We’re heading back now!! Akira, you take the rear!! Togami, escort them back to the hall! Let’s go!!”

Right after Shikarabe gave that order, he immediately made a 180 degrees turn in order to secure the hallway back to the hall.

Kanae grabbed Reina’s arm and pulled her along since it seemed that Reina still did not fully understand the current situation. She then glanced at Akira and spoke to him in a good mood.

“I’ll leave the rear to you!!”

Kanae was waving at Akira with her free hand and a big smile on her face. Reina was half-dragged by Kanae as she passed beside Akira, she was still obviously dumbfounded.

Shiori elegantly stopped and stood next to Akira.

“Is it alright to leave the rear to you alone?”

“Just go.”

Akira did not hesitate at all. Both of them were busy, after all.

Shiori slightly bowed at Akira before quickly catching up with Kanae and Reina.

Togami just stood there frozen for a few seconds, his brain could not process what just happened, but he eventually returned back to reality and flusteredly tried to catch up with the other Hunters.

Now Akira was left alone in the rear, Alpha was floating next to him while smiling.

“Aren’t you glad that you don’t need to search inside that room now?”

“You can say that again. We just need to return back now. Thank goodness we’re in the last part of this search. It went better than I thought it would.”

“I’m sure that the rest of the job is not that hard, you just need to return back with the rescue targets. But you should not lower your guard yet, okay?”

“Yeah, I know.”

Akira pulled out his A4WM automatic grenade launcher and aimed it at the hallway. The A4WM grenade launcher immediately spewed out grenades, it was not a weapon designed to be used indoors. Even if the inside of the old-ruin building was resilient, Akira still had to be careful using that rifle. Even though it was a powerful weapon, it would be meaningless if it ended up destroying the interior and blocking the hallway, that was why Akira did not use it until now.

But he only needed to head back now, so Akira thought that it was even advantageous in that situation if he ended up breaking the wall and blocking the hallway to prevent the monsters from chasing them, so he pulled the trigger without holding back at all.

Grenades flew from its muzzle into the hallway and swallowed the swarm of monsters coming from the deeper part of that hallway with explosions. The shockwave from the explosions did not have anywhere to escape inside the closed hallway, thus, it was blown right back at Akira. Because of that, a huge wreckage suddenly just flew right past Akira.

Akira staggered as he gasped.

"…Whoah!!"

Alpha amusedly looked at surprised Akira and said.

"That rifle is not designed to be used indoors, so you need to be careful."

Smokes raised inside the hallway and blocked the view. Akira kept his eyes on that cloud of smokes for monsters but he did not see any disruption in the smokes. So he then decided that it should be fine as he turned around and started running back while still keeping his eyes for more monsters.

Reina, Shiori, and Kanae were running following Shikarabe, who was guiding them back to the hall where Elena and the rest of the Hunters were waiting. Since Shikarabe destroyed most of the monsters on their way to the room, they had not much trouble on their way back. It was not like there were no monsters at all, but Shikarabe, Shiori, and Kanae could handle them just fine.

They then heard explosions coming from behind, it was the sound of Akira using his A4WM automatic grenade launcher.

Kanae glanced behind her.

“That Akira seems to be having fun back there. But still, I didn’t expect to find him in this building. I guess this must be some kind of fate, huh?”

But Shiori quickly warned Kanae.

“Stop with the chatter and focus on the fighting.”

“It’s fine, I can chat this must basically because I have the leeway… Here!”

Kanae kicked a B18 monster that suddenly appeared in the hallway when she said that. As her leg that was wrapped in black tights and a pretty big shoe extended out under her maid outfit, she drove a powerful kick into the B18 monster near her.

Kanae’s maid outfit actually had a good defensive capability, while her black tights was a part of her augmented suit. Shiori was also using the same equipment as Kanae except for the boots. The ones that Kanae was using were specially designed boots for CQC. Not only was it exceptionally robust, it was also equipped with mini force field armour that could create short force field burst. It was specifically designed to boost the power of the kick of its user.

The B18 monster that Kanae kicked was blasted as if it was a cannon.

Shiori immediately focused her attention on another B18 monster that appeared in the opposite direction and cut it with her blade. Shiori’s blade was able to easily cut open the B18 monster as if it just ignored the force field armour and went straight for the monster’s body.

Shiori sighed, exasperatedly.

“No matter whether you have the leeway or not, it’s shameless to make unnecessary chit-chat, you know? They should’ve taught you that right, Kanae?”

But instead, Kanae tried to make an excuse.

“They taught me that random chatter is important to calm down my nerves during a long fight though? Didn’t you also do that with Milady?”

“Your unnecessary chatter is not the same as my conversation with Milady.”

Shiori and Kanae showed enough leeway to make that exchange while keeping their guard up and making sure that Reina was safe.

Reina was running behind Kanae and Shiori. The swarm of mechanical monsters that surrounded them when they were barricading themselves inside the room were mostly gone. The moment they came out from that room, Shiori and Kanae immediately killed any monsters near them. Reina had considerably calmed down compared to when she was inside the room.

Reina, who regained some of her composure, finally noticed Togami who was looking in her direction. She then somehow sounded a bit harsh as she asked Togami.

“…What?”

Togami flusteredly replied.

“No, it’s just that… If I’m not mistaken… You should be on the same team with Katsuya, right?”

“…I was. But I’m no longer in Katsuya’s team. So, what about it?”

Togami finally looked away. Reina kept staring at Togami with a confused look for a few seconds before she just casually returned her view forward.

Togami lightly sighed and thought.

[What the heck am I doing…]

Togami was actually only glancing at Reina when she suddenly looked back at him. When that happened, he thought that he should at least say something and just spoke out anything that came up in his mind about Reina. That was all there was to it.

But Reina sounded a bit annoyed when she replied. Togami was slightly overwhelmed by that and decided to just cut their conversation short.

Although Togami did not realize it himself, he actually glanced at Reina since he felt a sense of camaraderie with Reina.

Togami was together with the other Hunters who were better than him. Although this was only his self-evaluation, he believed that he did not contribute much, it could even be said that Akira and Shikarabe were protecting him along the way. Or at least, he did not think that he contributed much or did anything that he could be proud of during that rescue operation.

At that time, Togami caught sight of Reina who was protected by Shiori and Kanae. The scene of her being protected by Shiori and Kanae inside a place that was far too dangerous for her to be, and the fact that it seemed she lamented her situation there. It was basically similar to the situation that Togami was currently in. As in matter of fact, Reina's skill was indeed relatively closer to Togami than to Shiori or Shikarabe.

When Reina suddenly spoke to him, Togami did not even realize that he was staring at her and could only react flusteredly and throw out a random subject. But in the end, it seemed that it somehow annoyed Reina and it left him with a strange feeling of self-admonishment.

Reina also lightly sighed and thought.

[Why in the world did I do that…]

The reason why Reina reacted harshly was because Togami's question reminded her of her own patheticness, so it was her venting to Togami.

In reality, Togami's impression of Reina was simply one of the people from Katsuya's team, that was all there was to it. The only reason why he remembered her was simply because he saw Reina on Katsuya's team from time to time back when he had a one-sided rivalry with Katsuya.

But on the other hand, Reina knew Togami to some extent. She knew that Togami was a skilled young Hunter in Drankam, he might as well be the second strongest young Hunter in Drankam after Katsuya. People in Drankam had their attention on him and they hoped that he would be the beacon for the anti-Katsuya faction. She also knew that Togami was a skilled Hunter who successfully hunted a bounty monster with Shikarabe and a handful of other Hunters.

So in short, Reina saw Togami as a Hunter who was above her, just like how Togami saw Shikarabe.

So when Togami asked Reina if she was still in Katsuya's team, to Reina, it sounded as if Togami was asking her why an incompetent Hunter, who could do nothing but tag along with Katsuya, was in this place.

Reina's logical side was telling her that was not what Togami meant and it was nothing more than her imagination. But since she thought like that once, it was hard for her to change it now.

Reina realized that she just vented her anger at Togami and she hated herself for doing that.

If only they were in a safe place and they could take their time talking to each other calmly, Reina and Togami could be able to get along. But unfortunately, they did not have that luxury at the moment. The still-growing Hunters, both of them, just pulled themselves together for now and somehow moved on from that worry.

Akira was still shooting grenades using his A4WM automatic grenade launcher while retreating. His retreat was going very well, even too well that Akira started questioning it.

“The monsters stopped coming. I don’t think it’s because I’ve defeated them though… So what’s going on here?”

Alpha casually answered his question.

“They might have decided fighting frontally would be ineffective, so they might be avoiding you right now.”

Alpha was not smiling like during the last battle, but she did not seem worried either. Her expression was neutral.

“Either way, let’s use this chance to retreat.”

Although it was not as dangerous as before, Akira still could not lower his guard on his way back.

Shikarabe led the group in the front while fighting the enemies that were blocking their way back to the hall where Elena and the other Hunters were waiting. Once they returned back, Shikarabe immediately scanned the situation and finally sighed in relief.

Elena immediately approached Shikarabe.

“How was the rescue?”

“It went well, we secured the targets and retreated back without any trouble. Give us your next order to get out of this building. We basically recovered 3 Hunters and they’re not badly injured.”

Elena looked at Shikarabe, then looked at the hallway where Shikarabe came from. Not too far from the entrance, she could see Reina, Shiori, Togami, and Kanae running, then also Akira a little further behind them.

Elena’s face slightly relaxed after she confirmed that everyone was alright. But she then immediately pulled herself together and gave the next order.

“Sara! Carol! We’re pulling back!!”

Carol and Sara who were guarding the entrance to the other hallways gathered around Elena when they heard that.

Elena then asked Shikarabe.

“Shikarabe, is it alright to count those 3 Hunters as extra fighting hands?”

“Yes, but only two of them. And keep in mind that those two are here to protect the other one.”

“Got it. Shikarabe, you lead them down to the 19th floor. If the situation down there is still the same as before, we should be able to get a short rest.”

“Roger that!”

Shikarabe waved at Shiori, signalling her to follow him. After Shikarabe confirmed that the other Hunters got his signal, he immediately moved out to lead the way down to the 19th floor.

Shiori, Reina, Kanae, and Togami appeared out of the hallway and they did not stop running as they went straight to the stairs. Elena was obviously surprised when she saw 2 maids and a young girl passing through the hall.

She then mumbled while still looking at Reina and the other two Hunters.

“…Maid outfit? No, more than that, I feel like I’ve seen them somewhere before…”

Elena tried to dig through her memory, but Shiori and Kanae’s maid outfits distracted her from remembering them. Sara and Carol finally grouped up with Elena, Sara then asked Elena a question.

“…Elena, about those Hunters though…”

Sara seemed to be thinking of the same thing as Elena, but Elena responded back prioritizing her position as the leader of the team.

“They’re the rescue targets. We’ll also move out once we meet up with Akira. Shikarabe said that two of them are basically bodyguards for the other one and it’s okay to count them as extra fighting hands. Since I sent Shikarabe down ahead, they should not face any trouble going down. We’ll join with Akira to guard the rear while retreating too. After all, the monsters from the 30th floor might chase us on our way down.”

Sara looked a bit bothered as she nodded.

Carol also seemed a bit bothered.

“If my eyes didn’t trick me, I saw 2 of them are in maid outfits though…”

“Since we can count them as extra fighting hands, there should be no need for us to protect them. So just put that back in your mind first and you can ask about things that have nothing to do with escaping from this building later.”

“O-Okay.”

Sara and Carol seemed a bit confused, Elena could understand their feelings. But it was not like she had the answer to that either and it was not the place to ask that question now. So Elena decided to prioritize more on escaping that building and save any questions for later.

Akira was running through the hallway, his face slightly relaxed the moment he saw Elena and the other Hunters.

“It seems that Elena-san and the others didn’t face any trouble either.”

“Akira, keep running! It seems that Shikarabe and the rest of the Hunters have gone down first.”

Alpha urged Akira to hurry up. Akira was a bit surprised by that but complied and started running faster.

The moment Akira entered the hall where Elena was, one of the barricades that blocked the way to the other hallways suddenly burst open as a relatively big monster burst into the room.

That big mechanical monster smashed its way through the barricade with high momentum. So the moment it broke in, the barricade was forcefully blown away, crashed into the ceiling, wall, and floor as they made loud banging sounds.

One of the wreckages was even sent flying towards Elena even though she was far from that barricade. Although it really surprised her, she was able to nimbly evade the wreckage that flew straight at her. The same thing happened to Carol and Sara, but they skilfully kicked the flying wreckages aside.

The big monster was more or less tall enough and wide enough to block the whole hallway alone. It was wrapped with a robust-looking body. Although about 10 metres of its body had extended out of the hallway, it was not its full length yet, there was no telling how far its body extended down the hallway.

Akira ducked and evaded the flying wreckage as he was running to where Elena was. He then quickly turned around, aimed his A4WM automatic grenade launcher at that big monster, and pulled the trigger. The grenades flew out straight to that big monster, stuck on its armour, and exploded.

The impact forced that big monster down into the floor and kept it flat on the floor. But then a part of its lower armour suddenly peeled off and legs with wheels appeared under those peeled off armours.

It seemed that Akira was able to somehow stop that monster momentarily, but Elena immediately shouted at him.

“Keep running!!”

Akira immediately ran toward the stairs and was about to go down the stairs.

In that instant, a part of the monster’s big body peeled off, exposing the guns under it. On the next moment, it shot indiscriminately inside the room as if to make sure that it hit all nooks and crannies around it. Loud gunshots followed with a barrage of bullets filled the room, it hit everything indiscriminately, wall, floor, ceiling, and even the wreckage of the other monsters.

Akira, Elena, Sara, and Carol quickly jumped down the stairs and barely avoided the bullet storm. It was a rather intense situation.

They then hurried to catch up with Shikarabe who went down earlier. The situation below the 30th floor did not seem to have changed much, there were no extra monsters at all. And since they already destroyed most of the monsters on their way up, they were able to quickly and safely go down.

Sara was still running when she suddenly asked a question to Elena.

“Elena, did that huge monster not trigger your radar?”

Elena frowned.

“…Sadly enough, yes. Not only the sensitivity of my information-gathering device is lowered in this building, the dead monsters that we used to block the other hallway were also producing weak signals that might have interfered with my information-gathering device. I’m sorry.”

It seemed that Elena felt responsible for that, Sara just smiled at her and replied.

“Don’t worry about it. If you couldn’t detect it, then there’s really nothing we can do about it. It’s not like I’m blaming you here, right Akira?”

Akira lightly smiled and agreed to what Sara just said.

“Yes, I agree with Sara-san. So please don’t worry about it.”

Akira then sent a glance to Carol, who understood what Akira was trying to say.

Honestly speaking, she was not interested in blaming it on Elena at all, but at the same time, she also wanted to know why she could not detect a monster that big.

Back then, Carol noticed that Akira suddenly ran faster. If Akira did that because he knew about that big monster, it would mean that he was able to detect a monster that Elena could not. But then again, Akira's surprise did not seem to be fake the moment he saw that monster.

Although she still had some questions, it was not the time to ask those questions. Carol held her curiosity back as she smiled at Elena and said.

"The fact that no one detected that huge monster means that it might have some kind of special camouflaging device that exploits the lowered sensitivity of our information-gathering device. Or maybe that the setting adjusted to help to detect the smaller monsters is not good at detecting big monsters. But if we readjust the setting to focus more on detecting big monsters, we will have trouble with the smaller monsters instead. So I think this is where it's important to make a compromise, I'm just happy that we could survive that big monster without losing anyone."

After saying that, Carol checked Akira's reaction. Akira seemed to be listening closely to her and nodded in agreement.

It seemed that she made the right decision there to even put up a reason as to why Elena was blameless in order to score some point with Akira. As Carol thought, Akira seemed to lack common knowledge for Hunters and he was showing interest in such a thing. After Carol was able to confirm that, she kept her poker face although she was smiling happily deep inside.

After Elena heard supportive words from her best friend that she was together with for years and a young boy that she got along well just recently, plus extra reasoning that Elena was pretty sure Carol said mostly for someone else, Elena pulled herself together and smiled. She sounded delighted as she said.

"Thank you, now I know that there is such a kind of monster too, I'll be more careful next time."

Sara smiled satisfied seeing that Elena had cheered up.

“But still, how did a monster that big get inside the hallway? I wonder if that thing is a part of the security of this building.”

Akira seemed interested in that subject too.

“It doesn’t seem to be an extra security monster though… Not to mention, with its size, I don’t think it can move around freely inside the hallway. Carol, do you have any guess? You’re pretty knowledgeable about the Seranthal building, right?”

Carol frowned and said.

“As far as I can tell, I don’t remember monsters like that guarding this building before. In the first place, with a body that big, I don’t think it’s possible for that monster to come from outside of the building… I really have no idea why that thing is in this building.”

There was no one present who could answer that question. So they decided to just shelve it for now and move on.

They were able to reach the 19th floor and group up with Shikarabe without any trouble.

Reina and Togami were breathing heavily, compared to them, Akira looked completely normal. Rather than the difference in their physical strength, it was more because of the medicines that Akira kept consuming. But Reina and Togami, who saw Akira, could not help but misunderstand. They looked at Akira with a mix of surprise and amazement.

Elena then gave an order to everyone there.

“We’ll head out again after 5 minutes. Until then, make sure that you have everything ready.”

Akira immediately checked his equipment. He pulled out reserve ammo from his rucksack and reloaded his rifle even if he only used it once. He also replaced the empty reserve magazines attached around his body, refilled the medicines in his pocket, and replaced the energy pack of his augmented suit.

While in the middle of doing that, Akira suddenly mumbled.

“…I used quite a lot of my reserve supply this time.”

DVTS minigun extended magazine, CWH anti-material rifle special ammo, A4WM automatic grenade-launcher grenades-magazine, medicine, augmented suit energy pack–all of them were expensive consumables. But Akira did not remember wasting any of them, it was a necessary expense.

But still, when he imagined how much expense he had accumulated there, he could not help but to smile bitterly and lightly sigh.

Alpha then teasingly smiled at him.

“Just in case if you want to know, I can tell you how much you’ve spent until now.”

“No thanks.”

Akira answered back firmly. After all, if he was worried about the money that he used to fight the monsters, it might force him to pay that cost with his life later. He thought that he could worry about it later after he returned back alive.

“…It should be alright, I should be able to earn more money. Not to mention, I made quite a lot of money yesterday too. As for this request, Carol and Elena-san should have properly negotiated the details with the City Management. And since we successfully rescued Reina, I should get an extra reward from Drankam too, it should be alright.”

Akira was telling himself that it should be fine. He should not think how many days the money that he spent this time would have bought in the inn where he once lived, or how many times he could eat in that luxurious restaurant that he visited once out of Shiori’s invitation with the money that he spent that day. Akira kept telling himself not to think about it.

Alpha just smiled and said.

“You’re right, it should be alright, maybe. You should be able to end up with huge profits from this request. That’s why, if you want to get extra motivation, it should be alright to use the reward that you get this time to eat a meal in that luxurious restaurant where Shiori invited you in the past.”

“I know you’re saying that on purpose!!”

Akira tried his best not to show his emotion on his face.

Alpha smiled at Akira who was trying to keep his poker face and said to him.

“Oh my, that’s not true at all. I’m just saying that since I think it’s totally okay to reward yourself with something like that after working this hard. It’s not like I’m teasing you for taking this dangerous request from Elena without thinking much about the reward, you know.”

Alpha was still smiling like usual next to Akira, while Akira just silently continued checking his equipment. His face only twitched for a bit in response to what Alpha said to him.

Akira was still pouting after Alpha poked fun at him, but then Kanae suddenly spoke to him as if she could not read the mood.

“Akira! We meet again!!”

“…Yeah.”

Akira replied as if he was not interested in talking with Kanae at the moment, but she ignored that.

“But still, what a coincidence to meet you in this place. If you’re going to come here, you should have come with us right from the start, you know?”

“I’m here not because I planned to come here right from the start and it’s not like I came to this building to rescue you in the first place. You should ask Shikarabe for the details.”

“Is that so? Well, whichever the case, thanks for saving us.”

For some reason, Kanae was looking at Akira with interest. In contrast to that, Akira looked at Kanae with a little suspicion. It was because he had no idea why Kanae was so interested in talking to him.

To be more precise, it was just that Kanae had no reservation when it came to approaching someone else, while on the other hand, Akira was being careful to anyone who approached him without any good reasons. Both of them simply did not suit each other.

Kanae was interested in Akira's strength, a part of it was because she could not figure out how strong Akira was.

From the story that she heard, she knew that Akira could fight evenly against Shiori when she was using her trump card in the underground city of Kuzusuhara ruin. Shiori's trump card was a special accelerator drug that increased concentration, sharpened sense, and slowed down time perception. The price of using that drug was putting one's brain under immense stress that might render its user paralyzed for a few days, but in exchange for that, it could completely transform its user into a superhuman while that drug was still in effect. So, the only people who could fight Shiori in that state must be powerful people.

But when Akira faced Katsuya during that incident with a pickpocket girl, even after Akira released an excessive level of killing intent, he ended up slowly retreating back. In reality, since Kanae left that place with Reina and Shiori early, she could only hear what happened after they left from the other people. But from what she heard, it seemed that in the end Katsuya did not hand over that girl to Akira, and Akira just silently left.

It was true that Katsuya was a powerful Hunter, but compared to Shiori with her accelerator drug, he was obviously weaker. So, since Akira retreated back from Katsuya, then it would mean Akira was not that strong.

While on the other hand, Shikarabe and Akira got pretty close to the room where Kanae was hiding with Reina and Shiori. When she was about to go down the stairs, Kanae glanced around to check the situation, and judging from what she could see, they would have fought their way through the monsters to get that close to that room, which meant that Akira must be pretty strong.

And that Akira was now right in front of her. Kanae was pretty confident in her ability to evaluate someone with her eyes. And from what she could see, Akira was indeed pretty strong for a Hunter of his age, that was all there was to it, nothing more. So in short, Akira did not seem that particularly strong. She could not feel a trace of vigour, pressure, or aura that strong people usually had. He seemed to be just a common Hunter like all the other Hunters in the eastern district.

Kanae had enough reason to think that Akira was not that strong, while at the same time, she also had enough evidence to believe that Akira was pretty strong. Because of that, Kanae could not say for sure how strong he really was.

She was smiling while guessing Akira's real strength.

[Yup, no idea at all. I can't really tell if Akira is strong or not. Honestly speaking, I want to poke at him to see how strong he really is, but as expected, I shouldn't do that in this situation.]

Kanae's impression of Akira was simply someone whose strength was unknown to her.

Even for someone like Kanae, she knew that she had to prioritize her current duty at the moment. So in short, if they were in a different situation, she might have already poked at Akira right now. Kanae honestly felt a bit bummed by that.

Togami and Reina were really stressed out as they were trying to catch their breath, but after staying in that safe place for some time, both of them eventually were able to calm down. Once they had calmed down and had enough leeway to put some of their attention to the current situation, both of them immediately directed their gaze to things that bothered them the most.

For Reina, it was Carol. While for Togami, it was Kanae and Shiori. But technically speaking, both of them were bothered by the same thing, their appearances.

Reina looked at Carol and thought.

[…What is with that augmented suit? It's really something… Or more like, no matter how you look at it, it's designed for seducing men, right? Although I heard that some old-world augmented suits have that kind of design, it's the first time for me to see someone actually using it. Is it just an augmented suit from the current era but with an old-world design? Or is it an old-world relic? Whichever the case, I'm impressed that she's actually using it. Is it a matter of getting used to that design? The curve is pretty intense too… Is it just that it looks intense simply because of the design?]

Reina looked really bothered as she was staring at Carol's augmented suit.

At the same time, Togami looked at Kanae and Shiori's maid outfit and thought.

[…That thing is a maid outfit, right? And maids are those people who serve in a big mansion for rich people, right? So why are there maids in this old-world ruin? Are those maid outfits actually old-world relics with strong defensive power and they're using it in place of normal armour? But for some reason, they look pretty much used to it though, it doesn't feel like they're Hunters. But Shikarabe said that our rescue targets are Drankam Hunters, right…? Wait, he might be talking about Reina and those two might be Reina's maid… But again, why would a Hunter have maids?]

Togami seemed so confused as he was staring at Shiori and Kanae.

Shiori was standing next to Reina, offering her a stamina drink. Reina thanked Shiori and drank it.

Shiori noticed that Togami was looking in her direction, but she did not pay much attention to it. She herself understood that her maid outfit would attract some attention. And as long as she was there as Reina's maid, there was no need to put too much attention to what other people thought or said.

After Carol finished her preparation, she nibbled on a ration that looked like grilled rice dumplings. Although it looked like a simple snack from the outside, it was actually infused with restorative and healing properties. It also replenished the nanomachines that she used during the last fight. For Carol, consuming that food was equally important as replenishing her reserve ammo.

Carol also noticed that Reina was looking at her, but she just ignored that. Although the design of her augmented suit was made to seduce men, it sometimes also attracted attention from the other women. Some women who were not used to seeing old-world design often threw glances at her out of pure curiosity without any ill will. There were also girls who did not like having a Hunter in that appearance near them. Even Carol herself knew that much. She thought as long as Reina did not complain or say anything about her appearance, then there was no reason to be bothered by that.

Kanae then turned to Togami who was looking at Shiori, so she then looked at Shiori before shifting to Reina, who was next to Shiori. Since Reina was looking at Carol, Kanae's eyes soon ended up on Carol.

Kanae was somehow smiling amusedly, she then threw a smile at Carol.

"Whoah! That augmented suit is really something!!"

Akira was caught by surprise, he did not expect that Kanae would go and ask that question. Akira looked around and noticed that most of the Hunters there had the same impression as him.

Carol was lightly surprised as she turned to Kanae. After all, to her, it did not seem like Kanae was someone who paid attention to appearances.

Carol smiled confidently as she replied to Kanae's remark.

"I won't deny that, but I don't want someone in a maid outfit to say that to me."

Akira unconsciously nodded lightly. What Carol said did make sense and Akira could feel that the other Hunters there would agree with him.

Kanae smiled back and said.

"This is a maid outfit. It would be great if you don't treat it the same as that augmented suit with a design that is obviously for seducing men. No matter how you look at it, your design sticks out far more than this. Or is that you're already used to that design?"

Carol smiled and replied.

"That's weird for you to say that when you voluntarily use that maid outfit and come all the way here to an old-world ruin when there are many armours out there with the same fighting capability. I don't know whose maid you are, but I wonder if that person doesn't think that it'll be sticking out. Or is it out of fetish or something?"

Kanae and Carol were smiling at each other. Although it was not exactly a friendly exchange, it was not a hostile exchange either. It did not feel like they were challenging each other and picking a fight.

As Akira was looking at both of them with a slightly troubled face, Kanae suddenly turned to him and threw a question.

"Akira, which one do you think is weirder?"

Akira obviously looked troubled when Kanae suddenly threw that question at him, but then Carol asked a similar question to him too.

"Oh, good idea. Akira, which one do you think is the weird one? Which one do you think sticking out the most?"

Instead of answering their questions, Akira asked a question to both of them.

"…Why are you both asking me?"

Kanae and Carol replied with similar answers as if they had already decided to do that beforehand.

"Isn't it fine? It's just out of curiosity."

"Isn't it fine? It's just out of a whim."

Akira looked around, Elena and Sara were holding back their laughter. Shikarabe looked like he did not care at all, Reina and Togami looked at Akira as if they were waiting for Akira's answer, and Shiori was just standing next to Reina with a neutral face.

Akira could feel an awkward mood drifting in the room, he then answered back honestly.

"Personally speaking, if it's on the first sight, I think the maid outfit sticks out more. For Carol's augmented suit, it's just a normal augmented suit with an old-world design after all… And I bet that it's not normal to see maids whether it's only an outfit or a real maid in the old-world ruin."

Akira's response was extremely biased since he had already become used to seeing old-world design because of Alpha. His opinion might be very uncommon for people around his age. As in matter of fact, Reina and Togami were obviously surprised by Akira's answer.

After listening to Akira's answer, Carol sported a winning smile. While on the other hand, Kanae lightly waved her hand left and right while shaking her head too. She then spoke to Akira like a veteran talking to a complete beginner.

"Akira, it seems that you still don't understand how wide this world is."

Akira casually replied.

"Yeah, I've been pretty much living in a narrow world until now after all. Sorry about that."

Elena lightly giggled as she joined in.

"We should go soon, if you have the time for silly talk like that, I trust that you've finished your preparation, yes?"

Akira's expression turned serious.

"Yeah, I can go anytime."

“Ready when you are.”

Kanae sounded like she was in a good mood as she said that and returned back to Reina.

Carol still kept her eyes on Kanae when she answered Elena’s question.

“Yeah, no problem here.”

Carol was looking at Kanae as if she had a question in her head.

[…I feel like she asked me that because she was probing for something though, is it only my imagination? Is that simply out of habit? It doesn’t seem her companions are bothered by that either…]

Carol just concluded that Kanae did that simply out of habit and decided to stop thinking about it.

Once Kanae returned to Reina and Shiori, Shiori whispered to Kanae.

“I don’t know what you were planning there, but hold yourself from doing anything that might cause a fight.”

Kanae replied back as if it did not bother her at all.

“Well, isn’t it fine? It seems that Milady was wondering about it, so I was asking that question in her stead. It’s no good you know, Milady, you should not stare at a Hunter whom you don’t know well that intently. Depending on that Hunter, it might be interpreted as picking a fight after all, okay?”

Reina pouted and tried to deny it.

“…It’s better than asking that question straight at her, after all, it’s more or less the same as already picking a fight when you do that, you know?”

Kanae was still smiling as usual when she replied back.

“I don’t have any problem if she accepts it, that’s the biggest difference between me and Milady. Milady, don’t tell me that you think it’s okay to be a bit cheeky just because we're protecting you and we'll definitely do something about it when things get bad? Don't tell me that's why you keep glancing at her? It's a big problem depending on whether you do that on purpose or not, you see."

Reina could not say anything back. Although she did not do that on purpose, it was also true that she could not give a straight answer if she was asked whether she did that thinking that Kanae and Shiori would definitely do something about it if things went bad.

Shiori lightly sighed.

"Just try to behave yourself. If you get ahead of yourself, I'll cut you."

"Yes ma'am!"

Kanae replied back in a good spirit. It was hard to say from her personality whether she responded positively to behave or that she was happy because it sounded like Shiori was willing to fight her. But at least, Kanae decided to just shut up, so Shiori did not pursue any further.

Kanae glanced at Akira and thought.

[…I tried to surprise Akira there with that sudden question, but it seems that he did lower his guard. It also seemed that he was pretty much relaxed while we were talking. As I thought, I guess that Akira is not really that strong, huh? Or was that only an act? Or is it that he's someone who totally changes when he's in the middle of a fight? Uhhh, I still don't have enough material to make any conclusion.]

Kanae was thinking so as she lowered her evaluation of Akira. After all, that was what she could get from her own observation if she did not include stories that she heard from other people.

Kanae was smiling, she was hoping that there would come a chance when she could get better information to accurately predict Akira's real strength.

After everyone finished their preparations, Elena then explained the next plan.

“We’ll go down to the first floor from here and escape the building from the front entrance. Let’s hope that the squads securing this building are still alive.”

Shikarabe felt there was something strange in how Elena worded her plan.

“Is there any reason for us to worry whether the squads outside are still alive or not?”

Elena lightly nodded.

“Yes. You already know that I left mini information-gathering devices on our way up to make sure that we have a safe escape route, right? So basically, the mini information-gathering device on the first floor near the entrance got some signals. It seems that multiple entities entered this building.”

Carol then said to Elena.

“Can you tell me exactly the shape of this something that entered this building?”

If they had a human-like form, then it might be the other Hunters. Or at least, that was what Carol was hoping, but Elena lightly shook her head and said.

“Unfortunately, the device was not able to identify their shapes, and the sensitivity is lowered inside this building. So I can’t say anything about their shapes. The only thing that I can say for sure is that something came into this building. Although I did say multiple entities, it might be the same object going in and out of the building multiple times on purpose to trigger the signal multiple times. So I can’t really confirm the numbers too.”

This time, Akira was the one who asked a question to Elena.

“Is there any chance that they are a reconnaissance team just like us or might even be the main rescue squad?”

“That possibility is not zero. But if that’s really the case, it might be the reconnaissance team. After all, it’s unthinkable for them to send the main squad after sending us, the reconnaissance team, into this building without waiting for us to return first. Either way, just keep in mind that we might spot other Hunters on our way down, make sure not to shoot them by mistake.”

“Understood.”

Akira nodded firmly. Elena lightly smiled and nodded back at him.

Elena’s face then returned back to her serious face.

“The real problem is if that’s not the case, which would mean more monsters just entered the building, that would also mean that those monsters broke through the encirclement made to secure this building. There’s a good chance the situation outside the building has turned dangerous, although the possibility is pretty small, I recommend you to at least keep this in mind. After all, no one can tell what will happen from here on.”

Elena remembered the big monster that attacked them on the 30th floor as she warned everyone.

“If no one has any more question, let’s move out.”

With that sentence, they started the operation to escape the building.

__*__*__*__

While on the first floor, 2 groups of Hunters were debating each other, they were the group made of Hunters from Drankam and another group that was made of Hunters unaffiliated with Drankam. All of them were Hunters who successfully hunted bounty monsters in the past.

Back then when they were in the middle of debating on how to secure the Seranthal building, Elena's team finished their negotiation first and was sent ahead as a reconnaissance team. When that happened, there were 2 groups who felt that they got jumped ahead by Elena's team.

The first group was the Hunters not affiliated with Drankam and refused to be working under Drankam. They thought that sending Akira ahead was the decision that the Drankam side made. They thought that Drankam gave preferential treatment to that team stating an excusing that they brought back useful information for the operation.

That was not exactly wrong, Shikarabe did say that too when he negotiated with Drankam's side. As in matter of fact, the information that they brought in might have actually be used in that operation.

So in order to calm them down, Drankam decided to make a compromise and send them as another reconnaissance team.

The second group was the young Hunters in Drankam that belonged to the Katsuya faction. To be more precise, they were able to get dispatched ahead because of support from within Drankam, from Mizuha.

Mizuha was rather concerned by the fact that Shikarabe was the leader of the first reconnaissance team. She also knew well how much Shikarabe hated Katsuya's guts. She was worried that Shikarabe was planning to use the achievement from this chance to influence the composition of the main squad or even to change how Drankam would treat Katsuya.

So in order to fight back against Shikarabe, Mizuha even made some compromises about the main squad so that she could send ahead another reconnaissance team to the Seranthal building.

After that, both teams were sent to secure the first floor of the Seranthal building so that Elena's team would not be able to monopolize the rewards. They thought that it might be hard for Elena's team to do that since they had limited equipment and manpower, but it would be an easy job for them since they brought more people and carried better equipment. Of course, they could just gather information and bring it back too, but if they ended up bringing back the same information as Elena's team, then Elena's team which would have returned back first would claim the reward first.

Although both groups of Hunters were not that hostile to each other to the point that they would try to kill each other, there was no mistaking it that they would be disrupting each other's job. Even a small accident could immediately turn into a fight. The leader of each team was only barely able to calm their respective team down.

Near the outer side of the front entrance to the Seranthal building, a Hunter by the name of Kurosawa was shouting orders to his team with an annoyed face. His equipment and the aura around him clearly showed that he was a powerful Hunter.

Kurosawa was the leader of the team which killed the 1,500,000,000 Aurum bounty monster, Maimai. He was taking the lead of the anti-Drankam team this time.

Kurosawa looked at his watch and clicked his tongue.

"…The sixth squad isn't returning back at all although I told them to properly watch the time. Send the eighth squad in. Tell them to ask the squad securing the A, B, C and D stairs if the sixth squad went to the second floor without my permission or not."

Another Hunter next to him then replied.

"I bet they'll be back if we just wait a bit longer."

Kurosawa glared at that Hunter.

"We can't check their situation at all from the first floor. There are 3 possible reasons why they are late. First, they might be trapped somewhere and can't return back. Second, they might not be that competent to be able to return back as we originally planned. Or third, they might be pretty stupid as not to listen to my order. But whichever the case, we treat them as MIA. There's no need to wait for them."

“Alright alright, I’ll send the next- Oh, there they are.”

The sixth squad stepped out from the entrance. Kurosawa signalled them to come with his finger. Once they stood in front of him, Kurosawa then asked them a question that was mixed with insult.

“From what I can see, it doesn’t seem any of you are injured? Were you almost killed somewhere or something?”

The leader of that squad sighed and answered that question.

“We were about to return back on time when one of those kids picked a fight with us, you see. If you tell us that it’s okay to shoot them, we would have been able to return back on time though.”

“Where?”

“Hallway C7.”

Kurosawa clicked his tongue again when he heard that. He then gave a signal for the sixth squad to just go and take a rest before he headed to where the Drankam side’s leader was.

The leader of the Drankam group immediately noticed Kurosawa. The other young Hunters around him looked at Kurosawa with hostility, but Kurosawa did not care about them at all as he said to the leader of the Drankam group.

“It seems that some of your people picked a fight with my men, can you at least properly discipline them? I don’t mind if you want to keep on playing around here, but I have no plans to tidy up your mess.”

That young Hunter glared back at Kurosawa as if he was trying to put Kurosawa under some pressure.

“If that’s really the case, we’re sorry. And also, stop saying something like that, everyone here is being serious.”

That young Hunter responded back just like a Hunter should. The impression that he was giving off was different compared to those new green Hunters or former Hunters. A skilled Hunter would be able to immediately recognize his real strength and disregard his young age.

That was also the case for Kurosawa, he knew that the young Hunter in front of him was a rather talented Hunter. Although for now, he was nothing more than a skilled young Hunter, it was only a matter of time until the ‘young’ word get dropped.

The young Hunter in front of him might be a stronger Hunter than him in the future, but that was still in the future, not now. Kurosawa looked down at the weaker Hunter standing in front of him and said to him with mockery.

“I’m being serious here. If we objectively evaluate your performance, that would be the result. I’m not a Drankam Hunter after all, so I’m not obliged to choose my words just to keep your mood, am I right, Katsuya-kun of Drankam?”

The leader of the Drankam team was Katsuya.

Katsuya glared even more intensely at Kurosawa, but Kurosawa just ignored him.

Kurosawa's group and Katsuya's group were in the middle of securing the first floor of the Seranthal building. But they were working completely separate from each other. They had agreed beforehand to operate separately to reduce the possibility of causing trouble, and they also agreed if any of them retreated, the other party could continue searching the building.

And just like before, there was something inside that building that prevented people from making any contact from the inside of the building. Because of that, Kurosawa and Katsuya stayed outside the building to keep contact with Kugamayama city and the Hunter Office while giving orders to their respective group.

Airi who was next to Katsuya looked coldly at Kurosawa.

"…Is that all?"

Kurosawa looked at Airi, his expression then returned back to normal. He could see a resolve from Airi's eyes, so he had no plans to mock someone with that kind of resolve. people like her were not to be underestimated no matter how weak they were. After all, they often used insult and mockery as fuel to strengthen their resolve, which eventually fueled their growth.

[And here I thought that they are just a group of stupid children who mistook the power of their equipment as their own skill when they defeated the bounty monsters, after all, they could only get those powerful equipment because of the extensive sponsor and support that they received… But it seems that's not exactly the case, huh.]

Kurosawa's evaluation of Katsuya's group had gotten better, although only slightly. He then faced the person who caused that change and said to her.

"Yeah, that's at all. We've agreed beforehand to handle different areas to make sure that we don't disrupt each other. So just be careful next time. Later then."

He already conveyed what he wanted to say and was sure that Katsuya understood that he wanted them to stop wandering into his area. Although at first, he was planning to complain about other things too, he decided to back down as a form of respect to Airi.

When Kurosawa was about to leave Katsuya alone, he suddenly stopped, he saw a girl come out running from the entrance of the Seranthal building.

Kurosawa stopped thinking that it might be some kind of emergency, but judging from how that girl was running, it did not seem to be the case, so he decided to just forget about it and returned to his post. That girl, Lilina, ran straight to Katsuya and said to him as if she was venting her anger.

"Katsuya!! They mocked us again!! You should go there and say something to them!!"

Katsuya tried to calm Lilina down.

"Lilina, calm down, tell me what happened?"

"What the heck is wrong with those people sounding so arrogant like that?! We're also Hunters who successfully hunted a bounty monster, you know?! They should show some respect for us…"

When Lilina was about to explain what happened to Katsuya, or at least, what she thought she was doing, she saw Kurosawa walking away. Although she did not know if that was Kurosawa, she knew for sure that person was not from Katsuya's group, and that was enough of a reason for her.

Lilina then stopped Kurosawa.

"You, stop there! I know that you guys are strong Hunters who have defeated a bounty monster, but we have too! Just because we're doing well, that's not a reason for you to keep sabotaging us out of envy!"

Kurosawa stopped, he looked obviously annoyed as he sighed and turned around.

"So, where is it?"

Lilina seemed confused.

"What do you mean by where?!"

"What a dunce, I also received a report that some Hunters from your group picked a fight with my men, so I'm asking you where that happened."

"Isn't it obvious already?! It's on the first floor of the Seranthal building!! Are you too stupid to even make such a simple guess?"

"Seranthal building has multiple floors and it's pretty big. There are also countless individual rooms inside it. So where exactly is it on the first floor?"

"It's not in a room, but in a hallway. What about it?"

"Which hallway?"

"Is that even important?! What's wrong with you and your stupid questions?!"

Lilina talked back at Kurosawa with a prickly tone, venting out her anger at him.

Kurosawa's gaze shifted from Lilina to Katsuya. He sighed on purpose to express his exasperation and mockery. He then said to that Katsuya with a tone that obviously showed he was ridiculing Katsuya.

"Seranthal building is a dangerous place where many Hunters lost their lives after stepping inside. So, it won't be strange if you get suddenly attacked by a swarm of monsters out of the blue when you're inside the building. Not to mention, for an unknown reason, the sensitivity of information-gathering devices is significantly lowered inside that building which makes it harder to accurately detect things around you. And with the inability to contact each other, Hunters have no other choice but to only judge whether they are looking at friends or foes solely on their visions. So of course, Hunters get more high-strung inside that building, and when you encounter another group of Hunters roaming around in the same area, there's a good chance that it might cause misunderstanding and even fight too. So, in order to avoid unfortunate accidents, it's important to refrain from unnecessarily interacting with the other group. That's exactly why, for the sake of safety and profit, our operation areas are properly divided from the beginning, or at least that's what I understand. The patrol time and route are decided beforehand and we are properly following it. It's designed so that when any of us encounter someone else inside that building, they don't need to spend too much time checking if they're friendly or not and just can make an assumption that they are hostile. And if any of us can't return back on time, it can be assumed that there's a fight inside the building. The report that I got is saying that the fight happened in C7 hallway. It's obviously inside our territory and it's not a place that you can enter by pure chance. So as long as you don't enter it on purpose or unless you get lost inside the building, you should not be able to go there."

Kurosawa's expression changed from mockery to hostility.

"I don't know whether it's just stupid Hunters who entered that place on purpose or it was just stupid Hunters who got lost inside that building, but in this case, we're basically not the one at fault even if we suddenly opened fire. Whichever the case, are you seriously sending such stupid Hunters inside that building? Do you seriously want to pick a fight with us that much?”

Lilina was overwhelmed by Kurosawa’s pressure, but she was somehow able to talk back.

“We just passed through it for a bit! There’s no need for you to go that far, isn’t it?!”

Kurosawa’s gaze was still fixed at Katsuya.

Kurosawa was exuding an aura that only those powerful Hunters had. There was no trace of joking or mockery in his face, he was using a tone that he would only use to talk against people who he recognized as enemies as he spoke to the leader of the other group, Katsuya.

“Listen here, we have no wish to fight you because it’s too much of a hassle to have to fight you while we have to fight the monsters too. So at least just don’t get in our way. Don’t make me decide that it’s faster to just clean all of you from here and continue securing this building all by ourselves. This request is from the City Management and you guys are Hunters from Drankam, that’s why we’re holding back as much as we can, but there’s a limit to that too. So sort your mess out by yourselves. Got it?”

After Kurosawa said that, he immediately ran back to his post without waiting for a reply since one of his men contacted him and told him to get back.

Kurosawa was still looking obviously annoyed as he thought.

[…Although there seem to be some proper Hunters among them, I guess the majority are still those stupid ones, huh? Can we really secure the Seranthal building while avoiding getting into a fight with them? Are we seriously going to work with them once the main squad is here…? Good grief, I swear it's better if we just leave this operation to Drankam people without roping us too, isn't it?]

Kurosawa was thinking about what to do next as he ran back to his station.

Lilina was overwhelmed by Kurosawa's presence, but once he left, her anger quickly welled up again.

She was about to burst with anger even now.

"…W-what the heck is wrong with that guy?!"

Yumina tried to calm Lilina down.

"Lilina, I understand your feeling, but just calm down for now, okay?"

In contrast to that, Airi threw short but harsh words.

"Lilina, shut up."

Lilina was about to say something, but she stopped midway after she saw Yumina and Airi. Yumina looked at Lilina with a rather stern face, while Airi was looking at Lilina with her usual expressionless face but mixed with a tinge of hostility. Both of them were staring at Lilina, putting pressure on her.

There were other girls beside Yumina and Airi around Katsuya. But Airi and Yumina had been together with Katsuya for a long time. Their Hunter Rank was the second highest in Katsuya's team, only after Katsuya. Their pressure was enough to shut Lilina up, and even scared her.

There was no mistaking it, both of them were angry. If Lilina said anything, there was no mistaking it that both of them would get even angrier. Thus Lilina just shut up without being able to even make any excuse.

Katsuya was basically a kind person, if someone weak came to him scared, no matter the reason, he would extend his hand. And even more so when it was someone from his own team and a beautiful girl to top it off.

Katsuya also felt slightly scared since he could also feel Airi and Yumina's anger, but even so, he tried his best to make a smile and calm Lilina down.

"Well, Lilina, just calm down for now… Are you good now? Well, let's proceed with the report. Since you returned back faster than originally planned, it means that you have something you want to report as soon as possible, right?"

Lilina calmed down after she saw Katsuya's gentle smile. But she still could not fully calm down, as she flusteredly tried to piece her words together.

"…W-well, uhh, we met them when we were about to head back, and, uh…"

Airi interjected.

"You can save that for later, first tell us why did you return back sooner than planned."

"W-well, uhh, it's nothing big, but…"

Lilina was hesitating, which only made Airi angrier.

"Just spit it out…"

"T-The elevator moved…"

"Is that all?"

"Uhhh, we've agreed beforehand that we won't go to the second floor until we secure the first floor, right? Since the elevator started moving, they might use it to go to the upper floor without securing the first floor first. I just thought that I need to let Katsuya know this as soon as possible so that they won't steal a start…"

Lilina mixed her own guesses in her report.

After Kurosawa returned and received a report from his men, he frowned and asked if his men were sure they were not mistaken.

“Are you sure about it?”

“Yeah, the elevator moved.”

“So basically, no one went to the upper floor without my permission and the elevator started moving, is that correct?”

“Yeah, that’s as long as we believe the floor’s display on that elevator. The Hunters who are stationed near the first-floor elevator also said that they heard the elevator moving. The elevator on the first floor started moving and we have nothing to do about it, and there’s no fool among us who would go upstairs without permission.”

Kurosawa’s face turned grim as he thought.

[Did any of their men go upstairs and call for the elevator? No, it might be from the squad that went into this building before us… Wait, but the elevator is supposed to be unusable, right? So why has it started moving out of the blue? Did something change in the building…? I have a bad feeling about this.]

Kurosawa then looked at his men with a serious face and said to them.

“Inform everyone inside the building to return back as soon as possible, everyone, understand? Just leave the portable information-gathering device behind. Tell them to get back here, now. Also, tell the other Hunters who are transporting the dead monsters outside the building to stop immediately, and gather here. Also, prepare their weapons. Use all the portable walls to form a barrier, take some distance from the entrance so that you can safely focus your fire on the entrance, and form a barricade around the entrance.”

Kurosawa’s men were surprised when he suddenly gave that order to them. After all, it sounded as if Kurosawa had given up securing the building. One of them looked bewildered and said to him.

“Whoah, are you sure about that? We’re almost done securing the first floor, you know? Are we really going to just abandon it?”

“It’s fine. In the first place, there’s another group who are working together with us in this place and they’re not friendly to us. So even if we secure the first floor, I still doubt if it would be really safe. Moreover, it’s not like I can trust those children to properly secure the area they’re responsible for. And even if no monsters come out from the building, we can just restart the work to secure the building again later.”

“But, we’ll definitely lose a lot of time to secure the building, is this moving elevator really that dangerous?”

The amount of the secured area basically affects the reward that Kurosawa and his men would receive. Kurosawa put some pressure on his words as he replied to his men who were against retreating from the building.

“It’s my intuition. So this is just to be safe. You’ve decided to work under me when you joined this team, so stop yapping and start working. I know that it’s a coward’s decision, but you accepted to join this team knowing fully that I’m a careful person. If you want to question my decision, you can do that later.”

Kurosawa was indeed a skilled Hunter with good commanding skill, but judging from that point of view, he sometimes made cowardly decisions. There were many occasions where he focused too much on pessimistic guesses during the ruin exploration and gave an order for his men to withdraw although they could have gathered valuable relics if only they pushed just a bit further.

But thanks to that, Kurosawa’s team had a high survivability rate. He was different from most of the Hunters in the eastern district who would happily take a high risk just to be able to return back with a lot of relics, instead, he preferred to maintain a long term profit.

Even during their fight against the bounty monster Maimai, no one got killed in Kurosawa's team, not even badly injured.

Now that Mihazono ruin had turned dangerous enough that it was more or less the same as an unexplored ruin, the other Hunters understood that Kurosawa's cautious nature was an important factor in making sure that they would be able to return back alive from the Seranthal building.

Kurosawa's men looked at him with a serious expression and said.

"Roger that, we'll do it right away."

"Hurry up then!"

Kurosawa urged his men to hurry up with a serious face. Even if his decision was a mistake, he would not regret it. After all, just in case if that decision was not a mistake, then it meant that he would have saved a lot of Hunters from facing their ends in that building.

__*__*__*__*__

Elena's team was able to reach the first floor safely. But right when they stepped on the first floor, the Hunters who have a good intuition immediately frowned, their expression turned grim, Akira included.

But before Akira was able to ask Alpha about it, she suddenly said something that he could not ignore.

"Akira, sorry but I'll need to leave you for a bit."

"Again?"

"It's for the sake of improving your current situation."

Alpha only said that and immediately vanished from Akira's views. Akira could also feel his augmented suit suddenly become heavier.

Although Akira's face turned even grimmer, he was still able to maintain his calmness. After all, that was not his first time, and he thought that he just needed to pass the entrance to escape the building.

But that line of thinking also caused Akira to not notice something. Unlike last time, Alpha did not say that it would be alright, or that she would be back in no time, or that there was no monster around.

Elena then explained the current situation to the rest of her team.

“There’s a big signal reading in the large hall near the entrance. It would be great if it’s from a forward station made by the reinforcement team, but that might not be the case. So keep your guard up.”

All the other Hunters nodded, they then carefully moved into the hallway.

As they came closer and closer to the hall near the entrance, they started to spot dead Hunters spilling fresh blood. They were fresh corpses and it seemed that they were killed by gunshot.

Shikarabe checked the equipment of those dead Hunters and frowned. There was a Drankam mark painted on their equipment.

“Their equipment is from Drankam. I bet they’re young Hunters from Drankam, they should be working in teams… So the fact that they didn’t retrieve the dead bodies means that were attacked and did not have the leeway to do so.”

Elena looked at everyone and said.

“Just to be safe, we’ll treat the signal from the hall as an enemy. I’ll change the route based on that assumption. This doesn’t change the fact that we’ll have to be careful.”

They continued walking through the hallway, ready for battle. They found other dead bodies, but this time, they just ignored them.

Akira unconsciously gripped his rifle tight, he tried to control his breath to calm his nerves down.

Akira had a stern expression as he called for Alpha.

“Alpha! Are you not done yet?”

Alpha did not respond back at all.

At the same time, in a vast empty white space, 2 girls were standing. It was Seranthal, the A.I manager of the Seranthal building, and Alpha.

Alpha seemed obviously annoyed as she said to Seranthal.

“Explain yourself!”

Seranthal was expressionless, but it was somehow obvious that she was also annoyed.

“I’m not violating any agreements that we made beforehand. I didn’t block your way when you explored the building and I’m not preventing you from getting out of the building either. It’s as we agreed on.”

“Then why are you using the elevator?”

“That happened outside of my control. It’s true that I’m the manager of this building, but there are other people too who have permission to use the facilities inside this building without going through me. Especially for the users of the 50th floor and above, they have the rights to directly use the elevator. The security drones also have that right. So I bet it was the B18 that used the elevator.”

“I found B18 drones on the 30th floor too though.”

“They’re just exercising their rights to defend themselves. I’m also actually troubled here with those drones roaming inside this building without my permission. And I also feel sorry for it. But, it’s not like I can do anything about it. I’m really saddened that they’re creating a mess inside this building.”

Alpha and Seranthal continued talking to each other, none of them seemed to be willing to back down.

Elena’s team eventually reached the receptionist desk near the entrance, they confirmed the current situation from the piles of rubbles and wreckage inside the hall and the holes in the walls.

There were also many dead bodies lying around the hall, a fierce battle must have happened there. Those corpses were still clad in augmented suits and they were still gripping their rifles.

The front hall of the Seranthal building had a tall ceiling and tall entrance doors. It even extended all the way until the third floor of the building. Elena’s team noticed that there were other things inside that hall that was not there when they came into that building.

Reina could not help but mumble the very thing that everyone there was thinking.

“…What in the world is that?”

There was a huge mechanical monster in the front hall. It was so huge to the point that it was obvious it would not fit inside the hallway of that building, heck, it would not even fit the entrance of the building. Its body was enveloped in armour plating, it did not have legs, wheels, caterpillar tracks, or anything that it might use to move its huge body. It did not seem that it would be able to move except by flying. And even if it could move, it would not be able to get into the building because of its size.

This monstrosity seemed to be stationed there to guard the building against any trespassers.

Kanae smiled amusedly and said.

“This thing is pretty huge. How did this thing get inside this hall?”

When Kanae said that, the elevator in that hall suddenly opened and several B18 monsters came out from it. Most of them went straight out from the hall, but one of them approached that big monster and climbed it.

That B18 monster then stopped right on the head of that big monsters. Then on the next moment, that B18 monster suddenly exploded as if it activated its self-destruct protocol.

Then one of the armour platings of the big monster slid open, multiple arms came out and gathered the wreckage of that B18 monster and pulled them inside its body. The dead B18 monster became one with the huge monster–a new armour plating, a new machine gun–thus making its already huge body even bigger.

Elena nodded, her face was grim.

“I see. So it’s staying here because there are materials available here. It’s one of those monsters that can fix itself…”

Sara smiled wryly.

“Then, that means that the snake monster on the 30th floor must be there to consume the wreckages too…. I get it now, it’s true that there are many materials available in this building.”

More B18 monsters appeared from one of the hallways and headed outside the building, but suddenly, one of them was sniped and exploded.

Another bullet also hit the big monster, when that happened, a blinding light flashed.

Akira frowned.

“…That light, force field armour, huh…?”

It reminded Akira of the powerful powered suit that he fought in the past in the Kuzusuhara ruin.

Shiori was observing that huge monster with a serious face.

“And judging from that light, it’s a powerful force field armour. It would have been great if that single snipe was able to damage its body…”

They waited with bated breath, then a part of that monster's armour plating crumbled down, exposing a new armour plating right under it. That armour plating then popped out as if to replace the armour plating it just lost.

All of them thought about the exact same thing without saying anything.

Shikarabe's face twitched.

"Carol, you're knowledgeable about this building, right? Do you know any secret route that we can use to escape this building? In this situation, I'm willing to pay any price you ask."

Carol shook her head.

"Unfortunately, the front entrance is our only exit right now."

"Really?"

"Yes, it is. Even if you pay me 10,000,000,000 Aurum, I can't give you what I don't have."

Akira, who was hoping that there was another way to escape the building, looked obviously disappointed. He did not think that big monster would just let them pass through peacefully. If they wanted to get out of that place, they had no other choice but to destroy that monster. And judging from the fact that it was able to take that single snipe shot just fine, it would be a difficult task to accomplish.

[Since we're already on the first floor, can't we just open a hole in the wall and escape through it…? No, that won't work. Carol also said that the entrance is our only logical choice. If only Alpha was here, I could ask her why it won't work though…]

Unfortunately enough, Alpha was still away. At this rate, Akira would have to fight without Alpha's support.

Akira's expression tensed up as he tried to call for Alpha again.

“Alpha?! Are you really not done yet!?”

And again, no reply at all.

Kurosawa was aiming his huge rifle from outside the Seranthal building, his rifle was so huge as if it was ripped off straight from a tank. There was no need to question its power nor its price.

He was checking the enemy's situation using his aiming device. He confirmed that his shot hit its target from the flash of the force field armour. But it was a whole different question whether it damaged its target or not.

Kurosawa's face twitched, his target was doing fine. Although it must have at least significantly lowered the energy reserve of its force field armour, the special, expensive, bullet that he used there did not give him the result that he was expecting.

Kurosawa made an exasperated face as he mumbled.

"That didn't work, huh. So, they want to secure that building with that huge monster there. I guess that explains why they dispatched those squads to surround this building."

He then checked on his men.

“Anyone injured?”

“No. Everyone was able to escape from that monster unharmed. No one was left behind either, we’ve confirmed that. In the first place, no one here is weak enough to get injured fighting those smaller monsters that were flowing out from that building.”

“Alright then. Everyone, get behind the portable walls and keep suppressing the monsters. Safety is number one here, there’s no need to save your ammo. If the portable wall gets too weak, immediately pull back. Get about 10 Hunters for transporting equipment and focus more on materials that can be used on walls. We can retrieve the equipment for detecting monsters later, it seems that the sensitivity of our detection devices is doing well outside the building. Prioritize more on strengthening the barricade while suppressing the monsters coming out from that building. If we keep this up, even though we would fail to secure the first floor of that building, we should still be able to save some of our reputation. If the monsters are pushing back too hard, retreat and regroup with the squads surrounding this area. There’s no need to get too reckless.”

“Roger that!”

Kurosawa saw his men leave before aiming back at the huge monster in the front hall of the Seranthal building. Seeing that the monster was completely fine, Kurosawa’s face turned sterner.

[…I will try to shoot some more and if it still doesn’t work, I will have to give up on destroying that monster. It’s impossible to get into that building without killing that monster. If that’s the one taking command of the smaller monsters, it would mean that we’ll be able to deal a big blow on their force if we can kill it, but… Should I contact the squads surrounding the area and ask them to send the humanoid soldiers to kill that big monster?… I guess that would be a no… I don’t even have the rights to do that and I don’t think that they’ll help us anyway. Well, once the main squad is here to secure that building, someone from the upper echelon will give them the order to give us support if that is really needed. Although I don’t know when that would be, it’s not my place to be thinking about that.]

Kurosawa gathered himself together and pulled the trigger. The bullet that was shot from his rifle had the same firepower as a tank warhead, it flew straight at the humongous monster, destroying some B18 monsters on its way there.

Once again, Kurosawa confirmed that he hit his mark, but it did not seem to affect that monster at all. He checked again and lightly sighed because of a completely different reason.

“What is it? I’m busy right now, I have no time to take care of trivial stuff.”

Katsuya was standing not too far from Kurosawa with a stern face.

He looked seriously at Kurosawa and said.

“I have a request.”

“Nope!”

Kurosawa gave an instant reply without looking back at Katsuya. There was no space for negotiation. Katsuya was a bit surprised by that firm rejection.

Lilina, who was next to Katsuya, suddenly butted in. Although she was stunned too, she forced herself to say something there to help Katsuya.

“We haven’t even said anything yet!! At least listen to what we have to say!!”

Kurosawa looked obviously annoyed as he clicked his tongue, just like last time, he replied without looking at Katsuya and Lilina.

“I bet you want my help to retrieve your men that got left behind in that building, right? My answer is no. We have no reason nor obligation to help you. Why should I put my men in danger just in order to save your men? So no. I myself don’t want to do it, and I’m sure my men don’t want to do it too. We’re here putting our life at risk for a chance to get money, we’re basically here to exchange our life for money. We're only here for that request because we judged that the reward that we might get this time is worth using the power that we have worked hard to attain, the expenses of our consumables, and the risk of death that we'll face. We might be willing to do that for our comrades, but I don't see any reason to do that for free for another group that is hostile to us."

Unlike Kurosawa's group that immediately left the Seranthal building without wasting a second. Katsuya's group, who saw Kurosawa's group leaving, thought that it was weird and did nothing else. After all, in their mind, Kurosawa's group had just wasted their hard work to secure the first floor. So, they ended up withdrawing late from that building.

Because of that, some of Katsuya's men did not make it and got left behind. It was unclear whether they were still alive or already dead. If they were to be optimistic, those Hunters might have barricaded themselves somewhere, waiting to be saved. But if they were to be pessimistic, those Hunters would be already annihilated by now. Katsuya prioritized more on the former, he could not bring himself to take the latter guess.

Katsuya, Yumina, and Lilina were about to try to negotiate with Kurosawa out of kindness, sense of virtue, and arrogance respectively. But Kurosawa who was still shooting there spoke first.

"Are you going to tell me that it's exactly because we're in this situation that we should be helping each other now? Don't make me laugh. It's true that helping each other is a good thing, but that is if we both have the capability and willingness to help each other. For the willingness side, well I can understand your feeling, so I'm not really against negotiating with you, but it's a whole different story for the capability. I and my men think that you guys will only be dead weight to us. We don't think that you have the ability to help us, so it won't be helping out each other, it'll be us one-sidedly helping you. And if we do that, then it'll be out of our kindness. But I and my men don't have the leeway to act out of kindness at the moment. As in matter of fact, we're already helping you guys out by letting you guys use our portable walls. So you should be grateful for that."

To be honest, Kurosawa only allowed Katsuya's men use his group's portable wall since otherwise, Katsuya would only have two choices: either fully pull back his men, or lead them to a suicidal charge into the building. Both choices would lower the overall fighting strength of the Hunters and that would be disadvantageous for Kurosawa.

Kurosawa was only letting Katsuya's men use his portable wall for his own profit.

Katsuya tried to think of another solution out of his stubbornness, Yumina tried to think of another solution using logical calculation, and Lilina tried to think of another solution out of desperation because of the sense of defeat that she felt there, Kurosawa continued.

"Are you telling me that you'll pay me then? But the answer is still no. When money is involved, it would be a formal request. I, as the commander of my men in this place, have no right to accept another request at the moment. If you insist, you should talk it out with those people in the Hunter Office who are negotiating on how they are going to form the main squad. It's useless to talk to me about that."

That shut all of them up. They tried to think of anything that they could say there, but nothing came up. Kurosawa then continued.

"We're in no position and we have no reason to accept your request. If you get it now, then just shut up. You'll disrupt my concentration if you keep making noise here. You're basically bothering me by doing that, and if you keep bothering me, I'll have you removed first. After all, bothering the command here will expose the whole group to more danger. Just so you know, I have no qualms injuring you so stop bothering me."

Kurosawa did not even glance at Katsuya. But Katsuya and his friends obviously felt a sense of pressure and hostility emanating from Kurosawa.

Katsuya, Yumina, and Lilina could not think of anything to say in that situation. They just stood there in silence. Katsuya cursed his own weakness, Yumina seemed immensely worried for her comrades that got left behind, and Lilina gritted her teeth in anger.

Among them, Airi, who was silent and thinking up until now suddenly spoke.

“In that case, I want you to take command of this group too. You can get all the credits while we’re under your command. Then, I want you to finish our original goal of coming here, to secure the first floor of Seranthal building.”

Katsuya, Lilina, and Yumina immediately turned to Airi, they looked completely shocked. Airi kept staring at Kurosawa with a serious expression.

Kurosawa stopped shooting and looked at Airi. He looked both surprised and a little troubled while staring back at her, trying to read the meaning behind her words.

“If you have the command of our group, it’ll reduce the damage to your men. Your commanding skill should also be able to compensate for our weakness to some extent. I believe that this is a good deal for you, with no money involved, so?”

Kurosawa thought for a bit before answering back.

“…So basically we can push the dangerous roles to you to safely achieve our goal, and if we can secure the first floor of the Seranthal building, then you’ll be able to rescue your friends, huh… That’s indeed a suggestion worth thinking about, but it’s not like we can accept it right away. Or more like, shouldn’t convincing your leader come first? If you leave all the achievements to us, then why are you here in the first place, the one who will take the responsibility for that will be your leader, right? Or is it that your leader gave the full right to you?”

When Kurosawa asked that question, Airi sounded rather disappointed as she replied.

“…No, I don’t have such a right.”

“I see. That wasn’t a bad suggestion, but keep those things that I asked you in mind first before you make such a suggestion next time.”

Kurosawa only said that and ended the negotiation there, that was when Katsuya made his resolve and suddenly said.

“Alright alright!! You can claim all the achievements!! I’ll take full responsibility…!! So please, save my men.”

It was as if Katsuya let out his real feeling there as he lowered his head. It was obvious that he was being really serious.

The way Kurosawa looked at Katsuya changed from a mocking gaze to a respectful gaze for someone that he was negotiating with. He then started to think about that suggestion seriously.

Katsuya waited with bated breath for Kurosawa’s answer. Kurosawa had not said anything yet, he was still thinking with a serious expression.

Kurosawa finally made his decision, he sounded as if he felt sorry about it as he said.

“As I thought, the answer is still no.”

Katsuya and the other Hunters there understood that it was the decision that Kurosawa made after thinking seriously about it. Katsuya had a pained expression as he asked a question.

“…Why is it still a no? Is it impossible to change your mind no matter what?”

“I won’t deny that it was a good offer. But it did not resolve the most important worry that I have, so as long as that worry is still there, I, as the one who will take the command of your men, can’t take that offer.”

Airi asked.

“…What worry?”

“Even if I take command of your men, there’s no guarantee that your men will listen to my orders. So, without that guarantee, that offer is basically off the table.”

Katsuya who heard that desperately begged.

“I’ll make sure that they’ll listen to your orders!! I promise you that!!”

Kurosawa shook his head and replied with an honest tone.

“It’s not like I’m doubting you here and I’m not saying that your men don’t trust you or anything. I’m sure that you will follow my orders and I’m sure that you’re on good terms with your men and they trust you. But that doesn’t guarantee that they’ll follow my orders. Their trust and faith in you might even be the very reason why they wouldn’t listen to my orders. I’m sure that some of them would not move on my orders and will only move on yours. In the first place, I doubt that they’ll all definitely listen to your orders as well. After all, at the moment, there is already someone from your team who entered an area that they should not. Am I right?”

Kurosawa glanced at Lilina, who immediately froze.

Kurosawa returned his gaze back to Katsuya and continued.

“I bet there are others who disregard your orders too, right…? I can see that I’m right, huh. I bet they won’t listen to my orders when they don’t even listen to yours. That will be the end of this negotiation. I refuse your suggestion. It’s nothing personal, I know you want to rescue your men, honestly speaking, I feel the same too. But as the leader of my team, I can’t afford to expose my men to needless danger. Well, we’ll at least provide you with support fire if you want to try to make a run to that building. So, just tell us if you decide to do that.”

After he said that, Kurosawa left that place to check the other location, he then gave some orders to his men before aiming at the entrance of the Seranthal building again.

Katsuya, Lilina, Yumina, and Airi who were left there looked down, dejected. Especially Lilina. She seemed to be the most dejected. She then asked with a voice that sounded as if she was about to cry.

“…Was it… My fault?”

“…It’s at least not your fault alone.”

Airi’s vague comforting words did not have much effect on her.

__*__*__*__

Elena told her team to stand by on guard while checking the current situation that they were in. It was so that none of them tried to shoot at the humongous monster which might cause all the other B18 monsters to shift their attention to Elena and her team.

Someone was still sniping that big monster, although it could not kill nor destroy it, it at least continued shaving the power of its forcefield armour. Elena was hoping that it would eventually destroy the monster.

But as if to cut that hope short, the sniping suddenly stopped. It might be just a temporary pause, or the person sniping had already completely given up, Elena hoped that it was the former. But after some time, her face turned grim as she made her guess.

[It seems that they judged that it was ineffective and decided to completely stop, huh. Or maybe the situation outside got worse and they don’t have the leeway to keep sniping… I hope that it’s the former.]

Elena then gave an order to her men.

“Unfortunately, it seems that we can’t rely on the squads outside to take care of this situation. That’s why we have to try to kill that monster and get out of this place ourselves. We’ll split the team into two, one to fight that monster and another one to cover the flank.”

Elena looked at Shiori and Kanae. Shiori had a blade dangling on her hip and Kanae had a fighting gauntlet on her fists. Both of them were equipped for close combat. If they specialized in close combat, it would be counter-effective to have them fight the big monster, they were also there as Reina's bodyguard in the first place. So, Elena thought that it would be better to have them assigned to the flank team.

But Shiori suddenly spoke.

"I'll join the vanguard then."

Elena was a bit surprised by that.

"Are you sure? Or more like, are you okay with that?"

"Of course, no need to worry."

Elena hesitated, but she decided to accept Shiori's offer. It seemed that even Reina's bodyguard would prioritize fighting that big monster even if it meant that they would be separated from their target for protection. After all, it would be way safer if they could defeat that monster as fast as they could. Elena also thought that it might be because Shiori had an idea of how to defeat that big monster.

Elena then said.

"Alright. The flank team will be Shikarabe, Kanae, Reina, and Togami. Shikarabe, I'll leave it to you."

Shikarabe understood what Elena meant. Although his team had 4 people, it actually only had 3 people who could fight decently, or maybe even only two–Shikarabe and Kanae. Elena was basically saying that in the middle of fighting the monsters, he would need to keep one person safe no matter what and he had to decide what to do about the other Hunter that he had brought into the team.

"Roger that, let's go."

Shikarabe then led his team to reposition themselves. Kanae was about to follow Shikarabe when she noticed Reina was just standing there with a conflicted face, so she grabbed Reina's arm and took her along. Reina was looking worriedly at Shiori, who replied back with a smile that was saying that there was no need to worry.

Togami also had a conflicted face as he followed Shikarabe. He was assigned to the flank team because Elena saw him as someone who was under Shikarabe, and it was not because Elena thought that he would be useless even if he was in the vanguard team. Togami knew that but even so, it was hard for him to align his thoughts to that fact.

Akira, Elena, Sara, Shiori, and Carol took their positions to start shooting. They were hiding in a hallway, behind rubble, behind a wall with a hole, or behind anything that might protect them while they were waiting for Elena's signal.

Akira was very nervous. He repeatedly took a deep breath to try and calm himself down.

[…Calm down. Don't panic. Calm down your nerves. Just do what I should do the best that I can. That's all there is to it. Back then, when that big snake ate me, I also lost connection to Alpha. The situation that I'm in right now is not as bad as when I was inside that snake's stomach.]

He left anything that would slow down his movement on the floor, that included his rucksack, CWH anti-material rifle, and DVTS minigun. After all, he had no confidence to be able to move around quickly without Alpha's support if he had those things on him.

If he carried everything with him, it would be even difficult for him to walk. Until now, he was able to maintain his balance in that situation with the help of Alpha's support. But now that he did not have that support, it would be impossible for him to go on a battle while carrying all of those things.

Akira looked at the A4WM automatic grenade launcher in his hand and smiled bitterly.

[I have 2 rifles that don't need strict aiming, I'm glad I bought them.]

The A4WM automatic grenade launcher and DVTS minigun were rifles that did not need strict aiming, while the CWH anti-material rifle needed proper aiming to hit its target.

The distance to the monster could be considered as a close distance for a fight in the middle of the wasteland. In that range, Akira should have no problem aiming with his CWH anti-material rifle.

But currently, Akira could not do something as dangerous as peeking out from the rubble and taking his time to get a proper aim. If he got unlucky and got the monster already aiming at him, there was basically zero chance that he would survive.

Even if that monster had a big body, Akira did not have the confidence to properly hit his shot even if he used the time compression too. After all, if he missed, it would immediately spell his doom.

So Akira decided to carry the rifle that he could shoot without too much aiming. He put some medicines in his mouth, ready to swallow it the moment Elena gave the order to start attacking. He had made his resolve as he was waiting for that signal.

Elena sent an order through the communication device before starting the battle.

“Although I’m sure there’s no need for me to spell this out, once we start shooting, I’m sure the other smaller monsters would focus their attack on us too. If it’s possible, I want to leave them be. So just ignore the smaller monsters as long as they don’t attack us, focus your firepower on our main target. But I don’t forbid you from attacking the smaller monsters here. And if you think that the situation is getting too dangerous, you can make your own decision.”

On the other side of where Elena and her team were, a stream of B18 monsters was still flowing out from the building to the outside, passing next to the big monster, and it did not seem that it would stop anytime soon.

“Well, let’s go then, in 5… 4… 3… 2… 1… Zero…”

Elena, Sara, Carol, Shiori, and Akira started shooting simultaneously with that signal.

__*__*__*__

In a big white space, Alpha and Seranthal were still talking to each other.

Seranthal looked mildly annoyed as she said.

“You asked me to let some visitors in, and this time, you want me to take that back? You’re always like that. Even the access to the information on the common floor is supposed to be a secret, you know. How far do you want to trample over my right before you’re satisfied?”

Alpha answered back with a rather neutral expression, but there was a strong pressure emanating from her neutral face.

“I ask nothing more than what I need. If you won’t accept this peaceful offer, then I have no other choice but to resort to the non-peaceful solution.”

Seranthal glared at Alpha, but Alpha’s expression did not change at all while she was waiting for Seranthal’s answer. After a short silence, Seranthal answered back with an obviously hostile tone.

“…I’ve removed the permission, you can go ahead and confirm it.”

Alpha smiled.

“Yep, I just confirmed it, thank you for your cooperation.”

“If that’s all, then leave, and never come back.”

“Personally speaking, I also hope I don’t ever need to come here again.”

Alpha then vanished from that space. After that, Seranthal showed an expression that she would never show to a visitor and released a deafening roar until she felt satisfied.

Akira was desperately shooting back at the monsters. He gathered his focus, compressed his time perception, peeked out from where he was hiding, aimed his rifle at the big monster, and basically just shot his A4WM rifle pretty much randomly. He then immediately returned back to hiding before the enemy fixed its aim on him.

He prepared himself to meet death every time he peeked out, and when he found the monster was already aiming at him, he would flusteredly return back to hiding. He moved from one hiding spot to another while listening to the sound of countless bullets ricocheting around him and the fear when he saw huge warheads mowing the location where he just hid not too long ago. Then from there he would start shooting again, rinse and repeat the cycle.

If Akira did not have his time compression, he would not be able to confirm where the monsters were aiming and evade them on time, he might even get killed the moment he peeked out. He would not be able to do anything in that situation if he did not have that time compression.

[Good grief, I'm so glad I learned to compress my time perception… How long can I keep this up? Will I last until we can kill that monster?]

Every time Akira peeked out and shot, he could feel stress that almost crushed his heart and body. Both his brain and his body were begging for a rest, but he just ignored it, clenched his teeth, kept his focus, and pushed his body to keep moving nimbly with the help of his augmented suit. Although he was somehow able to fight in that situation because he forced himself that hard, it was only a matter of time before his mind or body would give out. The pulsing pain in his body and head was telling him that he did not have much time before that would happen.

Akira crushed the growing fear inside him as he desperately continued fighting back the monsters.

In the battle, the Hunters actually had the upper hand. Not only was the main target stationary, it also had a huge body, an easy target. As long as there was no sudden change in the situation, the Hunters would not miss their shots. While on the other hand, the big monster had to divide its attention to multiple locations, so its firepower was significantly thinned out.

Moreover, the other B18 monsters just kept on moving outside the building even after the Hunters started shooting. Thanks to that, the Hunters could focus their firepower on the big monster alone.

As the Hunters there started to think that they would be able to win at this rate, they started to relax and lowered their guard, that was the moment when a sudden turn of events happened as if it was waiting for the Hunters to lower their guards.

Although Akira did not have as much leeway as the other Hunters, he also started to unconsciously lower his guard and looked down on that big monster. That caused him to start looking around his surroundings which would have been a dangerous thing normally.

When Akira looked around and saw the dead bodies scattered around him, he thought that he would join them if he was not careful, and that made him realize that he had lowered his guard. Akira smiled bitterly. As he was about to focus back on fighting the big monster, that was when, fortunately, he noticed the change as his gaze was still directed at the dead bodies.

The dead bodies that he was looking at suddenly moved slightly, one of them aimed his rifle at Akira.

Akira instantly predicted the trajectory line from its muzzle and evaded it by pure reaction. The dead Hunter pulled the trigger and Akira was barely able to evade that shot.

Akira was completely taken aback. He quickly aimed his A4WM at that dead body and was about to pull the trigger, but he immediately realized that it would also injure himself if he pulled the trigger there. So he stopped his finger from pulling the trigger. Instead, he quickly swapped his A4WM rifle with his A2D assault rifle and shot at that dead Hunter.

Bullets barraged that dead Hunter, destroyed its limbs, and blew its body away. But that short opening when Akira swapped his rifle gave enough time for that dead Hunter to also shoot at Akira. Although it did not hit Akira's vitals, the impact and the pain from the hit threw Akira off-balance.

That short exchange with death caused Akira's brain to accelerate, in that slow-moving world, Akira immediately swallowed all the medicines that were already inside his mouth and pushed his body back up. Right when he was back standing, he noticed that the other dead Hunters in the area already started moving on their own.

When Akira was about to aim his rifle at the dead Hunters that were carrying rifles, the dead Hunters that were not carrying weapons immediately started running in his direction. Akira forced his body to move with the help of his augmented suit to evade it while enduring the pain that was rushing throughout his body, he prioritized shooting the dead Hunters with rifles first.

He sent a kick towards the head of a dead Hunter that got too close to him and released a few shots at the other dead Hunters at the same time. Akira was fighting back desperately and was able to barely repel the attack of the dead Hunters. His fighting skill that he had polished through countless training allowed Akira to barely survive that fight.

Back then, Alpha helped Akira by indicating the dangerous locations with red marks. Akira was in a wide-open area, so he had no idea what made them dangerous. But right now, he was able to identify dangerous locations even if it was in a closed space. Although he no longer could see the trajectory prediction lines, he was able to quickly predict where the enemies were aiming.

They might be nothing more than his imagination, but Akira let that sensation take over his body as he continued fighting back.

But when he saw one of the dead Hunters kept attacking him although it had lost its head, Akira finally realized something.

[…I see, it's the augmented suit, huh! So just like me, someone else is controlling their augmented suit!]

Akira thought that the dead Hunters would stop moving if he crushed their heads, but it seemed that he was too naive.

[Good grief, I guess everything is possible inside the old-world ruin, huh!? So basically, still-moving dead Hunters are normal over here?!]

Akira kept on fighting as he thought that the current situation really reminded him that the old-world ruin was an amalgamation of things that were out of common sense.

Shikarabe's team in the flank was also attacked by the dead Hunters, but unlike Akira who responded in panic, Shikarabe and Kanae were able to calmly handle the situation just fine. It was not because they expected someone to control the dead Hunter's augmented suits, it was more because of the difference in their ability to handle a sudden turn of events like that.

After Shikarabe took care of the dead Hunters around him, he went back to the hallway and shot down the dead Hunters that might attack Elena's team.

Shikarabe had already noticed that those dead Hunters were moving around because someone took control of their augmented suit. He had a grim face as he mumbled.

"Good grief, this is exactly why you shouldn't buy cheap augmented suits, what a huge pain in the neck!"

There were many augmented suits that could be accessed from the outside. It was to help it to work in tandem with other equipment like an aiming device so that the augmented suit could help stabilize the aiming.

Depending on their users, some augmented suits could be set to be more open to external access, there were many different reasons why they did that. For example, it was so that the other Hunters could control and use the dead body as a decoy. Some Hunters forced the other Hunters to use that kind of augmented suit to make use of the other Hunters even when they were badly injured.

Of course, normally, it did not cause any trouble. After all, an augmented suit that could be easily accessed by anyone would not sell well in the market. That was why most of the augmented suits in the market were equipped with a safety function to protect them from unauthorized access. And as expected, the better the protection, the more expensive the augmented suit would be. While on the other hand, it was very rare for people to try to hack into someone's safety feature. So it was a rather delicate balance.

Kanae lightly smiled and said.

"Well, this is a huge surprise. How did they hack into the dead Hunter's augmented suit? But well, this is an old-world ruin after all, in front of their eyes, our technology might be nothing but primitive. While on the other hand, these might be augmented suits that use their users' biological signature as a key, so their safety feature is significantly lowered down even when the users get killed."

"Well, I really can't say for sure."

When Shikarabe saw Kanae smiling happily, he looked back at her exasperatedly.

A young girl in a maid outfit, equipment tailored for CQC, loved fighting, a total oddball. She was a rare kind of person even for Shikarabe. Although he had nothing to complain about her fighting strength, Shikarabe had no plans to associate too much with her if it can be helped.

Kanae loved fighting too much. Associating with someone like her would dull one's sense of danger. Only battle maniacs could get along with the other battle maniacs. If someone else tried to get along with them, he or she would get killed in no time, or at least, that was what Shikarabe thought.

Kanae noticed that Shikarabe was looking at her, so she just smiled back and said.

“Oh, did I just mesmerize you?! Oh my, you’re making me blush here! I love strong Hunters too, you see!! So you’re more than welcome if you want to try to hit on me! Ah, but I’m a bit busy at the moment, so it would be great if you can save it for later.”

Shikarabe obviously had given up on trying to fix that misunderstanding.

“Sorry, but even for me, I would choose who I want to hit on. I have no wish to try to hit on a battle maniac. Especially when she’s fighting monsters in close range in a maid outfit.”

“Ah, this is just because I enjoy punching them directly more than shooting at them, you see. There are a lot of cases where I can’t bring rifles with me during my job. You look pretty strong yourself, want to do some light duels some other time?”

Shikarabe’s face twitched, he bet that Kanae would not stop only with light duels.

“No thanks.”

“That’s just too bad.”

Kanae honestly felt bummed by Shikarabe’s answer.

Togami and Reina were evacuated to a safe hallway. When the dead Hunters started to move, Togami and Reina reacted late, thus forcing Shikarabe and Kanae to help them. After that, they were escorted to a safe place and they were warned not to go out so as not to get in the way of the battle.

Reina checked her surroundings and peeked out, Kanae who noticed that immediately warned her.

“Milady! Get back, it’s dangerous out here! If Milady gets injured, Ane-san would slice me, you know?!! Is this some kind of harassment?! If it is, that’s so cruel!!”

Shikarabe shouted at Togami.

“Togami, don’t just stand there! Get her back in the hallway! It’s your job in the first place to keep your eyes on your surroundings!! And don’t let her get out from there! I put you there to guard her you know?! Or is it that you don’t know what’s the meaning of guarding someone?!!”

Togami grabbed Reina’s shoulder and shoved her back.

When Reina was pulled back, she could also feel that it was out of her patheticness. Thus, she instinctively glared at Togami.

“Even I want to know what’s going on outside too, you know!!”

Reina had a fierce look that she once had in the past, but the moment she saw Togami, her expression completely changed to a troubled face. Togami had a stern expression, but somewhere in his face, there was a trace of weakness, it was as if he was about to cry. He then asked Reina a question.

“Am I… Really not good enough?”

“W-what do you mean by that?”

“Am I really that bad to the point that my escort target would just ignore me to check the situation themselves? Am I really that useless?”

Togami’s expression was asking Reina to deny it. When Reina saw that, it reminded her of herself.

Reina responded back with a whisper.

“…That’s not it.”

“…Is that so? Then please step back. During that surprise attack just now, we could not do anything at all, we let the other two Hunters take care of everything. I’m your escort at the moment. Although I have no plans to die, at the moment, it’s my job to get killed first before you… So please at least let me do my job.”

Reina obediently walked behind Togami, who peeked out and checked the situation.

“…Sorry.”

Reina did not know if Togami was apologizing because he shoved her back too hard or it was an apology for something else. But in the end, Reina did not ask him either.

After that, Togami started to take his duty to protect Reina seriously.

The vanguard team finally took care of all of the moving dead Hunters. Akira got shot two more times, but he was still able to repel the surprise attack. While Elena, Sara, Carol, and Shiori did not face any trouble at all. The only one who got injured in that surprise attack was Akira.

Elena tried to confirm everyone’s situation.

“Is everyone alright?”

Akira answered back while enduring the pain.

“I’m alright.”

Elena immediately replied with a worried tone.

“Akira, are you really alright?”

“I’m okay… If there’s anything, it’s just that I set my augmented suit in battle mode, so it’s consuming more energy than usual. I’m not so sure if my energy reserve is okay. I’m sorry but when I run out of energy, please let me withdraw temporarily to put in a new energy pack.”

When Akira knew that he would be going into a battle without Alpha's support, he set his augmented suit to battle mode. Thanks to that, it was able to absorb most of the impact from the bullets that hit his body, but in exchange, it was actively using a lot of energy. It was only a matter of time before Akira ran out of energy and rendered useless in that battle.

Elena then worriedly said to Akira.

"Alright. There's no need to hold back, just quickly retreat when things get too dangerous. How about the others?"

The other Hunters told Elena that they were fine.

Elena then said to the whole vanguard team.

"I'm glad that everyone is okay. Well then, I have some bad news here, it seems that a part of the monster swarm started to move differently. It seems that they're avoiding us while trying to reach Shikarabe's team. If we don't take care of them, we might get attacked from both sides later… Or more like, we're already in that situation."

Some of the B18 monsters that were heading outside the building changed their aim to support the big monster. It was as if they changed their plans after confirming that the Hunters survived that surprise attack.

"There's no need to hold back, use everything you have, you can use any trump card that you still have hidden up your sleeves. I'll handle the negotiation later to make sure that you'll get compensated for that even if those cost you a few million aurums."

Elena mixed a bit of a joke there before closing the communication.

Akira smiled bitterly, his trump card was not with him at the moment.

[…No, that's not right. A trump card is not something that you casually use all the time. Without Alpha's support, I only amount to this much. I'm just someone who is fully reliant on a borrowed power, on something that is only lent to me.]

When Akira thought so, he realized that his augmented suit, rifles, and even medicines were nothing but were given to him. He then lightly mocked himself for getting too conceited.

When Akira was about to start shooting again, Carol and Shiori approached him. They started shooting at the big monster while asking Akira a question.

Carol was the first one as she worriedly asked Akira.

“Akira, are you really okay? It seems that you’re moving slower than usual though.”

“I got shot, so it might have caused me to slow down.”

Carol tried to be careful not to change her expression. She had seen him get shot when he covered her, but back then, it did not seem to have affected Akira’s movements at all. So in short, he was lying and Carol knew that.

Shiori pursued even further.

“To be honest, it seems that your movement was slowed down even before you got shot.”

Akira frowned. Both Shiori and Carol were keeping their eyes on him even before he got shot.

Akira sighed and then replied with a serious face.

“I apologize if I’m slowing everyone down, feel free to just abandon me.”

Carol did not stop shooting as she flusteredly said.

“…Ah, it’s not like I think you’re taking it easy, I didn’t mean that when I asked you that question. I was just worried since you didn’t move like usual.”

Shiori also did not stop shooting as she tried to probe what might be behind Akira’s words there.

“I’m not suspecting you for cutting corners, not at all. But I could not find any reasons that might cause your movement to worsen.”

Akira shot out a couple of grenades at the enemy before he hid again. Shiori was still staring at Akira as if she was waiting for an answer.

It seemed that Akira finally gave up as he gave a mildly vague explanation.

“…If I have to say something, it seems that I consumed too many medicines since we returned from the 30th floor. When I use the full power of my augmented suit, it puts my body in immense stress and I’m compensating that with medicines. But I feel like it’s a bad idea to keep consuming medicines at this rate. The last time I overused medicines, I fainted for 3 full days out of exhaustion. I thought that it would be really bad if I faint in this situation, so I decided to reduce my medicine consumption.”

Akira was not lying, even if that was not fully convincing, it should at least be enough to hold back their suspicions. As Akira thought so, he glanced at Shiori and Carol.

Carol and Shiori seemed to be somewhat convinced by that explanation, but it was not like they just accepted Akira’s explanation as it was.

They added extra guesses based on their experiences and knowledge on top of the new information that they just received from Akira.

Carol unconsciously nodded lightly.

[Although he said that it’s because of the medicines, I bet he’s taking medicines with strength enhancers or something. Judging from the fact that he fainted for 3 days out of exhaustion, it should be a pretty strong drug. If his slowed movement is because of the kickback from that drug after it ran out of effect, then his reasoning does make sense. After all, the kickback of an accelerator drug is really not something so scoff at.]

Carol was definitely sure of half of her guess as she asked Akira a question.

“Akira, do you usually modify your time perception? I mean like, you know, when things around you run on slower time than they should.”

Akira was surprised by that question.

“Oh, you can tell?”

Carol smiled satisfied thinking that she opened one of Akira’s secrets.

“Well, pretty much, this is a common knowledge for Hunters, you see.”

Although, unlike what Carol guessed, Akira actually was controlling his time perception with his own power without help from a drug. He was surprised since he thought that Carol had guessed that out, while Carol thought that Akira was surprised since she was able to guess that he was using accelerator drugs. They misunderstood each other and no one there could point that out.

Shiori then asked Akira with a serious look.

“Akira-sama, you said that you fainted out of exhaustion, right? Is this something that might kill you?”

Akira tilted his head, he thought that it was weird for Shiori to ask a question that had an obvious answer.

“No, but if I faint in this situation, I’m pretty sure that I’m dead.”

“Which means that the exhaustion itself is not life-threatening, so the kickback from the drug is not that strong and it would be fine as long as you can take a rest in a safe place for a few days after that, correct?”

“…Well, yeah, that’s true.”

They were still shooting at the monsters while having that conversation, in that situation, they did not have the chance to just focus on their conversation.

Carol immediately returned to hiding behind rubble after releasing some shots, she then glanced at Shiori.

“What is it? Are you telling him to use the accelerator until he faints since it’s not life-threatening? Like he said, it’s stupid to do something like that in this situation. And looking at the current Akira, it seems that the kickback is already at a pretty bad level.”

The reason why Akira was moving slower was simply because he was still inexperienced. But since it would be bad if he tried to explain the truth to both of them, Akira chose to not say anything.

Shiori thought that Akira’s silence was due to him getting annoyed. But even so, she made a request to him.

“Akira-sama. I know it’s rude for me to ask this. But, if you take extra medicines without worrying about the kickback, is it possible for you to stop that monster for at least 10 seconds? If it’s possible, if you can give me 10 seconds, I guarantee that I will destroy that monster without fail. So please, will you consider taking extra medicines?”

Akira and Carol inadvertently turned at Shiori, they were completely surprised. Shiori kept staring at Akira, waiting for an answer. Carol, who just returned back to her senses frowned and opposed that plan.

“Whoah, wait, 10 seconds? If a single person gets the full attention of that monster for 10 seconds, it’s more than enough to turn that person into minced meat, you know? You basically want him to get its attention off of you, right? Isn’t that just impossible?”

Shiori did not reply back to Carol, she kept staring at Akira, waiting for his answer. Shiori thought that Akira had never shown his full power yet until now. That was why, she thought that if it was Akira, he might be able to accomplish her impossible request.

No matter whether he was using extra medicines or not, it was impossible for Akira to do what Shiori just asked him to do. Akira’s own skill was nowhere near enough to do that. He was sure that he would definitely be turned into minced meat before 10 seconds even passed, there was no question about it.

Right when Akira was thinking what he should say to refuse that request…

“I’m back, how is it? Do you miss me?”

Alpha suddenly appeared in Akira’s views.

Akira’s face immediately turned stern, he was fighting back as much as he could from making a relieved face. Alpha was still smiling like usual when Akira replied back with a complaint.

“Yeah yeah, I really missed you. To be honest, I really wished that you would have returned back sooner, so, can you do something about this situation?”

Alpha was smiling confidently as she said.

“Just leave it to me.”

Akira regained his composure after he heard Alpha’s reassuring reply. His mental state was freed from excessive anxiety as it returned back to its optimal state for fighting. His stern face relaxed for a bit and he started explaining to Alpha.

“I see. So, Shiori asked me to be a decoy and buy her 10 seconds though. If I can do that, it seems she will take care of that thing. Honestly speaking, I really want to get out from here as soon as possible, so, 10 seconds, can we do it?”

“As long as you have me, rather than being a decoy for 10 seconds, it’s better to just kill it yourself though. Ask her to reduce the length, it’s much more dangerous to keep its attention on you without killing it for an extended time without any good reason.”

Akira then asked Shiori.

“Can you make it 5 seconds less?”

“5 seconds, huh…”

When Shiori asked for 10 seconds, she was expecting that Akira would try to make a compromise before eventually accepting her request, but 5 seconds was a lot to ask.

[…5 seconds… That might be the limit of how far Akira-sama could go… I guess it would be meaningless to ask more than that, huh.]

Shiori earnestly bowed to Akira.

“Very well, 5 seconds, I’ll be counting on you, Akira-sama.”

Carol looked at Akira with a flabbergasted expression.

“Akira, are you being serious here? It’s still really dangerous even if it’s just for 5 seconds, you know? That 5 seconds is long enough to get yourself killed out there.”

“Yeah, but as I said before, if this situation continues, my augmented suit will eventually run out of energy. If this will end the battle, I can at least do that much. Without my augmented suit, I’m the same as dead in this situation anyway.”

Seeing how Akira seemed to have suddenly regained his confidence, Carol found that rather suspicious, but she then smiled and said.

“Alright then, I’ll give you some support too, be careful.”

“Yeah.”

Akira, Carol, and Shiori repositioned themselves. Akira was hiding behind a pile of rubble away from Shiori and Carol. He had his CWH anti-material rifle in one hand and his A4WM automatic grenade launcher in the other. He was standing with his left leg on the ground and his right leg against the big rubble in front of him.

That rubble was big enough to completely block Akira’s view. But for the current Akira, that did not matter at all, he was still able to see the big monster behind that rubble just fine.

Akira then said to Alpha.

“Alright then, let’s do this.”

“This will put your body under immense stress, are you sure you’re ready?”

“Yeah, if it’s enough to kill that thing, I can give you my resolve as much as you want. It’s my responsibility after all.”

Just like he said, Akira had a resolved look on his face. Alpha returned that resolved look with a happy smile.

Akira needed to keep that big monster occupied for 5 seconds. In normal situations, that was a very short span of time, but in the middle of a battlefield where bullets were flying all over the places and one might get killed out of the blue, 5 seconds was long. So in order to survive those 5 seconds, Akira gathered all of his focus and compressed his time perception as much as he could. Inside that distorted world where everything around him was running a beat slower than him, Alpha was the only one who was still moving around normally.

“Well then, let’s start!”

With that signal from Alpha, Akira pushed the rubble in front of him with his right leg and made it fall forward toward the direction of the big monster. Alpha controlled Akira’s augmented suit to increase its output to its maximum ignoring the stress that it put on its user. The big rubble fell over and slid on the floor with a very loud sound.

Akira’s right leg that pushed the rubble and his left leg that supported that force against the floor were put under immense stress, Akira could clearly feel the bones inside both of his legs cracking. Of course, the medicines that were still active inside his body immediately started fixing those cracks, but Akira did not wait for them to completely heal his bones as he immediately started running as if he was chasing for the sliding rubble in front of him.

Since the augmented suit hardened and acted like an exoskeleton to support Akira's both legs, it was able to absorb the impact from the ground so as not to disturb the healing on the cracks of both his legs. Thanks to that, Akira was able to run even with broken legs.

All the machine guns on that big monster turned as much as they could to aim toward the incoming rubble. The impact of the bullet storm that swallowed the sliding rubble was enough to stop that rubble from slipping further. Right after that, all the machine guns on that big monster immediately fixed their aim at Akira who was charging at that big monster alone.

Akira was running while using the rubble in front of him as a shielding, he kept repositioning himself to make sure that he would not get hit by the bullets that passed through the small openings and cracks on that big rubble. It was an impossible feat to execute without Alpha's support.

Countless bullets flew right next to Akira, but none of them hit him, not even his equipment. Akira did not slow down at all as he kept on charging forward.

Akira raised his A4WM automatic grenade launchers and pulled the trigger, he did not even aim, it was as if he was just shooting grenades randomly. But thanks to Alpha's calculation, all of the grenades that he shot flew in a parabolic trajectory and landed at the big monster.

Some of the machine guns fixed on the big monster's body changed their targets to the flying grenades. They moved as fast as they could to intercept the incoming grenades.

Right at the next moment, Akira raised his CWH anti-material rifle in his right hand and pulled the trigger. The CWH special bullet flew past the grenades and hit the weak points of the machine guns that were trying to intercept the incoming grenades. More than that, it pierced through multiple force field armours and hit one of the energy sources that were supplying energy to those force field armours.

As one of the energy sources of the monster was destroyed, a part of its force field armours temporarily stopped working. When grenades landed on that unprotected side, the explosion transmitted into the inside of that monster, thus, temporarily stopping it.

It was not a coincidence, it was something that can only be done with full knowledge of that monster's anatomy, and of course, that was only possible thanks to Alpha's support.

Akira kept on shooting his CWH anti-material rifle and A4WM automatic grenade launcher in succession, thus, prolonging the state where that big monster could not retaliate. But it was not close enough to kill that monster, the humongous monster was created from multiple B18 monsters, thus, it had multiple energy sources and control devices. So, Akira's attacks were only able to stop that monster temporarily.

Inside that slowed down world, Akira asked Alpha.

"How many seconds to go?!"

Since he was in compressed time perception, he did not know how many seconds had passed. What he knew was that the big monster was still alive and kicking.

So Alpha who was measuring the accurate elapsed time in place of Akira answered back.

"It's already 5.14 seconds."

That telepathic exchange happened in a split second.

Akira started to feel doubt. He had already bought enough time as he had promised, but the enemy was still alive and well. Shiori had not fulfilled her promise. Because of that, he could not help but glance at where Shiori was.

When he saw Shiori, Akira was taken aback. Shiori jumped out from behind rubble and charged straight at the big monster. She placed her hand on her sheathed blade, ready to pull her blade anytime. Judging from the length of that blade, she should not be able to reach that big monster from that distance.

Just like Akira, Shiori was running in compressed time perception. She was using her accelerator trump card.

Shiori had studied CQC and swordsmanship. If she was fighting against an enemy with rifles inside a closed room, even if that enemy was using a machine gun, Shiori could close the distance in an instant.

But leaving the smaller monsters aside, Shiori's blade was not even close to being big enough to take care of that huge monster. She herself knew that.

Shiori had decided to use her other trump card other than her accelerator. The time that Akira bought for her was for Shiori to use her trump card.

When Shiori saw Akira jump out from behind the rubble, she also jumped out from behind the rubble and started running towards the big monster. Inside that distorted world where Shiori could even trace floating sands, she thanked Akira for buying her time as he promised. This time, she had to fulfil her part of the promise. She gathered her concentration and gripped the blade dangling on her hip. She held the handle with her right hand and sheathe with her left hand. She focused on her blade and took a sword-drawing stance.

Shiori gripped hard on her blade's handle, used all the strength of her augmented suit and pulled out her blade. On the next moment, a huge blade of light cleanly cut the huge monster into two. The other B18 monsters around that big monster were also sliced with it. When that big blade of light hit the huge monster's forcefield armour, a blinding light flashed. That blinding flash of light came from the force field armour trying to convert any kinetic energy into light, it was the proof that the slice cut through the other force field armours that were still working.

After cutting that monster horizontally, Shiori then cut that monster vertically. But she did not stop there, she kept flinging her sword, cutting the big monster and the B18 monsters around it to smaller pieces.

Akira was dumbfounded watching that scene of this monstrosity being sliced and diced by a gigantic sword of light. Suddenly, his left hand started moving on its own and shot multiple grenades from his A4WM automatic grenade launcher at the monster. It was Alpha controlling Akira's augmented suit.

The huge monster was left vulnerable after being sliced by Shiori, then to top it off, it was mowed by the grenades from Akira, it then finally stopped moving.

The sword of light that extended out from Shiori's blade vanished and the rest of the blade crumbled to dust. Shiori then sheathed her sword, of which only the handle was left, and breathed out.

Akira returned back to himself and immediately aimed his rifles at the hallway where B18 monsters might come out, he then asked Alpha about what just happened.

"Alpha, that one just now, is it that thing? Old-world technology thingy just like the one that I used with that knife back in Kuzusuhara ruin."

"In a sense, yes, I believe that blade was created using the technology recovered from analyzing old-world relics. Although the length of the blade and the sharpness is not that good, it's at least good enough for a single-use weapon."

"…It is not that good?!"

"Back in the Kuzusuhara ruin, you were able to easily cut through pillars and walls, remember? Although it depends on the items, old-world relics are way more amazing than that."

"…I feel like you should not compare that with an old-world relic though."

"Oh my, that's not true at all. In order for you to accomplish my request, you will have to get similar level of equipment, you know?"

If Alpha’s statement was true, it sounded as if Akira should be able to easily find that level of equipment. He was once again reminded of how scary the old-world ruins were.

The other Hunters watched what happened with wide eyes, but they quickly returned back to reality and started moving again. They returned to the hallway while making sure that their escape route was still safe and waited for Shikarabe’s team to come too. Togami and Reina quickly grouped back with Elena’s team. Not too long after that, Shikarabe and Kanae, who were holding the B18 monsters back, finally grouped up with Elena’s team too.

Although the other Hunters also saw that flash of light and had some questions about it, they just shelved it for now and prioritized more on escaping the building. After confirming that everyone was alright, they immediately headed to the building’s entrance, hoping that the situation outside would be better than what they faced just now.

When Elena’s team was fighting in the first-floor atrium of the Seranthal building, Kurosawa, Katsuya, and the other Hunters outside the Seranthal building were fighting the B18 monsters flowing out from that building.

Although their fight was nowhere easy, they were somehow able to maintain the upper hand.

The B18 monsters were relatively strong monsters. Compared to the usual monsters roaming in the Mihazono ruin, they could be considered as powerful monsters. Even a single B18 monster could wreak havoc, but even so, the stream of B18 monsters coming out from the Seranthal building did not seem to be going to stop anytime soon. Normal Hunters would have died by now.

Kurosawa and his men could handle the fight just fine. They had properly prepared themselves and had taken enough distance from the building while giving up trying to secure the building. Because of that, even if they took it easy, the B18 monsters would not be able to push them back.

Kurosawa and his men maintained that situation where there was basically very low danger to their lives.

Katsuya and his men were also fighting back the B18 monsters while hiding behind the portable walls lent by Kurosawa and his men. But in contrast to Kurosawa and his men who were not hard-pressed fighting the monsters, Katsuya and his men seemed to be having a hard time.

Kurosawa and his men had zero casualties and zero injuries, they had no reason to try to go to the Seranthal building again. But for Katsuya, some of his men were still left inside the building. They might be still alive and it might be too late if he did not try to save them soon.

But of course, Katsuya could not do that at the moment. His negotiation with Kurosawa ended up in failure and it was rather impossible for Katsuya and his men to try to rescue their comrades alone. Katsuya was making a stern but pained face, he was high-strung since he could not rescue his men, and his emotion was starting to spread to his men there.

And then, among all of Katsuya's men, there was one who felt a soul-crushing level of guilt, Lilina.

A lot of Katsuya's men were blaming Lilina. It was because Katsuya told the rest of his men what happened with his negotiation with Kurosawa. It was not like Lilina was at fault there, but the other Hunters who could not rescue their friends were looking for an easy target to direct the blame.

Lilina felt the others' gazes at her, she had a stern expression. It was a mix of anger and hatred with a slight trace of fear and guilt.

[…Am I at fault here? Am I the only one at fault here?!]

And so, Lilina was also trying to look for an easy target from around her to direct the blame, that was when she saw Kurosawa, who seemed to be fighting back the monsters without much trouble.

[Look at that! He's not having a hard time fighting back the monsters, isn't it?! So is there any need for him to barricade himself so much like that?! That's just so stupid!!]

From Lilina’s eyes, it seemed that Kurosawa and his men were able to easily fight back the B18 monsters. But her mind that was looking for a target to direct her anger caused her to lower down her evaluation of the B18 monsters rather than noticing that Kurosawa and his men were strong Hunters.

As her irritation peaked and she could no longer hold it back, Lilina let her emotion take over. She immediately jumped out from behind the portable wall to shoot down the B18 monsters preventing her from saving the other Hunters left inside the Seranthal building.

She ignored Katsuya and the other Hunters behind her who shouted at her to stop what she was doing. She repositioned herself to a portable wall that was closer to the Seranthal building and peeked out to aim at a B18 monster.

If Lilina had to make any excuses for why she did that, it could be said that her action there was to push the front line forward. She thought that if someone that they blamed courageously pushed forward, the other Hunters who were holding grudges against her would start fighting more vigorously out of pride and ego. And if that happened, it would definitely help to rescue the Hunters left inside the building. But that was all nothing but Lilina’s own opinion.

Lilina was doing pretty well, she had shot down multiple B18 monsters on her own.

The B18 monsters there immediately focused their firepower on the one person who just left the enemy’s formation. Lilina had no way to evade it. Even the portable wall from Kurosawa was not strong enough to block that much focused firepower. As expected, she was barraged with bullets.

Lilina fell down in the pool of her own blood. It was by pure chance that she did not immediately die. While lying there waiting for her inevitable death, she could see from her blurring vision Katsuya running desperately at her, trying to rescue her.

Lilina then smiled happily, she thought that it should be alright since Katsuya was coming for her. That was her last thought before she took her last breath.

Katsuya, who saw Lilina get shot, left his post as the commander and jumped out to help her. He destroyed the B18 monsters on his way as he desperately tried to reach Lilina, but when he reached her, she was already dead.

Katsuya looked at Lilina. To him, Lilina's gaze was as if she was blaming Katsuya, why he did not come to save her.

Katsuya then closed his eyes. He remembered his conversation with Sheryl and reminded himself that he had decided to stop creating ghosts out of his dead comrades. When he opened his eyes, this time, he saw Lilina's smile, she seemed to be happy that Katsuya had rushed to her.

But that did not change the fact that he failed to save his friends again. He let the creeping anger inside him take over his body, his expression turned stern as he shouted at his communication device to give an order to his men.

"Everyone! Get back!!"

Katsuya then abandoned his position as the leader of his team, he abandoned his duty, stood up, and started shooting at the B18 monsters around him.

In a blank white space, someone smiled.

Kurosawa was flabbergasted as he saw Katsuya fighting the monsters. It was really out of his expectation.

Katsuya was fighting multiple B18 monsters at the same time, and the one pushing back was Katsuya. He was shooting down the B18 monsters around him one by one, maybe he was able to do that because of the powerful rifle that he was using.

He was moving without a shred of hesitation, it was as if he knew exactly where the enemies were, how they were moving, where they were aiming, and where their weak points were. Although most of the B18 monsters there already changed their targets to Katsuya, he was still able to maintain the upper hand.

It was as if he was a Hunter who was extremely powerful that it was strange for him to be here. Such thoughts entered onlookers minds as he lay waste on the B18 swarm.

Kurosawa could not help but mumble.

“So strong. I see now, it’s no surprise that he got to take the command, huh. Wait, no, but still…”

His words could be interpreted as both amazement and exasperation.

Kurosawa looked around. His men were also amazed by Katsuya’s action. Some of Katsuya men were even cheering him on.

It was not like Kurosawa had any kind of hatred or grudge toward Katsuya, but he felt some kind of feeling that was not exactly a compliment either. But for now, he decided to put that aside, he had to give an order to his men in this situation.

“Everyone, provide him with support!! Push the line forward slowly!!”

One of Kurosawa’s men looked at Kurosawa and said.

“Are we going to help him?”

“He’s taking the decoy role even though no one asked for it. This is a perfect chance, we can take it easy in this case. And although I told you to push the line, of course, safety is number one… Stop anyone who wants to join him, there’s no need to accompany him in doing something that reckless.”

“Ooh, I see. Roger that!”

Kurosawa's men started to make their moves. Kurosawa watched his men pushing forward. It seemed that his worry was proven untrue, so he sighed in relief before continuing to shout commands.

Kurosawa and his men slowly but surely pushed the front line forward. The number of B18 monsters around the Seranthal building was obviously decreasing.

And when he finished most of the B18 monsters in the area, a flash of blinding light came out from the building's entrance. It was when Shiori cut down the huge monster.

Kurosawa looked towards the Seranthal building's entrance and noticed Elena's team come running out from inside.

"So that's the reconnaissance team, huh. They defeated that huge monster. That's pretty impressive."

With this, there should be no problem getting inside the Seranthal building again. Kurosawa immediately ordered his men to move out.

Elena's team that just came out from the inside of the building was so surprised when they saw the situation outside, but even so, they did not stop running. Elena was running in the front, leading the team while checking for enemies with her information-gathering device. They kept their guards up while running through a huge field filled with B18 wreckages.

Unlike the inside of the building, Elena's information-gathering device was working well. So in order to not get ambushed like last time, Elena carefully checked the surrounding area for any signals. And when she found a signal, she immediately warned the other members of her team.

"A signal from the right, keep your eyes out for any enemies."

Akira immediately turned his focus toward the position that Elena sent where that signal came from. There were dead Hunters there, all of them were using augmented suits. Akira had a bad feeling about what would happen.

“Again, huh. Alpha, can you tell if they can still move?”

“No idea. One thing for sure, those Hunters just died recently and their augmented suits still have enough energy to move. So possibility wise, it’s not zero.”

“Do you have any idea how and why?”

“I can make multiple guesses. Someone might be somehow controlling them, or maybe the software in their augmented suits was modified to move on their own. But as long as you don’t get caught in a surprise attack, you should have no problem defeating them. Due to the various limitations on their signal speed, local storage size, and other limitations, they should not be able to do any complex movements. After all, you were able to defeat them all alone before, right?”

“Well, yeah.”

The moving augmented suits that Akira fought inside the Seranthal building were not that dangerous. It was just that he was caught by surprise. If those dead Hunters were as strong as him with Alpha’s support, he would have been dead by now.

Since Akira did not have those limitations, he thought that it was because he could connect to the old-world domain. Although he still had some questions and doubts about it, he decided to save that for later.

But that was when Akira’s bad luck came up again. As the result of a complicated chain of events and Akira’s bad luck, one of the Hunters who was using a modified augmented suit stood up. As if it had received an order to simply stand up and shoot any nearby enemies, it immediately aimed its rifle toward the nearest Hunter, and that nearest Hunter was Akira.

Akira calmly pulled up his CWH anti-material rifle, aimed it at the augmented suit’s control device clearly indicated with the help from Alpha, and pulled the trigger.

Bullet flew and opened a huge hole in that dead Hunter as well as destroying the control device of the augmented suit. That dead Hunter then fell down to the ground and completely stopped moving.

Katsuya, who saw that by pure coincidence shouted.

“Lilina!!!”

That dead Hunter was Lilina.

Katsuya ran toward Akira. For Katsuya, who did not know what was going on, it seemed as if Akira just finished Lilina who was actually still alive.

Akira was about to shift his aim to Katsuya by pure reflex, but Alpha stopped him through his augmented suit.

Akira frowned and asked.

“Alpha?”

Alpha replied with a serious face.

“Calm down, we can’t afford to cause a needless fight in this situation.”

Akira kept staring at Alpha. It seemed that it was not enough to fully convince him, so Alpha continued.

“I’ll properly give you support next time, so just calm down for now.”

“…Alright.”

Akira hesitatingly lowered his rifle.

Shikarabe gave a signal with his hand to Elena and the other Hunters to go ahead, and then he stood next to Akira.

Shiori also recommended them to hurry up, so the rest of the Hunters went ahead and left Akira and Shikarabe behind. After all, they were finally able to escape the building, so Shiori thought that it would be very unfavourable to get involved in another troublesome fight right now.

Katsuya ran all the way to Akira and stood in front of him. He was slightly shaking while glaring at Akira. It was even weird that they did not start shooting at each other yet.

Shikarabe then asked Katsuya.

“What?”

“…What…You say?”

“You were running to us, so I bet you want something from us, right? So, what is it? If it’s nothing, then get lost.”

Katsuya’s glare shifted to Shikarabe.

“…Why did you shoot her?!”

“Someone is somehow controlling the augmented suits of the dead Hunters, so we had to neutralize them. That’s all there is to it.”

“…She might be still alive, you know!?”

“No, she’s dead. I bet it’s exactly because she’s already dead that the security of her augmented suit got disengaged which allowed someone else to control it. We were also attacked by similar means back in the building too. I bet some of the monsters that came out from the Seranthal building modified her augmented suit or something.”

“Do you really think that I’ll just shut up and accept that explanation?”

Katsuya did not accept Shikarabe’s explanation as he kept glaring at Shikarabe.

To that, Shikarabe looked back at Katsuya with hostility.

“I see, in that case, it means that she’s still alive, her augmented suit was not hacked. But even so, she aimed at us. So, basically, one of your men intentionally aimed her rifle at us, right?”

Shikarabe took a fighting stance. Although it was not like he was aiming his rifle at Katsuya, he was ready to start fighting anytime anyone made a suspicious move.

Katsuya reeled back.

“T-that’s not what I meant…”

Shikarabe was still glaring at him.

“So then, what’s your explanation? Go on.”

Katsuya could not answer back.

Akira and Shikarabe just stood there against Katsuya in silence. No one said anything. That was when Kurosawa, Yumina, and Airi approached them, they quickly noticed the tense mood and frowned since they did not know what was going on except for the fact that they were on the brink of fighting each other.

They just finished fighting the monsters, so, Kurosawa thought that it was unwise to fight against other Hunters in this situation.

Kurosawa lightly sighed and said to Katsuya.

“I have no idea what’s going on here, but are you sure you don’t want to use this chance to rescue your men trapped inside that building? I’ll tell you this, my men will stand by near the entrance to secure the area first, we have no plans to help you in looking for survivors.”

Katsuya looked at Kurosawa, Airi, and Yumina, and then his gaze returned back to Akira and Shikarabe. He somehow made a frustrated look before he turned and ran into the Seranthal building. Yumina and Airi immediately followed behind him.

Kurosawa looked exasperatedly at Katsuya as he left that place. He then turned to Shikarabe, lightly smiled at him, and said.

“Yo there, Shikarabe, long time no see.”

Shikarabe frowned.

“Kurosawa, don’t tell me that you’re the leader of the Hunters outside the Seranthal building.”

“Yep, but only half of them, I lead the Hunter group unaffiliated with Drankam. I don’t know what happened, but they’re not under my lead, so I won’t accept any complaints about them. Well, putting that aside, as the leader of the next team that will go there, can you give me any information that you have to share?”

Shikarabe sighed as if he was relieved, he then calmly replied.

“Sure. Akira, I’ll stay here. Tell that to Elena and the other Hunters too. As for Shiori… Well, I guess it doesn’t really matter, huh. Just return back to the Kugamayama city ahead and follow Elena’s order from there. Tell Togami to do his job properly as an escort.”

“Alright.”

Akira lightly nodded and went to catch up with Elena.

Kurosawa kept watching Akira who was leaving that place as he said to Shikarabe.

“So that’s the Akira that you told me, huh. Is he as strong as that Katsuya?”

“No idea, he might as well be.”

“I see, there are so many strong young Hunters lately that it’s rather scary… Well, leaving that aside, it’s rare to see you picking a fight with someone that quickly.”

Shikarabe frowned again.

“Is that so? I think that was normal though.”

“No no no, the usual you would not take a fighting stance so quickly… Well, I guess that doesn’t really matter now, huh. So, what happened inside that building?”

“…Well, all kind of things.”

Kurosawa smiled wryly.

“I have no idea what happened, but that must have been rough for you too, huh.”

“Yeah, you can say that again.”

Shikarabe sounded really tired when he said that.

Elena and the other Hunters were waiting for Akira near where they parked their vehicles. After they grouped up with Akira and listened to his explanation, they headed back to Kugamayama city. Shiori, Reina, and Kanae were in Shikarabe’s vehicle with Togami driving.

When they left Mihazono ruin, they finally lowered their tension. Although they were still in the middle of the wasteland, it was much safer than Mihazono ruin.

Akira was resting in the driver’s assistant seat, he asked Carol to drive in place of him. Both his body and mind were already at the limit. He wanted to get back to his home as soon as possible, take a good bath, and sleep like a dead log on his bed.

Carol glanced at Akira and smiled bitterly. It seemed that it would be useless trying to seduce Akira in that situation, she also refrained from striking a conversation to let him take a rest. As for Carol, she still had enough energy, after all, her body was enhanced with nanomachines.

Akira completely lowered his guard as he was resting his body and mind. After a short break, he regained his physical and psychical strength, and it gave him the leeway to start thinking about something else. He then remembered all that happened inside the Seranthal building.

“…Alpha. As I thought, it still bugs me though. Where were you when you left me? And what were you doing?”

Alpha smiled.

“Oh my, that would need you to listen to a 30 minutes long explanation of the ToS though, are you sure you want to know?”

Akira’s face twitched.

“No, I don’t think I can stand that. But still, like, can you at least give me something? Or is it something that you can’t tell at all without that ToS?”

Alpha frowned, she seemed a bit troubled.

“Well, let’s see. If I have to take out the only things that I can tell you, I was trying to fix the source that lowered the sensitivity of information-gathering devices inside the Seranthal building.”

Akira was a bit surprised, he sounded dissatisfied with her answer as he asked.

“…Was that something so important that you have to temporarily take off your support?”

“I see, well, you’re not wrong there.”

It seemed that Akira finally accepted Alpha's explanation, Alpha then continued.

"Although, like I said before, if you had wanted to just abandon everyone else and prioritize on escaping that building yourself, then I would have stayed with you back there. So, do you prefer that?"

"No… As I thought, I couldn't do something like that in that situation…"

Alpha's face changed to a serious expression.

"Akira. This is a good chance so I'll tell you this. If you don't want to get other Hunters in trouble when you lose my support, you should refrain from working with other Hunters. I've warned you before too that I might lose connection with you inside an old-world ruin. Elena and the other Hunters must be thinking that your usual performance is the one when you have my support. In case if you suddenly can't live up to their expectation, it might lead to a fatal mistake. So if you don't want something like that to happen, you should refuse their invitation from the beginning."

Akira seemed conflicted, a lot of feelings were mixed inside his head.

Alpha then continued with a gentle voice.

"Well, I won't tell you to force yourself, this is not compulsory. In the end, you're the one to decide. But, at least keep this in mind, okay? I'm sure you know this all too well, no one can tell what might happen inside an old-world ruin."

"…You're right."

Alpha smiled.

"Well, of course, if you're strong enough that basically there's almost no effect even if you lose my support, then you wouldn't need to worry about that."

Akira smiled bitterly, he then decided to move on and said.

“That’s true. I need to get stronger in order to do that request from you too.”

“Yup, I’ll be counting on you.”

Alpha smiled back when she said that, but behind that smile, she was thinking about something else.

During this request, Alpha actually kept less secret than usual from Akira so that Carol would be able to easily poke around for information from him. And if it was possible, Alpha wanted to use that reason so that Akira would be more careful around Carol and somehow put some distance from Elena and the other Hunters too.

But unfortunately, Carol never tried to poke in too far. So if Alpha tried to warn Akira using that reason, it might be counter-effective and Akira might get suspicious of Alpha instead.

No one could tell how much it would affect Akira, so she just hoped that Akira would put some thought into it as she planned for the future.

Soon, they were able to return safely to Kugamayama city.

After they stepped off from their vehicles, they grouped up again. Elena was exhausted as she spoke.

“Well, good work out there everyone. A lot of things happened back there. And with this, this party is dissolved. I’m also thinking of stopping any plans to go to Mihazono ruin after this… To be more precise, I want to take care of the negotiations ahead, well, I still have some negotiations left to do after all. Akira, can I borrow Carol again?”

“Sure, I don’t mind. Carol, I’m sorry but can you help Elena-san again?”

Carol happily replied.

“Of course. I’ll return back with a huge reward, so you can rely on me.”

“I’ll be counting on you then.”

Seeing Akira smiling at her when he said that, Carol smiled back at him.

Elena then said to everyone.

“I’ll send the details of the reward to everyone later. And if you have anything to say, you can talk to me first. So then, that’s it, thanks for the hard work.”

After Akira said his goodbyes to the other Hunters, he stretched out his body, returned back to his vehicle, and headed to his house.

Togami and Reina had a conflicted face as they saw Akira off. Although they were looking at Akira with different feelings, both of them had the same reason, it was because both of them wanted to be stronger.

During this request, Togami was able to reassess his strength, and the result was that he was weak. He was able to confirm it, and this time, there was no doubt about it. Although he got temporarily dejected back inside the Seranthal building, he was able to reflect on what happened during the day while he was escorting Reina and on their way back to the city. He finally made a firm base for him to start.

He knew that he was weak. From here and on, he just needed to become stronger. Togami said to himself, made his resolve, and started walking forward firmly.

While on the other hand, Reina was doubting herself. After she was able to return safely from a dangerous situation and the tension in her was released, she ended up remembering the horrible situation that she was in, and got even more dejected.

After Reina left Katsuya’s team, after she left that safe place, she devoted her time to work as a Hunter despite the fact that she still had to have Shiori and Kanae escort her. But still, she was able to regain some of her confidence as a Hunter.

But all of the confidence that she worked really hard to gather was destroyed in an instant. It felt as if all her hard work was nothing but in vain, what happened today was telling her that and got her even more dejected.

Seeing how Togami moved on forward firmly, it felt like Reina was being left behind.

Reina had no idea what to do so that she could get stronger.

Silavin: Hmm… Apparently, we hit the goal for a brief moment. So, 3 chapters this week. Though, since we fell back, it will return to 2 chapters a week after.

Rebuild World – Chapter 134, Yanagisawa's Business

The first floor of the Seranthal building was filled by the Hunters that were sent by Kugamayama city, to be more precise, they were a group of Hunters who accepted the request from Kugamayama city. They also sealed the way to go to the upper floors and to the basement.

Something was still blocking the Hunters from making connections from inside the building. As such, they installed a huge relay device near the entrance to connect them to another relay device outside.

The first floor of the Seranthal building was reinforced so much that it looked like a forward base.

That was where Yanagisawa and his men made an appearance. The mood on the first floor immediately changed, it was obvious that someone of high ranking was present. Yanagisawa just ignored that mood and proceeded through the first-floor atrium to one of the receptionist desks. Due to the fighting before, the receptionist desks were completely destroyed to the point that they were unrecognizable.

Yanagisawa started speaking while facing empty space.

“I want to ask for permission to enter the facility.”

Nothing happened. Yanagisawa’s men tilted their heads while checking up Yanagisawa’s expression. Yanagisawa then once again said.

“I want to ask for permission to enter the facility. The rule states that even when it’s inactive, I should still be able to apply for a visitor permit. If you won’t follow it, then I have no other choice but to take another alternative. With this, at least you know that I tried to follow the proper procedure, right?”

When he said that, Seranthal suddenly appeared in front of Yanagisawa. Seranthal then gave a very formal introduction before answering Yanagisawa’s query.

“Dear customer, the building is not open at the moment, anyone with no business in this building is not allowed to enter. So please leave the building.”

Yanagisawa smiled.

“I’m Yanagisawa. I can’t make a proper connection because of some reasons, but I’m the one who made the application to visit the 60th floor. Can you check it?”

“My apologies, but there’s no such visitation application to this building.”

Yanagisawa’s smile slightly clouded.

“…Is that so? I confirmed that the application was properly received though.”

“There is no such visitation application during the closing of this building in our record. We’re really sorry, please try sending the application again.”

Yanagisawa placed his hand on his chin.

[…Did I make a mistake when I sent the application? Or is it that I can’t send an application when I properly make a connection? It can’t be helped,

I guess I’ll try using that.]

Yanagisawa pulled out a black card from his pocket and showed it to Seranthal.

“I have some business on the 60th floor. Just let me pass.”

When Seranthal saw that card, she smiled and lightly bowed.

“Understood, I will guide you, over here please.”

Seranthal walked and guided Yanagisawa and his men to one of the elevators.

The way past the elevator was sealed with a strong barricade. Seranthal, who did not have a corporeal body walked through that barricade.

Yanagisawa smiled at a guard near that barricade.

“Sorry, but can you open the barricade.”

That guard nervously replied.

“I’m really sorry, it’s a type that once set up, it can’t be opened or moved. I’m really sorry.”

“Aaah, I see. Well, it can’t be helped then. Nelia, cut it down.”

A girl with cyborg body stepped out from Yanagisawa’s men. She was wearing a rather exposing bodysuit. Although she had a nice figure and beautiful face, the bodysuit from her neck down seemed to be made of a mix of metal and rubber. It was obvious that it was not a fleshy body. She was one of the relics thieves that Akira fought back in Kuzusuhara ruin, Nelia.

Nelia stood in front of that blockade and frowned, she then swiftly cut the blockade down with her blade. The blockade wall that was even strong enough to withstand tank warhead was cut into small pieces in a blink of an eye and crumbled down to the ground.

Yanagisawa smiled.

“Well done. Want to go grab some food together next time?”

“No thanks.”

“That’s so cold. I’ll take you to a good restaurant. It’s a restaurant with high reviews and delicious foods, you know?”

Nelia looked at Yanagisawa with very cold eyes. Her cyborg body was not equipped with devices to digest food.

Yanagisawa just smiled and gave an order to his men.

“Nelia will accompany me, the rest of you stay here until we return.”

Nelia looked surprised.

“Why won’t you take everyone?”

“Eh? You want to know?”

Nelia, who saw his smile decided to not ask further.

“Nope, not really.”

“The biggest factor is because I know I can blow your head off with one push of a button.”

A bomb was planted inside Nelia’s head. As long as she had not paid enough contribution to overweight a death sentence or as long as she could not escape the position that she was in, that bomb would stay.

Yanagisawa then passed over the cut down blockade and went ahead. Nelia lightly sighed and followed behind him.

“Ah, by the way, ask for a replacement for the barricade too!!”

Yanagisawa said to the rest of his men before leaving that place.

___*___*___*___

Elena and Sara were taking a rest in their home. Both of them were completely in their relaxed state. Because both of them were very tired after returning back from Mihazono ruin, they did not make any complaints about each other's appearance that day.

After Akira left, Elena had to finish up an extremely troublesome negotiation. Thanks to the help from Carol, both of them were able to secure a good amount of reward.

Elena had nothing to complain about Carol, who was good at fighting as well as negotiating. Normally, she would have used this chance to form a connection with Carol. But there was still one thing that was bothering her, it was something that Shikarabe had told her about Carol.

"Say, Sara. What do you think about what Shikarabe said back then? You know, that one when he said that Carol was a bad girl."

Sara thought for a bit before replying.

"Hmmm, well, she is someone who would use that augmented suit out of her own volition after all, if it still bothers you, how about asking Shikarabe? He did say to ask him after that request if it still bothers us, remember? So I'm sure it's okay if you ask him now."

Elena thought for a bit. It was not like she wanted to look for Carol's bad sides. She just wanted to check if Carol was a problematic person or not and if she should stop trying to associate with Carol. But, Carol had some connections to Akira. For someone labelled as a 'bad girl' to be around Akira, Elena could not help but wonder.

"You're right. I guess I'll do that."

Elena took her information terminal and called Shikarabe. It was also set so that Sara could listen to their call once they were connected.

"It's Shikarabe. Elena, huh. Did something happen with the request?"

“Nope, it’s not about the request. I just remembered that there’s something I wanted to ask you. It’s about what you said about Carol back then. You did say that you’ll tell me the details later, right? Carol really helped me during the negotiation, so I was thinking if it’s a good idea to get along with her, but then I remembered what you said back then.”

“Oooh, about that, huh.”

Shikarabe paused as if he was thinking about what to say.

“Well, uhh, you saw it for yourself that she was using that attire. So I’m sure you can make some guesses yourself. If you don’t want to be seen under the same light as her, you might want to refrain from associating with her. I guess that’s the gist of it when money is not involved. If you want to know more about the details… Well, I guess I’ll need to have you pay me 500,000 Aurum.”

Elena’s expression did not change at all as she operated her information terminal.

“Done, can you check it?”

Shikarabe was surprised as he asked.

“…The heck? You really paid the money?”

Honestly speaking, Shikarabe only said that to let Elena and Sara know that he actually did not want to talk much about Carol. After all, Carol was such a notorious woman, who caused so much trouble, that you would normally need money to know more details about her. He did not think that Elena would really pay him.

Elena, herself, would not have paid if the one who brought Carol to the team was not Akira.

Although Shikarabe only said that half-jokingly, now that he really got paid, he had to properly tell Elena and Sara the details now. Elena and Sara could hear Shikarabe sigh, he then continued with a serious tone.

“I can tell you the details, so, is it okay to tell you now through this call?”

“Sure.”

“Carol’s main job is being a Hunter, but she’s also selling her body to other Hunters as her side job. Although she would serve almost anyone, her customers are mostly based on her taste. She has no fixed price either. She sometimes is willing to take as little as 100 Aurum. But, I bet she only does that to let her customer have a taste of her body and ask for more money next time. It’s basically like an entry price for a narcotic. She’ll increase the price every time the same person asks for her again, in the end, she sometimes asks for a few billion Aurum just for a night. Moreover, I heard that her aim is not simply the money, but it’s the money that the Hunters get from risking their lives. I heard that is the exact reason why she will only accept Hunters. After all, risking life is a professional hazard for being a Hunter. So I guess that perfectly fits her taste.”

Elena then asked a question.

“Well, at least I get it that she’s a problematic person, but was there any need for me to pay 500,000 Aurum for that information?”

“It depends on each case, but she basically has caused so much trouble that asking for more detail about it will cost you that much money. To be more precise, 12 people already dead because of her.”

“The number of Hunters who died because of her is simply too much to ignore. Each Hunter had a different reason behind their death. Some of them got into a fight with their friends to get enough money to pay Carol, some of them got killed fighting other customers over Carol, some of them got killed trying to force Carol although they didn’t have enough money. The real problem starts here. Some of those Hunters were veterans from Drankam.”

Elena’s expression turned even sterner, she understood the severity of the subject.

“In the past, Drankam took a special request from the City Management. At that time, they were given secret information about old-world relics for the request, but that information got leaked out. And after an investigation, it was found that someone leaked that information to Carol.”

“And the one who leaked that was a veteran Hunter from Drankam, huh?”

“To be more precise, there’s a good chance that was the case. From what I heard, the Hunter paid Carol with that information instead of money. That Hunter should have known what would happen to him if he leaked secret information from the City Management, but even so, it seemed that his mind got so messed up that he did not care about consequences. It’s still unclear whether Carol sold that information to someone else. That Hunter told Carol in a cheap inn where she might have set some audio recorders or something.”

“So then, what happened to that Hunter next?”

“He was furious and went to kill Carol, but he ended up getting killed instead. By the way, I was the one who killed him. At that time, I accepted a request from Carol to be her bodyguard. I don’t know if Carol had known that Hunter was coming to kill her beforehand or not. But one thing for sure, Drankam did not leak that information to the public. Nonetheless, Drankam still took the responsibility for the information leak.”

Elena and Sara were listening to Shikarabe with stern faces. From what they heard, it seemed that Carol was far more problematic than both of them had thought.

“The 12 dead people are also the number that came up after an investigation. In reality, there might be even more people who got killed. Well, basically, a lot of people get killed just by associating with her. So with all of this info, I have no other choice but to see her as a problematic girl. But putting that aside, Carol is indeed a skilled Hunter. I heard that she’s making profits out of information that she received from the other Hunters in place of money. Depending on the subject, she can also gather information about old-world ruins through negotiations. So depending on how you get along with her, it might be really profitable. But if you slip-up, you might get yourself in big trouble.”

Shikarabe then changed his serious tone to a more relaxed one.

“I guess that’s the gist of it. I believe that I gave you enough information for what you paid for. I won’t take any complaints, okay?”

Elena replied with a serious tone.

“…Don’t worry, that’s good enough.”

“I see. Do invite me again if you get any profitable requests, okay? Later then.”

Shikarabe then ended the call. Elena and Sara looked at each other, both of them had an expression saying that they were worrying for someone.

__*__*__*__

Shikarabe was drinking together with Kurosawa in a pub. The table in front of them was a big table designed to accommodate the server girls too. But the ones sitting on that table were only Shikarabe and Kurosawa. That in itself was a rather luxurious way of using that table.

Shikarabe and Kurosawa were enjoying their expensive drinks while talking about the current popular topics among Hunters, which included what just happened in Mihazono ruin too.

Kurosawa there threw a question to Shikarabe in a good mood.

“By the way, what happened to the Hunters whom you rescued back there?”

Shikarabe sounded totally uninterested as he answered.

“No idea. I bet they’re negotiating with the Drankam’s upper echelons even now.”

“I heard that one of the maids that you rescued even threatened Drankam.”

Shikarabe looked slightly surprised. He looked a bit annoyed as he said.

“Even you have heard about that too, huh…”

“Well, yeah.”

The secret message for Drankam officers that Shikarabe deciphered inside the Seranthal building was basically a rescue request from Shiori that sounded closer to a threat message.

It was basically a request to send a rescue squad as soon as possible under the assumption that Reina was still alive. And if Drankam ignored it or failed in rescuing Reina, it was written in detail what would happen to Drankam. As a matter of fact, Shiori had already made a reservation with the related party to carry on the aftermath and that reservation was impossible to take back unless Reina returned back alive.

According to the information that Shikarabe received from Arabe, a Drankam officer that he got along with, it seemed that Shiori was not lying and it would be impossible to play dumb about it.

Shikarabe did not have any other choice but to make that request to Elena back there and ended up roping Elena’s team to rescue Reina too.

Shikarabe sounded really annoyed as he spoke.

“That rumour is true. It’s exactly because of it that I did not have any other choice but to rescue them. It was really ironic since Drankam was the one who sent them to the Seranthal building in the first place.”

Moreover, Reina was one of the young Hunters, and the one who took care of her mess was Shikarabe, a veteran Hunter in Drankam. There was no mistaking it that people in Drankam were trying to blame each other in their meeting and Shikarabe basically ran away from participating in that meeting. Although it gave Arabe a headache, Shikarabe had no plans to help him out.

Shikarabe’s face turned stern as he said.

“I know that there must be a special reason why they are in Drankam. But I never thought that they’re this troublesome. I always thought of them as a rich girl dreaming to be a Hunter and her bodyguard until now…”

Kurosawa lightly laughed.

“They even brought along a bodyguard in their Hunter job. So isn’t it obvious from the first glance that they’re troublesome people?”

“I did think that there must be a special reason for that. It’s just that I never thought they have enough power to threaten Drankam, you know. Do you think that people who normally have that much influence would be frequenting the wasteland?”

“Nope.”

“Exactly.”

Kurosawa remembered when Shikarabe escaped the Seranthal building with the other Hunters.

“Well, if they’re just simple beautiful maids, I have no complaints at all though.”

Shikarabe smiled as if he was poking fun at Kurosawa.

“If you’re really that interested, you can just go to the third floor and asked one of the girls to wear that outfit though.”

It might be because of the alcohol that Kurosawa replied back with something unexpected.

“No no no, you don’t get it. It’s also important to have the air around them saying that it’s their real job. Just a simple costume won’t be enough.”

“What the heck are you expecting from them? They’re even strong enough to kick and cut down mechanical monsters, you know.”

“The heck?”

“So basically, when we were inside the Seranthal building, you see…”

Shikarabe and Kurosawa continued enjoying their time in that pub while getting drunk.

Then Kurosawa, who was still more or less rather sober, checked how drunk Shikarabe was. And when the timing was right, he asked Shikarabe a question.

“By the way, about that boy who you told me, that Katsuya…”

Shikarabe immediately frowned.

“Can you just stop? You’ll ruin the mood.”

“Come on, don’t say that. I saw him back then, he is indeed a strong Hunter. It’s no surprise that he got appointed to be the leader and I can understand why you told me that he at least has the talent. But his commanding skill is rather questionable. I won’t say that the has no talent there, but at least, he’s not as good as you said he was.”

But then Shikarabe mockingly said.

“I don’t remember ever recognizing his commanding skill, although, I admit that he’s a talented Hunter. Of course, a Hunter also needs to be able to work in a team. But in the end, it’s usually just a motley crew of several Hunters. I don’t consider the ability to command such a group of Hunters as an essential skill.”

“Well, I know it’s weird for me to say this since I’m the one who brought this up, but that’s kinda true.”

“Right? It’s true that Katsuya is a talented Hunter, I admit that. But that’s his individual skill as a Hunter. Even if he can be a powerful Hunter, that does not mean he can take command of a group of Hunters.”

Kurosawa lightly frowned.

“Then, why was he the leader of that Drankam group?”

Shikarabe sighed, it was as if he was trying to convey his feelings about that subject by doing that. He then made a conflicted face as he said.

Shikarabe began talking about what was going on in Drankam as well as his own guesses while drinking the alcohol.

In the beginning, Drankam only dealt with stuff regarding its members’ activities as Hunters. But as it grew bigger and bigger, it started to turn into a company seeking profit, even to the point that making profit was one of the main aims of the whole gang at the moment.

The gang started to pay wages to its Hunters. In exchange for bringing profit to the gang with their Hunter activities, the Hunters were paid back with money. That in itself was not a bad thing, but some veterans in Drankam did not like that change.

The Hunter activities that the Drankam Hunters could do were limited for the sake of the growth and profit for the whole gang. The officers started to amass more power to the point that their request could be taken as a compulsory order. As such, more and more Hunters started to have a problem with the changes. The gang also started taking a cut from the rewards that its members received for all kinds of reasons, that cut then would be used for the sake of the whole gang. Eventually, some people started to feel that they did not get enough benefit from the gang compared to the amount of money that they paid to the gang.

The biggest advantage of weapons lent by Drankam to its Hunter was that the members could get their hands on powerful weapons with a relatively small amount of money, but at the same time, it also forced them to be dependent on the gang. If they went against the order of the Drankam officers and got themselves kicked out from the gang, they might have no other choice but to go to the wasteland unarmed. Thus, they would have to obey the orders from the higher officers even if they did not want to.

The rivalrous factions inside the Drankam other than the one between the veteran Hunters and the young Hunters, was the infighting between those who knew the old Drankam and those who did not.

One of the reasons why Katsuya was assigned to command the Drankam group was to pull him into the management's side. For officers who were not originally Hunters like Mizuha, it was a perfect chance to put a spotlight on Katsuya, who was one of the examples of the success of their newly proposed plan, and they could almost definitely use this chance to push their agenda even further.

And at the moment, the new faction was more prominent within Drankam. Mizuha's renewal plan with Katsuya as its spearhead had a good reception from the people in the inner wall, thus they received a lot of support from the City Management side.

Shikarabe explained all kinds of things regarding that subject while complaining to Kurosawa.

Kurosawa smiled bitterly.

"So it's the transformation phase in Drankam, huh?"

Shikarabe annoyedly said.

"If you just sweep everything under the rug saying that it's because the gang is in the process of change, it will never end, you know."

Kurosawa just smiled bitterly at Shikarabe who let out a big sigh. Shikarabe then made a serious face as he said to Kurosawa.

"So, what's your aim this time?"

"My aim?"

"I thought that you invited me here to gather up information about what's happening inside Drankam. And since you're willing to listen to me complaining, instead of paying it back with money, I gave you more information than I would usually do. But it doesn't seem that it's your aim, so, what exactly do you want to know?"

Kurosawa smiled wryly, it seemed that Shikarabe had completely read his intention. Then he also made a serious face and said.

“There’s something that’s bothering me, you see. So I want to know your opinion about it.”

“Oh, what is it about?”

“Back then when you were still fighting inside the Seranthal building, well, I’ll skip the beginning, but basically, I saw Katsuya fighting against the monsters. So, at that time, I felt something strange, something felt weird. I can’t really explain it, but it’s basically this different feeling that you get when you listen to a formal description of something compared to when you listen to a fiery description of the same exact thing. I felt like the other Hunters also got a little bit excited back then, enough to even make me worry if the other Hunters would jump out and follow Katsuya. Thankfully, no one did that, but still, it’s still bothering me even now. So, do you have any guess about that?”

“No, I have no guess at all, why do you ask me?”

“You were the one who took care of him, right? Did you ever have the same feeling too?”

Shikarabe tried to dig through his memories. But he could not remember anything that resembled what Kurosawa was saying. So he lightly shook his head and said.

“Sorry, but nope.”

“…I see.”

Kurosawa seemed a bit disappointed, it made Shikarabe even more curious.

“Are you really that bothered by it?”

“Yeah. I got myself excited when I saw it. For the sake of holding the command, I always train myself to stay calm and rational. It’s just like how you train your intuition. Honestly speaking, I’m pretty confident in my skill to stay calm, but that confidence is wavering from what happened today, you see. So I was thinking if someone with a good intuition like you have some kind of guess why that happened."

This time, Shikarabe was the one who seemed dejected.

"Intuition, huh…"

"What's wrong?"

"Honestly, recently my confidence in my intuition is also wavering, you see."

The whole of the 60th floor of the Seranthal building was a single room. The wall, floor, and ceiling of that room were all white. Yanagisawa stood in the middle of that room.

Nelia was standing near the elevator door inside that room while looking at Yanagisawa. She was ordered to just stay there and she could not move anything below her neck. Yanagisawa held the highest command over her cyborg body, so without his command, she would not be able to even lift her finger.

Nelia looked around the white room while glancing at Yanagisawa from time to time, she was making a guess of what kind of room it was while killing time.

[This room might be a special room to be used for augmented reality. I bet those people who can connect to the old-world domain can see all kinds of things inside this room. The reason why he brought me along is to protect him during close-range combat, so basically, he didn't know what he was going to find in this room. This place is some kind of old-world facility and he has some kind of business to take care of here. He's also the reason why the City Management sent people to secure this building… Ahhh, I really have no idea what's going on here, but I really want to know.]

Nelia continued thinking about the situation that she was in while lamenting about it at the same time.

Yanagisawa brought with him a device to help him connect to the old-world domain. He could see a beautiful girl standing in front of him. Of course, that girl had no corporeal body and she was using a similar attire as Alpha when Akira met her for the first time.

Yanagisawa frowned.

"Why are you naked?"

That girl replied apologetically.

"Unable to confirm the connection. The connection is important to verify individual identity. Please recheck your connection setting before trying again."

Yanagisawa showed his black card again and said to her.

"I can't connect to the old-world domain at the moment because of several reasons. Can't I use this device as a replacement? Is the right from this card not good enough?"

Yanagisawa tried all kinds of things to make contact with that girl. But that girl always returned the same reply.

"…Dammit."

Yanagisawa gave up and tore the connection device from his body. That girl immediately vanished from his views.

[…What to do now? Should I focus more on fixing my body first? Or should I bring someone else who can connect to the old-world domain to this place? If only I can connect myself to the old-world domain again, they should be able to recognize me. But if I bring someone else, that person might betray me down the road.]

Yanagisawa had a stern face when he returned to Nelia.

[My visitation application is only deleted from Seranthal's side. It properly got sent from the issuer side, why is that? Did Seranthal get reset when that abnormality occurred in Mihazono ruin? But if that's the case, why didn't they erase the record from the issuer too? Is it because that's not the cause?]

Yanagisawa still had a stern face as he entered the elevator. Nelia, who had already gotten her freedom to move around, was with him. The elevator's door then closed and they returned back to the first floor.

[In the first place, why did the security level in Mihazono ruin suddenly change? Is it because we dispatched several humanoid soldiers and tanks to ensure my safety? Did that trigger the security level in Mihazono ruin? If that's really the case, why didn't it happen sooner? Is it because they knew about me and someone forced the security level to change from the outside?]

Nelia smiled and suddenly asked Yanagisawa a question.

"You've stopped smiling, you know?"

Yanagisawa looked at Nelia with an expressionless face before he returned to his usual smile.

There were many reasons why the situation in Mihazono ruin suddenly changed, and one of those reasons was Akira.

On the first day Akira came to the Mihazono ruin, everything that happened inside and outside of the Seranthal building was properly recorded by Seranthal. During that time, Akira was able to fight back the monsters extremely effectively thanks to Alpha's support. This information was also sent when Seranthal sent an application for extra reinforcement.

The security of that ruin then analyzed that information and changed the threat level inside the ruin. It changed from simple thugs with weapons to organized trained soldiers. And when it was still in that state, some groups of Hunters came to Mihazono ruin.

The rest was just a domino effect. That group of Hunters who arrived in the Mihazono ruin was assumed to be invading the ruin, so the ruin security sent drones to drive them off. But in response to that, the Hunters sent tanks and humanoid soldiers. So the security sent stronger drones to fight them back, then this cycle continued and caused a large scale change inside Mihazono ruin.

So basically, it was a chain of events that brought about an unexpected result. That was all there was to it.

Akira stood in front of the huge building that was embedded into the wall of Kugamayama city. The tall building and the strong wall reflected the economical prowess of the city that maintained them.

There were branch shops of all kinds of companies that were doing business inside the city as well as Hunter Office's facilities. Some of the people inside that building were the people from the upper district. That building was the goal of those who wanted to reach success in the city, the object of the admiration of those people who wanted to be rich, as well as the monument that reminded everyone of the city's powerful influence and strength.

Akira looked up to that building. But in his eyes, there were no sparkles like how those people who wanted to reach success looked at that building, nor the strong will to reach that place, nor the admiration for that place.

Alpha then warned Akira.

"Akira, stop smiling. You look embarrassing."

"Whoops!"

Akira tried to gather himself together. But even so, he still could not completely hide his jovial mood. He still had a big smile on his face, embarrassingly so.

Akira got another invitation from Shiori for a meal. It was an invitation to convey her thanks after saving Reina in Mihazono ruin.

As he remembered what happened last time, Akira completely dropped his guard and immediately accepted the invitation.

Alpha saw Akira did not change much and sighed.

“If you really like the meal in that restaurant that much, you can just go there with your own money from time to time, you know.”

Akira did not reply immediately, but after some thinking, he answered back with a rather heavy tone.

“…As I thought, that would be a no. I don’t feel like going there if I have to pay for it with my own money no matter what…”

When he thought about how much those meals would cost, with his current perception of money, Akira could not allow himself to spend that much money. This time too, he only accepted Shiori’s invitation after making sure that Shiori would be paying. Even for Akira who preferred food more than women, he had no wish to spend that much money on food.

In reality, the current Akira would be able to easily pay that much money if he reduced his expenditure on his expendables and equipment. But those expenses were for the sake of his safety, they were basically his lifeline. Akira kept reminding himself of that while fighting back the temptation.

Alpha smiled wryly and said.

“Well, in that case, let’s hurry up before it’s too late to enjoy this opportunity.”

“You’re right!”

Akira walked happily as he entered that huge building.

Just like last time, Akira left his rifles at the reception desk. The interior of that restaurant was still as luxurious as before, Akira's augmented suit looked so out of place there. But since half of the customers were also Hunters, Akira did not stick out. This was also because of the location of that restaurant and the type of customers it usually served.

The server guided Akira to his table, but when he arrived, he was very much surprised. Akira thought that Shiori would be alone, just like last time. But this time, Kanae and Reina were also present.

Kanae lightly waved at Akira and said.

"Yo there!! We meet again!!"

Akira looked at Kanae and frowned. Shiori and Reina were wearing high-class suits suitable for visiting that luxurious restaurant. But Kanae was using her usual maid outfit, it would not be strange if someone mistook her as another server of that restaurant.

[…Is this… Normal? Is it just like me who came in this augmented suit? No, wait, but Shiori is using a suit while the servers didn't seem to be bothered by that maid outfit… I guess it's just me, huh?]

Akira thought that his common sense might be wrong, but then he thought that it was not like he could do anything about it, so he just shook it off and proceeded to sit on the chair that the server guided him to.

Shiori and Reina saw Akira's reaction and sighed. Reina then said to Kanae.

"Kanae, can you do something about that outfit of yours?"

Kanae smiled.

"Nope. It's important for me to keep using this maid outfit for the sake of protecting Milady, and Akira is still using his augmented suit there, so it's not that much different from that."

To be honest, Akira did not want to be treated the same as Kanae, but since he was there on their dime, he stopped himself from protesting.

Shiori then tried to change the mood as she said to Akira.

“Akira-sama, thank you for saving Milady the other day. As I promised, I’ll be paying for your meal today, so please, there’s no need to hold yourself back.”

Akira answered back happily.

“Thank you for that, well then, let’s not wait-“

As Akira browsed the menu, he remembered something and asked Shiori.

“…But if this is a gratitude for what happened in the Seranthal building, shouldn’t you invite Elena-san and the other Hunters too?”

“For their case, we have given their team, including you, extra reward as our thanks. Since it also includes the money from Drankam, the reward will take some time to process, but I hope that you’ll find the amount satisfying. As for today’s meal, this is my thanks for accepting a personal request from me back then.”

“Wait, I did?”

“You did take my request to buy me 5 seconds.”

“Oh, that one, huh. I see. If this meal is the reward for that, I’m really glad I pushed myself back then. Well then, if that’s the case, I won’t be holding back.”

Akira bowed lightly, for which Shiori replied with a smile.

Akira then started deciding on what to order from the menu. Just like last time, he could not imagine the kind of dishes simply from the names written on that menu. After trying his best for some time, just like last time, he decided to pick that day’s special course.

Since Akira could not decide on anything, when Alpha saw him pick the ‘default’ choice, she pointed at the menu and spoke to him.

“She did say not to hold back, so how about picking something else randomly?”

“No thanks. The dish that you’re pointing at has this strange name that sounds like a curse chant from the western district. What exactly would come out if I actually ordered this?”

Alpha jokingly replied.

“Hmm, if you chant this name in the western district, it feels like it might summon fire or something. So I’m sure it would be something red and spicy.”

“It doesn’t really matter, I’ll pick the recommended course from the restaurant, I’m sure you can’t ever go wrong with that one. There’s no need to experiment with this precious chance, after all, it’ll only needlessly add the risk that I would regret it later.”

“Oh my, that’s not something I expected from a Hunter who always risks their life in their job though.”

“I already had my fill taking risks only for my Hunter job.”

Alpha smiled mischievously.

“Well, now that you mention it, that’s true. It’s a good thing to be careful. If it’s possible, I want you to be this cautious all the time.”

Akira deliberately ignored Alpha and closed the menu.

After they placed their order, they started talking to each other while waiting for their meals to arrive. Akira was listening closely to Shiori’s explanation about the current state of the Seranthal building.

“I see, so that’s what’s happening in the Seranthal building right now, huh. But even if they secured the first floor, the upper floors are still filled with monsters, right? I wonder if they're going to be alright."

"From what I heard, it seemed that someone from the City Management was able to make a deal with the manager of Seranthal building and they're using some of the building's facilities to bolster their defence."

Akira seemed slightly surprised by it.

"A deal with the manager of Seranthal building? Do you mean that Seranthal A.I? That's amazing. If the city had someone that amazing, they could have sent them in sooner and we wouldn't have had to go through all of that."

"I agree."

Shiori nodded and showed her total agreement with Akira.

Not too long after that, the meals arrived on their table. Akira looked delightedly at the food lining in front of him, he then happily started eating.

In the middle of that, Kanae suddenly asked Akira.

"By the way, I heard that you fought Ane-san evenly though, is that true?"

It might be because Akira was fully focused on enjoying his food that he could not remember something like that, so he tilted his head and asked.

"I did?"

"Eh? But you fought Ane-san before, right?"

Akira's fight against the relic thieves in the Kuzusuhara ruin was a secret between Akira and the City Management.

So Kanae thought that Akira was playing dumb because of that, but looking at his expression, she realized that he was being serious. So she then asked in a roundabout way as not to infringe on that secrecy.

"I'm talking about that thing in that place, you know?"

“No no no, I remember that I fought Shiori, but I don’t think I fought evenly.”

“Is that so? But Ane-san said so though.”

“I bet it’s just the difference in our opinion. If you ask me, I was the one on the receiving end. At that time, Shiori had to fight me, while at the same time, she couldn’t afford to kill me. Without that limitation, I’m sure she could have killed me. So for me, I don’t think I fought her evenly.”

“Is that so? I see.”

Kanae checked Akira’s expression. It seemed that he was being honest there. As a matter of fact, Akira was indeed being honest.

[This is pretty amazing if he’s trying to play dumb here. If he’s really someone strong, normally, strong people would exude an aura of confidence, but I don’t feel anything like that from him. So is it like it’s really because he’s not that strong?]

Akira did not give off an aura that Shiori and people who were as strong as her usually gave off. And he himself also said that he was not that strong.

Kanae then glanced at Shiori, who was eating her meal with a composed expression. It seemed that she was not bothered by what Akira just said. Judging from how she was reacting, it seemed that Shiori agreed with him.

Kanae then thought that Akira might be really someone not that strong and lost interest in him. If he was just another strong young Hunter, there were many other young Hunters like him in the eastern district, so it did not interest Kanae at all.

Kanae then lightly said to Akira with the tone that she usually used when talking to people who were stronger than average but not by much.

“Well, but even so, you were able to fight against Ane-san and it’s pretty impressive for someone of your age. So I think you can be more confident, you know? Yep, you’re pretty strong.”

Kanae who had lost interest in Akira was about to end their conversation there, but Reina who had not lost her interest continued the conversation.

“…What should I do to become that strong?”

Reina was asking with a serious tone, it sounded as if she was desperate.

The other 3 turned their attention towards Reina. Akira seemed to be at loss on what to say, Kanae was a bit surprised, and Shiori looked rather worried, she somehow had a bad feeling about what would happen next.

Shiori then tried to be considerate as she said to Reina.

“Milady. As I said, something like that is only attainable with hard work and-“

“I’m sorry, Shiori. I’m not asking you, I’m asking Akira.”

“…My apologies.”

It seemed that Reina would not listen to her no matter what she said, so Shiori apologized for rudely interjecting and did not say anything more.

Reina, Shiori, and Kanae turned their attention to Akira, who was rather confused by that heavy mood emanating from Reina and Shiori. But since it seemed that he had no other choice but to answer that question, he tried to think of an answer on his own.

“…Well, if you’re not asking about what’s the meaning of strength or what is inner strength or anything philosophical like that, and if you’re referring to simple fighting power, I would say equipment and training. If I have to pick one, it would be equipment.”

Kanae seemed to disagree with Akira’s answer.

“Whoah, wait, so you’re on that side? Are you one of those stupid people who believe that they can be strong as long as they have powerful equipment?”

Akira flinched a bit, it seemed that Kanae hit the bull's eye. In his own opinion, he who had Alpha's support was basically the dream of those stupid people who put emphasis on equipment.

In reality, Akira had gone through a lot of training and multiple near-death experiences, which actually boosted his skill.

But judging from the difference between when he had Alpha's support and when he did not have it, plus how Akira evaluated himself lowly, Akira could not bring himself to deny what Kanae just said to him. So instead, he tried to make some excuses.

"I won't go that far, but if I have to pick between training and equipment, I do think that equipment is more important. I know that this is a rather extreme comparison, but I'm just saying that it's faster if you buy a rifle to fight monsters than to train for 100 years to kill monsters with bare hands."

Kanae's expression turned to a smile.

"No no no, Akira boy, you can't put too much trust on rifles. As in matter of fact, even when we already have rifles and tanks now, people are still polishing martial arts, right? If you get yourself an augmented suit designed for close combat, you should be able to fight monsters just fine. There are actually more Hunters than you think out there who don't use rifles to fight monsters, or at least, there are enough of them for corporations to make equipments for."

"In my opinion, I would rather shoot them from afar with a rifle than getting close to fight them. In the first place, when you bring up that talk about augmented suits designed for close combat, it already means that equipment is more important, right?"

"Akira boy, equipment alone is not enough. It's also important for you to train yourself and get yourself familiar with those equipments."

"That's exactly why I did say training and equipment, yes? Hunters can die anytime, so we can't afford to spend too much time training. I'm just saying that it’s better to get the best equipment you can afford to compensate for that. So why does that make me one of those stupid people?”

But then Kanae firmly replied.

“That’s because you picked a bad analogy there.”

“…I-Is that so? I see.”

Akira just accepted that answer although he was not 100% convinced by it. No matter what the subject was, it had some convincing power when you said it firmly after all. Even more so when it came to someone like Akira who had no confidence in his own knowledge and common sense.

Reina listened seriously to that conversation and thought about it, it did surprise her and made her unsure. After hesitating for a bit, she then said to Akira.

“…Uhh, but even if you say to get the best equipment that I can afford, I heard that it might cause me to mistake the power of my equipment as my own skill, get ahead of myself, and get myself killed instead though…”

Akira replied casually.

“If getting ahead of yourself only gets you killed, then you just need not get ahead of yourself. It’ll at least reduce the chance that you might get killed by something else other than getting ahead of yourself. So, if I have to choose, rather than lowering my equipment just so that I won’t get ahead of myself, I would rather get good equipment enough for me to get ahead of myself but be extra careful so I won’t actually get ahead of myself.”

It was something that was easy to say but difficult to practice. In the case of Akira, although he had Alpha’s support which was great ‘equipment’, he got himself almost killed several times, which was why it was easy for him to not get ahead of himself.

Reina then asked another question.

“…There are a lot of stupid people like what Kanae said, they get ahead of themselves just because they have powerful equipment, so, what’s your opinion about them?”

“…Hmmm, even if you ask me so…”

“Let’s say that you get your hands on a powerful equipment and someone sees you using it, do you get bothered by how people would think of you? Or what’s your own opinion about yourself in that situation? Things like that.”

Reina asked with a serious face, she looked rather desperate as she was waiting for Akira’s answer.

Akira was a bit confused since he did not understand how Reina’s question connected to her expression, but since they were paying for his meal, Akira seriously thought about it first before replying.

“…I’ll be extra careful so no one would catch me off guard and try to attack me out of the blue?”

Hearing that answer, Reina was completely dumbfounded, Shiori was lightly surprised, while Kanae just smiled bitterly. Akira realized that he just gave a rather weird answer, so he tried to just let that slide as he focused back on his meal.

What Reina wanted to ask about was Akira’s opinion regarding those people, whether Akira felt disgusted, hatred, envy, jealousy, or anything like that. But his answer did not even touch that subject at all.

So in other words, Akira was simply saying that those things were irrelevant. His answer really hit Reina hard, it felt like he just indirectly gave a harsh critique to her who was always bothered by it.

While listening to that conversation, Shiori checked on Reina after Akira gave his answer while thinking about what to adjust in Reina’s equipment. She then said to Akira.

“In that case, Akira-sama. Let’s say that there’s someone who is against using high-level equipment that doesn’t match that person’s real skill and let’s say that you have to convince that person to do so, what would you say to that person?”

Reina immediately looked at Shiori, there was a trace of reproach in her gaze toward Shiori. But Shiori did not look back as she fixed her gaze at Akira.

Shiori had recommended Reina to renew her equipment several times in the past, but Reina always refused it.

In Drankam, Hunters were allowed to borrow equipment from the gang depending on their Hunter Ranks. The higher their Hunter Ranks, the better the equipment they could borrow. That was one of the reasons why the young Hunters in Drankam prioritized raising their Hunter Ranks.

Most of the equipment used by the young Hunters in Drankam were borrowed equipment. Only some of them were using their own equipment. Reina was no exception.

In contrast to that, most of the equipment used by the veteran Hunters were their own equipment. Of course, they could borrow equipment from Drankam too, but the available equipment for them to borrow with their Hunter Ranks were mostly weaker than what they already had.

This basically stemmed from that program to give preferential treatment for the young Hunters. Since they raised the quality of the equipment available to borrow for low ranking Hunters, the high ranking equipment did not get much attention and was left with rather low-quality equipment. Thanks to that, the quality of the available equipment leaned toward the low ranking young Hunters. It was also in order to increase the survivability rate of the young Hunters as this policy did produce results.

In the long run, it would allow more Hunters to gather more experience. It was a good thing for the gang. But that was also enough to earn some grudge from the veteran Hunters as they mocked those young Hunters as stupid people who mistook the power of their equipments as their own skill.

Reina was bothered by that kind of thing. It was because she was in a position where she could get better equipments if she wanted to.

But even so, Shiori still recommended Reina to get better equipment. There was no problem with getting better equipment on her own. And by getting better equipment with money, she would be seen as a fool who had nothing other than her equipment not only by the veteran Hunters but also by the other young Hunters and Katsuya's faction.

Although Shiori asked that question casually, there was a sense of seriousness leaking behind it, and it made Akira a bit confused. But still, since he was there because they paid for the meals, Akira seriously thought about it before giving his answer.

He casually said.

"I won't even try to do that."

Shiori was surprised.

"It's not about whether you'll try or not, it's more about what would you say to that person if you have to try to convince that person…"

"This is only my guess, but I'm sure that person has his own reason not to do that. For example, that person might not be buying better equipment because of money. Maybe he is able to purchase better equipment anytime he wants. Then, he must not be doing so out of a certain personal reason, it might be because of some kind of value that he sticks to, or that if he does, then it would be completely out of his selfishness. I'm sure he doesn't want to buy better equipments because of reasons like that, right? After all, although he can do his job much more safely by getting better equipment, he's not doing that out of his own volition, right? So, to put it simply, he must be risking his life out of his pride or something, he must be ready to die when he forces his pride like that. Even if for the other people, that reason is just simply ridiculous or foolish, for him, that reason must be important enough for him to just ignore that fact and push with his own selfishness and pride. So for someone who has resolved that much, I'm sure it would be useless no matter how much a stranger like me tries to reproach him. So I don’t think I have any chance to convince that person. I can also understand the strength of those people who have resolved themselves, that’s why, since even trying would be meaningless, so I would have given up right from the start.”

After Akira said that, he glanced at Shiori to check if he said anything strange again or not. Kanae was just smiling mischievously. Shiori was also smiling, it was near impossible to read what she was thinking behind that smile. While Reina looked down with a stern face.

Akira, who sensed how awkward the mood got, thought that he might have said something strange again.

“…Well. If I have to at least try even though I know that it would be completely useless, so that I can say that I’ve tried, then I would at least speak up about it…”

Shiori lightly nodded while smiling.

“Thank you very much for your valuable opinion.”

Akira got flustered a bit.

“…Uhh, well, I’m sorry that I only gave you an answer that might not be useful at all…”

“Please don’t be, it’s a very valuable opinion.”

Shiori was honestly smiling right from the bottom of her heart.

Akira still felt slightly awkward as he returned to his meal. Shiori and Kanae also started eating again, but Reina was still looking down for some time before she started eating too.

After that, they continued enjoying their meals while talking to each other. Although he was a bit bothered by how Reina was reacting, since Kanae and Shiori did not say anything, Akira decided not to say anything too.

As they continued enjoying their meal and slowly reaching the end, Reina started to show some changes. She raised her head and seemed to be seriously thinking about something as hesitation slowly erased from her expression.

When Akira finished his meal and drank his coffee, Reina's expression had already changed to a more resolved one.

After they were done, Akira deeply bowed to Shiori.

"Thank you very much for the meal. It was a great meal, thank you again."

Shiori smiled at Akira and replied.

"Likewise, thank you very much. If the chance presents itself again, I hope that you would accept my invitation."

Akira smiled bitterly.

"Of course… But if it's possible, I hope it won't be after doing something as risky as this the next time."

"I can't agree more."

Shiori was smiling happily when she said that.

Akira then left that building and stretched out his body.

"Well well well, that was really great. I sure want to go to that restaurant again, I wonder how long will it be for the next time though."

Seeing how Akira sounded a bit sad, Alpha smiled at him and said.

"You can go to that restaurant with your own money next time, you know?"

"Stop it, don't try to tempt me like that. I might really end up going there with my own money if you do that."

“It would be troublesome for me if you don’t grow up to be a powerful Hunter who thinks that amount of money is nothing but a spare change, you know. Although I think it’ll take some time until you can do that, let’s be patient and keep giving our best, okay?”

“I know, so please wait patiently for me until I can be that strong.”

Akira replied with an uppity tone, he then walked back home while chatting with Alpha.

While on the other hand, Reina, Shiori, and Kanae were still inside the restaurant. They were sitting at their table, the plates and coffee cups were already cleaned off. They were just sitting in their respective seats while waiting.

Kanae looked rather bored. Shiori waited silently without saying anything. Both of them were waiting for Reina to finish reorganizing her feelings.

After listening to Akira’s answer, she asked herself some questions and came up with a conclusion.

[Akira did say that I’m risking my life only out of my selfishness, that I must have a reason that I think is important enough to do so, and that he won’t even try to convince me since I must have resolved myself… But that’s not true, I don’t have that kind of resolve. That’s why, it’s just out of my selfishness, nothing more. It’s out of my vain pride, I endangered myself as well as Shiori and Kanae because of something like that. I’ll be able to do better if I get better equipment. I didn’t even notice that although it was something so simple that those stupid Hunters always say.]

Reina then looked at Kanae and Shiori, she made her resolve and said.

“Shiori, Kanae, I’m really sorry about everything until now.”

Reina then asked Shiori with a serious face.

“Shiori, I know that I’ve always refused it, but can you please help me renew my equipment? If it’s possible, I want to get the best equipment available. I don’t mind what others might say of me.”

Shiori smiled happily.

“Of course, you can count on me, Milady.”

With seriousness still on her face, Reina turned to Kanae and said.

“Kanae, I’ll be counting on you to protect me.”

Kanae was smiling like usual.

“Sure, that’s my job in the first place after all.”

Reina then continued.

“And also, if I may, I want both of you to train me so that I’ll become skilled enough to use the equipment that I’ll be using from here and on, and so that others will not think that I’m fully reliant on my equipment.”

Kanae gave a challenging smile.

“Milady, are you sure you want to do that? It’ll be hard training, you know?”

“I’ve decided to do it.”

Reina’s resolve was obvious from her tone.

So Kanae smiled back at her and said.

“Ohh, that’s great then!! It seems that Milady will finally graduate from being a total amateur! I had a lot of thoughts about it when Milady decided to challenge a dangerous place without proper skill and equipment and was fully relying on Milady’s bodyguard. But this time, Milady will finally be able to start as a proper beginner.”

Shiori then joined in, she had a serious expression as she said.

“Well then, in that case, first I’ll remove all the scheduled training in Drankam. From here, Milady will be training with both of us. Since it won’t be an easy training, I hope that Milady is ready… And also, Kanae!! Watch your mouth!!”

Shiori glared at Kanae, but Kanae just glanced at her and ignored it.

Reina thought of what lied in front of her and repeated her questions and answers inside her head.

[What should I do to become stronger? It’s simple, I just need to decide to be strong and put real effort into becoming stronger. I wasn’t even doing that until now, but this time, I’ll properly become stronger!!]

Reina made her resolve to attain strength with her own effort.

Silavin: Congrats Reina. Finally, we see some character progression on her end.

Akira was standing inside a white space. Every time he got such a dream, he felt that he had seen a similar dream before as well, but he always forgot about it when he woke up, together with everything that happened inside that dream.

Akira's consciousness was still hazy as he saw 2 Alphas talking to each other.

The Alpha near Akira sounded a bit annoyed when she said.

"Couldn't you at least do something about it?"

The Alpha further away from Akira casually replied.

"Unlike you, I don't have the proper permission. That's why I can't do much external interference to guide his action. To be honest, since you have the proper permission, I was hoping that you would have done something about it from your side."

"It's not that easy on my side, you know."

“Is that so?”

“Yes, it is.”

Both Alphas were staring at each other without saying anything for some time. The closer Alpha then lightly sighed.

“Well, it doesn’t really matter now, so, why did you suddenly change your original plan?”

“Originally, I was planning to lessen the number of people around the subject in order to increase the effectiveness of my guidance, and when someone around the subject gets fatally wounded, it would affect the psychic of the subject greatly to further push him to prefer to work alone. However, considering how the special characteristic of the subject affects the result, I decided that it was impossible to proceed with the original plan to make the subject less conspicuous and act more separated from the other Hunters. As such, I changed my plan which is basically the opposite of my original plan.”

“Are you sure that will be okay?”

“This is basically an experiment, whether it would work or not, this will give good data that will also be useful for you.”

“I see. You can just do anything you want as long as you don’t interrupt me. After all, it would be a disaster if we both failed because of that.”

“I can’t agree more with you.”

Akira’s consciousness started to fade. The world was blanketed in darkness again as his dream came to an end. As Akira was pulled out from that dream with a hazy mind, he saw the silhouette of someone that he might recognize. It might be just his imagination, but he noticed that person was glaring at him.

Akira then opened his eyes, Alpha welcomed him with a smile.

“Good morning, Akira.”

“Yeah, good morning to you too…”

Akira pulled his body up from his bed and looked at Alpha as if there was something that was bothering him. Alpha frowned and asked.

“What’s wrong?”

“…No, it’s nothing, it’s just that I feel like I saw you in my dream…”

“Oh my, that’s an honour.”

“But I feel like there were multiple Alphas…”

Alpha smiled mischievously.

“Oh my, you need more than one of me? Should I multiply myself?”

Alpha enhanced Akira’s vision and produced multiple images of herself inside Akira’s room. The overwhelmingly many Alphas inside Akira’s vision were all wearing different attires and were smiling at him.

Akira’s face turned to an obvious annoyance.

“Stop it, one is more than enough.”

“Is that so? Well, either way, I do feel happy if one is enough.”

Akira’s vision returned back to normal. He looked obviously unhappy with what Alpha did there, but Alpha just ignored it as she was smiling like usual.

After what happened, Akira completely forgot the thing that was bothering him just now.

__*__*__*__

3 Hunters were walking in the slum of Kugamayama city. Although their equipment varied from each other, they did not look weird together. They did not look like former Hunters, and they did not look exceptionally strong either. They looked like one of those common Hunters in the eastern district. They were Colbert, Hazawa and Revin. After they grabbed their respective equipment, they headed to the slum city instead of the wasteland.

Revin looked rather confused and asked Colbert a question.

“So, still how long exactly do I need to roam around this area?”

Colbert replied.

“Just calm down. There are steps to take for this kind of thing, you can’t just rush it. I only accompanied you here because you asked me, you know? I’m here to help you handle those pain in the neck negotiations for you. So if things go well, you’ll have to treat me tonight, you hear me?”

Revin seemed a bit overwhelmed by that response.

“Alright alright, I get it already. But can you at least tell me where are we going to or what are we actually looking for? If things go well, I’ll treat you to anything you want, whether it’s food, or beer, or girls. But just so you know, I don’t have the money to treat you if my request and your plan don’t go well. I’m sure you at least know that much. So I’m really counting on you, okay?”

Colbert just laughed.

“Yeah, I know. Even for me, I actually don’t want to go to someone that I know is a debt collector. But of course, it’s a completely different case if the time has come.”

Colbert’s smile was also saying that there would not be any mercy when the time came. Revin’s face twitched.

Hazawa who listened to that sounded a bit confused as he threw a question to Revin.

“Wait, isn’t it that 400,000 Aurum debt that Katsuragi guy already took over from you? So like, Colbert has nothing to do with it anymore, right? In the first place, if it’s only 400,000 Aurum, you should be able to earn that much money in no time, so, you still haven’t repaid that, huh?”

But Revin hesitantly replied.

“…Uhh, it’s 4,000,000 Aurum.”

“Hah?”

“…I borrowed 2,000,000 Aurum from the company where Colbert is working.”

Hazawa looked at Revin with both exasperation and amazement. Colbert just smiled wryly. Revin awkwardly looked away as not to make any eye contact. Hazawa then said to Revin.

“What in the world are you doing?”

Hazawa’s question was completely justified, but Revin replied back with a rather harsh tone.

“Even I did not mean it to turn like this, you know!”

Revin then started explaining to Hazawa who did not understand what was going on.

When Katsuragi took over that 400,000 Aurum debt from him, Revin thought that he did check the content of the contract. The content of the contract seemed to be fine, it had a low interest and no deadline stated. Revin thought that there must be some kind of string that was attached to it, but after checking the content closely, he did not find anything like that.

To put it simply, until he finished his payment, Revin just needed to prioritize Katsuragi’s place when he wanted to buy ammo or medicines as well as when he wanted to sell old-world relics, and it was not compulsory even. As long as he prioritized Katsuragi’s shop, Katsuragi would put that into consideration for the deadline and the interest rate of his debt. That was basically the content of his contract.

The rest were just common debt agreements intended for Hunters. Things like he would not try to run to another city, or that he would properly go out to the wasteland to earn money and not just stay inside the city, or the ruins that he was allowed to go to look for relics. Basically, these conditions were to make sure that the Hunter would not try to run away from his or her debt.

When Revin made that contract with Katsuragi, he said nicely to Revin that he had no plans to get rich through debt and interest, so he really asked Revin to prioritize coming to his shop until that debt was repaid.

Revin thought that the reason Katsuragi lent him money was simply to promote Katsuragi's shop, that was why Revin was fully convinced by that and signed the contract.

The real problem happened when Revin was about to go out to the wasteland again. Katsuragi used the contract to designate a certain ruin for him to gather relics.

But that ruin that Katsuragi designated was a bit outside the capability of Revin's equipment. Revin was somehow able to get away using his equipment as an excuse, but then Katsuragi recommended Revin to buy some better equipment.

Katsuragi then even told Revin that it would only cause him trouble if Revin got killed, so he was willing to postpone the payment until later. Katsuragi was somehow able to talk his way to convince Revin. After all, Revin himself always wanted to get better equipment too, so he ended up taking that offer.

So then, Revin bought some new equipment, headed to the ruin, returned back with relics, and sold them to Katsuragi. The money that he made that day all went to repay his debt, but since the new equipment that Revin bought was more expensive than what he had expected, the money that he made that day was not able to make a dent in his debt.

The cycle continued as Revin bought medicines and ammo from Katsuragi, went to the ruin that Katsuragi designated, and sold the relics that he gathered to Katsuragi. His debt to Katsuragi kept increasing each time. The ruins that Katsuragi designated were ruins that the current Revin could not explore without buying better equipment and a lot of ammo, while at the same time, as long as he had the equipment that Katsuragi recommended, it was almost guaranteed that he would be able to return back alive.

Revin basically had no other choice but to buy the equipment that Katsuragi recommended to him. If he ignored the ruin designation from Katsuragi, due to the contract, Katsuragi had the right to refuse to make a compromise on the interest and the deadline of his debt. His equipment might end up getting confiscated and he had to go out to the wasteland unarmed to earn money to repay his debt.

Revin did try to sell the relics that he gathered to another place once. But unfortunately, Katsuragi found out about it and a part of his debt contract was sold to a company. There were many people who preyed on Hunters with debts. The reason why Revin's debt contract ended up getting sold to the company where Colbert was working was not out of simple luck, it was because Revin desperately asked Colbert to help him out. But of course, in exchange for that favour, Revin had to carry even more debt.

Revin hung his head low as he said to Hazawa.

"At the moment, I'm basically just a machine that buys equipment from Katsuragi and sells all the relics that I gather to that same Katsuragi. It would be really bad if this keeps going on."

Colbert lightly laughed and said.

"But thanks to that, you get better equipment and become stronger by the day, isn't it? Although it did not change the fact that he tricked you, it was not a bad contract, you know? It's you we're talking about here, even if you have some money, I bet you'll just spend it on booze and women. I'm not sure that you can save enough money to buy equipments yourself."

Revin immediately raised his tone and rebutted.

"Like hell I would just let myself continue and get myself drowned in debt!! The contract even limited me to sell my relics only to Katsuragi, you know!

I bet he only pays me the minimum amount of money close to the lowest market price!! That's why I need to do something about this fast!!"

After shouting out his feelings, Revin returned to himself, he then put both of his hands on his head and sighed. No matter how much he complained, the current situation would not change. He needed to do something about it.

Hazawa told himself to never be someone like Revin as he turned to Colbert.

"So then, Colbert, why are we here? We've been wandering aimlessly around this area, it's not like you're planning to rob a shop, right? If that's the case, I'll take my leave here, you know."

"Well, just be patient and wait for a bit. It's not like I've been spending my time without going outside the city for nothing. I'm pretty sure my plan is not that bad."

Colbert had a trauma when he was about to get killed by a monster out in the wasteland, that was why he was taking a side job from money lending companies so that he did not have to go out to the wasteland. He must be pretty knowledgeable on how to earn money as a Hunter without going out too much to the wasteland.

After wandering in the slum city for a bit more, they finally arrived at their destination. It was a part of the slum city that was under Sheryl's gang territory.

A young boy from Sheryl's gang had opened a street stand here. It was not a rare thing for slum city residents to pick up random things that seemed to be sellable and open a street stand to sell them. Colbert was actually looking for that street stall. Colbert, Revin and Hazawa then approached that stand and browsed the goods there.

The young boy who was waiting at the stand looked at them and tried to offer the goods he was selling.

"Come come!! We have old-world relics here!!"

Revin scanned those goods and said.

“…The heck? You call these things old-world relics? I don’t know where you got them, but aren’t they just junks? So stop with lies, will you?”

That young boy pouted.

“I’m not lying!! We carried them back from an old-world ruin ourselves!!”

“Huh? Which ruin? Go ahead and tell me the name of the ruin if you really carried them back from an old-world ruin yourself.”

That boy flinched and could not say anything back. Revin smirked mockingly at that boy.

That young boy then asked another young boy who was waiting in the stand with him.

“…Hey, what was the name of that ruin again?”

Unlike the boy who was responsible for serving the customers, the other boy had a rifle that seemed to be properly maintained. He seemed to be the one responsible for guarding the stall. That boy then replied.

“If I’m not mistaken, it was Higaraka Residence Ruin.”

The boy responsible for serving the customers then proudly said to Colbert and his friends.

“See there! It’s really from a ruin!! The Higaraka Residence Ruin!!”

But then Revin smiled mockingly and said.

“Higaraka Residence Ruin is already exhausted of any valuable relics not too long ago, Hunters already stopped going to that ruin for gathering relics. So any relics left there are just cheap relics, they are basically junks.”

The young boy pouted again.

“But they’re still old-world relics, you know?! Relics are relics!!… If you don’t plan to buy anything, then you can just go somewhere else!!”

That young boy then remembered that it was not a good idea to be too harsh on Hunters, which might cause them to get angry, so he tried to calm himself down.

Colbert saw that and tried to calm Revin.

“Whoah there, just calm down. Let’s properly examine these relics first. We might find something valuable, you know?”

They then took a close look at the goods displayed there. But in the end, all of them were cheap relics. None of them interested Colbert and his friends. So Colbert asked that young boy.

“They really are nothing but cheap relics though. Are you hiding the expensive relics somewhere?”

“…We’re not selling those kinds of relics here. After all, someone might steal them if we put them here. And even if we have them, we have no plans to sell them to anyone but good customers. Like hell we’ll show them to someone who only came here to mock us.”

“I see.”

Colbert locked his gaze at that young boy, who felt a bit pressured and shrunk back.

After confirming that young boy’s reaction, Colbert smiled at him and said.

“How much is the total if I want to buy all the relics here?”

“Eh?!”

That young boy seemed confused as he looked at Colbert and the relics in his stand. He then looked at the other boy, so the other boy answered Colbert’s question in his place.

“It’s about 8,000 Aurum.”

“Deal. Here.”

Colbert handed over 10,000 Aurum to the boy in front of him, that boy got even more confused than before as he received the money. Colbert then said with a confident smile.

“You can keep the change. So there, I’m a good customer now, yes?”

That boy got so flustered, so the other boy who saw that just sighed and said to Colbert.

“Alright, come over here. But before that, make sure you take the relics that you just bought, okay? I don’t care if you want to throw them away, but don’t do that here. No good customers throw away the goods that they just bought in the same shop where they bought them.”

Colbert lightly laughed.

“Roger that, ah, before that, what is your name?”

Tiol answered back with a rather prickly tone.

He guided Colbert and his friends through the slum city. In the middle of that, Colbert asked Tiol a question.

“By the way, why did you say that back there?”

Tiol thought for a bit before answering.

“I know that you didn’t buy those relics because you wanted them, right? I just thought that you would just throw them away since you don’t need them and that would be troublesome for us if you do that again and again. Moreover, we were the ones who offered them to you, so if we looked at you with an unpleasant look although you properly paid, and took the relics that you bought and threw here, won’t that make you angry?”

Colbert smiled.

“Now that you mention it, that’s true. Did you think of that yourself?”

“No, it was Boss’ order.”

“I see. But if you just ignore that order and keep the relics that we throw away for yourself, you might get some money out of it, right? I’m sure that’s not a small amount of money to you, right?”

Tiol’s face turned stern.

“I don’t want to disobey Boss’ order and get myself kicked out from the gang. So stop spouting nonsense.”

“Oh, sorry about that.”

While walking behind Tiol, Colbert then thought.

[It seems that the boss has a good grip on the gang, his position in the gang is rather strong.]

Colbert smiled daringly, he was able to confirm the situation in Tiol’s gang.

They walked past through slum city’s alleys and stopped near the back door of a relatively big building.

Tiol knocked on the back door of that building and called someone from the inside to open the door since he brought customers with him.

After Tiol went in first, he then invited Colbert and his friends to get in too. Colbert immediately went into that building, but Hazawa and Revin looked at each other and were hesitating from going in.

The old-world ruins were of course dangerous places, but the inside of an unknown building smacked in the middle of the slum city was also a dangerous place in a different meaning. Inside, they might have to fight other people instead of monsters. Monsters were indeed dangerous, but humans were dangerous enough on their own.

Colbert, who went inside first, called Revin and Hazawa.

“What are you waiting for? Come in. I’ve paid the entrance fees, so don’t get cold feet here. Leaving Hazawa aside, Revin, what are you planning to do with your debt if you just return back without doing anything here?”

Revin, who was reminded of his debt, made his resolve and went inside that building too, Hazawa then followed behind him.

Tiol guided Colbert and his friends into that building. When they arrived in a relatively big hall, they could see tables and shelves covered in white sheets, and relics were displayed on them. There were small papers near those relics with prices written on them. The walls of that room were also covered with white sheets as well as the ceilings, the room was basically covered in white.

Sheryl was standing in the middle of that room, she was wearing the dress that she received from Akira and got refitted later. Although it greatly reduced its value as an old-world relic, that dress was refitted especially for Sheryl and it boosted Sheryl’s beauty a few folds.

Even some who did not know much about fashion could easily recognize that it was an expensive dress and Sheryl looked perfect in it, which was rare for anyone in the slum city. No one would question it if Sheryl introduced herself as someone from the inner wall. Revin and Hazawa were so surprised when they saw that young girl who was exuding a sense of high class.

Sheryl then stepped forward gracefully and welcomed them.

“Welcome, and thank you for visiting us.”

Colbert and his friends were charmed by Sheryl’s smile which increased her beauty even more.

Although Colbert did not notice, Sheryl was not alone, Akira was there too. He was hiding behind the white sheet that was hanging down from the ceiling. Sheryl was the one who asked Akira to watch as a guard.

Akira was keeping his eyes on Sheryl, who was welcoming the customers and Colbert and his friends who were charmed by her. Although Colbert was still able to more or less maintain his calmness, that was not the case for Hazawa and Revin.

As Sheryl proceeded to interact with them, Revin and Hazawa became more and more attracted to her. Akira was a bit scared by that as he kept on observing the situation.

Akira remembered what happened back then in Higaraka residence ruin and asked Alpha a question.

“If I’m not mistaken, something similar also happened back in Higaraka Residence ruin, right?”

“Indeed. It was a Hunter by the name of Diel.”

“Right. He somehow got attracted to Sheryl and started blurting out information without realizing it, and he did not stop until Sheryl stopped him first.”

“She’s making full use of her ability to steer the conversation and give other kinds of signals with her expressions and body language. The way she speaks and the way she behaves are all calculated, I believe that she’s also checking how her conversing partner reacts to her and adapts to that. Sheryl is a beautiful girl and she is wearing a dress that elevates her image even more, although she’s doing this because it’s her business, I’m sure it’s not like she has any bad intentions. She’s definitely slowly but surely drawing people in.”

After listening to that explanation, Akira then asked further.

“By the way, just to be safe, does she do that to me too? Am I already charmed by Sheryl or something?”

From the outside, Akira’s action might be interpreted as such. He voluntarily became a supporter of Sheryl’s gang and he paid a lot of money for her dress. So Akira doubted if he was already charmed by Sheryl and always tried to keep her mood without even noticing it.

Alpha just smiled and replied.

“Don’t worry. It’s true that you’ve done a lot for Sheryl, but most of the time it’s out of your whim or because of your own interest. Or at least, to me, it’s not like you’re trying hard to make Sheryl happy or anything like that.”

To be more precise, it was the opposite, Sheryl was the one trying hard to keep Akira in a good mood. The difference in Sheryl and Akira’s social skills, as well as Akira’s chronic anti-social tendency, caused Sheryl’s advances to mostly end in vain.

Akira sounded relieved as he said.

“I see.”

But then Alpha suddenly smiled bewitchingly.

“By the way, just to let you know, I’m also doing my best to entice you here too, you know? That’s why, if you want me to do anything, just tell me anytime, okay? I can freely change my attire and body, if image only is enough for you, I can basically entertain you as much as you want.”

“…Sure, thanks.”

Akira looked away from Alpha’s gaze as if he was trying to hide his embarrassment.

Colbert and his friends were browsing the relics displayed in that room. Unlike the relics displayed in the street stall, the relics in that white room were indeed expensive relics. Colbert looked at the price written in the price tag and thought, according to his experience, they were priced a little bit higher than the usual market price.

Colbert then mumbled loudly as if he was letting Sheryl hear it.

“…They’re not that bad, but the price is just a bit too high.”

Sheryl’s smile did not waver at all as she replied.

“As I explained before, they’re just the initial price, I’m completely open for any bargain. Although, please direct all the bargain you want to make only to me.”

“I see, so you’re one of those people who write the price that you personally want to sell, huh. Well, but it’s okay, I have nothing to complain for now.”

The relics displayed there were actually relics that Sheryl received from another place, they were entrusted to her. The selling method was close to an auction, if the customer did not want to buy the relic with the written price, then he or she could just offer his or her own price. And if the supplier accepted that, then the deal would be made, and if it was not accepted, then the relics would still be left with their original price. So the customers could only either wait until the price was lowered or give up buying that particular relic.

In reality, Sheryl was just acting as if she had a lot of suppliers when her real suppliers were actually just Akira and Katsuragi, both of them just left their relics to Sheryl and let her do whatever she wanted to do to sell them.

The relics were basically composed of the relics that Akira did not sell to Katsuragi and some relics that she borrowed from Katsuragi to improve the look of the place. The price written on their price tags were basically the same price that Katsuragi would put if he sold them in his shop.

Although some of the relics were borrowed from Katsuragi, Katsuragi himself would still get some profit if someone bought them at the written price. While for Akira, he did not want to get involved in deciding the price at all.

The better the price that Sheryl could get, the more money she would receive and the more money she could repay to Akira. Thus, Sheryl was trying her best to increase the prices of the relics that she was selling.

The reason why Sheryl was doing an auction-like sale was simply because she did not know the market price of the relics. Although she did some research visiting some places, she was still a complete beginner in deciding the price. So she thought that if she made it like an auction, the price would eventually gravitate to the right price.

Colbert then asked Sheryl as if he was trying to investigate something.

“But still, as I thought, they’re more expensive than the usual market price. Won’t it be like no one would buy them at this price?”

Sheryl replied casually with her usual smile.

“That might as well be true. The suppliers might have no wish to sell them in the first place. They might have left it in this place as a temporary warehouse since the people who left them in our care can’t exactly keep them or sell them in a legitimate exchange centre. For example, those people with a huge debt who are closely monitored by their lenders and are in the middle of looking for another place to sell their relics. So if the relics are sold at that price, it would be a good thing for them, and if the relics don’t sell at all, then it would be fine for them too, and if someone actually tries to bargain with the price, it might give them good data to bring up for their negotiation with the normal exchange centres.”

Sheryl locked her gaze at Colbert while smiling and tried to probe for his reaction.

Colbert felt like Sheryl was peering directly into his inner heart, but he was able to somehow maintain his calm.

Sheryl was still smiling as she continued.

“I don’t understand the intention of the suppliers, but it doesn’t change my job to sell the goods that they left in my care as expensive as possible. If I try to lower the price, we would have to pay for the difference ourselves. Since that’s the situation that I’m in, I can’t give you a discount even if you try to ask me, you know?”

“That’s really unfortunate.”

Colbert smiled wryly as he replied back half-jokingly.

Revin and Hazawa were looking in Colbert's direction, their gazes indicated that they had something they wanted to say. Colbert noticed that, so he asked Sheryl to give him some space for a bit.

"Would it be okay if you leave us for a bit? There are a lot of things that we need to talk about you see, like the budget and stuff."

"Of course, please do call me if you need anything."

Sheryl excused herself and left them alone. Hazawa and Revin then came to Colbert.

Revin had a rather conflicted face as he said.

"Say, your plan, it is basically buying and reselling relics? Are you planning to buy relics here and sell them somewhere else at a better price?"

"Well, to put it simply, yes. You've been working as a Hunter for a long time, so I'm sure, unlike those amateurs, you can discern which relics are valuable relics, right?"

Revin seemed worried as he said.

“Even if you say so, it’s not like I have the money, you know? And I don’t know where to resell them either. In the first place, I’m contracted to sell all the relics that I have to Katsuragi. Although that guy is also the one who forces me to keep buying stuff from him.”

Colbert was still smiling like usual.

“Don’t worry, I have a plan for that. Your contract only forces you to sell the relics that you gathered from the old-world ruin to Katsuragi. So it doesn’t include the relics that you buy from another place.”

“I-is that really how it works?”

“Yeah. There were precedents in the Hunter Office. So it’s okay. And also, I know that you don’t have that much money. So just buy cheap relics, don’t aim for those technological and mechanical relics that the Hunter Office usually looks for. The price of those kinds of relics changes with the trend after all. Moreover, there are usually many hidden gems out there, some relics that are only worth 100 Aurum and look like junk from a glance can earn you 1,000,000 Aurum in a specialized shop if you’re lucky. So, we’re basically aiming for those hidden gems, you can think of this as a small gamble. Although it depends on your luck, if your ability to discern valuable relics is real, you should have good odds here. So it basically depends on your ability as a Hunter.”

“…I see, so it’s a gamble that depends on my ability as a Hunter, huh?”

“And also, if my information is correct, this shop just opened recently, so they might be selling the relics with a discount to attract customers. There’s also a chance that they don’t have a strict evaluation to decide the prices of the relics since they are inexperienced to do that yet. They might also sell some relics at a low price on purpose to show their customers that they might find some hidden gems in this place. It’s true that it’s still a gamble, but I think we have good odds in this gamble.”

Hazawa who was listening next to Revin nodded, it seemed that he was convinced by Colbert's explanation. He then said.

"I see, if we're lucky, Revin might be able to pay his debt in one go."

After listening to what Hazawa just said, Revin started checking the relics there seriously. Colbert who saw that just smiled bitterly.

"Well, I did pay the entrance money for you, so at least buy one thing before we leave this place. It would be meaningless if we go to a relic selling store after this if we don't have any relics to sell."

"Yeah, I know."

Revin replied with a serious tone without looking back at Colbert and Hazawa. He had his eyes fixed on the prices of the relics lined up on the white sheets in front of him. He seemed to be rather desperate.

Colbert and Hazawa looked at each other and smiled bitterly before joining Revin in looking for good relics.

They eventually decided on the relics that they wanted to buy and spent about 1,000,000 Aurum, half of it was paid with Colbert's money. Revin only picked some relics that cost him 100,000 Aurum in total.

The one that Hazawa picked was a box of trump cards, the cards were still inside the sealed container. Although it was an old-world ruin, it seemed unscathed. Its original selling price was 10,000 Aurum, a rather expensive price even for an old-world relic like that one.

The only reason why Hazawa bought it was because he did not want to leave that place without buying anything, but at the same time, he did not want to spend too much money there, and it would be stupid if the price of the relic that he bought there was less than the entrance fee.

Colbert then asked Sheryl.

"Is it okay if we pay through our Hunter ID?"

Sheryl smiled and replied.

“We do accept Hunter ID too. Other than that, we also accept cash, cards and money transfer. So, are you sure that you’re going to pay with Hunter ID?”

“Yes.”

“Very well. Please let me borrow your Hunter ID then.”

Colbert handed over his Hunter ID. Sheryl received it, used a terminal to read Colbert’s Hunter ID, and operated the terminal to complete the transaction. After that, she politely returned Colbert’s Hunter ID.

Colbert checked his own information terminal and checked his account to see if the payment properly went through. After confirming that there was no problem, he smiled lightly since he confirmed that he got the information he was looking for, but his expression immediately returned back to normal.

After they finished buying their relics, they then left that room. Tiol was waiting for them outside the room, he then guided Colbert and his friends back to the back door of that building. Not too long after they left that building, Tiol asked them a question.

“Let me ask you one more time, is there really any need for me to guide you back all the way to the main street?”

Colbert answered that question.

“Nah, it’s fine… Wait, on second thought, please do.”

“Alright.”

All of them then headed back to the main street. Hazawa found that reply a bit weird, so he questioned Colbert.

“It’s not like there’s any need for him to guide us back, no? Although we’re in the back alley of the slum city, I’m pretty sure none of them are stupid enough to attack a group of 3 Hunters, you know."

"It's fine, isn't it? It's a good thing to accept others' goodwill. It would be really bad if we get lost here after all. Not to mention, the other 2 Hunters in our group were even hesitating to go inside that big building."

Colbert was poking fun at Hazawa and Revin. Hazawa tried to defend himself.

"W-well, I was just being careful, you see. I'm someone who is really careful when it comes to something like that."

"Just so you know, I was being careful too, yeah?"

"…O-of course, I bet you were."

Colbert was also keeping his eyes on his surroundings while talking as they walked with Tiol through the alleys of the slum city. He was checking how the people around them looked at Tiol and his group, and how Tiol was reacting to all the attention that was directed at him. From there, Colbert could more or less check how the people around that area saw Sheryl's gang. All of these were valuable information.

At the least, the people in that area did not see Tiol or Sheryl's gang as mere children. Some of them did look at Sheryl's gang with contempt, but there was a trace of envy and caution mixed in those gazes. It showed that Sheryl's gang had enough influence for other people to be envious and cautious of them.

Tiol and Colbert's group went in different directions once they arrived on the main road. Colbert was in a rather good mood since he was able to gather valuable information. Revin was holding back his eagerness as he asked Colbert a question.

"So then, where to go after this? I bet you already have a plan where to sell these relics, right?"

"Yeah, I know just the right place to sell these relics, it's the Kurogin."

Revin and Hazawa looked surprised when they heard Colbert's answer.

The Kurogin was a company that specialized in trading relics, it had multiple branches in the eastern district. It was also famous as a pawnshop company where Hunters with debt problems used to go to pawn their relics. Their ability in appraising all kinds of relics was top-notch and they had good reviews from people and companies who were looking for a certain type of relics.

The exchange centres owned by the Hunter Office basically existed to help the Corporate Government of the eastern district to gather and analyze old-world technology, thus it had the tendency to prioritized more for relics with technological value. As such, when the Hunters brought relics with artistic value to those exchange centres, in the end, the people who would appraise those relics were amateurs, not someone who was knowledgeable in that subject.

So, even if someone brought an old-world handkerchief with old-world design and made of a nanomaterial that the current era still could not replicate, the value of that relic would be decided by the quality of its material, the artistic value of it normally did not bring any extra value at all.

While on the other hand, the Kurogin appraisers simply decided the price of a relic based on whether there was any demand for such a relic either from individuals or from organizations. Even if it was a relic that looked like junk, if a collector was willing to buy it at a high price, Kurogin would buy that relic depending on how much that collector was willing to buy it.

Hazawa still sounded a bit surprised as he said to Colbert.

"…Kurogin, huh. Well, I do hear that Kurogin's appraisers are real experts. But I also heard that their service is pretty expensive. Even if we take our relics there, we might end up in red if we consider the price of their service, you know?"

There were many Hunters who brought junks to Kurogin hoping that they could get lucky, thus it would not be much of a business if Kurogin did not charge them anything at all. So to prevent that from happening, Kurogin set an expensive price for their service. The Hunters could be considered to be lucky if the price of their relics were exactly the same as the price of the appraisal, after all, sometimes they even had to pay money to Kurogin after handing over their relics.

Colbert smiled confidently and said.

“Don’t worry, I have a plan for that too. In the worst-case scenario, it will stop at zero and won’t go to minus. So, let’s go.”

Colbert then just dragged Revin and Hazawa, who were still dumbfounded, to head to Kurogin.

The closer an area to the defensive wall of Kugamayama city, the safer it would be, and of course, the more expensive the plot would be. In the lower district, there was a Kurogin branch that was directly connected with the wall, it showed just how powerful the Kurogin company was.

When Colbert and his friends arrived, they immediately started the administration works to sell their relics. Colbert only submitted a portion of the relics that he had brought, while Hazawa and Revin submitted all the relics that they had.

Colbert then said to the Kurogin’s clerk.

“I’m here to appraise these relics in place of Viola. Do it as fast as you can, we’re already planning to sell them here, and please pay us with cash. Ah, and also, my relics and their relics separately, ok?”

“Certainly. We’ll take about 3 hours to appraise these relics. We’ll contact you when we’re done. This will be your receipt. Please make sure not to lose it, if you do, it might cause some trouble for the following administration work and you might not be able to receive either the relics or the money from selling the relics.”

That clerk then handed Colbert a receipt. It was a card with a high-level security technology that made it impossible to replicate or modify that card either physically or with hacking.

Revin then questioned Colbert.

“Who is this Viola? You said to appraise the relics in place of Viola.”

“Just an acquaintance. She’s a Kurogin employee, I heard that she gets free appraisal quotas each month and she still has some free quota for this month. That’s also why I told them to pay with cash. Since if they transfer the money, it’ll be transferred to Viola’s bank account.”

“…Well, I have nothing to complain about since we can get away for free here.”

The clerk also did not say anything in particular. In reality, it might violate some rules which in that case, they must have prior arrangements about doing something like that. Moreover, Revin had to pay for his debt, so if there was a way to pay it, he had no plans to complain about it.

Colbert and his friends then exited Kurogin and picked another place to hang out while waiting for the appraisal to finish.

__*__-*__*__

After Sheryl finished her business and Colbert and his friends exited the room, Sheryl returned back to her private room with Akira.

When they arrived there, Sheryl started changing her dress. She only wore that dress to serve the customers and she wore a different dress when she was not serving customers. She was being careful as to not get too used to that dress and get it dirty. Sheryl had decided to keep that dress dearly so that she would not forget that it was a very expensive dress.

Sheryl slowly took off her dress piece by piece. There was no need to rush herself, so she was taking care not to damage the dress. In the middle of that, she stopped and glanced at Akira.

Since there was no special partition in Sheryl’s private room where she could change her dress privately, she was basically in open view when she was changing her dress. But Akira was sitting on the sofa in that room while being focused on his terminal.

She then called Akira.

“Akira.”

“Yes?”

Akira’s gaze shifted from his terminal to Sheryl. He looked straight at Sheryl, who was in the middle of changing her dress, her half-naked figure was very seductive.

Sheryl checked Akira’s reaction. From what she could see, Akira’s face was simply saying that he was just reacting to her since she called his name.

Sheryl sighed deep inside her heart.

“…Thank you very much for helping us although it’s taking some of your time. So then, Akira, how much longer can you keep helping us like this?”

“I’m planning to stay inside the city until I can get my reward from that request in Mihazono ruin and use that money to take care of some stuff. So I’ll be helping you until then. I myself don’t know how long it would be, but I’m sure it won’t be longer than a month.”

“I see.”

Sheryl returned back to changing her dress, so Akira’s attention also returned to his terminal.

Sheryl finished undressing and kept her expensive dress in her drawer while she was only in her underwear.
